Ans. This is to say, it must here signify, not what it ordinarily and truly signifies, but what it both improperly and rarely signifies; and when it is ascribed to Christ, as here it is, it never signifies: for it is ascribed to him elsewhere ten times in the New Testament, Matt. xxvii. 24, Luke xxiii. 47, Acts iii. 14, vii. 52, xxii. 14, 2 Tim. iv. 8, 1 Pet. iii. 18, Rev. xvi. 5; and in those places it doth always signify that just or righteous person; yea, in this very chapter, and the next, it is twice spoken of him, first in these words, ver. 29, "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him;" and, iii. 7, "He that doeth righteousness, is righteous, even as he is righteous:" where it is evident, that it retains its proper sense. Why, therefore, in the place contested, should it import that which, when it is applied to Christ, it never signifies?

Obj. And whereas Crellius objects, That the apostle

3 [4] And hereby (Gr. in this) we do know that we know (Gr. have known) him (truly and acceptably), if we keep his commandments.

4 He that saith, I (have) know (n) him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him: (he is a false pretender to the knowledge of God; for such persons do in words profess to know God, but in works they deny him, being disobedient, Tit. i. 16. They likewise know not Jesus Christ according to the truth, iv. 21.)

5 But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the [5] love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

6 [6] He that saith he abideth in him (in Christ by the Spirit) ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

7 Brethren, I write [7] no new commandment unto you (when I thus call upon you to walk in the light, as he is in the light, or to walk as Christ walked), but an old commandment which ye had from the begin-speaks of Christ here, as of our advocate in heaven, where he doth not satisfy God, or suffer any punishment on our account:

Ans. I answer, That seeing Christ there intercedes, by virtue of his blood shed to satisfy for our offences, and of the death he suffered as the punishment of our iniquities, the parallel runs clearly thus; That as the sacrifices of the Old Testament were slain, and the blood shed, before it was brought to the mercy-seat, and yet the high-priest made atonement with it, when, at his entrance into the holy place, he offered up that blood to God, in his peculiar presence; so, though our Lord was slain, and shed his blood on earth, yet may he make atonement in the presence of God with it, by virtue of the sufferings he endured when his blood was shed.

[3] Περὶ ὅλου τοῦ κόσμου, For the sins of the whole world.] i. e. Of all men in general. For when he saith, "He is the propitiation for our sins," sure he intends this comfort to all them to whom he speaks, and means not, that Christ was the propitiation for some of their sins only; for this would have left them all in doubt, whether this advocate, and this propitiation did belong to them, but would have comforted none of them. When then he adds, "He is the propitiation not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world," he in like manner must extend this phrase to all men in the world.

Again, when he saith, "He is the propitiation for our sins," he doth not mean, that he was so sufficiently, but not intentionally: for what comfort would that afford them, that his death was sufficient to procure the pardon of their sins, had God designed it for that end, unless they also knew that he intended it for their propitiation? When therefore he proceeds to say, "And not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world," he must mean also, that he was the propitiation for their sins, not only sufficiently, but also in his gracious intention. And indeed, otherwise, it might as properly have been said of the fallen angels, or the whole host of devils, he is the propitiation for their sins, as for the sins of those who are not elected; seeing, had God designed it for that end, Christ's death, by reason of its intrinsic value, might have been sufficient to procure atonement for the sins of fallen angels. Lastly, the import of these words cannot be only this, He died, or is the propitiation, for the sins of the elect throughout the world. For (1.) "the whole world," in scripture, never signifies the elect only, in opposition to the wicked in the whole world; but in this very epistle, and in these words, "We know that we are of God, and that the whole world lies in wickedness" (v. 19), plainly signifies the wicked of the world, in opposition to the faithful Christians. (2.) Would it not be strange, and alien from the mind of scripture, to say, The whole world is elected to salvation; the whole world shall be justified by Christ, and sanctified by his Spirit dwelling in them, and obtain a happy resurrection! and yet all this must be true of the whole world of the elect. Why therefore are none of these things equally affirmed of the whole world, as well as that Christ died, and is the propitiation, for the sins of the whole world, if they be words of equal latitude and truth? These arguments are as strong against the exposition of others, who say, The apostle means, not only for the sins of the Jews, but also of the gentiles.

If we sin we have an advocate with the Father, and he is the propitiation for our sins.] Moreover, this being spoken by this apostle to his "little children," whose past "sins were already forgiven" (ver. 12), must relate to their future sins, to which they might be afterward obnoxious, and therefore must suppose them still subject to sins of infirmity.

[4] Ver. 3.] It is a rule in divinity, that verba notitiæ denotant affectum, adde et effectum: i. e. "that when the knowledge of God, or Christ, is put absolutely, it signifies a knowledge which is fruitful in love; and obedience, as the effect of that love and knowledge." Whence they who disobey him are still, in scripture, said "not to know God," 1 Sam. ii. 12, Hos. v. 14, Jer. ii. 8, ix. 3, Tit. i. 16, and here, ver. 4; and they that do what is acceptable and delightful to him, are said to "know" him, Jer. xxii. 15, 16, xxiv. 7, xxxi. 33, 34, Hos. ii. 19, 20, John x. 4, Eph. iii. 19.

Moreover, it is observable, that many of the Jews had an apprehension, that their knowledge and belief of the true God would be sufficient for their justification and acceptance with him; whence they are represented as "boasting in God, and in the knowledge of his will," Rom. ii. 17, 18, and expecting justification on this account, that they "believed there was one God," James ii. 19; and this might cause the apostle to be so diligent in teaching them, That the true knowledge of God consisted in keeping his commandments.

[5] Ver. 5. Ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ, The love of God perfected.] "The love of God" here may signify either God's love to us; as when it is said, "Who shall separate us from the love of God which is (shown to us) in Christ Jesus?" Rom. viii. 39, and that "the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, through the Spirit that he hath given us," Rom. v. 5 (see Jude 21); and then this love is "perfected" in us, by that assurance the Holy Spirit giveth of it, and that humble confidence we have of it, "because we keep his commandments" (iii. 21, 22); so the apostle seems to interpret this perfection in love, iv. 16—18; or, secondly, this love may signify, our love to God and Christ; as when Christ upbraids the pharisees with the want of the love of God (Luke xi. 42), and saith to the Jews, "I know that ye have not the love of God in you" (John v. 42); and when Christ saith, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father" (John xiv. 21); and (ver. 23), "If any man love me, he will keep my word: and my Father will love him, and we will come to him, and take up our abode with him;" and this "love is perfected in us, by keeping his commandments;" because that shows, we are fully instructed in the nature of that love, which is in one sense of perfection (see note on 1 Cor. ii. 6): and it engages us to the sincere performance of our whole duty to God, which is another sense of the word perfection: and hereby we know that we are in him, even by his Spirit, by which God abideth in us (iii. 24), and who sheds abroad the sense of the divine love in our hearts.

Note also, that hence we may pass a certain estimate of necessary and fundamental doctrines; for if they be such as are necessary to the love of God to us, or to that love of ours to him, which consists in keeping his commandments, they are doctrines truly necessary to salvation: if not, they cannot be so; because we may truly love God, and abide in his love, without the knowledge of them,

[6] Ver. 6.] For seeing we abide in God the Father and the Son, only by the communion of the Spirit (iii. 24, iv. 13), whence "he that is in Christ is one spirit with him" (1 Cor. vi. 17), and "he that hath not the Spirit of Christ, is none of his" (Rom. viii. 9), we that are animated with the same spirit that was in Christ, as we are enabled, so also are we thereby engaged to walk after his example, or to "walk in the light as he is in the light" (i. 7).]

[7] Ver. 7. Οὐκ ἐντολὴν καινὴν, No new commandment.] Most interpreters conceive, this relates to the commandment of Christian love, that being the commandment which they are ning (of Christ's preaching, John iii. 21, viii. 12, xii. 35, see note on i. 1). The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8 [8] Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him (who is the author of it; for no such light ever came into the world before, and no such love was manifested to the world before,) and in you (who before were darkness, but now are light in the Lord, Eph. v. 8, children of the light and of the day, 1 Thess. v. 5, and to whom not long ago the light appeared, 2 Cor. iv. 6, and who are taught of God to love one another, 1 Thess. iv. 9): because (by your late receiving the gospel) the (former) darkness (ye were in) is past, and the true light now shineth (in and upon you: wherefore the night of ignorance and darkness being far spent, and the day being nigh at hand, and shining more and more upon you, ye are obliged to put off the works of darkness, and put on the armour of light, Rom. xiii. 12).—Or thus; Again (being now to speak to you of Christian love), a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him (for thus he speaks, A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you, John xiii. 34,) and in you: because (it shows) the darkness (you were in whilst Jews, bearing affection only to them of your own nation and religion) is past, and the true light (of the gospel) now shineth (upon you).

9 He that saith he is in the light (that he lives under the influences of the light of the gospel, and walks accordingly to it), and (yet) hateth his brother (wishing ill to him, and, from that disaffection doing ill offices to him), is (whatsoever he professes to the contrary) in darkness even until now. (But)

10 He that loveth his brother (as Christ loved us, being willing to do him all kind offices which he is able, from love to God, and as a fellow-member of Christ's body,) abideth in the light, and there is [9] none occasion of stumbling (Gr. no scandal) in him.

11 But he that hateth his brother [10] is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither (the way leads in which) he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes (John xii. 35).

12 [11] I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13 I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

15 Love not the world (i. e. neither the men of the world, who will not own you, but hate and persecute you, iii. 1. 13, and who live in wickedness, v. 19; love them not, so as to be conformed to their manners, Rom. xii. 2), neither the things that are in the world, (the pleasures, honours, or enjoyments of it, so as to cleave to them, Matt. vi. 24, or to be unwilling to part with them for Christ's sake, and to secure the favour of God, Matt. xix. 28.) If any man (thus) love the world, the love of the Father is not in him (for seeing God is to be loved above all, he loves him not at all truly, who cleaves to any other thing in opposition to him, or hazards his favour to secure it).

16 For all that is in (vogue or esteem with the men of) the world, the lust of the flesh (all voluptuous enjoyments which tend to sensuality and intemperance, said to have "heard from the beginning" (iii. 11), and said to be, on that account, "no new commandment" (Eph. ii. 5), and yet being styled by Christ, "a new commandment" (John xiii. 34). Nor are the arguments of Episcopius against this exposition cogent: for whereas,

Obj. 1. He objects, That these words seem to be spoken, to remove the thought of some, that he was propounding a new doctrine which they had not learned; whereas no man who was acquainted with the law of Moses, or even with that of nature, could think the law of charity was new:

Ans. I answer, It is not the law of charity in general, which our Lord and his apostles style a new commandment; but that of loving one another, as he had loved us (John xiii. 34, 35). And this might justly be looked on as a new commandment; it being a commandment of "laying down our lives for the brethren" (iii. 16), and therefore a commandment not contained in the law of nature, nor in that of Moses.

Obj. 2. Whereas he adds, That these words, "I write unto you," seem to respect not any thing that was to follow, but which was said before; and to contain this sense, When I write this to you, I write nothing new;

Ans. I answer, That it may be so; for having told us, that "he that saith he abideth in Christ, ought also to walk as he walked," he may well be conceived to have an especial eye to the great example of love Christ showed to mankind both in his life and death. Yet his exposition given in the paraphrase seems also very probable, by reason of the following words, "Because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth;" and therefore I shall have respect to both.

[8] Ver. 8.] The ceremonials of the law are sometimes called a "shadow," but never "darkness;" and though the Alexandrian manuscripts read σκιὰ, "a shadow," yet, because all other copies read σκότια, "darkness," and the following words, ver. 9. 11, show that this is the true reading, and because it is so easy, in short writing, to mistake σκοτία for σκιὰ, the interpretation of these words, which depends upon that reading, cannot be relied on.

[9] Ver. 10. Σκάνδαλον ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν, i. e. There is nothing at which he will fall, or stumble.] So Ps. cxix. 156, "Great peace have they that love thy law, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτοῖς σκάνδαλον, and they have no stumbling-block." The labour of love, they must undergo; the evils they may be exposed to will not hinder them from doing the duty they owe to God, and their brother, for his sake; but they go on securely and cheerfully in it; for "perfect love casts out fear" (iv. 18).

[10] Ver. 11. Ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ ἐστὶ, Is in darkness.] i. e. He lives in great ignorance of his duty, and of the way to life, as not guiding his actions by that light of the gospel which hath appeared unto him.

[11] Ver. 12—14.] Note, that these words may either relate to the foregoing; and then they are to be interpreted as motives to walk in the light, and as Christ walked, and in particular to walk in Christian love, thus; "I have written to you, children," touching this love, and walking in the light, and after Christ's example, "because your sins have been forgiven, for his name's sake;" and so, in gratitude to him who hath procured the pardon of them, you "ought to walk as he walked," and to love the brethren: ye also have "known the Father, and had experience of his love to you, and therefore stand obliged to intimate his love to you, and to "walk in the light," that you may still have fellowship with him.

"I have written to you, fathers, because ye have known him who was from the beginning," i. e. Christ Jesus, and so know how to walk by his example, and to imitate his obedience to the Father, and his love to mankind.

"I have written to you, young men, because ye are strong," by virtue of the word of God abiding in you; and by the sword of the Spirit, and shield of faith, have been enabled successfully to combat and overcome that wicked one, who tempts you to the deeds of darkness, and to hatred of the brethren (iii. 10).

If they relate to the words following, they must be an exhortation to the little children to take off their affections from the world, and place them upon God and Christ, on the account of the love and mercy shown to them by God the Father through Christ. To the fathers so to do, because and making provision for the flesh), and the lust of the eyes (the desire of gold, silver, stately houses, rich furniture, fair gardens, which tend to gratify the eye), and the pride of life (the desire of places of dignity, high titles, all the honour, glory, and splendour of the world, which tends to gratify our pride), is not of the Father (they are not desires excited by him, nor is it according to his will, that we should set our hearts upon them), but is (the desire) of (the men of) the world (whose chief concern is to gratify these sensual appetites).

17 And the world passeth away, and the (things which minister to the) lusts thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

18 Little children, it is the last time (or hour of the Jewish economy): and as ye have heard that [12] antichrist shall (shortly) come, (so) even now are there many antichrists (i. e. opposers of Christ, and deniers of him to be the Christ, ver. 22); whereby we (may) know that it is the last time.

19 [13] They went out from us (Christians of Judea, Acts xv. 1, and from us the apostles, Acts xv. 24), but they were not of us (but were false brethren, Gal. ii. 4, and false apostles, 2 Cor. xi. 13); for if they had been of us, (conspiring with us the apostles and true churches of Christ, in the doctrine and truth of the gospel,) they would no doubt have (Gr. μεμενήκεισαν ἄν, they might have still) continued with us (preaching that doctrine which we teach): but they went out (from us), that they might be made manifest [14] that they were not all (Gr. that they all were not) of us.

20 But ye have an unction [15] from the Holy One, [16] and ye know all things (ye to whom I write; which shows, he speaks not of the Christians of all ages in general, but of them in particular).

21 I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth (i. e. to instruct you as persons ignorant of it), but because ye know it, and that no lie (uttered by these antichrists and false prophets) is of (or hath any communion with) the truth (of the gospel).

22 Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? (i. e. who so emphatically deserves that title, seeing) he is antichrist (by way of eminence), [17] that denieth the Father and the Son.

23 (And let not the Jewish antichrists pretend, this they have known Christ, how dead he was to the world, and how he despised the pleasures, honours, and enjoyments of it. To the young men so to do, because they had overcome the wicked one, all whose temptations arise from some allurements or affrightments of the world. Or, lastly, the words may be extended to all he saith to them in this whole epistle; and then both expositions may take place.

[12] Ver. 18. Ὁ ἀντίχριστος, Antichrist cometh:] To wit, then in "the last hour." And this being represented, as the character by which they might "know that the last hour was now come," it is manifest, that "the last hour" cannot signify the end of the world, or include the times of the last judgment; but must be restrained to the last times of the Jewish state, which only then were instant, or at hand.

Secondly, The ὁ ἀντίχριστος, "antichrist" then in being, if it refer to any nation, must be the nation of the unbelieving Jews, persecuting and opposing Christianity with their whole might, and denying Jesus to be the Christ, or promised Messiah; and then the many antichrists here mentioned may be the false prophets, and deceitful workers, who transformed themselves into the apostles of Christ (2 Cor. xi. 13—15), who "preached Christ not sincerely, but out of contention" (Phil. i. 15), who "as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so also did resist the truth" (2 Tim. iii. 8), who were "men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth" (1 Tim. vi. 5).

[13] Ver. 19. Ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξῆλθον, They went out from us] Of Judea. For some κατελθόντες ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας, "going out from Judea, taught the brethren, That except they were circumcised after the manner of Moses, they could not be saved" (Acts xv. 1): and from the apostles; for so they speak, "We have heard, that τινες ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξελθόντες, some going out from us, have troubled you with words subverting your souls, saying, That ye ought to be circumcised, and to keep the law" (ver. 24). The persons who taught the doctrines are styled ψευδάδελφοι, "false brethren," Gal. ii. 4, ψευδαπόστολοι, "false apostles, deceitful workers, ministers of Satan," 2 Cor. xi. 13. 15, "dogs, evil workers, the concision," Phil. iii. 2: their doctrine tended to the subversion of souls, Acts xv. 24, to the corrupting and turning the minds of men from the simplicity of Christ, 2 Cor. xi. 3, to hinder the truth of the gospel from continuing with them, Gal. ii. 5, to make Christ die in vain, ver. 21, to cause Christians to fall from grace, so that Christ should profit them nothing, Gal. v. 2. 4. So that they were false prophets, false apostles, and antichrists, in the worst of senses; and by going out from the apostles and churches of Judea, to preach this destructive doctrine to the gentiles, which both the whole church of Judea, and the apostles assembled for that purpose, flatly disowned and censured, it sufficiently appeared that all the preachers of these doctrines, so opposite to Christianity, and destructive of it, were not of them. These therefore, doubtless, were some of those many antichrists which the apostle speaks of here, as writing to the Jews; and they also divided, and separated themselves from the church, and became heretics under the name of Cerinthians, Nazarenes, and Ebionites. Cerinthus* spread his heresy in Asia, the province of John, saith Theodoret, and was† contemporary with the apostles: whence the church‡ desired him to write against Cerinthus and the Ebionites: and John§ left the bath, because Cerinthus the enemy of truth was in it. Moreover these words, "They were not of us," cannot be interpreted of the elect, but of the church in general; for, from them they went out, and with them might have remained; not from the elect, who are not visible, nor could they have remained with the church of the elect, who were never of them. Secondly, their going out from them for a season, was no certain argument they were not of the elect; since it is confessed, they may fall totally, though not finally.

[14] Ὅτι οὐκ εἰσὶ πάντες, That they all were not of us.] So ver. 21, πᾶν ψεῦδος οὐκ, "No lie is of the truth;" οὐκ ἂν ἐσώθη πᾶσα σάρξ, "No flesh shall be saved," Matt. xxiv. 22, οὐ δικαιωθήσεται πᾶσα σάρξ, "No flesh shall be justified," Rom. iii. 20 (see Gen. iv. 15, Ps. cxliii. 2, Luke i. 37, Hab. ii. 9).

[15] Ver. 20. Ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἁγίου, From the Holy One.] i. e. From Jesus Christ, emphatically so called, Acts iii. 14, Rev. iii. 7. But then that unction is the Holy Spirit, which he hath given to them that believe: for he being "anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows" (Ps. xlv. 7), "anointed by God with the Holy Ghost" (Acts x. 38), this grace is given to Christians, "according to the measure of the gift of Christ" (Eph. iv. 7), and "we all beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same likeness, as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. iii. 18, see the note there).

[16] Καὶ οἴδατε πάντα, And ye know all things.] Belonging to the saving truths of the gospel, he being promised to teach them all things (John xiv. 26), and to lead them into all truth (John xvi. 13), so Œcumenius;‖ "You have received in baptism the unction of the Holy Spirit, who leads you into all truth."

belongs not to them who know the Father; for)Whosoever denieth the Son (of God), the same hath not (the true knowledge of) the Father: [but] he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also.

24 Let that (doctrine) therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning (preached to you: for) if that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain (and bring forth its due fruits) in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father, (united to them by the Spirit, who also will instruct you in the saving knowledge of them both, John xiv. 23, vi. 56.)

25 [18] And this is the promise that he hath promised us (who thus remain in him), even eternal life.

Spirit of wisdom and knowledge*) teacheth you all things (necessary), and (for it) is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.

28 And now (καὶ νῦν, now therefore), little children, abide in him (in the profession and practice of what he hath taught you); that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence (of the life promised to them that do so, ver. 25), and (may) not be ashamed before him (Gr. may not be put to shame by him, or, go ashamed from him,) at his coming (to judgment, iv. 17, as being judged by him unworthy of this life; as we shall not be, if we be found doing righteousness; for,)

29 If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him; (as being born again of the Spirit derived from him, and so become a son of God, and an heir of life, Rom. viii. 14. 17, and by this Spirit sealed up unto the day of redemption, Eph. iv. 30.)

or, Hath not the Father.] To "deny the Father," here, is not, to deny him to be the true God, as the heathens did; but, (1.) to deny the truth of his testimony: for, "He that believeth not in the testimony which God hath given to his Son, hath made him a liar" (v. 10); whereas, "he that receives his testimony, hath set to his seal that God is true" (John iii. 33). (2.) To deny the doctrine of the Father, or that doctrine which proceedeth from him; for, "he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God" (John iii. 34). Whence it is evident, that he who denieth the Son, cannot thus retain the true knowledge of the Father, because "no man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him (John i. 18). He only hath done it; for "no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him" (Matt. xi. 27). By him only can we come acceptably to the Father, so as to have life; for, he is "the way, the truth, and the life" (John xiv. 6): and by him only are we taught how to worship the Father "in spirit and in truth" (John iv. 23, 24). Hence Christ so often tells the Jews, they therefore wanted the true knowledge of the Father, because they knew not him, saying, "Ye neither know me, nor my Father; if ye had known me, ye should have known the Father also" (John viii. 19, xiv. 7): and "These things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me" (John xvi. 3).

Ver. 23.] See Examen Millii.

[18] Ver. 25.] For the fruit of the Spirit is life (Rom. viii. 6. 11. 13. 16, 17, Gal. vi. 8), and he is given as the earnest of our future inheritance, to "seal us up to the day of redemption" (2 Cor. i. 22, v. 5, Eph. i. 13, 14, iv. 30), and this life he hath often promised to us, John v. 25, 26. 29, vi. 27. 29. 33. 39, 40. 47. 50, 51. 54. 57, 58.

[19] Ver. 27. Καὶ ὑμεῖς, Vos quod attinet, And as for you.] So Isa. lix. 21, "And I," i. e. As for me, this is my covenant," lxi. 18, ואנכי, κἀγὼ, "As for me" (see 1 Chron. xxviii. 2).

The Quakers and other sectaries hence argue against the necessity of the ministerial function, or any teachers of the word, it being here said, "You need not that any teach you," &c. And others say, this seems to make all scripture, and all that the apostle writ to them, needless. But for answer to this objection, I say,

First, That it must be granted, that in those times of the effusion of the Spirit, and his miraculous gifts upon believers, this unction was promised to teach them all things necessary who had then no other rule of knowing what was so, but by the teaching of the apostles and prophets then among them, acted by this Spirit, and teaching in their assemblies, and doing other public offices by this afflatus, and by the spirit of wisdom and instruction then imparted to them; and hereby they were enabled to distinguish betwixt pretenders to the Spirit, and those who were really acted by him (see note on iv. 1—3), and to know they dwelt in Christ, "because he had thus (given) them of his Spirit" (John iii. 24, iv. 13), which things do certainly imply, that they who then had the Spirit, could certainly know they had it, and make an argument of it to try the doctrines and spirits of others, and much more in themselves; but now these sensible indications and extraordinary gifts of the Spirit are long since ceased, and therefore now they are to be directed by those writings which were indited for their perpetual use, by men assisted with that Spirit, who led them into all truth: and surely, if in those times, when the gifts of the Spirit were so generally vouchsafed, they were yet taught by apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and doctors, assisted by the Spirit for that work; it is reasonable to believe that, now these gifts are ceased, believers should be instructed by pastors and doctors, assisted by the scriptures indited by these spiritual men. And therefore,

Secondly, It is observable, that the apostle doth not here absolutely say, they need not any one should teach them, but only that they "need not any one should teach them but as this unction taught them." Now the apostles having this unction in the highest measure, these words cannot exclude their teachings, or render them unnecessary, but rather must confirm them as a standing rule to all posterity. Till then these sectaries can show that they have still such an immediate and extraordinary afflatus of the Holy Spirit, as was then vouchsafed to the primitive Christians, they cannot hence conclude the outward ministry of the word, by pastors and doctors set apart for that work, to be unnecessary.

CHAPTER III.

1 Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called [1] the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not (i. e. doth not acknowledge and affect us Christians), because it knew him not. (The heathens being wholly ignorant of the true God, and the Jews not knowing him according to his will, John viii. 55, xv. 21, xvi. 3, and as he had discovered himself to them by his Son, 1 John ii.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 1. Τέκνα Θεοῦ, The sons of God.] The Jews were styled the children and the sons of God, because they owned him as their God and Father, and entered into covenant to serve him, and so became a holy people to the Lord, and he had chosen them to be his people (Deut. xiv. 1). So "we all are sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. iii. 26, John i. 12). The land in which they dwelt is styled "the Lord's land," Hos. ix. 3; and they, as being his "first-born" (Exod. iv. 22), have it given them for an inheritance; but we, as being in a more spiritual sense the sons of God, are "heirs of God, joint-heirs with Christ," as being those that shall reign with him in his heavenly

23. And this may comfort you against the persecutions of the world, that it is their want of that saving knowledge of the true God, which ministers so great advantage to you, which causes them to disaffect you.)

2 Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be (made farther partakers of, as the complete import of that title): but (this) we know that, [2] when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

3 And every man that hath this hope in him (of seeing him in his glory) purifieth himself, even [3] as he is pure (in whom was no sin, ver. 5).

4 [4] Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law.

5 And ye know that he (i. e. Christ, ver. 8) was manifested to take away our sins; (not only by suffering to remove the guilt of our past sins; but also to purify us from the power and dominion of it, that henceforth we might not serve sin, Rom. vi. 6, that ἁμαρτίας ἀπογενόμενοι, being freed from sin, we might live unto righteousness, 1 Pet. ii. 24;) and in him is no sin (and so our likeness to him must consist in ceasing from it).

6 Whosoever (therefore) abideth in him sinneth not: [5] whosoever (thus) sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him (as the truth is in Jesus, Eph. iv. 21).

7 Little children, let no man deceive you (with pretensions, that faith without works of righteousness will make you righteous before God: for only) he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he (i. e. Christ) is righteous (by doing the will of his Father, John xv. 10).

kingdom (Rom. viii. 17, see the note there). They in that land enjoyed the majestic presence of that God who dwelt among them; and therefore, saith he, "the land is mine" (Lev. xxv. 23); we, as his sons, shall be admitted to his celestial presence, where "we shall see him as he is" (ver. 2). The enjoyment of that land was unto them a type of the heavenly Canaan, which the faithful among them were to enjoy; and therefore they are represented as "strangers and sojourners with him in it:" whence the apostle tells them, that "there remained yet a rest for the people of God" (Heb. iv. 9), and the patriarchs are said to have confessed that "they were strangers and pilgrims upon earth," and thereby to declare that "they desired (and sought) a better country, that is, a heavenly;" and that upon this account God called himself "their God," viz. "the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," because "he had prepared for them a city" (Heb. xi. 13. 16). Now because they in their own persons could not enjoy this heavenly country without a resurrection, hence the evangelist informs us, that they were the "sons of God, τῆς ἀναστάσεως υἱοὶ ὄντες, as being sons of the resurrection;" the redemption of their bodies from corruption, and the ἀναβίωσις, reviviscence of that which once died and saw corruption, being the consequent of this υἱοθεσία, adoption, or sonship of God's children; hence therefore doth our Saviour firmly prove the resurrection from those words, "I am the God of Abraham," &c. (Matt. xxii. 32, Luke xx. 36, 37). And thus you see how great is the love of God in owning us as his sons; and have also a just comment on the following words.

[2] Ver. 2. Ἐὰν φανερωθῇ, When he doth appear.] Note here,

1. That as the Hebrew word כִּי, so the conjunction ἐὰν, signifies as well when (or, postquam, after that), as if. So, Judg. vi. 2, ἐὰν ἔσπειραν, "When Israel sowed;" 1 Sam. i. 22, ἐὰν ἀπογαλακτίσω, "When I have weaned him," Prov. iii. 24, ἐὰν καθῇ, ἐὰν καθεύδῃς, "When thou liest down thou shalt not be afraid:" so Judg. xxi. 21, Ps. cxxxviii. 7, Prov. iv. 12 (see Nold. Partic. p. 87. 89), so, John xii. 32, ἐὰν ὑψωθῶ, "When I am lifted up;" xiii. 20, ἐὰν πέμψω, "When I send;" xiv. 3, ἐὰν πορευθῶ, "When I go away." Note,

2. That this is spoken of Christ, seems evident, (1.) from the word φανερωθῇ, which is used of Christ, ver. 5, and agrees properly to him alone; and (2.) from the phrase "We shall be like him," viz. "who shall change our vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body" (Phil. iii. 21), and cause us to "bear the image of the Lord from heaven," by being raised with glorious and incorruptible bodies (1 Cor. xv. 47. 49). And from the words, "We shall see him as he is," i. e. in glory; this being his prayer, that "they whom God had given him, might be with him, and behold his glory" (John xvii. 24).

[3] Ver. 3. Καθὼς ἐκεῖνος, As he is pure.] For he being manifested to take away our sins (ver. 5), and to destroy the works of the devil in us (ver. 8), they who expect to be made like to him hereafter, must be so here in purity and righteousness. But then let it be noted,

First, That this imitation doth not require our likeness to him we are to imitate, in the manner or inward principle of his actions; but only in the quality, and, as far as human frailty will permit us, in the measure of them: for instance, it is as necessary for God to be absolutely perfect in holiness and goodness, as to be God; and yet we must be "holy as he is holy," and "perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect." And it is generally asserted in the schools, that the obedience and perfect holiness of Christ did necessarily result from the most intimate union of the divine and human nature, and from that grace of unction which he received without measure; whereas our holiness and obedience must be acts of choice, and so our holiness and virtue will proceed, not from an inward principle, which doth necessitate us to be good, but from the choice of our own wills; and yet we must "walk as he walked," and must "purify ourselves as he is pure."

Secondly, This imitation doth not require an absolute equality, or full proportion of our actions to the example set before us, this being not consistent with the frailty of our human nature. For the example here is that of the holy Jesus, "in whom was no sin," and who performed perfect obedience to the whole law of God; whereas "in many things we offend all," and our obedience will be still imperfect in this life. When therefore we are commanded to be holy and perfect as God is, to walk as Christ walked, and to purify ourselves as he is pure, it is sicut similitudinis, non æqualitatis; i. e. the word as binds us not to equal them in holiness and perfection, but to bear such a likeness to them in these perfections as may discover that we truly aim at being holy in all manner of conversation, and heartily endeavour to continue so, through the whole tenor of our lives.

Vain then is that objection of the Socinians, That were Christ truly God, we could not possibly expect, nor therefore would it be our duty, to imitate him; for seeing the example of God himself is made the matter of our imitation, the argument must equally conclude against the Deity of God the Father. In a word, a likeness to him as far as human frailty will permit, may be our duty, though he should be God: a perfect likeness to him who did no sin, could never be our duty, though he were but man.

[4] Ver. 4. Ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, He that committeth sin;] i. e. Who lives in the commission of it, lives in an opposition to the law of God; for he is "of the devil," ver. 8, he is "not born of God," ver. 9; which could not be truly said of him that is guilty of any one sin, or violation of God's holy law.

[5] Ver. 6. Whosoever sinneth, οὐχ ἑώρακεν αὐτὸν, οὐδὲ ἔγνωκεν αὐτόν, hath not seen him, neither known him.] To "know God," in the sense of this apostle, is to know him as he is revealed by Jesus Christ, and represented to the world by him. Hence Christ saith, "If ye have known me, ye have known the Father also" (John xiv. 7); and denies that the Jews knew God, "because they knew not him" (John viii. 19, xv. 21, xvi. 3). "To see God," is to see his will, love, and goodness, as it is revealed by Jesus Christ; and thus saith Christ, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (xii. 45, xiv. 9): because he is only known to them, to whom Christ Jesus doth reveal him (Matt. xi. 27, Luke x. 28, John i. 18, vi. 46. And in this sense all that the apostle saith in this epistle of seeing and knowing God is true, viz. that he who knoweth God, as he is revealed by Jesus Christ, "keepeth his commandments," ii. 3, 4, he "loves his brother," iv. 7, 8, he that is of the world, "knows not God," iii. 1, nor "he that committeth sin," as here.

8 [6] He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil (thus) sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested (to the world), that he might destroy the works of the devil.

9 Whosoever is born [7] of God doth not commit sin; for his seed (the word of God, Matt. xiii., 1 Pet. i. 23) remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

10 In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever [8] doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither (is) he (so) that loveth not his brother (and so both these are children of the devil).

11 For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning (or, from the first preaching of the gospel), that we should love one another (from a pure heart fervently, 1 Pet. i. 23, and as Christ hath loved us, John xv. 12.

[6] Ver. 8, 9. Ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, He that committeth sin.] i. e. He that lives or goes on in any way of sin. That this is the true import of this phrase in the writings of this apostle, will appear (1.) from the same phrase used in his gospel, πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin" (John viii. 34). Now to be the servant of sin, is plainly to continue and to live in it (Rom. vi. 1, 2); to "yield obedience to it in the lustings of it" (ver. 12); for then "sin reigns in our mortal bodies" (ibid.), and we are slaves and subjects to it; then doth it, κυριεύειν, "lord it over us," and we are δοῦλοι εἰς ὑπακοὴν, "servants to yield obedience to it" (ver. 14. 16). Though the conscience may boggle at it, our reason may condemn it, our will be somewhat averse to it, so that in obeying it we "do the evil we would not;" yet if ἐμπλακέντες ἡττώμεθα, "we are so entangled as to be overcome by it," we are servants to corruption; "for of what a man is overcome, to that is he brought in bondage" (2 Pet. ii. 19, 20). If "the law of our members lead us captive to the law of sin" (Rom. vii. 23), so that "we yield our members instruments of unrighteousness to sin," we so commit sin as to be the servants of sin: and "he that is born of God, cannot (thus) sin," because by that new birth he is "made free from (the service of) sin" (John viii. 36), and become "a servant to righteousness" (Rom. vi. 18): he hath that seed within him which alienates his mind and his affections from sin, and that Spirit which causes him to mortify the deeds of the flesh (Rom. viii. 13), to die to sin, and to live to God (Rom. vi. 10).

(2.) From those words, "neither can sin," for so he doth not do it, as he cannot do it. Now that doth not import a good man cannot be overtaken with a fault (Gal. vi. 1). No, even those "little children" whose "sins are forgiven," and who have "known the Father," may and will be obnoxious still to some infirmities, and wandering out of the way (ii. 1). They may "sin not unto death," and therefore may have still the spiritual life remaining in them (v. 16—18). But the true import of that phrase is this,* That he hath such an inward frame of heart, such a disposition of spirit, as renders sin exceeding odious and hateful to him; so that he cannot entertain the thoughts of doing it, or a temptation to commit it, without the utmost detestation, and the greatest horror, and so can very rarely, and only through surprise, or want of due deliberation, or through such violent temptations as prevent or hinder his consideration, be obnoxious to sin; and when he comes to consider of such an action, is presently condemning himself for it, bitterly repenting of it, and for the future watching most carefully against it. Thus, they that are evil "cannot speak good things" (Matt. xii. 34); "a good tree cannot bring forth bad fruit" (Matt. xvii. 18); "the world cannot hate those that are of it" (John vii. 7). The Jews could not hear Christ's word (John viii. 43); "could not believe" (John xii. 39). The world "could not receive" the Spirit (John xiv. 17), "They that are in the flesh cannot please God" (Rom. viii. 7, 8), "The natural man cannot know the things of God" (1 Cor. ii. 14). The church of Ephesus "could not bear the wicked" (Rev. ii. 2).

(3.) From the phrase, "He that committeth sin is of the devil;" for it is not he who committeth one or more sins of infirmity, for so did Christ's disciples while they were with him; nor he who committeth one great sin through the power of a strong temptation, of which he bitterly repents, and from which he returns to his obedience; for thus did David and Peter, who yet were not then the children of the devil; but they who comply with the lusts of Satan, and who "will do" them (John viii. 44).

The other interpretations which are given of these words, seem either vain and impertinent, or false and dangerous. And,

1. Vain is that sense which some put on these words, "He that is born of God, non debet peccare, ought not to sin," or, that it is absurd for him to sin; for the apostle speaks not of what he ought not to do, but of what he doth not. Such is that also of those fathers, who interpret this of him who is perfectly born of God, by a παλιγγενεσία, or "a resurrection from the dead;" for the apostle speaks not of what he shall not do hereafter, but of what he doth not do at present.

2. False seems to be the sense which Origen, Jerome, and Ambrose, put upon the words, that "he that is born of God sinneth not, quamdiù renatus est, whilst he is born of God," because he ceaseth to be a child of God when he sins; for this is not only confuted by the examples of David and Peter, whose faith under that great miscarriage failed not (Luke xxii. 32), but by the words of the apostle, "Little children, if we sin we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins" (ii. 1), who yet is only the advocate for the sons of God. For the same reason I cannot assent to that exposition which saith, "A child of God cannot be guilty of any great or deliberate crime," as Tertullian de Pudicitiâ, cap. 19.

3. Dangerous is the exposition of Bernard,* that "they who are born of God sin not, quia etiamsi peccata illis neutiquam imputentur, because their sins will never be imputed to them:" and of those who think it sufficient to say, "He sins not without great reluctancy, or not willingly, the evil that he doeth being that which he would not do;" for the will of that man, who, after some contest in his soul, yields to the commission of sin, is more strongly inclined to sin than to the avoiding of it, and so is not renewed. Nor doth the apostle say, He that is born of God sins not willingly, or without reluctance; but absolutely, "He doth not commit sin."

I conclude this note with that of our judicious Gataker, "He that is born of God sinneth not:" that is, Vitam à peccato immunem quantùm potest sibi proponit, nec peccato unquam sponte dat operam; si aliquandò præter animi propositum deliquerit, non in eodem persistit, sed errore agnito, ad institutum vitæ pristinum quamprimùm quantùmque potest, festinùs revertitur.

[7] Ver. 9. Ἐκ Θεοῦ, Of God.] By the Spirit and the Word (John iii. 6. 8, James i. 18, 1 Pet. i. 23); that is, he is preserved from, and hath his heart framed into a hatred and loathing of, sin: (1.) From the word of God treasured up in his heart, demonstrating to him the vileness of sin, that he may hate it; the danger of it, that he may fly from it; "I have hid thy word in my heart, that I might not sin against thee" (Ps. cxix. 11); and by attending to it as his rule, and taking heed to his ways according to his word (ibid. ver. 9). (2.) By the Holy Spirit abiding in him, as a new principle of life lusting against the flesh, so that we cannot do the things which that would have us do (Gal. v. 16, 17).

[8] Ver. 10. Ὁ μὴ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην, That doeth not righteousness.] That is, he that doth not (from a heart studious of conformity to him who is righteous, ver. 7, and in obedience to his law, commanding us to live righteously,) exercise himself in sincere endeavours of walking righteously through the 12 And if we be not the children of the devil, but of God, we shall) Not (be) as Cain, who was [9] of that wicked one, and (therefore) slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? (viz.) Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous, (as God himself testifieth by respecting the offering not of Cain, but of Abel; and this begat in him that hatred which concluded in his brother's death.

13 And) Marvel not, my brethren, if (in like manner) the world (the seed of Cain, who are also of that wicked one, John viii. 44, 1 John v. 19) hate you (i. e. if they persecute and kill the just, as being condemners of their actions, and alien from their ways and manners, in affection, aim, desires, and therefore hated by them, John xv. 19, for whatsoever they may do to destroy this life).

14 We know that we have passed from death unto life (i. e. that we have obtained a right to escape death eternal, and enjoy everlasting life, John v. 24), because we love the brethren (in deed and truth, ver. 18, for this is a sign that we are translated from darkness to light, ii. 10, and so are the children of the light; yea, that we are born of God, iv. 7, and therefore are children and heirs of God, Rom. viii. 17). He that loveth not his brother abideth in (the state, and under the sentence of) death: (he is still in that darkness of sin and ignorance, ii. 11, which will end in eternal death.

15 For) Whosoever hateth his brother is (in the disposition of his heart, and the construction of God's law,) a murderer (Matt. v. 21, 22): and ye know that no murderer (being so great and wilful a violator of the moral law) hath eternal life abiding in him; (he therefore must be obnoxious to death eternal, till with holy David, by a deep and long repentance, he is delivered from blood-guiltiness; as in the case of David, 2 Sam. xii. 13.)

16 Hereby perceive we the love of God (to us), because he (who was his beloved Son, at his command, John x. 18) laid down his life for us (i. e. for our salvation, and the propitiation of our sins): and we (also) ought (in imitation of this example) to lay down our lives (i. e. expose them to the death) for (the salvation of) the brethren (going on in the prosecution of our duty, to win them to life eternal, though with the hazard, and even the loss, of this temporal life).

17 But (if love requires us to part even with life for them, then) whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need (of some of them), and (yet) shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, (not being moved out of compassion to his indigence to give him what he hath to spare,) how dwelleth the love of God in him?

18 My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue (only, James ii. 15); but in deed and in truth (in true affection of heart, 1 Pet. i. 22, and sincerity of action, Rom. xii. 9, by love serving one another, Gal. v. 13, not pitying only, but relieving them according to their wants, and our ability to supply them).

19 And hereby we (may) know that [10] we are of the truth, and shall [11] assure our hearts before him.

20 [12] For if our heart (the inward witness of our thoughts and actions) condemn us (of want of sincerity, and obedience to the truth of the gospel), God is greater than our heart, (both in holiness to condemn) and (in knowledge to perceive the evil of them, for he) knoweth all things.

21 (Whereas,) Beloved, if our heart (after a diligent search of it, and a comparing of our actions with the law of liberty,) condemn us not (of insincerity in our obedience), then have [13] we (humble) confidence toward God (in our addresses).

22 And whatsoever we ask (according to his will, John v. 14), we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

23 And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment.

24 And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him (i. e. in God), and he (God) in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by (the efficacious gifts of) [14] the Spirit which he hath given us.

general course of his life, is not a child of God; because he only is born of God, and hath the divine nature in him, who thus doeth righteousness (1 John ii. 29). And he who doth not in truth, and in actions demonstrating the sincerity of his affection to his brother (ver. 18), show his love to him, he hath no true love to God (iv. 21), and so is not born of God, nor can he be the child of God, since he obeys not his commandments (v. 1).

[9] Ver. 12. Ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ, Of that wicked one.] The Jews say that Cain was begot of the seed of the devil; this the apostle mystically expounded, saying of Cain as our Saviour doth of the Jews in general (John viii. 44), that "they were of their father the devil, who was a murderer from the beginning," because they did his work, being maliciously bent upon the murder of our Lord.

[10] Ver. 19. Ἐκ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐσμὲν, We are of the truth.] i. e. We are rightly acquainted with, and truly live according to, the rules delivered in that gospel which is emphatically styled "the truth" (see note on Rom. ii. 8). This is the truth so often mentioned in these epistles, 1 John i. 6. 8, ii. 4. 21, iv. 6, Second Epistle, ver. 1—4, First Epistle, iii. 3, 4. 8. 12, and in the Gospel, i. 14. 17, iii. 21, iv. 23, 24, v. 33, viii. 32, xvii. 17, xviii. 37.

[11] Καὶ πείσομεν τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν, And shall persuade our hearts;] viz. That we are so in the sight of God.

[12] Ver. 20. Ὅτι ἐὰν, For if our hearts condemn us, ὅτι μείζων.] Some are inclined to read, ἔτι μείζων, "God is yet greater than our hearts;" and others to make it an expletive, or to approve of those few copies where it is wanting: but seeing it is retained in most copies, and is translated by the Arabic profectò, this I believe to be the true import of it here; and to confirm this import, let it be noted, that the Hebrew כי, which in its primary import signifieth for, and is by the Septuagint rendered ὅτι, doth also signify certè, and is by our translation often rendered "surely," or "certainly." So, Gen. xliii. 10, "For if we had not lingered, ἤδη ἂν, surely we had returned twice;" Exod. iii. 11, ὅτι, "Surely I will be with thee;" iv. 25, ὅτι, "Surely a bloody husband art thou;" Numb. xxii. 23, ἄν, "Surely I had slain thee;" Judg. vi. 16, καὶ, "Surely I will be with thee;" Ruth i. 10, "Surely we will return with thee;" 1 Kings i. 13, ὅτι, "Surely Solomon shall reign after me;" Josh ii. 24, ὅτι, "Truly the Lord hath delivered the land into our hands;" Ps. lxxvii. 12, ὅτι, "Surely I will remember thy works of old;" cxii. 6, ὅτι, "Surely he shall not be removed for ever" (see Job xxviii. 1, Isa. vii. 9, see Exemen Millii here, ver. 16, v. 10. 12).

[13] Ver. 21. Παῤῥησίαν ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, We have confidence with God.] "When is it," saith Philo,* "that a servant may use, παῤῥησίαν πρὸς τὸν δεσπότην, confidence towards his lord? Is it not then, ὅταν ἠδικηκότι μὲν ἑαυτοῦ οὐδὲν συνειδῇ, when he is not conscious of doing any evil against him?"

[14] Ver. 24. Ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος, By the Spirit.] So the word "Spirit" is taken in the words following (iv. 1), and so was he given in those times to them that believed (Acts v. 32).

* L. Quis Rer. Div. Hæres, ab initio.

CHAPTER IV.

1 BELOVED, [1] believe not every (pretender to the) spirit (of God), but try the spirits whether they are of God (or not): because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

2 (And, for your direction in this trial,) Hereby know ye the Spirit of God (from that of error): Every spirit (i. e. person pretending to the Spirit of God, or of prophecy,) that confesseth that Jesus Christ (Gr. Jesus Christ which) is come in the flesh is of God:

3 And every (pretender to the) spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ (Jesus Christ which) is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.

4 Ye (to whom he hath given this Spirit, iii. 24) are of God, little children, and [2] have overcome them (these antichrists and false prophets): because greater is he (the Spirit) that is in you, than he (the spirit) that is in the world.

5 They (these antichrists and false prophets) [3] are of the world: (setting up to be temporal princes, and to give the Jews dominion over the heathen world, and) therefore speak they of the world (i. e. of that temporal dominion over the heathens, which the carnal Jews expect, when their Messiah doth appear), and the world (he that is worldly-minded) heareth them.

6 [4] We are of God: (deriving our faith and doctrine from that Jesus who was a Prophet sent from God, and delivered his doctrine in his name: as therefore he said to the Jews then, as we his disciples say now,) he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us (John viii. 47, vi. 45). Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error (see note on ver. 1—3).

7 Beloved, let us (who are of God, ver. 6) love one another: for love is of God (the fruit of his good Spirit in us, Gal. v. 22, 1 Pet. i. 22); and every one that loveth is born of God, (by the Spirit, John iii. 5,) and (this resemblance he hath to him, in love to mankind in general, and to those he hath so highly loved in particular, ver. 9, 10, shows that he) knoweth God (aright, because he keepeth his commandments, ii. 3, 4).

8 He that loveth not (his brother) knoweth not (Gr. hath not known) God (aright); for [5] God is (the God of) love.

9 In this was manifested (the greatness of) the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, (and freely gave him up to the death, Rom. viii. 33,) that we might live through him.

10 [6] Herein is (the demonstration of his) love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us (first, ver. 19), and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

[1] Ver. 1, 2.] The Jews being then generally in expectation of their Messiah, were divided into two parts; a remnant who believed that he was come already, and that our Jesus was the very person promised under that character; and a more prevailing part of them who rejected him and looked for another. Now among these appeared many who took upon them to be the Messiah, or the prophet promised by Moses, "like unto him," saying, "Lo, Christ is here, and lo, he is there" (see the note on Matt. xxiv. 24. 26); and these declaring themselves prophets, must also pretend to the Spirit of prophecy, and do this as Josephus saith they did, προσχήματι θειασμοῦ, "under the pretence of a divine afflatus." These, saith the apostle here, are antichrists; i. e. pretenders falsely to be Christ, in opposition to him who was truly so: nor could they belong to him, or truly confess him, who was "the Word made flesh." Now the strength of this argument depends on these considerations, that the effusion of the Spirit, promised in the times of the Messiah, could only belong to them who owned and believed in the true Messiah; this being made one character of the true Messiah, that he should baptize them who believed in him with the Holy Ghost (Matt. iii. 11). This promise of the Father, as the Holy Ghost is styled, was to be sent by Christ (Luke xxiv. 49) to his disciples (John xvi. 7, xv. 26), to be sent in his name (John xiv. 26): and when he came, his office was to enable those who received him to testify of Christ, that he was indeed risen from the dead, and was the Christ (John xv. 26, Acts i. 8, v. 32), and to "convince the world of sin," because they believed not in him (John xvi. 9). The condition of receiving him was faith in Christ (John vii. 37, Acts ii. 38, 39); and by his assistance did his disciples prove that Jesus Christ, who appeared to the Jews in the flesh, and was crucified among them, was the Christ. He therefore who was made partaker of the χαρίσματα of the Holy Ghost, must be one who believed in that Jesus who suffered in the flesh for us; and therefore they who denied this, could not be assisted by that Spirit who was only sent by him, and given to believers: whence the apostle saith, that "no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus anathema," as these false prophets, who owned him not, must do (1 Cor. xii. 3), and that "no man could say that Jesus was the Christ, but by the Holy Ghost:" that is, he could not confess and testify to the world this truth, but by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, promised and given to believers for that end (see ver. 6. 13—15).

Note therefore, that the apostle is not here speaking of the trial of doctrines, but of spirits, not of the faith necessary to be believed to salvation, but only of the faith necessary to the reception of the Holy Ghost, that unction which would teach them all things (1 John ii. 27).

[2] Ver. 4. Καὶ νενικήκατε, And have overcome.] The doctrine which you preach and confirm by these gifts, and distributions of the Holy Ghost, hath mightily prevailed over all the opposition which the unbelieving Jews, and their false prophets, and false apostles, make against it; because the spirit which acts in them is only able to work by them τέρατα ψεύδους, "false, counterfeit, and lying wonders;" whereas the Spirit that is in you, enables you to confirm the truth with real "miracles, and signs, and divers distributions of the Holy Ghost," by which God beareth witness to the truth of that doctrine which you preach (Heb. ii. 4, Rom. xv. 19, 1 Thess. i. 5).

[3] Ver. 5.] That the hopes of dominion over the heathens, encouraged some of them to set up for the Messiah, and others to fight, see the testimonies of Josephus, note on James iv. 1—3. And on this account they rejected the true Messiah, because his kingdom was not of this world.

[4] Ver. 6.] When the Romish prelates have once proved they are of God, as the apostle did, it will be time to consider the inference of Esthius from this place, That he that is of God must hear their prelates and their church, and come to them to be resolved of any doubt.

[5] Ver. 8. Ὁ Θεὸς ἀγάπη, God is love.] The apostle by these words intends not to express what God is in his essence, or to say, as the schools do, that he is love essentially, and love causalitèr, as being the cause; or objectivè, as being the object of his love; but that he is so demonstrativè, and ἐνεργητικῶς, showing great philanthropy to men in all his dealings with them, or his dispensations towards them, as appears from the two following verses.

[6] Ver. 10. Ἐν τούτῳ ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη, Herein is love.] Here the apostle most lively doth express the freedom and the greatness of the love of God; the freedom of it, in that "he loved us first," when there was nothing in us to deserve or move affection but our misery; but many things which both deserved, and might have moved him to the execution of his sins (which deserved death, and so to fit us for eternal life).

11 Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

12 (And say not, that it is enough that ye love God again, though ye love not your brother, ver. 20, for) No man hath seen God at any time (as we daily see and converse with our brother; and therefore if we love not him whom we have seen, how can we love God whom we have not seen? ver. 20, but) if we love one another, (after his example, though we see him not, we may be sure that) God dwelleth in us (by his Spirit), and (that) his love [7] is perfected in us.

13 Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit (who by his powerful energies proves whose Spirit he is).

14 And (by the Spirit given to us according to his promise) we have seen (i. e. perceived) and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world (see note on ver. 3).

15 [8] Whosoever (believeth this our testimony) shall (from his heart believe, Rom. x. 9. 19, and) confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God (by the Spirit of adoption).

16 And we (by this Spirit) have known and believed the love that God hath (shown) to us (in sending his Son to be the Saviour of the world, ver. 10, 11. 14). God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him (ver. 7).

17 Herein is our love made perfect, (i. e. exactly corresponding to the divine pattern and command, note on ver. 12, so) that we (who thus love) may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world, (conforming ourselves to the pattern of God's affection to mankind, and walking as Christ walked, ii. 6.)

18 [9] There is no fear (of failing at that day) in love (thus perfect); but perfect love casteth out fear: because (that) fear (which takes away this boldness) hath torment (in it; torments the mind with dreadful expectations, and) he that (thus) feareth is not made perfect in love.

19 [10] We love him (and testify this love to him by loving our brother for his sake, after his example, and in obedience to his command), because he first loved us.

20 [11] If any man say, I love God, and (yet) hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

21 And (he moreover shows, by his disobedience to the command of God, the want of true affection to him; for) this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

wrath, we being "enemies to God by wicked works:" the greatness of it, first, in the person sending, the great God of heaven, who "humbles himself even to behold what is done in heaven and earth;" oh, therefore, "what is man that he should be thus mindful of him?" Secondly, the person sent, τὸν μονογενῆ, "his only-begotten," τὸν ἴδιον υἱὸν, "his proper Son" (Rom. viii. 32): for if to call God πατέρα ἴδιον, "his proper Father," was to make himself "equal to God" (John v. 18), the Father himself by calling him his "proper Son," must equally exalt him. Hence even Episcopius here declares him to be so called, because essentiam suam à patre per veram generationem accepisset, "he had received his essence from the Father by a true generation:" for it is certain that the apostle is here extolling the love of God to the highest pitch, and therefore must use this phrase, "the only-begotten Son of God," in the sublimest sense in which that word is used in scripture. Thirdly, the place whither he was sent, into that world which "lay in wickedness." Fourthly, the errand for which he was sent; (1.) to "give up himself a sacrifice for the propitiation of our sins" (see note on ii. 2): (2.) to procure to us, who were dead in trespasses and sins, eternal life.

[7] Ver. 12. Τετελειωμένη, His love is perfected in us.] He then loves us entirely, according to those words of Christ, "If any man keep my words, my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him" (John xiv. 23): or, then is our love to him entire, because then we love him so as to keep his commandments (ii. 5), and so as to follow that example of love which he hath set us; and "as he is, so are we in the world" (ver. 17).

[8] Ver. 15.] For "to as many as received him, gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name" (John i. 12); and "because we are sons, God hath sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba Father" (Gal. iv. 6). Only let it be noted, that this hearty confession must be attended with a readiness to believe all that this Son of God hath taught us in his Father's name, for, "if he say the truth, why do we not believe him?" (John viii. 46,) and a firm purpose to obey his commandments, for "why call we him Lord, Lord, and do not the things that he saith?" (Luke vi. 46.)

[9] Ver. 18. Φόβος οὐκ ἔστι, There is no fear in love.] Christ having so expressly promised a "Come ye blessed" to the charitable person (Matt. xxv. 34—36), and the apostle recommending it as the most excellent of Christian graces (1 Cor. xiii. 13), and "the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. xiii. 8. 12), when this love is made perfect in us, it may well give boldness, and cast out fear of condemnation in the day of judgment.

Others expound the words thus: "There is no fear of what we may lose or suffer in (perfect) love (of our brother), but (such) love casteth out (this) fear, for fear (of what we may lose or suffer) hath torment in it: (and therefore) he that thus feareth, is not made perfect in love (to him)."

[10] Ver. 19.] That is, whosoever thus loves God, and shows it by loving thus his brother, can challenge nothing on that account as due from God; it being God's preventing love to him, which gave the rise to all the love he bears to God, or to his brother for his sake. If therefore any person be constrained by this love to that obedience which testifies the sincerity of his affection to God, or to imitate his love to us by fervent love to the brethren, it is the divine philanthropy which hath excited this affection in him. Or, if ἀγαπῶμεν be the subjunctive mood, the sense runs thus: Let the great love of God to us, mentioned ver. 9, 10, provoke us to returns of love to him, and to our brethren for his sake; since we do hypocritically pretend to love him, if we do not show it by fervent charity towards his children, and our brethren.

[11] Ver. 20.] That is, if what we have more opportunity to do, and can perform with less difficulty, we do not do, how shall we perform what is more difficult? Now we have our Christian brethren still in our view, they are the object of our senses, we daily converse with them; and their wants and miseries being the object of our senses, must naturally move compassion in us; and so it is less difficult to express our love to them, than to that God whom we have not seen, and who is only present to our minds by raised meditations, which do not naturally occur to us, and which we cannot long continue, and so is more difficult than the love of our brother.

CHAPTER V.

1 WHOSOEVER believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him, (as being by his new birth partaker of the divine nature, and created anew after the image of God, Eph. iv. 24, Col. iii. 10.

2 And this note is reciprocal; for) By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments (when our affection to God prevails upon us to do to them all acts of charity he hath required, and by his example recommended to us, 1 John iii. 11. 23, iv. 21).

3 For this is (the genuine test of) the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments (to the true lover of him) [2] are not grievous.

4 For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world (his affections are taken off from it, and set upon his God; and so it cannot be grievous to him to part with it, or suffer the loss of any worldly good, to secure the divine favour): and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith (to wit, that faith which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, Heb. xi. 1, which gives us the assurance of a better and a more enduring substance, and so makes us take joyfully the spoiling of our goods, Heb. x. 34, and patiently endure those light afflictions which are but for a season, as knowing they work for us an exceeding and eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. iv. 7).

5 Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? (And so the author of eternal salvation to all that obey him; for hence we know that we have eternal life, v. 11—13.)

6 This is he [3] that came by (or, with the testimony of) water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not [4] by water only, but by water [5] and blood. And it is [6] the Spirit that beareth witness (and on his testimony we may rely), because the Spirit is truth.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἐκ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται, Is born of God.] The Jews gloried in this title, that they were "the children of God," and had him for their Father (John viii. 41, 42. 45), they being called his sons, Deut. xiv. 1, xxxii. 19, Ps. lxxii. 15, and his first-born, Exod. iv. 22. The apostle therefore here informs them, that this relation would stand them in no stead, unless they were "born again of water and of the Spirit" (John iii. 5), or baptized into the name of Christ, and, by that faith, had "power to become the sons of God" (John i. 12), and also loved those Christians which were born of him; which the unbelieving Jews, and the false teachers among them, were so far from doing, that they every where persecuted the true believers (see note on iii. 1).

[2] Ver. 3. Βαρεῖαι οὐκ εἰσὶν, Are not grievous.] Because his will is conformed to do the will of God, and so he only doth what he would do, and his affections are chiefly placed upon him, and so he is then doing what he chooseth and delighteth in; and it cannot be grievous to be employed as we would, and as we do delight to be.

[3] Ver. 6. That came.] viz. In the name of God, Matt. xxi. 9; in his Father's name, John v. 43 (see Matt. xi. 3, John i. 9. 15, Matt. xxi. 9).

[4] Δι' ὕδατος, By water.] i. e. With the testimony of water, or the testimony given to him by St. John at his baptism; for when John was baptizing, he testified of him, saying, "This is he that cometh after me, who was before me" (John i. 27, 28). He also declared, that he came baptizing, for this very end, "that he might be made manifest to Israel" (ver. 31); and testified, saying, "I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him, and I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record, That this is the Son of God" (ver. 32—34). Hence is he styled, "a man sent from God, who came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe" (ver. 6—8). Hence do John's disciples say to him, "He to whom thou bearest witness, baptizeth," John iii. 26. And Christ himself appealeth to his testimony, John v. 32, 33. Now this testimony could not be rejected by them, "for all men held John as a prophet;" nor durst the pharisees themselves deny that his testimony was from heaven (Matt. xxi. 25, 26).

[5] Καὶ αἵματος, And blood.] For he died in testimony of the truth, and came into the world for this end, "that he might bear witness to the truth" (John xviii. 37): whence he is said to "witness before Pontius Pilate a good confession," viz. that he was the Son of God, or the Messiah, the King of the Jews (1 Tim. vi. 13): this he also testified to the high-priest (Matt. xxvi. 63, 64); and for this testimony was he condemned as worthy of death (ver. 66): for this they mock him at his sufferings, that "he said, he was the Son of God" (Matt. xxvii. 43, Mark xv. 32), and at his death he commends his spirit to God, as his Father (Luke xxiii. 36. 46). The miracles which attended his crucifixion were so great, that they forced the Jews, the centurion, and those that were with him, to confess, "Truly this was the Son of God" (Matt. xxvii. 54), and the whole multitude to "smite their breasts" (Luke xxiii. 48). In a word, the Spirit which assisted the Baptist, proclaimed him, "the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world" (John i. 29), and that supposeth, he was to offer up himself unto the death, for the propitiation of their sins: yea, he himself doth frequently declare, that he was to be slain (Matt. xvi. 21); to be "delivered into the hands of men, and killed" (Matt. xvii. 22, 23), to be "condemned to death" (Matt. xx. 18, 19), and to "rise again the third day;" that he was to be "lifted up" upon the cross (John ii. 14), and that being thus lifted up, he would "draw all men to him" (John xii. 32). Now what impostor would lay this as the foundation of the truth of all his sayings, and all the hopes of any blessings which were to be expected from him, that he should be crucified, and die an ignominious and painful death? Or what could tempt him thus to die, who had no hopes to rise again, if he were not the true Messiah, or the Son of God? How was it possible he should be raised from the dead, but by the mighty power of God? And is it reasonable to imagine, that the God of truth should thus exert the greatness of his power, in confirmation of a lie? that he should work so great a miracle, in favour of a vile impostor falsely usurping his name? or give such large credentials to one who falsely did pretend to be a prophet sent from God, and to be honoured as his Son by all men?

[6] Καὶ Πνεῦμά ἐστι, &c. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness.] Here it is to be noted, that the "witness," in this verse, is only styled τὸ Πνεῦμα, viz. that Spirit which enabled Christ to heal diseases, cast out devils, raise the dead, and work all sorts of miracles, for confirmation of his mission: but in the seventh verse he is styled, τὸ ἅγιον Πνεῦμα, "the Holy Ghost;" which doth distinctly signify the inward gifts, by which the understanding is enlightened, and is enabled to perform things which by nature it could not do, without the immediate workings of the Holy Ghost; as, v. g. the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, prophecy, discerning of spirits, the gift of tongues, and the interpretation of them. That there is ground for this distinction, will appear from these considerations.

1. Because our Saviour, whilst he was on earth, gave to his apostles, and the seventy disciples, power to "heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils" (Matt. x. 8, Luke x. 9), and yet the evangelist John informs us, that "the Holy Ghost was not yet, because that Jesus was not glorified" (John vii. 39). Our Saviour also tells his

7 (The law judges that sufficiently proved, which is confirmed by two or three witnesses, Deut. xix. 15. That Jesus is the Son of God, ver. 5, is thus proved, by witnesses from heaven, and on earth:) For [7] there are three that bear record (to this truth) in (and from) heaven, the [8] Father, the [9] Word, and the [10] Holy Ghost: and these three are one (as in testimony, so in essence).

8 And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these there [11] agree in one.

9 [12] If we receive the witness of men (in these disciples, that the Holy Ghost would not come, till he departed (John xvi. 7), and Peter, that our Lord "being exalted to the right hand of God, received the promise of the Holy Ghost" (Acts ii. 33). The Holy Ghost must therefore signify something distinct from the power of working miracles.

2. The prophecy of Joel, which by Peter is mentioned as the promise on which the giving of the Holy Ghost was founded, is only a promise of visions, dreams, and prophecies, but not of miracles; and the gifts of the Spirit, mentioned by the prophet Isaiah, are only those of wisdom, knowledge, understanding, counsel, courage, piety, and of the fear of the Lord; no mention being made there of signs and wonders.

3. Because, throughout the history of the Acts of the Apostles, where Luke hath occasion to mention the miracles which the apostles and primitive professors did, he always uses these words, τέρατα, σημεῖα, δυνάμεις, "wonders, signs, and powers:" but where he speaks of persons prophesying or speaking with tongues, he doth as constantly ascribe this to the Holy Ghost descending on them.

And, lastly, Where the scripture mentions these things together, it puts a manifest distinction betwixt signs and wonders, and the gifts and distributions of the Holy Ghost. Thus God, saith the apostle, bare witness to the doctrine which they preached, "by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, καὶ Πνεύματος ἁγίου μερισμοῖς, and distributions of the Holy Ghost," Heb. ii. 4 (see Rom. xv. 19, Gal. iii. 5).

The Spirit, therefore, bare witness to Christ on earth by the enabling him to do so many mighty works in confirmation of his mission, to heal all manner of diseases, sicknesses, and maladies, to command the wind and seas to be obedient to him, to cast out devils, and to raise the dead, and by assisting his apostles and disciples to do these things in his name: for that not only his disciples, but even our Lord himself, did cast out devils by the Spirit of God, he himself expressly testifies, Matt. xii. 23, and saith, moreover, that in him was fulfilled that of Isaiah, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, wherefore he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken in heart, to preach deliverance to the captives (to sin and Satan), and to give sight to the blind" (Luke iv. 18. 20). Hence Peter speaks thus to Cornelius and his friends, "You know how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power, who went about doing good, and healed all that were oppressed of the devil" (Acts x. 38). And to these works thus wrought by the assistance of the Spirit of God, our Lord doth frequently appeal, as to a sure testimony that God had sent him: for, "The works," saith he, "that I do in my Father's name, bear witness of me:" (John x. 24, v. 36), yea, they showed that "the Father was in him, and he in the Father" (John x. 37, 38, xiv. 10, 11).

[7] Ver. 7. Τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, There are three that bear witness in heaven, &c.] I shall say nothing of the dispute, whether this verse be genuine or not, seeing the learned Dr. Mills treats so copiously on that subject, in his edition of the New Testament. I only note, that the place cited from Tertullian and Cyprian agree not exactly with the words of John; seeing they speak de Patre, Filio, et Spiritû Sancto, not of "the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost." The objections of Schlictingius against this verse are these:

Obj. 1. That this verse, though it be introduced with ὅτι, "for," hath no coherence with the former verse.

Ans. It coheres well with it, thus: The witness of the Spirit ought in this matter to be received, because he is the Spirit of truth, sent from the Father, and the Son; for in the testimony of the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven is contained the witness of the Father, and the Son also: so that we may truly say, "There be three that bear witness."

Obj. 2. But if so, the testimony of the Father is included in the testimony of the Holy Ghost.

Ans. True: and by this these three witnesses become one in testimony; and yet they differ, as the person sending and the person sent.

Obj. 3. The Λόγος, or "Word," is the Son of God; and therefore, to say he testifies of the Son of God, is to make him testify of himself.

Ans. It is confessed, that the same person is both the Λόγος, and the Son of God; but the thing testified, is not, that Christ was the Λόγος, or the Son of God, by eternal generation, or by his miraculous conception; but that he was the Christ, the promised Messiah, and in that sense the Son of God: and to this the divine nature might give testimony.

[8] Ὁ πατὴρ, The Father] Testified this at his baptism, by a voice from heaven, saying, "This is my beloved Son," &c. (Matt. iii. 17), and at his transfiguration, saying again, "This is my beloved Son, hear him" (Matt. xvii. 5, 6, see note on 2 Pet. i. 14—16): and chiefly, by sending of the Holy Ghost, which he had promised in the times of the Messiah, and who is therefore styled, "the promise of the Father" (Luke xxiv. 49, Acts i. 4).

[9] Ὁ Λόγος, The Word.] Not only by appearing to Stephen (Acts vii. 56), and saying to Saul, "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest" (Acts iv. 5), but chiefly by shedding the Spirit on the apostles and other believers, according to his promise; for, "he being exalted to the right hand of God, and receiving from the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, hath," saith Peter, "shed forth this which you now see and hear: wherefore, let all the house of Israel know, that God hath made this Jesus Lord and Christ" (Acts ii. 33. 36).

[10] Τὸ ἅγιον Πνεῦμα, The Holy Ghost.] The "power from on high" they were to be "endued with" (Luke xxiv. 49), by falling down from heaven upon his disciples; whence "they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake with tongues," to men of all nations, "the wonderful things of God." Till his descent upon them, they were not to stir from Jerusalem, as being not fitted for their work (Acts i. 4), but when he was once given to them that believed, they proved and bare witness, that "God exalted Jesus to his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour" (Acts v. 31, 32). And this our Lord, by his omniscience, foretold that he should testify of him (John xv. 26), yea, that at his coming he should "convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him; of (his) righteousness, because he was gone to the Father; and of judgment, because the prince of this world was judged," and cast out of his kingdom by him (John xvi. 9—11, and xii. 31).

And thus it is easy to discern how these three are one in testimony, because both the Father and the Son give in their testimony by the Holy Ghost: but then if these be three witnesses properly so called, they must be three persons; and more especially the Holy Ghost, by whom the other persons do bear witness, must be so; and if his testimony be also the testimony of God the Father, and the Word, he must be one in essence with them: for if the Spirit be a creature, how can his testimony be formally the testimony of God! as it is styled, ver. 9. 13.

[11] Ver. 8. Εἰς τὸ ἓν εἰσιν, Agree in this one.] If by ἓν εἰσι, ver. 7, were meant no more than εἰς ἓν εἰσι, here, why did the apostle change the words, since these three also are one in testimony, as that imports this only, that they confirm this fundamental truth, that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God?" especially if we consider what is insinuated, ver. 6, that of these three, the Spirit only beareth witness properly; the other, by some action of the Spirit attending them, and by the testimony of others of it; the water, by the Spirit descending on Christ whilst he was in the water, and the Baptist's testimony, that by this sign God had declared to him, that he was the Christ; the blood, as it assures us, that he who shed it died for the truth.

[12] Ver. 9. Εἰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν τῶν ἀνθρώπων λαμβάνομεν, If we receive the witness of men.] This is not so to be interpreted, cases), the witness of God is greater (of more validity and certainty, than that of men; he being neither liable to ignorance nor falsehood: and if his testimony be of such force, we must believe that Jesus is the Christ): for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

10 He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself (as having in himself that Spirit of God which gives this testimony to Christ): he that believeth not (this testimony of) God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son.

11 And this is the (subject of this) record, that God hath given to us (Christians the promise of) eternal life, and this life is in his Son, (he being the hope of glory, Col. i. 27, this life being hid with Christ in God, Col. iii. 4, and he being our life, ibid., he being the author and procurer of it, and having power to confer it on us, John xvii. 2.)

12 He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life: (for we are all the children of God, through faith in Jesus Christ, Gal. iii. 26, and if children, then heirs, Rom. viii. 17.)

13 These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have (by promise, a right to, and, by the Spirit, an earnest of) eternal life, and that ye may (more firmly) believe on the name of the Son of God.

14 And this is the (farther) confidence that we have in (and through) him, that, if we ask any thing (of God, iii. 21, 22) according to his will, he heareth us: (according to Christ's promise, John xiv. 13—15, vii. 16, xvi. 23, 24.)

15 And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we (thus) ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him (iii. 22).

16 If any man see his (sick) brother sin a sin which is not [13] unto death (i. e. for which God hath not peremptorily threatened, and required that he should die for it, as he did to them that were guilty of murder, Gen. ix. 5, 6, Numb. xxxv. 30, 31, and for idolatry, Deut. xvii. 2—5), he shall ask (of God restoration of his life and health), and he shall give him life for them that sin not (thus) unto death. There is a sin unto death (of which God hath denounced, That he that doeth it, shall die for it): I do not say that he shall pray for it (i. e. for deliverance of the person guilty of it from death).

17 All unrighteousness is sin: and there is a sin (of unrighteousness against our brother, which is) not unto death (the law requiring, not that the guilty person should die for it, but only, that he should bring his offering, and make reparation for it).

18 We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not (thus, iii. 15); but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not (see note on iii. 9).

19 And we know that we are (begotten) of God, and (that) the whole world lieth (still) [14] in wickedness.

20 And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is (the) true (God), and we are in him that is true, even (or, to wit,) in his Son Jesus Christ. [15] This is the true God, and (in him is) eternal life.

21 (Having therefore this knowledge of the true God,) Little children, keep [16] yourselves from idols (or, false gods). Amen.

as if the three witnesses on earth related only to the testimony of men; and the three from heaven, only to the testimony of God; and so that the apostle intended here to signify, we had greater reason to believe the witnesses in heaven, than those on earth: for, (1.) the testimony of the Spirit and of the Holy Ghost are of equal certainty and validity: and, (2.) John Baptist being "sent from God" (John i. 6), and his baptism being "from heaven," and not "of men" (Matt. xxi. 25), was also, in effect, the testimony of God. The import therefore of these words is rather this: If the testimony of two or three men be thought sufficient to give credit to any matter in all courts of judicature, surely the testimony of that God (ver. 8), who cannot lie or deceive us, must be of greater force and strength to produce faith in us.

Ver. 13. Ἵνα εἰδῆτε ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον, καὶ ἵνα πιστεύητε.] Here the Codex Alexandrinus reads thus, ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον οἱ πιστεύοντες· so also read the Vulgate and the Syriac; the Arabic thus, Hæc scripsi vobis, O qui creditis in nomen filii Dei, ut sciatis quod vitam habetis æternam quamdiù creditis in nomen filii Dei. Œcumenius, ἵνα πιστεύητε ἀδιαστάκτως καὶ ἀμώμῳ πίστει.

[13] Ver. 16. Ἁμαρτία πρὸς θάνατον, A sin unto death.] Note here, that the phrase, "He shall give him life," cannot reasonably be interpreted of eternal life, for that depends not on the prayers of other men; nor can they be certain that their intercession shall prevail for it, since it belongs only to them who truly repent and reform their lives. (2.) Because the person to be prayed for, is one that hath "not sinned unto death;" i. e. hath not committed a sin which renders him obnoxious to death eternal. (3.) They who interpret this phrase, "a sin unto death," of a sin on which eternal death will certainly follow, by the decree of God, (1.) make the duty here enjoined impracticable; for who can know when his brother's sin is thus to death, or not? who is acquainted with any such decree of God? (2.) They make the difference betwixt a sin unto death, and not to death, to consist, not in the nature of the sins themselves, but in the decree by God passed upon the sinner. (3.) They make the apostle say, He dares not encourage them to pray for the salvation of them who are at present in a state of death and condemnation, which is against the tenor of the scriptures (see Rom. x. 1). The words, "If a man see his brother sin a sin not unto death," seem like unto those of Paul, "If he see him overtaken with a fault" (Gal. vi. 1), i. e. with an act of injustice against his brother, to awaken him out of which sin, God hath inflicted sickness on him, as he did on the Corinthians (1 Cor. xi. 30). The words, "Let him ask, and he shall give him life," seem parallel to those of James, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up" (see the note on James v. 15). If this interpretation will not stand good, consider, that after all the miracles and distributions of the Holy Ghost, vouchsafed in confirmation of the gospel, too many of the Jews apostatized from the profession of it, relapsing to their former Judaism: and this apostasy may here be termed, the "sin unto death;" it being also that which our Saviour represents as the sin against the Holy Ghost, which should not be forgiven (Matt. xii. 32). And they who commit it, being men, saith the apostle, whom "it is impossible to renew unto repentance" (Heb. vi. 4—6), and to whom there remaineth nothing but "fearful looking for of judgment" (Heb. x. 26, 27), the apostle might well add, "I do not say, that you shall pray for them."

[14] Ver. 19. Ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ.] In Satan, who worketh in the children of disobedience (Eph. iii. 2), and leads them captive at his will (2 Tim. ii. 26); whence, by faith in Christ, we are said to be translated "from the power of darkness" (Col. i. 13), "from the power of Satan" (Acts xxvi. 18). and "recovered from the snare of the devil."

[15] Ver. 20. Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεὸς, He is the true God.] That this is not spoken of Christ, the Socinians endeavour to prove, because the article is here added to the word Θεὸς, "God;" which is never, say they, done when Christ is called God. But this is manifestly false; for Thomas saith expressly of him, ὁ Κύριός μου, καὶ ὁ Θεός μου, "My Lord and my God" (John xx. 28); and the apostle, ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεός, "Who is God over all, blessed for ever" (Rom. ix. 5). We prove that this is spoken of Christ;

1. Because the demonstrative pronoun οὗτος most appositely relates to that which immediately went before; now this is Jesus Christ the Son of God.

To this the Socinians* answer, That this is not always so; these relatives often referring to what is more remote: and so this οὗτος may refer to the true God going before. To this we reply;

1. That when this happens to be so, the necessity of referring it to what is more remote, is evident from the text, and necessary from the nature of the thing; as when it is said, Acts iv. 11, οὗτος, "This is the stone set at nought by you builders," this cannot be referred to the man that was made whole, ver. 10, and Acts vii. 19, οὗτος, "He dealt subtly with our nation;" this cannot refer to Joseph, but to the king of Egypt: so also, Acts x. 5, 6, 2 Thess. ii. 9, 2 John 7: but here is no necessity of referring the pronoun to any thing more remote, but on supposition that Christ is not truly God.

2. This never happens when the pronoun relates to any thing that is spoken of professedly, but only when the nearest antecedent is only mentioned accidentally, and by the by. So Eph. ii. 7, "Many deceivers are gone out into the world, who confess not that Jesus is the Christ; οὗτος, he is a deceiver, and an antichrist;" where the pronoun refers not to Christ, because he is there mentioned only by accident, as being the object of the error of those seducers; and so it is in all the other places cited. But here the apostle is professedly speaking of Christ, through the whole verse; and of the Father, only as we, by Christ, are taught to know him. And,

3. To refer this to "the true God" going before, makes the apostle guilty of a tautology, by saying, The true God, he is the true God.

* See Cl. Ars Critic. par. ii. cap. 9, p. 121.

4. Of the same person it is said, "He is the true God, and eternal life." Now "eternal life' is in this very chapter thrice ascribed to the Son, as the author of it, ver. 11, 12, 13. He is styled ζωὴ, "life," John i. 4, v. 26, xiv. 6, xvii. 2; "our life," Col. iii. 4. Christ is here also styled, ὁ ἀληθινός, "the true;" as also, Rev. iii. 7, xix. 11. And otherwise, the Greek should have been, ὦμεν, "that we may," or "might be," to answer to γινώσκωμεν, "that we might know;" and not ἐσμὲν, "we are," in the true.

[16] Ver. 21. Ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων, From the idols,] Or false gods of the heathens, among whom you live: so, 1 Thess. i. 9, "They turned ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων, from idols, to the true and living God:" thus, "An idol is nothing in the world," i. e. no true god, because "there is but one true God," 2 Cor. viii. 4. Thus, to eat things offered to idols, συνειδήσει τοῦ εἰδώλου, "with conscience of the idol," is to eat it with apprehension that there was somewhat of power or virtue in that god to whom it was offered. Nevertheless, because these false gods were still represented by, and worshipped in, their images,* and they were thought necessary to the worship of their deities; therefore the apostle useth here the word "idols," and equally forbids that way of worshipping the true God.

THE SECOND
EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. JOHN,
WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

That John the apostle was the author of the First Epistle, is confessed by all the ancients; and that the same person was the author of this epistle, is evident from the exact agreement of almost every word of this with the former, except the preface and conclusion. For,

First, These words in the fifth verse, "I write no new commandment to you, but that which you have had from the beginning, That ye love one another;" are the same with those, 1 Ep. ii. 8. 10, iii. 10.

Secondly, These words in the sixth verse, "This is love, That we walk after his commandments," are the same with 1 Ep. v. 3, and the following words are in the sense the same with iv. 21.

Thirdly, These words in the seventh verse, "For many deceivers are gone out into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh: he is a deceiver, and an antichrist;" are in sense the same with 1 John ii. 18, 19. 26, iv. 1—3.

Fourthly, These words, ver. 9, "He that transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, hath the Father and the Son;" are in sense the same with 1 John ii. 24.

Fifthly, These words, ver. 12, "That your joy may be full:" are expressly found, 1 John i. 4.

Moreover, the arguments which Grotius advances to the contrary, as magna argumenta, are of no force against, but rather may be used as confirmations of, this assertion, That John the apostle was the author of this epistle. For whereas it is objected, that Eusebius puts this, and the following Epistle, among the "doubtful epistles," leaving it uncertain whether they were written by the apostle, or by John, presbyter of Ephesus, to whom they were ascribed, saith Jerome; it is to be noted from Eusebius, that though by some they were doubted of, "yet were they known to many of the ancients:"* yea, this Second Epistle is cited twice by Irenæus, as the genuine epistle of John the apostle and disciple of our Lord, declaring, that "they who denied that Jesus Christ was come in the flesh, were† seducers and antichrists," ver. 7, 8, and "they who bid the heretic God speed, are partakers of his evil deeds;"‡ which are the words found, ver. 10.

* Τῶν δὲ ἀντιλεγομένων, γνωρίμων δὲ ὅμως τοῖς πολλοῖς—— ἡ ὀνομαζομένη δευτέρα, καὶ τρίτη Ἰωάννου. Hist. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 25.

† Joannes, discipulus Christi, in prædictâ epistolâ fugere eos præcepit, dicens, Multi seductores exierunt in hunc mundum, qui non confitentur Jesum Christum in carne venisse; hic est seductor, et antichristus; videte eos, ne perdatis quod operati estis. Lib. iii. cap. 18, p. 278.

‡ Ἰωάννης δὲ ὁ τοῦ Κυρίου μαθητὴς ἐπέτεινε τὴν καταδίκην αὐτῶν, μηδὲ χαίρειν αὐτοῖς ὑφ' ἡμῶν λέγεσθαι βουληθείς, ὁ γὰρ λέγων αὐτοῖς, φησὶ, χαίρειν, κοινωνεῖ τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτῶν τοῖς πονηροῖς. Lib. i. cap. 13, p. 94, A.

And in the council of Carthage, held A. D. 256, Aurelius* cites the tenth verse, as the words of John the apostle of the Lord.

Clement of Alexandria† makes mention of "the larger Epistle of John;" which supposeth he had writ one or more shorter.

And Epiphanius saith,‡ that "the Alogi, who rejected his Gospel and Revelation, would perhaps reject his epistles also." So that we have here the testimony both of the east and of the west, concerning the true author of this epistle, that it was John, the apostle and disciple of our Lord; which sure must be proof sufficient against a bare doubt, or the silence of some men about this matter, of which Origen* speaks. The other arguments of Grotius are so fully answered by Dr. Hammond, in his preface to this epistle, that it is superfluous to say any thing upon that subject.

As for the name "catholic," that also seems to be given to this and the following epistle; not as being written to all in general, some of the ancients conceiving this was written only to one family, as was the other to one person, but, as Cotelerius† notes, because they were admitted by many churches, and read as catholic epistles.

3 Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love (or, the true and beloved Son of the Father).

4 I rejoiced greatly that I found (those) of thy children walking [4] in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

5 And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning (of the gospel), that we love one another (see note on 1 John ii. 7).

6 And this is love, that we walk after his commandments (v. 3). This is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it (ii. 24, i. e. We should continue walking according to the truth of the gospel, which it concerns us now especially to be careful of).

7 For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ [5] is come in the flesh (or Jesus Christ coming in the flesh). This is a deceiver and an antichrist (see note on ii. 18. 22, iv. 1—3).

8 Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things

ANNOTATIONS.

[1] Ver. 1. Πρεσβύτερος, The elder.] That the apostle should in this epistle conceal his name, as in the former he had done, is so far from being an argument to conclude he was not the author of it, that it proves rather the contrary; he being, as it is observed by Dr. Hammond, the only apostle that affected to conceal his name, and who, in his gospel, scarce ever speaks of himself without some circumlocution.

That he should call himself "elder," and not apostle, as Peter also doth, is no more an argument against the apostleship of the one than of the other. The word "elder," being a name of honour and dignity belonging to the chief of their tribes, agrees very well with the office of apostles, set over the twelve tribes of the house of Israel. But if this epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, as is probably collected from that caution given in it, ver. 7, 8, to beware of "the deceivers that were gone out into the world," that they might not "lose the things which they had wrought;" the apostle could not then be so aged when he writ it as he is generally thought to have been, though he might be then seventy years old, and therefore aged (see note on Philem. 9).

[2] Ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ, To the elect lady.] That the apostle wrote this epistle to a single person, who was of honourable descent, and therefore styled "lady," will not follow from the mention of her children, ver. 4, seeing that phrase is used both of the members of the Jewish and of the Christian church (Isa. liv. 1, Gal. iv. 25. 27, 28. 31): not from the words, "I hope to come to you, and speak mouth to mouth;" for so Paul did to the church of Jerusalem, when he declared to them what things God had wrought by him and Barnabas (Acts xv. 4): and so might John do to that, or any other church. It seems rather, from the words, "I have many things to write to you," and from "the children of the elect sister," mentioned ver. 12, 13, that it should be some Christian church: and then I think there is great reason to conjecture it must not be that of Ephesus, but some Jewish church, and most probably that of Jerusalem, the mother of all churches. For,

1. All the other epistles, excepting that one to Gaius, which pass under the name of "catholic," were written to the Jews, and so this probably must be so.

2. As other churches are styled συνεκλεκταὶ, "elected together with her," 1 Pet. v. 13, so is the church of the Jews styled throughout the Old Testament "the elect;" and the converts of them in the New, "the elect," Matt. xxiv. 22, and "the election," Rom. xi. 5. 7.

3. The phrase, "The word that ye have heard, the truth you have received, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning," seems most properly to agree to them, to whom it was necessary that the word of God should be first preached (Acts xiii. 41).

4. This church being that church from which the word came out to all other churches, who all received of her spiritual things, she may on that account, by the apostle of the circumcision, be well styled κυρία, as being the lady and mother of all other churches: and so we find that anciently, both she and her bishops were at first preferred before other bishops and churches; whence the emperor Justinus,* in his epistle to pope Hormisda, saith that "all churches favour the church of Jerusalem, as being the mother of all churches." But yet, if this epistle was written after the destruction of Jerusalem, this interpretation cannot stand.

[3] Ver. 2. Εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, For ever.] This seems to assert the perpetuity and indefectibility of the church of God; for where the truth of the gospel is for ever, there must be a church for ever.

[4] Ver. 4. Ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, In the truth.] i. e. In the doctrine of Christ, as the Father hath commanded, saying, "This is my beloved Son, hear him" (Matt. xvii. 5).

[5] Ver. 7. Ἐρχόμενον ἐν σαρκὶ, Coming in the flesh.] It appears from the epistle of Ignatius to the church of Smyrna, that there were then heretics, or rather infidels,† who denied which we have wrought, but that we receive [6] a full reward.

* Ad ecclesiam Hierosolymitanam præcipuè omnes favorem impendunt, quasi matri Christiani nominis. Vide Coteler. Not. in lib. ii. Recogn. p. 338, 339.

† Οὐχ ὥσπερ ἄπιστοί τινες λέγουσι τὸ δοκεῖν αὐτὸν πεπονθέναι. §. 2. Μὴ ὁμολογῶν αὐτὸν σαρκοφόρον. §. 5. Vide §. 4, 7.

9 Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that [7] abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

10 If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed (i. e. have no familiarity with him, and wish him no success in his enterprises):

11 For he that biddeth him [8] God speed is partaker of his evil deeds (as showing friendship to him that does them, and wishing well to them; for by this he shows he is willing he should succeed in them).

12 Having many things to write unto you, I would not write (them) with paper and ink (as I do this epistle): but I trust (ἐλπίζω γὰρ for I hope, say some copies,) to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full.

that Jesus Christ had taken upon him true flesh, saying, he only had the appearance of it, and suffered only in appearance: and these are thought to be the followers of Simon Magus, who, taking upon him to be Christ, said that he* "appeared in Judea as a man, not being so, and seemed to suffer, when he did not so." Saturninus,† one of his followers, taught that "Christ only appeared as a man, and suffered in appearance only." But the apostle could not here put in this caution against him, because he was not yet in being when this epistle was indited. According to the other rendering of the words, "Denying Jesus Christ, who is come in the flesh," they will signify the same as denying him to be the Messiah, and so respect the unbelieving Jews, and be designed to establish them to whom he wrote against that apostasy which was then among the Jewish converts.

[6] Ver. 8. Μισθὸν πλήρη, That we lose not——a full reward.] Hence it follows, that it is not only lawful, but is the duty of a Christian, to serve God, with respect to the recompense of reward. (2.) That they who once "walked in the truth, as they had received a commandment" (ver. 4), had Christian charity (ver. 5), even that love which enabled them to walk according to God's commandment (ver. 6), might "lose those things which they had wrought."

[7] Ver. 9. Ὁ μένων ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ, He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ.] These words being in sense the same with those we find 1 John ii. 22—24, seem to show that "the doctrine of Christ" here mentioned is this fundamental doctrine, that "Jesus is the Christ:" and then the "not abiding in it" must be the apostatizing from it to Judaism; which Paul and the apostles of the circumcision so much laboured to prevent.

[8] Ver. 11. Χαίρειν αὐτῷ μὴ λέγετε, Bid him not God speed.] This precept seems to be taken from the Jews, who were forbid to say אשרי, "God speed," to a man that was excommunicated, or was doing any evil action. Hence it is forbidden by their canons,* to say "God speed" to a man that is ploughing on the sabbath-day. They also are forbid to come within four cubits of a heretic, or of a person excommunicated; and much more to admit him into their houses. But yet this doth not forbid us to show humanity towards a distressed heretic (seeing he ceaseth not to be of the number of those whom we should pity and pray for); but only is a prohibition from doing any thing which imports a consent to, or approbation of, his evil actions.

THE THIRD EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. JOHN,

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

That this epistle was written by the author of the First and Second, and therefore by John the apostle, appears by the agreement of them in words and phrases. For,

First, "The elder," ver. 1; "I rejoiced greatly, that thou walkest in the truth," ver. 3; "He that doeth good is of God; he that doeth evil hath not seen God;" are the usual phrases of the First and Second Epistles.

Secondly, Those words, "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth," are in sense the same with the fourth verse of the Second Epistle. The thirteenth and fourteenth verses are in words the same with the twelfth verse of that epistle.

Thirdly, Those words, ver. 12, "And we bear witness, and ye know that our witness is true," do characterize this apostle: for as they are words of confirmation, importing an apostolical authority, so are they twice used by this apostle, John xix. 35, xxi. 24, and by him only.

1 The elder unto the well beloved [1] Gaius, whom I love in the truth (i. e. with sincerity).

2 Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health (περὶ πάντων, in all things

ANNOTATIONS.

[1] Ver. 1. Gaius.] This Gaius, who is here commended for his charity to, and entertainment of, both the brethren and strangers (ver. 5), and especially of those who went out from the church of Jerusalem to preach the gospel among the gentiles, and who had given "testimony of his love before the church," seems to be Gaius of Corinth, styled by Paul, "Gaius, my host, and of the whole church," Rom. xvi. 23; where there is intimation of his charity to the brethren and to himself, given by Paul to those at Rome; and so a testimony of it from one of them who "went out to preach the gospel among the gentiles, taking nothing of them." And indeed Paul and Barnabas went out upon this temporal), even as thy soul prospereth (in all things spiritual).

3 For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came (out of Judea) and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth (confirming their testimony by thy conversation).

4 I have no greater joy [2] than to hear that my children walk in (the) truth.

5 Beloved, thou doest faithfully (as becomes a faithful Christian) whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers (whom thou receivest into thy house, Rom. xvi. 23);

6 Which have borne witness of thy charity before the church: [3] whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort (i. e. with such charity and care, as become one who considers that he performs these things, not to men only, but to God and Christ, whose ministers they are), thou shalt do well:

7 Because that [4] for his name's sake they went forth (to preach the gospel, Acts xv. 26), taking nothing of the Gentiles (to whom they preached the gospel without charge, 1 Cor. ix. 18).

8 We therefore ought to receive such, that we (Christians who do not preach it) might (yet) be fellowhelpers to the truth (by helping them that do so).

9 [5] I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the preeminence among them, receiveth us not.

10 Wherefore, if I come, [6] I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us (me and the other apostles, who thought not fit to lay the burden of circumcision on the believing gentiles,) with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and (but) forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church (as the Jews did the uncircumcised out of their society: see note on James ii. 12).

11 Beloved, follow not that which is evil (after the example of Diotrephes), but that which is good (as Demetrius doth: for) he that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God (1 John iii. 6. 10).

12 Demetrius hath (a) good report of all men, and of the truth itself: yea, and we also bear record (of him); and ye know that our record is true (John xix. 35, xxi. 14).

13 I had many things (which it would be profitable) to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee:

14 But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

errand, first from Antioch, by the direction of the Spirit (Acts xiii. 4), then from Jerusalem, being sent by that church to Antioch (Acts xv. 30); and they went out, ὑπὲρ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, "for the name of Christ" (ver. 26), "taking nothing of the gentiles" (1 Cor. ix. 5, 6). So did also Titus and Timothy, and all that were sent by Paul to Achaia (2 Cor. xii. 17, 18): so did they at Thessalonica (1 Thess. ii. 9); and so did none of the rest of the apostles, or brethren of the Lord (1 Cor. ix. 5, 6): so that we have no ground from scripture to refer this to any other. And whereas it is said that Gaius of Corinth was the convert of Paul, 1 Cor. i. 14; whereas this Gaius is here styled one of John's children, and so must be supposed to have been the convert of John: to this it may be answered, that John calls all to whom he writes his "children," 1 John ii. 1. 12. 18. 28, iii. 7. 18, v. 21, and so the word "children" signifies with him no more than the words "Christian brethren;" and the "elders" and "fathers" being oft of the same import, he styling himself an "elder," may well call them he writes to, "children."

[2] Ver. 4. Ἵνα ἀκούω, Than to hear.] This construction of the conjunction ἵνα, saith Beluleius, is sufficient to show that this is the epistle of John, it being almost peculiar to him to use this conjunction for ὅτε, or ὅταν, or ἢ ἵνα· as, John xv. 8, "In this is my Father glorified, ἵνα, when you bring forth much fruit:" and ver. 13, "Greater love than this hath no man, i. e. ἵνα, than that a man lay down his life for the brethren," xvi. 2; "The time will come, ἵνα, when they will put you out of the synagogues:" and, ver. 32, "The hour cometh, ἵνα, when you shall be scattered" (see note on 1 John iv. 17).

[3] Ver. 6. Οὓς προπέμψας ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, Whom if you bring forward, as is worthy of God.] i. e. As it is fit to receive the ministers of God: so to receive Phebe, ἀξίως τῶν ἁγίων, is to receive her "as becometh Christians" to receive the saints (Rom. xvi. 2). The word προπέμψας is the word still used concerning them who are to be sent forward in preaching the gospel, or in their travels concerning the affairs of the church (see Acts xv. 3, xx. 38, xxi. 5, Rom. xv. 24, 1 Cor. xvi. 6. 11, 2 Cor. i. 16, Tit. iii. 13).

[4] Ver. 7. Ὑπὲρ γὰρ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ ἐξῆλθον, For his name's sake they went forth.] That is, saith one, "they were expelled, or cast out;" referring this to the Christians, who, by the persecution of the unbelieving Jews, were driven from Jerusalem (Acts viii. 1). But, first, the word ἐξῆλθον, "they went forth," is only used in the forcible sense, when mention is made of devils going forth from those they possessed at Christ's command, and never of any Christians expelled from any place for the profession of Christianity. Secondly, The apostle speaks manifestly here of those who went out as the apostles and ministers of Christ to preach to the gentiles; whereas they of the dispersion, mentioned Acts viii. 1, went out to avoid persecutions, and preached to the Jews only, not thinking it lawful to converse with, or preach to, the gentiles (Acts xi. 19).

[5] Ver. 9. Ἔγραψα, I wrote.] "I had written," so the Vulgar: "I would have writ," so the Syriac: the Hebrews often use the præteritum for the plusquam-perfectum: and Vossius observes of the aorist, that it is so called because it is used sometimes for the perfect, sometimes for the preterperfect tense; and then ἔγραψα may be rendered "I had written" (see examples of this nature, note on 1 Cor. v. 9). The apostle then seems here to obviate an objection, why he writes to Gaius, a single person, and not to the whole church; declaring that he would have writ to the church, but then Diotrephes and his party would have hindered the effect of his writing. Now who this Diotrephes was is wholly uncertain: I see no ground for the conjecture of Grotius, that he was a gentile convert, who would not admit those Jews who, professing Christianity, still observed the rites of the law, into the Christian assemblies. Esthius, on the contrary, conjectures, that he was one of those Jewish zealots, who held it necessary that even the gentile converts should be circumcised and observe the law, and rejected those who had declared for the contrary, as we know from Paul, and the council at Jerusalem, John had done: and that there were men in Corinth and Galatia, who upon this account opposed the apostles, we learn from those epistles; but read not of any gentile converts who would not receive the weak Jews, or be hospitable to them, on the account of their observance of the law, much less of any of them who opposed themselves to the apostles on this account. Moreover, the subject of the apostle's writing being to exhort Christians to receive them who had gone out to preach the gospel among the gentiles, "taking nothing" of them; and all that did so, as far as we know any thing of them, being against these impositions, the apostle could not fear they should not be received, because observers of the law; but, on the contrary, because they were "dead to the law."

[6] Ver. 10. Ὑπομνήσω, I will remember his works.] Private offences against ourselves must be forgiven and forgotten: but when the offence, εἰς τὴν πίστιν ἐμπόδιον φέρει, is an impediment to the faith, and very prejudicial to the church, it is to be opposed, and openly reproved.

GENERAL EPISTLE OF ST. JUDE,

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

PREFACE.

HAVING proved, note on ver. 1, that Jude the apostle was the author of this epistle, I have nothing more to add, by way of preface to it, but the words of the learned Dr. Lightfoot, which are these:

"As the Second Epistle of St. Peter and this of Jude are very near akin in style, matter, and subject, so it is fairly conjecturable that they were not far removed in time, speaking both of wicked ones, and wickedness, at the same height and ripeness. It may be Jude stands up in the charge of his brother James among the circumcision of Judea, and directs his epistle to all those who were 'sanctified and preserved' in those apostatizing times, as his brother had done to all the twelve tribes in general.

"In citing the story of Michael the archangel contending with the devil about the body of Moses, ver. 9, he doth but the same that St. Paul doth, in naming Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. iii. 8, namely, allege a story which was current and owned among that nation, though there was no such thing in scripture; and so he argueth with them from their own authors and concessions: for among the Talmudists there seems to be something like the relics of such a matter; viz. of Michael and the angel of death disputing or discoursing about fetching away the soul of Moses.

"His alleging the prophecy of Enoch is an arguing of the very like nature, as reciting and referring to some known and common tradition that they had among them. To this purpose, the book Sepher Jesher, a Hebrew writer, speaketh of Enoch after such a tenor; and in both these he useth their own testimonies against themselves, as if he should have said at large, These men speak evil of dignities; whereas they have, and own a story for current, that even Michael the archangel did not speak evil of the devil, when he was striving with him about the body of Moses: and whereas they show and own a prophecy of Enoch, of God coming to judgment, these are the very men to whom this matter is to be applied." Which words give a sufficient answer to the only objection made against the authority of this book; viz. that it cites apocryphal writings.

1 JUDE, the servant of Jesus Christ, and [1] brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called (Gr. to the called, who have been sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in (the faith of) Jesus Christ):

2 Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied.

3 Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me (Gr. I thought it necessary) to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for [2] the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

4 For there are certain men crept in unawares (Gr. for certain men have entered, viz. into the church), who were before of old [3] ordained to this condemnation, ungodly

ANNOTATIONS.

[1] Ver. 1. Ἀδελφὸς Ἰακώβου, The brother of James.] This characteristic is sufficient to assure us, this epistle can belong only to Jude the apostle (distinguished from Judas Iscariot by this title, that he was "Judas the brother of James," Luke vi. 16), and to confirm the title given to this epistle by the ancients, "The General Epistle of Jude the apostle:" this being a plain demonstration of the point, Grotius will have these words, "the brother of James," to be an addition of some transcriber; but this being said without any proof lays the whole scripture uncertain, since every man may say, if that will be sufficient without proof, that what he dislikes is the addition of some transcriber. Tertullian* is positive that Enoch, apud Judam apostolum testimonium possidet, "hath the testimony of Jude the apostle to confirm his prophecy;" and among the apostles of Christ, Origen† reckons Peter, the writer of two epistles, and James and Jude. That in this epistle he doth not style himself an apostle, can be no argument to conclude he was not an apostle; since the same argument will prove, that James and John, and even Paul, were no apostles.

[2] Ver. 3. Τῇ ἅπαξ παραδοθείσῃ πίστει, The faith once delivered to the saints.] Here, saith Esthius, the apostle insinuates that which the fathers teach; viz. that nothing can be added to the faith, because it was delivered all at once as a depositum, so to be kept that nothing ought to be added to it, or taken from it. Whence it is evident to a demonstration, that the new articles added by the Trent council to the Apostles' Creed, can be no articles of the Christian faith, as being not delivered by Christ, or his apostles, to the world, nor known to the Christians for many ages after their decease.

[3] Ver. 4. Προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα, Before ordained to this condemnation.] Gr. "Of whom it was before written, that this should be their condemnation:" for, that this cannot be meant of any divine ordination, or appointment of them to eternal condemnation, is evident, first, because it cannot be thought, without horror, that God doth thus ordain men to perdition before they had any being. Secondly, the word κρῖμα here relates not unto sin, but punishment, the fruit of sin: so Mark xii. 40, "They shall receive, περισσότερον κρῖμα, greater punishment;" "Thinkest thou this, O man, that thou shalt avoid, τὸ κρῖμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the judgment (or punishment) of God?" Now God ordaineth none to punishment but sinners and ungodly men, as these persons here are styled. And, thirdly, these were men of whom it was before written, or prophesied, that they should be condemned for their wickedness: for, ver. 14, "Enoch προεφήτευσε prophesied before to (or of) these men, saying, That God would come ποιῆσαι κρῖσιν, to do judgment upon all, and to reprove all the ungodly among them;" and men, [4] turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only [5] Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

5 I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once [6] knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people (of Israel, of whom you are a part) out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed [7] them that believed not.

6 And the angels [8] which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day.

7 Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to [9] fornication, and going after strange (Gr. other) flesh, are [10] set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

8 Likewise also [11] these filthy dreamers defile the in the parallel place of Peter (2 Pet. ii. 3), their punishment is styled τὸ κρῖμα ἔκπαλαι, "the punishment long ago denounced" against them; viz. that they should be "reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished" (ver. 9), that they should "perish in their corruption" (ver. 12), they being the men to whom "the blackness of darkness was reserved for ever" (ver. 13). And this is the very thing that both Peter, from ver. 4 to 13, and Jude, from this verse to ver. 16, set themselves to prove: and this also is the import of the word προεγράφη, Rom. xv. 4, ὅσα προεγράφη, "Whatsoever things were before written, were written for our instruction;" and Gal. iii. 1 (see the note there.) "He speaks this of them," saith Œcumenius,* "because Peter and Paul had before spoken of them, that in the last time there should come such deceivers; and before them Christ himself, saying, Many shall come in my name, and deceive many." And against this interpretation of Œcumenius and Dr. Hammond, there lies only this objection, that the judgment mentioned by Christ and his apostles, not long before, cannot so properly be called κρῖμα τὸ ἔκπαλαι, "the judgment long ago denounced;" nor could these ungodly men be styled οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι, "the men foresied of old," on that account, so well as if this be referred to the prophecy of Enoch, Jude 14, or to the words spoken before by the holy prophets, 2 Pet. iii. 2. For ἔκ-αλαι and πάλαι joined with προγεγραμμένοι, ibid., seem plainly to import some ancient time in which this judgment was denounced against these ungodly men.

[4] Μετατιθέντες, Turning the grace of God into lasciviousness.] This agrees exactly with the lewd doctrines of the Nicolaitans, mentioned note on 2 Pet. ii., and as exactly with the doctrine of Simon Magus, that "they who believed in him and his Helena might freely do what they listed, secundùm enim ipsius gratiam salvari, sed non secundùm operas justas, men being to be saved by his grace, and not by works" (Iren. lib. i. cap. 29, Theodoret. Hær. Fab. lib. i. cap. 1).

[5] Καὶ τὸν μόνον δεσπότην Θεὸν, καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἀρνούμενοι.] These words may be thus rendered, "And denying Jesus Christ, our only master, God and Lord." And that they ought to be thus rendered, is argued, (1.) because one article only is put before all these words, δεσπότης, Θεὸς, Κύριος, which shows they all belong to the same person. (2.) Because the person who is here δεσπότης Θεὸς, the only "master, God," is by Peter, 2 Pet. ii. 1, styled τὸν ἀγοράσαντα αὐτοὺς δεσπότην, "the Lord that bought them:" now it is Christ who bought us with the price of his own blood. To the first of these arguments Grotius and Woltzogenius answer, That it is common in scripture to affix one and the same article to divers persons, and in particular to God the Father, and to Christ: as, v. g. "No fornicator, or unclean person, shall have any inheritance in the kingdom, τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ, of Christ and of God," Eph. v. 5; "I charge thee, ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ," 1 Tim. v. 21, which, 2 Tim. iv. 1, is τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου: and 2 Pet. i. 2, "In the knowledge, τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Ἰησοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, of God, and our Lord Jesus Christ" (see 1 Tim. vi. 13). To the second argument it may be answered, That in scripture, not only Christ, but the Father, is said to have bought and purchased us, Acts xx. 28, 1 Cor. vi. 20, and that he is the person intended by Peter, see the note there. And seeing the word δεσπότης is never elsewhere ascribed to Christ, I think our version, which puts the comma after God, is without just exception. Note also, that Simon Magus denied both the God of Israel and Jesus Christ, declaring, that he himself was that* "infinite Power, which appeared to the Samaritans as the Father, and to the Jews as the Son of God;" and so he and his followers denied both the Father and the Son.

[6] Ver. 5. Εἰδότας ὑμᾶς ἅπαξ τοῦτο.] The Jews knowing the destruction which God brought upon the unbelieving Jews in the wilderness, as well when Jude writ, as before, it seemeth not so proper to say to them, "You knew this once," as to say, "You knew it before," which seems to be the import of the word ἅπαξ, ver. 3, and in those words of Samson, Judg. xvi. 21, ἐξελεύσομαι ὡς ἅπαξ, "I will go forth as before," and, xx. 31, "The Benjamites began to smite them, ὡς ἅπαξ καὶ ἅπαξ, saying, They flee before us, ὡς τὸ πρῶτον, as before." Or, secondly, it may be rendered fully, plainly, or certainly, for τὸ ἅπαξ, saith Phavorinus, is put ἀντὶ τοῦ ὄντως, βεβαίως, "for verily and firmly;" and Suidas saith it is used ἀντὶ τοῦ ὁλόλου ὁλοσχερῶς, "for entirely and fully," and so it answers to the Hebrew אמת, or אחר, which signifies truly, or certainly, and is rendered by the Septuagint, ἅπαξ.

[7] Τοὺς μὴ πιστεύσαντας, Them that believed not;] i. e. Saith Grotius, "Those that obeyed not, for such show they believed not at all, or not aright." But this note is needless here; for the scripture expressly saith, they perished in the wilderness, "because they believed not in God, but tempted," i. e. distrusted, "him, ten times," Numb. xiv. 22, Ps. cvi. 24, and Paul, "We see then they could not enter in because of unbelief," Heb. iii. 18, 19, Heb. iv. 2.

[8] Ver. 6. Μὴ τηρήσαντας τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀρχὴν, Not keeping their original estate, ἀλλὰ ἀπολιπόντας τὸ ἴδιον οἰκητήριον, but leaving their proper habitation.] That which we are to enjoy for ever, is in the style of scripture called τὸ ἴδιον, "our own," that which is proper to us; that which we are to leave to others, τὸ ἀλλότριον, as in those words, "If you have been unfaithful in that which is another man's, who will give you that which is your own?" (Luke xvi. 12.) These angels being therefore primarily designed to live for ever in the highest heavens, the regions of light and bliss, they are here styled "their proper habitation" (see note on 2 Pet. ii. 4).

[9] Ver. 7. Τὸν ὅμοιον τούτοις τρόπον ἐκπορνεύσασαι, Fornicating then, and going after the flesh in like manner,] As these do now. Of both these crimes the Nicolaitans were notoriously guilty: for, first, they held that matrimony was a mere human institution, that obliged no man's conscience; and so did indiscretè vivere, "live without making any difference" betwixt one woman and another. And, secondly, they practised unnatural lusts, and Sodomitical copulations, as may be proved from the testimonies of Irenæus,† Clement of Alexandria, the Constitutions of the Apostles, Epiphanius, and others.

[10] Πρόκεινται δεῖγμα, πυρὸς αἰωνίου δίκην ὑπέχουσαι, Are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.] That this is spoken not of the cities themselves, but of the inhabitants which dwelt in them, i. e. of them, who had "given themselves over to fornication, and gone after flesh," is evident; but yet I conceive they are said to "suffer the vengeance of eternal fire," not because their souls are at present punished in hell-fire, but because they and their cities perished by that fire from heaven, which brought a perpetual and irreparable destruction on them and their cities: for, first, we have proved, note on 2 Pet. ii. 6, iii. 7, that even the devils themselves are not tormented at present in that infernal fire, but only will be cast into it at the day of judgment; and therefore neither do the wicked Sodomites yet suffer in those flames. Secondly, I would admonish you, saith the apostle, though you once knew this, that Sodom and Gomorrah thus suffered the vengeance of eternal fire. Now from the history of Genesis, and the writings of the prophets, they might know that these cities, and the inhabitants of them, were overthrown, εἰς αἰῶνα, "with a perpetual desolation" (Zeph. ii. 9); but they could not know from thence that their souls were afterward cast into hell-fire. Thirdly, τὸ δεῖγμα, "an example," is to be taken from something visible to, or knowable by, all who were to be terrified by it, especially when it is δεῖγμα προκείμενον, "an example manifested," and proposed: now such was not the punishment of their souls in hell-fire, but nothing was more known and celebrated among authors, sacred and profane, Jewish, Christian, and heathen writers, than τὸ πῦρ καταβάσιον ἐπὶ Πενταπόλεως, "the fire that fell down upon Pentapolis," or the five cities of Sodom, they being mentioned still in scripture as "the cities which God overthrew with a perpetual desolation;" in the apocryphal writings, "the waste land that yet smoketh, and the plants bearing fruit that never come to ripeness," being, saith the book of Wisdom, μαρτύριον τῆς πονηρίας, "a testimony of their wickedness" (Wisd. x. 7), and of the divine vengeance on them for it. The author of the history of the Maccabees saith, that "God destroying them by fire and brimstone" (Macc. iii. 2. 5), παράδειγμα τοῖς ἐπιγινομένοις κατέστησεν, "left them an example to the ages to come." Philo saith,* that "the cinders, brimstone, and smoke, and the obscure flame as it were of a fire burning, yet appearing about Syria, are memorials of the perpetual evils which happened to them." Josephus adds,† that the things which are said of Sodom, ἔχει πίστιν ἀπὸ τῆς ὄψεως, "are confirmed by ocular inspection, there being yet visible some relics of the fire coming down from heaven, and the shadows of the five cities." This region, say Clemens Romanus,‡ and other Christian writers, "being condemned by fire and brimstone, made it apparent that God reserves the wicked for punishment and stripes." Even heathen writers§ do confess that it was traditionally received, "that formerly there were fruitful fields, and large cities, which were afterward consumed by thunder and lightning." And, fourthly, this sense may be farther confirmed from the parallel place of Peter, who saith that God, reducing the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah to ashes, condemned the inhabitants of them by that overthrow, proposing them for an example of his vindictive justice upon them who afterward should live ungodly: where plainly the τέφρωσις, the reduction of those cities with their inhabitants into ashes, or the burning them by fire and brimstone falling down from heaven, is mentioned as the thing which placed them as an example of God's vengeance on the ungodly to all future ages; nor could any thing be a more fit example of it: for since Peter hath informed us, that "the heavens and the earth that now are, are reserved to fire against the day of judgment, and destruction of ungodly men, when the earth and the works that are therein shall be burnt up," what could be a more exact emblem of that day, "when God will come in flaming fire to take vengeance on the wicked," and leave them burning with the earth for ever, than was this burning of the cities and the inhabitants of Sodom, by fire and brimstone falling down from heaven? Nor is there any thing more common and familiar in scripture, than to represent a thorough and irreparable vastation, whose effects and signs should be still remaining, by the word αἰώνιος, which we here render "eternal:" "I will set thee, εἰς ἔρημον αἰώνιον, in places desolate of old," Ezek. xxvi. 20; "I will destroy thee, and thou shalt be no more, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, for ever," ver. 21; "I will make thee ἐρημίαν αἰώνιον, a perpetual desolation, and thy cities shall be built no more," xxxv. 9 (see also Ezek. xxxvi. 2, Isa. lviii. 12); "They have caused them to stumble in their ways, to make their land desolate, and σύριγμα αἰώνιον, a perpetual hissing," Jer. xviii. 15, 16; "I will bring you, ὀνειδισμὸν αἰώνιον, an everlasting reproach and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten," Jer. xxiii. 40, xxv. 9; "I will make the land of the Chaldeans a perpetual desolation, θήσομαι αὐτοὺς εἰς ἀφανισμὸν αἰώνιον, they shall sleep, ὕπνον αἰώνιον, a perpetual sleep," Jer. li. 39. And this especially is threatened, where the destruction of a nation or people is likened to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah; thus, "Babylon shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah; οὐ κατοικηθήσεται εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα χρόνον, it shall never be inhabited," Isa. xiii. 19, 20, and again, Jer. l. 40. The like is said of Edom, Jer. xlix. 17, 18, and of Moab, "Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, ἠφανισμένη εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, a perpetual desolation," Zeph. ii. 9.

Ver. 7, 8.] The grammatical exposition of these words seems to be thus: Even as, ὡς καὶ, and as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the other cities who were like to them in fornication and unnatural lusts, were exemplarily punished; ὁμοίως μέντοι καὶ οἱ οὗτοι ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, so likewise do these filthy dreamers act, defiling the flesh as they did: and as the men of Sodom contemned the good angels, which came to Lot's house, and spake evil of them; so do these men contemn and blaspheme the good angels, who are styled δόξαι καὶ κυριότητες, Eph. i. 21, Col. i. 16, and therefore shall also perish as they did (ver. 11).

[11] Οἱ ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, These filthy dreamers.] These dreamers of dreams, or vain imaginations: for I find not that the word ἐνυπνιάζω bears any impure sense, as ὀνειρώττω sometimes doth. The apostle therefore seems to refer to the delirious fancies of their filthy æons, Prunice and Calacauth, which gave the rise to all the filthiness the Nicolaitans committed, and after them the Gnostics and the Carpocratians (see the note on 2 Pet. ii. 11). And therefore Clement of Alexandria* saith of these Nicolaitans, and their successors the Gnostics, and the Carpocratians, that Jude "speaks of them in these words prophetically," the Nicolaitans being only then in being, and the Gnostics and Carpocratians succeeding them.

[12] Ver. 9. Περὶ τοῦ Μωσέως σώματος, About the body of Moses.] That the body of the Jews, and their service, should be here called the body of Moses, and that these words are to be referred to Zech. iii. 1, seems not very probable, seeing in that prophet there is no mention of Michael, or of the body, or the death of Moses: nor doth Onias speak of the body of Moses, 2 Macc. xv. 12, but περὶ παντὸς Ἰουδαίων στρατήματος, "of the whole Jewish nation." Moreover, that Moses was not buried by the Jews, we learn from the scripture, which saith, "No man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day," Deut. xxxiv. 6, and therefore Philo saith,† he was buried χερσὶν οὐ θνηταῖς, ἀλλ' ἀθανάτοις δυνάμεσιν, not by men, but angels: that there was an altercation betwixt Michael the archangel, and Sammael the prince 13 [20] Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; [21] wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

14 And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, [22] prophesied of (Gr. to) these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh [23] with ten thousands of his saints, of devils, about the body of Moses, we learn from the traditions of the Jews;* and it is most probable it was not only that his sepulchre might be unknown, lest the Jews, who were prone to idolatry, should worship him; but about the ascent of it into heaven, he being taken away as Enoch and Elias were, and not dying the common death of all men (which Satan contended he ought to do,† διὰ τὸν τοῦ Αἰγυπτίου φόνου, "for killing the Egyptian"), but disappearing only. Hence the Jews say, Ascendit ad ministrandum Excelso, that "he ascended to minister to the Lord." And Philo saith,‡ "God brought him πλησίον ἑαυτοῦ, near to himself, saying to him, Stand with me," and that "by the Word of God, μετανίσταται, he was translated," whence he was present with Elias at the transfiguration of our Lord. But see the note on Matt. xvii. 3.

[13] Ver. 10. The things they know not.] See note on 2 Pet. ii. 12.

[14] Ver. 11. Ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ τοῦ Κάϊν, In the way of Cain.] Seducing their brethren, as he did, to their destruction, ἢ καὶ σπερμοφαγοῦντες τὸν ἐυνάμει ἀδελφὸν ἀποκτίννυσιν, ὃν ἡ τοῦ σπέρματος τελεσφορία ἤνεγκεν ἂν εἰς βίον. Œcumenius.

After the error of Balaam.] See the note on 2 Pet. ii. 15.

[15] Τῇ ἀντιλογίᾳ τοῦ Κορὲ, And perished in the gainsaying of Core.] i. e. Saith Grotius, shall certainly perish in it: for as he, so they, being unworthy, usurp διδασκαλικὸν, the dignity of teachers: being, saith Peter, ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι, "false teachers" (2 Pet. ii. 1), pretending to be inspired prophets, when indeed they are ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, "dreamers" of vain dreams: and to be apostles, when they are only false apostles.

[16] Ver. 12. Σπιλάδες, Spots.] Σπίλας πέτρα τις, "The word signifies a rock," saith Phavorinus. They are hollow stones or rocks in the sea, against which ships split, say the Lexicons; σπιλάδες τοῖς πλέουσιν ὀλέθριοι ἀπροσδοκήτως ἐπιγενόμεναι, "rocks which are pernicious to navigators, who fall upon them unawares;" to which these persons are compared, because ἀνέλπιστον κακὸν, "they bring an unexpected mischief" upon them that feast with them.

[17] Ἐν ταῖς ἀγάπαις, In their feasts of charity.] I see no necessity of referring this to the Christians' love-feasts, celebrated after the holy sacrament. It is observed by Dr. Lightfoot, note on 1 Cor. x. 16, that in the evening of the sabbath the Jews had their κοινωνία, or "communion," when the inhabitants of the same city met together in a common place to eat together; and that they had near to their synagogues their ξενοδόχια, or places were strangers were entertained at the public charge, and where they had their dormitory; these surely were more likely places for such persons to come to, and play their pranks in, than the love-feasts of the Christians.

[18] Νεφέλαι ἄνυδροι, Clouds without water, carried about with the wind.] Such clouds, saith Œcumenius, refresh no places with their showers, for they have no water in them, but they blacken and darken the places over which they hang: even so these men distil the waters of life upon none, but blacken them with their filthy practices, being moved to them by the impulse of Satan, as these clouds are moved by the winds.

[19] Φθινοπωρινὰ, Trees without fruit, twice dead.] i. e. Saith Œcumenius, by casting their fruit and their leaves too, which gave a beauty to them: and something like this, saith he, happens to these men, who twice die, casting off their fruit, διὰ τῆς σπερμοφαγίας, and putting away the beauty of a sober conversation; whence they are rooted up out of the garden of the church.

[20] Ver. 13. Κύματα ἅγια, Raging waves of the sea.] To which, saith he, they are likened for the instability of their life, καὶ ἐκ τῆς εὐδιαλύτου αἰσχρότητος· τοσοῦτος γὰρ ὁ πρὸς ὃν παρεικάσθησαν, ἀφρὸς τῶν κυμάτων.

[21] Ἀστέρες πλανῆται, Wandering stars.] The Jews, saith Grotius, were wont to call them who took upon them to be teachers, "stars;" so the apostle calls these false teachers "wandering stars;" because they kept not their station, but wandered from the truth, having no true light in them.

[22] Ver. 14. Προεφήτευσε, Prophesied.] From these words we learn, that Enoch was a prophet, which he showed even in the name he gave to his son Methuselah, by the spirit of prophecy, which signifies, saith Bochartus,* that when he is dead shall ensue an inundation of waters; whence that of Stephanus concerning Enoch or Hannoch, ἐδόθη δὲ χρησμὸς ὅτι τούτου τελευτήσαντος πάντες διαφθαρήσονται, "There was an oracle given out, that when he was dead all men should be destroyed."

Προεφήτευσε τούτοις, He before prophesied to them.] This is said very appositely, the prophecy of Enoch being directed to them who, in like manner, had corrupted their ways by carnality or fornication (Gen. vi. 2), and by idolatry (iv. 26).

[23] Ἐν μυριάσιν ἁγίαις, With his ten thousand saints.] i. e. With his glorious attendance of myriads of angels; so called Heb. xii. 22. So was he present at mount Sinai when he delivered the law; whence the psalmist saith, "The chariot of God is myriads of angels:" so the Chaldee; "And the Lord is among them as in Sinai," Ps. lxviii. 18. So, Deut. xxxii. 2, "The Lord cometh from Sinai with his myriads of holy ones:" "with myriads of holy angels," say the Talmud of Jerusalem, and Jonathan; and Zech. xiv. 5, "The Lord my God shall come, and all his holy ones with him," i. e. and all his guards of angels; those who attend him sitting on his throne (Dan. vii. 10), or coming to execute judgment (Matt. xvi. 27, xxv. 31, 2 Thess. i. 7).

[24] Ver. 16. Murmurers and complainers.] I find nothing of this nature applicable to the Nicolaitans and Gnostics in church history; only the apostle having said, "Be not idolaters nor fornicators," with respect to them, 1 Cor. x. 7, 8, adds, "Neither be ye murmurers," ver. 10. And the Pseud-Ignatius calls them συκοφάντας, malos calumniatores, Ep. ad Tral. §. 11. But the Jews, of whom the Nicolaitans were a part, were notorious for their complaints against that providence, which seemed to neglect, and deal so hardly with such zealots for God as they were, as you may see in Joseph. de Bell. Jud. lib. vii. cap. 34, p. 990, B.

[25] Ὑπέρογκα, Great swelling words.] This Dr. Hammond refers to Simon Magus, exalting himself above all that is called God; but ὑπέρογκα being only proud swelling words, called by Peter in the parallel place ὑπέρογκα ματαιότητος, "swelling words of vanity, by which they allured, through the lusts of the flesh, to lasciviousness, those who were clean escaped from them that live in error" (2 Pet. ii. 18); I think it may more probably refer to the words relating to their lusts mentioned in the note upon that place.

17 But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of (by) the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ;

18 How that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts (see note on 2 Pet. iii. 2, 3).

19 These be they [27] who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit.

20 But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in [28] the Holy Ghost,

21 [29] Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

22 And of some have compassion [30] making a difference (betwixt the beguilers through subtlety, and the beguiled through simplicity):

23 And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; [31] hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

24 Now unto him that is able (and willing to do his part, see note on Rom. xiv. 4,) to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy,

25 To the only wise God (who alone is infinite in wisdom, and hath wisdom from himself, and who is) our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power (ascribed), both now and ever. Amen.

[27] Ver. 19. Οἱ ἀποδιορίζοντες ἑαυτους, Separating themselves.] Of the Jewish zealots we read, that they separated and withdrew from all who were not circumcised (Acts xi. 3, Gal. ii. 12): but of the Nicolaitans and Gnostics we read no such thing, but rather that they assembled with the Christians or Jews in their feasts of love (ver. 12, 2 Pet. ii. 13). Ἀποδιορίζεσθαι therefore, as it respects them, may rather signify that they distinguished themselves from others as more perfect, and as φύσει πνευματικοὶ, "by nature spiritual,"* styling all other Christians ψυχικοὶ, "animal men;" which perhaps made the apostle return this character upon them, as being truly sensual persons.

[28] Ver. 20. Ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, In the Holy Ghost.] The Holy Ghost, in the New Testament, always signifies some afflatus, or χάρισμα, of the Spirit; and seeing the person of the Holy Ghost cannot here well be understood, it seems to follow, that the apostle here speaketh of that gift of prayer, which by the Holy Ghost was conferred upon them in their public assemblies and Christian exercises, where they prayed by the Spirit (1 Cor. xiv. 15), and spake to one another "in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs," being filled with the Spirit (Eph. v. 18, 19, Col. iii. 16): and so this passage is interpreted by Œcumenius* and Dr. Hammond.

[29] Ver. 21. Ἑαυτοὺς τηρήσατε, Keep yourselves, &c.] Hence it is evident, that we are not so kept by the power of God, but that something must be done on our parts, to preserve ourselves in the divine favour. And also, that men once in this state may neglect to keep themselves in the love of God.

[30] Ver. 22. Διακρινόμενοι, Making, or putting, a difference.] Discerning which of them are to be treated with this mercy, which of them with sharp reproof. That this is the true sense of the word διακρινόμενοι, see note on Rom. xiv. 23. Œcumenius, and some manuscripts, read not ἐλεεῖτε, "Of some have compassion," but ἐλέγχετε, "Some reprove, putting a difference betwixt them who are to be rejected, and them who only are to be reproved.

[31] Ver. 23. Ἐσπιλωμένον χιτῶνα, Hating even the garment.] To hate and fly the garments spotted with the flesh, is only to hate every thing that doth defile, though in the least degree, for so the leprous and unclean garment did. This text can therefore yield no argument against the use of our ceremonies, till it be proved there is some defilement or impurity in the use of them.

REVELATION OF ST. JOHN,

WITH ANNOTATIONS.

BY MOSES LOWMAN.

"Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein: for the time is at hand."—Rev. i. 3.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

SIR JOSEPH JEKYLL,

MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

I beg leave to present to your Honour an attempt to give some light to the book of the Revelation, in order to make it more generally useful than we can hope it will be, while neglected, as too dark and difficult to be understood.

An honest endeavour of doing service to the public, will, I am persuaded, always meet with your countenance, who have the public good so much at heart. I shall esteem it a great happiness, if the execution of this design shall appear any way worthy your Honour's approbation and patronage.

Whatever difficulty there may be, in some particular representation or expression in these prophecies, the chief intention of them seems sufficiently plain, as it is without question of great use.

Warnings and cautions against prevailing corruptions; exhortations and encouragements to faithfulness and constancy in the cause of truth and righteousness, of virtue and piety, which abound in these prophecies, are lessons of great importance in themselves, and, experience shows, are proper for every age.

These prophecies describe a melancholy state of long and prevailing corruption; but it is the business of prophecy to foretell things as they shall really be, how afflictive soever: and when future times show an exact conformity between the prophetic description and the real state of the world and Christianity, for a series of many hundred years, and in a great variety of circumstances, beyond all reach of guess, it will greatly confirm the evidence of the Christian religion, and in particular the inspiration of this author, one of its principal witnesses.

An accomplishment of prophecies to our own times, assures the accomplishment of what remains. Every new accomplishment gives a new attestation to the credit and authority of Christianity, a new support to the faithfulness and constancy of good men, and a strong consolation, that though a long and gloomy state of corruption is foretold, yet the same spirit of prophecy has assured us, that the cause of truth and righteousness shall be maintained during the most powerful prevalency of error and corruption, and that it shall finally and surely triumph over them in the end.

The all-wise providence of God is used to fulfil these promises, by raising up persons at several times, though few in number, who shall espouse the cause of truth and virtue, and exert themselves in the protection of it.

When persons in eminent stations, of distinguished abilities and influence, shall act steadily from a disinterested and wise concern for the good of the public, from principles of sincere piety, from unbiassed affections for truth and virtue, and with unshaken constancy in defence of impartial civil and religious liberty, we are directed by these prophecies to consider them as raised by God, the guardians of truth and virtue, and set up by his providence to prevent the total suppression of them, through the prevalency of error and iniquity.

Such persons will be the delight of the wise and the good, as they are the happiness of mankind. Virtues so amiable will force applause, how much soever a greatness of mind, satisfied with virtue as its own reward, may choose to decline it.

But I consider my duty to your Honour, and will not gratify my own desires, however pleasing to myself, in what may be disagreeable to you; especially as I am sure great and public virtues can never be unknown, though never pointed out to observation.

I shall, therefore, only beg leave to express the great pleasure I have in this opportunity of giving a public testimony of that high esteem and respect with which I am,

Your Honour's

Most faithful, and most humble servant,

MOSES LOWMAN.

PREFACE.

The book of the Revelation, notwithstanding the pains and application of many persons of great ability and learning to explain it, seems yet, to the generality of Christians, very dark and obscure: many look upon it as a sealed book still, never to be explained to any certainty or satisfaction. No wonder, then, they account it lost labour to read or study what they can never hope to understand.

A great critic (Scaliger) was pleased to say, Calvin was wise, because he did not write upon the Revelation. And another, who has written with great reputation on the other books of the New Testament (Dr. Whitby*), confesses he did not do it, for want of wisdom; that is, as he says, because "I neither have sufficient reading nor judgment to discern the intendment of the prophecies contained in that book."

However, the book of the Revelation is, for very good reasons, received as one of the sacred books of the New Testament; the reasons for which are to be seen in many authors, and are represented, with great evidence and strength, by Sir Isaac Newton,† who observes, he does not find any book of the New Testament so strongly attested, or commented upon so early, as this.

Mr. Lardner has collected, with great care and faithfulness, the testimonies of the most early Christian writers to the books of the New Testament, in a late excellent treatise of the Credibility of the Gospel History. I shall just mention the testimony of the most eminent, to the authority of this book as a part of the holy scripture.

Tertullian wrote about the year of Christ 200, and so somewhat above a hundred years after the time in which John writ the revelation. He observes,‡ "John, in his Apocalypse, is commanded to correct those who eat things sacrificed to idols, and commit fornication." And again, "We have churches, disciples of John; for though Marcion rejects his Revelation, the succession of bishops, traced to the original, will assure us that John is the author of it." It is no wonder that Marcion should reject the Revelation, who rejected all the Old Testament, and of the New received only the Gospel of St. Luke, and ten epistles of Paul, which also he had corrupted and altered.

Somewhat before this, Clement of Alexandria,§ quotes these revelations as John's: "As John says in the Revelation." And he refers to them as the words of an apostle, or having the authority of apostolical writings.

Yet earlier, Theophilus of Antioch,‖ in a book of his against the heresy of Hermogenes, makes use of testimonies from John's Apocalypse.

We have another witness of great character still nearer the times of John: Irenæus writ above A. D. 178, within seventy or eighty years of him. He expressly ascribes the Revelation to John, the disciple of the Lord. His testimony to this book, as Mr. Lardner observes,¶ "is so strong and full, that considering the age of Irenæus, it seems to put it beyond all question, that it is the work of St. John the apostle and evangelist."

Still nearer the times of John, Mileto, bishop of Sardis, one of the seven churches, writ a book on the Revelation of John. Some think it was an entire commentary; however that be, it will show he esteemed it a book of canonical authority.

Justin Martyr, a person of eminent name, about the year of Christ 140, and so about fifty or sixty years after the writing this book, expressly calls it a prophecy, and ascribes it to John the apostle;†† "A man from among us," says he, "by name John, one of the apostles of Christ, in the revelation made to him, has prophesied." In fine,

The church, nearest the times of writing this book, received it with so full a consent, that in very few years, as Dr. Mills‡‡ observes, it was acknowledged and placed in the number of apostolical writings, not only by the churches of Asia, but by the neighbour churches of Syria and Samaria, by the more distant churches of Africa and Egypt, by Rome and the other churches of Europe. Such reasons there are to receive this as one of the books of the holy scriptures of the New Testament, that hardly any one book has more early, full, or authentic attestation given to it.

Now all who thus receive it must acknowledge that it proceeds from a Spirit of prophecy; and that Spirit itself declares, i. 3, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein."

If we suppose this of the book of Revelation, as we must, if we own it to be a book of holy scripture, we must acknowledge also, that how dark soever the words of this prophecy may be, they are yet sufficiently intelligible to be greatly useful.

Obscurity of prophecy from the nature and design of prophecy.]—Yet, considering the nature and design of prophecy, the style and manner of expression used in it, we are not to expect prophecies should be as easily understood, as doctrines or precepts delivered in easy expression, plain argument, and the common familiar forms of speech. The nature and intention of prophecy was not to gratify our curiosity, to know future events, or, as it were, to tell the fortunes of the church and world, but to answer wise and good ends, to confirm our patience and constancy, to encourage our hope and trust in God, in assurance of his protection of the cause of truth and righteousness, that is, of true religion, The design of prophecy is to answer these good ends, when we might be tempted to forsake true religion, by the power of prevailing error and reigning corruption; or when we might be greatly dejected, and despair of success, where opposition to true religion is so powerful and violent, as hardly to leave a reasonable prospect of bearing up against it. In such a state of things, which often has happened, it has been the use of prophecy, to keep up the hearts of good men with lively and affecting representations of the majesty, the power, and goodness of God, of God's care to protect the cause of true religion, of the sure power of his providence to order all things in the world, and future course of things; the providence of God being absolute over the greatest empires and most powerful kings, to raise them up or to cast them down, to direct them to fulfil his will, and appoint them to accomplish whatever he designs, for the safety of his people. And, finally, the design of prophecy is to represent these things in such a manner as shall fix our attention, and confirm our faith in the truth of God's promises, and his faithfulness surely to accomplish his word in all things.

When such events of future time are foretold as shall in their accomplishment confirm these sentiments of God, his goodness, power, and faithfulness, and in such strong and lively representations as shall engage the attention, and make deep impressions on the mind, they answer a very wise and useful design; and in a good sense, they are then of greater use than plainer precepts of constancy and perseverance, or plain promises of encouragement and reward, in more easy words and expressions.

There is then a manifest advantage to the intention of prophecy, in the manner and style of foretelling things to come; from whence, however, it must come to pass, that prophetic writings will be somewhat more difficult to be understood than others; and yet they are sufficiently plain to raise those sentiments of God, and his providence, and excite that faithfulness and constancy in true religion, they were designed for.

The prophecies of the Revelation of the same use with the prophecies of the Old Testament.]—Such was one great use of the prophecies of the Old Testament. They often spoke of the times of the Messiah's first appearance in the world, in a manner very suitable to encourage the faith and constancy of good men, in the several states of the Jewish church and nation.

They taught the church, that God would maintain his true religion, and protect his true worshippers, till the promised Messiah should come: but these prophecies were delivered in a manner not so easy to be understood, as the precepts, exhortations, and reproofs, in the writings of the same prophets. However, they were still plain enough to encourage the faith and patience of the church at those times, and particular enough to determine the person of the Messiah when he should appear, and to distinguish him sufficiently from every other person of the world, that should make pretensions to his character as the Christ. The ends of ancient prophecy, as a very eminent and learned interpreter of several prophets has observed,* were these: "God still seeking their good, he sends his prophets to reprove them, and exhort them to repentance; and, for comfort of the godly among them, to give them the assurance of the coming of the promised Messiah in his due time, to set all things right for their good."

In the first ages of Christianity, as well as in aftertimes, good men were apt to be greatly discouraged with an afflictive state of the church, and powerful opposition to religion; they hardly knew how to reconcile such a state of providence with what they hoped for in the kingdom of the Messiah, so kind and powerful a protector of his church.

It is easy to see how much such thoughts might disturb their minds; they had a promise of Christ's second coming, as the Jewish church had of his first appearance, but they were liable to many afflictive providences, as the former church was till the time of his appearance. It was wise and proper, by a prophecy in the Christian church, to support the minds of good men under these afflictions, with assurance of Christ's second coming, in its due time, and of the watchful providence of God over the cause of true religion in the mean time. Thus the prophecies of this book are to us in the Christian church, of the like use, that the prophecies of Christ's first appearance were to the ancient church.

Obscurity of those prophecies from interpreters.]—Though some obscurity arises from the nature and style of prophetical writings, yet, to speak freely, I conceive the obscurity of this book is not so much owing to any thing in the book itself, as to the methods taken by several to explain it, and that nothing has really so much darkened it as the common attempts made to interpret it.

Some have been so over-curious to find some mystery in every word and every thing, that the plain and direct meaning of the Spirit of prophecy has been overlooked or removed out of sight; the pure imagination of interpreters, often very pretty and ingenious, but very foreign to the purpose of the prophecy, has frequently lost or set aside the true meaning of it.

Others, having formed a scheme of prophecy to themselves, and fixed in their own opinions the events that were to accomplish the several parts of it, contrive how to force all things to their scheme; which not perfectly agreeing with the design and order of the book itself, the interpretation must necessarily be attended with such intricacy in the order of the prophecy and such different and opposite application of the several parts of it, as must make it very dark, if not altogether unintelligible. And yet, where men of great name lead the way, they seldom fail of having many followers; and the more men are engaged in supporting an imagination, or arbitrary scheme, without foundation from the prophecy itself, the more they lose sight of the real meaning and true intention of it.

It is a very judicious observation of Mr. Calvin, concerning the interpretation of prophecy, "Although the vision be obscure, the design of it is not uncertain; and, if we will be content with moderate understanding, there is nothing so intricate, but we may understand the sum of the prophecy; but the curiosity of interpreters has done mischief, who, while they criticise upon every syllable, childishly trifle in many things. Nothing therefore is righter, than to attend carefully to the design of the prophet, to regard the circumstances of the time, and to follow an analogy between the signs and the things signified by them."† If to this we add such events in history, as sufficiently answer the predictions of prophecy, we have as much certainty as I think was designed by the prophecy; I am sure, as much as is sufficient to edification.

It is on this plan I propose to consider the prophecies of this book, to be content with a moderate understanding of the design of the prophecy and of the things revealed in it; to take my scheme of the prophecy entirely from the book itself; to explain the meaning of the prophetic expressions, by a plain account of their use in the preceding prophets, from whom most of them are taken, and to verify the predictions by such known events in history as may fairly and without force be applied to them.

This prophecy is a proper prediction of things future.]—The author of this book himself declares, that it is a proper prophecy, or prediction of things future and to come, as well as a description of the present state and condition of the churches, i. 19, "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter:" and iv. 1, John "heard a voice, which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee the things that must be hereafter."

Some of these predictions related to things not far off the time of the vision and prophecy, and which were soon to be accomplished: "The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass," i. 1; and "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand," i. 3.

What period of future time this prophecy regards.]—Yet as this revelation is designed also to show things that "must be hereafter," it will be of great help to the interpretation of it, to understand what period of time this prophecy regards. The book itself seems plainly to design a much longer period than many learned men have assigned it. Some have supposed such expressions as these, "Which must shortly come to pass," and "The time is at hand," and the like, point out a very short period; so that the whole prophecy should be accomplished in a few years after the vision. These expressions will indeed show the accomplishment of the things foretold in this prophecy was soon to begin; but, I think, they can determine nothing at all concerning the time when it was to end, especially against full evidence in the same book of prophecy, that the period is much longer, and reaches from the time of the vision to the day of judgment.

To omit more general reasons which yet have their degree of probability: in particular, the perpetual use of prophecy to the church in all ages, the wisdom and goodness of providing such support to the faith and constancy of the church, in every state of affliction, which seems to be the design, and therefore the true key, of the whole Revelation, makes it probable, that the spirit of prophecy did not design this support for the church in a few of the first ages of Christianity only, but that it designed the same consolation and support for every after age; that the faithfulness and power of God would, in all times, verify these truths; that though the church and true religion should be opposed, afflicted, and oppressed, yet it should be preserved and protected, and prove in the end victorious. It is well observed of the scriptures in general, agreeable to the notions and expectations naturally founded on the divine perfections, "God did from the beginning make, and has all along continued to his church, or true worshippers, a promise, that truth and virtue shall finally prevail, shall prevail over the spirit of error and wickedness, of delusion and disobedience."* How natural it is then to suppose, when a revelation is given to encourage the constancy of good men, in times of affliction, that it should reveal this protection of Providence, and assure a wise care of the cause of truth and religion in every age, that it should not be confined to a small proportion of that time, in which the church would have the same trials, and stand in need of the same encouragements.

But there are two evidences in the prophecy itself which, as I apprehend, are so full to the point, that they are sufficient to determine it.

First, The duration of the period of this prophecy is, in some places, marked out as well by numbers of years, as by prophetic descriptions. The time of the beast, for instance, is thus described: "And power was given unto him to continue forty-two months," xiii. 5. It is observed of the woman persecuted by the dragon, "And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, unto her place, where she is nourished for a time, times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent," xii. 14. The time in which the witnesses were to prophesy, clothed in sackcloth, is in like manner described: "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth," xi. 3.

This various computation of the same time, and so agreeable to the manner of expressing time in prophecy, sufficiently, I think, determines the duration of this period to one thousand two hundred and sixty years, which is itself a much longer continuance than these interpreters will allow to the accomplishment of the whole prophecy, who confine it to the most early times of the church, because it is said, "The time is at hand." And it is farther to be observed, that this period, to which the prophecy assigns a duration of one thousand two hundred and sixty years, is not to commence from the time of the vision, but after a long series of prophecy had been previously fulfilled; for the order of the prophecies of this book are thus represented: first, six seals are opened, to each of which a proper prophecy belongs, ch. vi.; upon opening the seventh seal, seven angels have seven trumpets given to them; six of these angels sound their trumpets, to each of which also belongs a distinct prophecy, viii. ix.; so that this period of one thousand two hundred and sixty years is the third period of prophecy; and after two former periods have had their accomplishment, this must considerably lengthen the time to which the whole book of Revelation refers.

I am sensible, that prophetic numbers do not always express a determinate duration or space of time, any more than they always express a certain number. Prophecy, I acknowledge, uses numbers sometimes, as other expressions, in a figurative meaning, as symbols and hieroglyphics. Thus the number seven sometimes does not denote the precise number of seven, but figuratively denotes perfection, or a full and complete number; and the number ten sometimes does not mean precisely ten in number, but many in general, or a considerable number, and frequency of action, or doing the same thing several times; as the use of those expressions in scripture plainly shows, and of which I have given some instances in the notes.

Yet, the variety of computing the same duration, by days months, and times, and this in manifest allusion to the prophecies of Daniel, who thus reckons the time of the Messiah's first appearance, and means a determinate number of years, will hardly admit of any other meaning as the intention of the prophecy in that place, which I hope the reader will find fully proved in the annotations.

Secondly, This observation will be farther greatly confirmed, by considering how expressly the prophecy itself declares, that it reaches to the last times, and in which the mystery of God, or several dispensations of prophecy towards the church, should be fully accomplished. An "angel lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things that are therein, that there should be time no longer: but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets," x. 5—7; or rather, as it should have been translated to the true sense of the original, "In the day of the voice of the seventh angel, when it shall sound, ὅταν μέλλῃ σαλπίζειν, and the mystery of God shall be finished," καὶ τελεσθῇ τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ. That is, "In the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when it shall sound, and the mystery of God shall be finished;" or "In the times and period assigned for the sounding of the seventh angel, time shall be no more, and the mystery of God shall be finished." As if the angel had said, Though the time is not yet come, when the church's trial by afflictions shall cease, yet the time of fulfilling that prophecy shall not long be delayed; then the happy state of the church shall begin, which shall finish the mystery of God. So that this period of prophecy will conclude with finishing the mystery of God, or dispensations of providence towards the church.

It is farther to be observed, that the prophecy itself places at the conclusion of it the general resurrection and judgment. "And I saw the dead," says John, "small and great, stand before God: and the books were opened, and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things that were written in the books, according to their works; and the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; they were judged every man according to their works, and death and hell were cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death," xx. 12, &c. A series of prophecies, which reaches to the resurrection and last judgment, seems plainly designed to reach to the end of all time.

Order of the several prophecies, and several periods.]—The book itself seems also to show farther very plainly, the order of the several prophecies, according to their several periods, as well as the whole duration, from the time of the vision, to the finishing the whole mystery of God's providence towards the church.

There is a general distribution of these prophecies, into the things "which are," and the things "which shall be hereafter," i. 19, ἃ εἰσι καὶ μέλλει γινεσθαι μετὰ ταῦτα. "The things which are" seem to refer to the then present state of the seven churches; which description, with the warnings, encouragements, and exhortations proper to it, is contained in epistles delivered to each of the churches, in the second and third chapters.

The fourth chapter reveals a new state of things, in a new vision: a voice said unto John, "Come up hither, and I will show thee the things that must be hereafter," iv. 1, ἃ δεῖ γενέσθαι μετὰ ταῦτα. I will reveal unto thee, what shall come to pass in aftertimes, and in successive order, after the things revealed in the foregoing part of the prophecy shall be fulfilled.

These prophecies are again distributed into several periods plainly distinguished from each other, and manifestly successive to each other.

One of these periods is distinguished by the opening of a book, sealed with seven seals; and at the opening of each seal, representing in a figure some event proper to each seal; and ends with sealing of the servants of God to the number of one hundred and forty-four thousand, ch. vi. vii.

Another period begins upon the opening of the seventh seal. This period is distinguished by giving seven trumpets to the seven angels that stand before God, viii. 1, 2. Six of these trumpets are sounded in their order, as the seals were opened in the foregoing period, and each of them hath particular events proper to each, ch. viii. ix. This period ends with a new vision; an angel gives St. John a little book: he is ordered to measure the temple, and the seventh angel sounds, ch. x.

There is a third period, called, "the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall sound." This period is represented as a time wherein the mystery of God shall be finished, at the end of which there shall be a new and very different state of things. It is to be a time in which the church shall long struggle with great afflictions and persecutions; yet, at the end of it, the dragon, the old serpent, which is the devil and Satan, shall be bound for a thousand years, that he may deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years shall be fulfilled, though after that he will be loosed again for a little season.

This period seems to be described by several representations; by measuring the temple, and giving part of it to be trodden under foot by the gentiles, by two witnesses prophesying in sackcloth, by a woman escaping into a wilderness, and by the rising of a monstrous wild beast. The events proper to the period, are represented by seven vials full of God's wrath poured out on the earth.

The duration of this period is exactly the same in the several representations; the gentiles are to tread the holy city under foot forty and two months, xi. 2. The witnesses are to prophesy in sackcloth a thousand two hundred and threescore days, ver. 3. The woman which fled into the wilderness hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days, xii. 6. And power was given unto the beast to continue forty and two months, xiii. 5.

These periods of prophecy successive to each other.]—As the book itself thus distinguishes these prophecies from each other, so it seems plainly to show they are successive to each other. They seem ranked into such order, as to make this observation obvious and necessary, that they are not intended to describe contemporary events, but such events as should follow one another in order, as the periods themselves are represented to succeed each other. So that there is no ground, I conceive, to consider the prophecies which belong to these periods as synchronisms; on the contrary, each of these prophecies seems fixed to that particular period of time to which it belongs; which periods are manifestly represented, not as contemporary, but as an order and series of successive times and events.

The order of succession in these three periods is very particular, as their distinction from each other is very manifest.

As the first period is distinguished by seven seals, the second period by seven trumpets, and the third by seven vials, so the seven angels received the seven golden vials, after six of the trumpets had been sounded. The six trumpets were sounded, viii. 9, the seventh angel began to sound, ix. 15, but the angels received not the seven golden vials, till in the days of the voice of the seventh trumpet, when the power and authority of the beast were established, and men had received the mark of the beast, and worshipped his image; for the plague of the first vial fell upon them, xvi. 2. So that this period of the vials commenced after the period of the trumpets was over, and the events prophesied in it were fulfilled.

The period of the trumpets, in like manner, plainly follows the period of the seals. It is expressly said, when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven for half an hour: "And I saw the seven angels which stood before God, and to them were given seven trumpets," viii. 1, 2.

This natural order will, I conceive, free us from that intricacy and difficulty which a supposition of synchronisms, and contemporary events in the different periods, have occasioned in the interpretation of this book: and it may greatly help us, in applying historical events to the several prophecies, to look only at such as fall within the time to which the period belongs.

The book itself will, moreover, I conceive, sufficiently determine the proper time to which each period belongs, and show to what period of history the period of prophecy refers. If the duration of each period can, in general, be very nearly determined, so that the beginning and ending of it can be reasonably fixed to any near time, the order and succession of the periods will point out the contemporary times of history; and if the events of history shall sufficiently answer the descriptions of prophecy, it will make our application of them more satisfactory, and give greater weight to such interpretation.

The proper time of each period sufficiently determined.] —The book itself seems plainly to make the general key of the whole revelation, the particular key of each period; so that one and the same wise and useful design is the general design of the whole, and the particular design of every part of it. So far is this book from being loose, uncertain, and immethodical, that it keeps always one and the same useful design in view, and carries it through every particular in the most exact order.

The general design of this prophecy is to support the minds of faithful Christians, under all afflictions on account of religion, to teach them, that however true religion should be opposed, however they might suffer for the Christian faith and worship, they might assure themselves of God's care and protection. Though God did not design to place his church in such a state of outward power and prosperity, as to be free from afflictions and persecution (which therefore they were not vainly to promise themselves, and weakly to expect), yet they might promise themselves, and expect, that God would preserve the true religion, by the care of his providence, from being borne down by any power of opposition; that he would often severely punish the enemies of true religion, and make known his judgments upon them, as heretofore on Egypt and Babylon; that he would give often to the faithful and constant, deliverance out of their dangers, success and victory over their enemies; that he would often raise up eminent and powerful persons, who shall defend and encourage the Christian faith and worship, and that in the end truth and righteousness shall prevail over all opposition from error and unrighteousness, and the patience and constancy of the faithful shall be finally crowned with a state of complete peace, perfection, and happiness.

These were great encouragements, and consolations of very great use to the church at all times. It was not fit to dissemble the true state of providence with respect to the church; for the state of the Christian church, whatever some might promise themselves, would often be afflictive; yet it was very fit to remind good men, in strong representations, for their encouragement and support, that God would maintain the cause of truth against all opposition, often give evident marks of a divine protection, for the safety of the church, and in the punishment of its enemies.

"The church persecuted, afterward victorious, and in a peaceful state, is certainly the true key of the Revelation," says a very learned interpreter.*

This general key of the whole Revelation seems also the proper key of each particular period; the whole prophecy, after many intermediate dangers in a state of opposition and trouble, ends in the happiness of the holy city, "the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven." In like manner, each particular period describes a state of danger, opposition, and trouble, and ends in a state of peace, safety, and happiness.

Thus the first period of the seals enumerates great troubles and afflictions, but ends with sealing the servants of God in their foreheads, which was to be a time of peace and safety to the church: "And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice, to the four angels to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads," vii. 2, 3.

The second period in order, which is the period of the trumpets, describes also several heavy and severe judgments on the sounding of the several trumpets; so that an angel, flying through the midst of heaven, said with a loud voice, "Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth," viii. 13; and yet, upon the sounding of the seventh angel, which begins the third period, there were great voices in heaven, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ," xi. 15.

The day of the voice of the seventh angel, which is the third period, describes again a time of trouble and affliction; the dragon persecutes the woman, xii. 13; the persecution of the beast is of long continuance, for power was given him to continue forty-two months, xiii. 5; seven vials full of the wrath of God are poured out, attended with grievous plagues, yet in the end Babylon is destroyed, the old dragon bound, and they who had not worshipped the beast live and reign with Christ a thousand years, xx. 3.

It is an obvious remark, that each of these periods are represented by the same number of seven; there are seven seals in the first period, seven trumpets in the second, and seven vials in the third. Seven is a sacred number in the Jewish church, and in the rotation both of days and years is made a time of religion and rest. It is not therefore an unfit emblem, that the church, after a time of labour and trouble, shall enjoy a time wherein it may serve God in peace and rest. However that be, and whether the Spirit of prophecy designed such an allusion or no, it is plain, that this scheme of the different periods, as well as of the whole book, mentions a time of affliction and trial, which shall end in a time of safety, liberty, and peace.

This observation, I conceive, will go a great way to fix the general duration of these three periods, and sufficiently determine, to a near time, the beginning and ending of each. As each must have, in its period, some remarkable opposition to the Christian church, a trial of its faith and patience, by some great dangers and afflictions; so it must end in some remarkable deliverance out of those troubles, and some favourable providence to the church for its safety, peace, and liberty, in the profession of the Christian faith and religion.

To what historical period each period of prophecy belongs.] At the time of these visions, John was in banishment for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ; and the church was under persecution so long as the empire continued heathen. Severe persecutions were almost perpetually renewed: a little before the times of Constantine they were so severe, that they seemed to threaten the utter destruction of all who could not be forced to renounce the Christian faith, and fall in with the idolatrous worship established in the empire. The last persecution under Diocletian destroyed incredible numbers, so that the persecutors boasted, they had effaced the name and superstition of the Christians, and had restored and propagated the worship of the gods: yet the divine providence, after several great revolutions, made way for the authority of Constantine the Great, who put an end to a long persecution of ten years, gave freedom to the churches, and finally, when, upon the death of Licinius, he obtained the sole authority, he gave all protection and countenance to the Christian church, and all assistance to promote the Christian faith and worship; so that the same power which before persecuted, now protected the Christian faith.

Time of the first period.] The first period of prophecy then seems naturally to point out this period of history, which in general answers it with great propriety and exactness, and will, I think, direct us to look for the fulfilling the several parts of it, in some of the events of providence, between the time of the vision, and about the year of Christ 323, when the opposition of the idolatrous power of Rome gave way to the protection and favour of Christian emperors.

Time of the second period.] It was not long the church enjoyed this peace: the Roman empire, in a short time, began to lose its power, and became unable to protect the peace and liberty of the church; a swarm of idolatrous nations from the northern countries, under several names, broke it upon the Roman empire, and divided the western empire into several separate and independent governments, or kingdoms; so that the Christian faith and worship were in as much danger from the idolatry of the northern nations, who had divided the Roman empire among themselves, as they were before in danger from the idolatry of the Roman empire itself. It pleased God, also, to permit that impostor Mahomet, and his successors, to gain so much ground, and spread that imposture so far, and so fast, that it seemed to threaten the ruin of the Christian name and religion in the east: yet the idolatrous northern nations were soon themselves brought to the Christian religion, and to use all their power and authority to protect and promote it. And though the Saracens made great inroads for some time, yet was their progress stopped both in the east and west. Charles Martel,* by a memorable battle (A. D. 734), in which some authors account three hundred and seventy thousand slain, preserved the western parts of the Roman empire from their future incursions, and enabled the Christians in Spain to maintain themselves against them, and even oppose them with such power, as finally drove them quite out of their kingdom. And the Christian religion remained in all those places which the northern nations had formed into kingdoms out of the Roman empire.

Here is now a period of history very naturally applicable to this second period of prophecy; it contains a very memorable time of danger, and as memorable a deliverance in the establishment of the peace and liberty of the Christian church, and seems sufficiently to point out the time of this period, from about the year of Christ 323 to about 750. In which compass of time, therefore, we seem directed to look for the accomplishment of the several particular predictions contained in this period.

Time of the third period.] The third period seems also determined to a near time both of its beginning and ending, by the prophecy itself.

The duration of this period is sufficiently determined by the time of the beast, the time of the woman's being in the wilderness, the time wherein the holy city should be trodden under foot; these times are variously expressed, but plainly in such manner as to express the same duration. It is said to be for forty-two months, xi. 2, xiii. 5, for a time, times, and half a time, xii. 14. And these ways of numbering seem explained by another: the time of the witnesses prophesying in sackcloth is mentioned to be a thousand two hundred and threescore days, xi. 3. And again, the time of the woman in the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God for her, is expressed by the same number, that they should feed her a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

The difficulty, then, of assigning the historical time of this period seems to lie chiefly in this: At what time this thousand two hundred and threescore prophetical days, or years, are to begin; or, which will be the same, at what period in history we are to begin the power of the beast, the flying of the woman into the wilderness, and treading the holy city under foot: for these are the calamities of this period, as the happiness with which it closes is the destruction of the beast, the binding of Satan, and the peaceful state of the church for a thousand years, till Satan shall be loosed again for a little season, xx. 3.

Our chief inquiry then will be, When was this power given unto the beast, which was to continue for forty-two months? Let us see whether the prophecy itself doth not sufficiently point out this time to us.

The emblem of a beast, according to the use of it in scripture prophecy, denotes an empire or government, as the four empires denoted by the beasts in Daniel's vision sufficiently show.

In explaining the mystery of the beast, and the woman which carrieth her, the angel expressly declares, "And the woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," xvii. 18. This seems sufficiently to direct our consideration of the beast as an empire or government, and that of the city of Rome, or Roman dominion. It seems farther confirmed by the description of the beast, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, xiii. 1. We have these expressions yet farther explained; "The seven heads," says the angel, "are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth. And they are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space," xvii. 9, 10: again, ver. 12, "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast;" or, shall reign at the same time and period with the beast: as, in the following words, "And these have one mind," means, they have the same design and intention.

The prophecy, then, seems to represent the beast as one empire, though in several different forms of government in succession, five of which were fallen or passed at the time of the vision; one is, says the angel, or was the present form of government at that time; and the form of Roman government, at the time of the vision, was to be sure the imperial, which is therefore to be accounted the sixth. The next, or seventh form of government, was not yet come; and when it came, it was to continue but a short space. It follows, "And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." The meaning of which remarkable expression is, I conceive, to this purpose: After the sixth head, or form of Roman government, which was then in being, there shall be another form of government, which on some accounts may be called a seventh; and, in that reckoning, the beast spoken of would be the eighth head, or form of government: yet, on some other accounts, that seventh could hardly be called a proper form of Roman government; so that in that reckoning, the beast spoken of might be accounted one of the seven, and so next in succession, in the proper government of Rome, to the sixth, or imperial form of government. This form of government is moreover to be set up in the same time or period with the ten kings or kingdoms, erected in the Roman empire, and by their assistance, giving their power to the beast, ver. 13.

From these considerations, we have a period in history sufficiently marked out for this period of prophecy.

Besides the order of the periods, this being the third, and not therefore to begin till the two former are finished, it cannot begin till the northern nations, who brake in upon and divided the empire, had established their respective kingdoms, and were converted to Christianity, and gave their protection to the profession of it nor till the imperial government was passed away, as the five preceding forms of government had before it; nor yet till another form of government, which in some sense might be called a seventh, though not strictly and properly, was also passed, to make way for this form of government in Rome, which on some accounts might be reckoned the eighth, and yet, for other reasons, was to be numbered among the seven. To this, I think, we may yet add another mark of this period, in which the beast is described; "The beast which was, and is not, and yet is," ver. 8. Or, as John saw in the vision of this beast, xiii. 3, "I saw," says he, "one of his heads, as it were, wounded to death, and his deadly wound was healed, and all the world wondered after the beast." And again, speaking of the second beast, he observes, ver. 12, "And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth, and them that dwell therein, to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed." These descriptions seem plainly to represent the Roman government, or empire, of which this beast is the symbol, as once in a state of great authority and power, afterward as having very much, almost quite, lost that power; yet, in the end, recovering its power, and reviving its authority again: as one wounded unto death, but whose deadly wound was healed again, even to the wonder and astonishment of the world.

This seems to describe to us a time, when Rome, once the mistress of the world, who reigned over the kings of the earth, should lose her power either altogether, or so far as to preserve but a very faint resemblance of it: yet afterward, notwithstanding such loss of power, it should recover to a very great degree of power and authority again.

Here are a great many circumstances, which must concur in a period of time which can answer, with any propriety, this description of prophecy; and where so many circumstances really concur in history, it is a very great evidence, such period of time is intended by the prophecy; and it is a great confirmation of the truth and authority of the prophecy itself, that predictions of a time, to be distinguished by so great a variety of circumstances and important events, should be so exactly accomplished.

Now, the Roman history represents the state of the Roman empire, after the invasion of the northern nations, most agreeable to the description of this prophecy.

After the northern nations had entirely subdued the power of the Roman empire, they settled themselves in the several parts of it, and erected several sovereign and independent dominions in France, Spain, Britain, and Italy itself.

The Goths possessed themselves of the best part of Italy,* especially about Rome, and took at last the city of Rome, A. D. 476. Odoacer, king of the Heruli, obliged Momyllus, who was also called Augustulus, to abdicate the empire. He possessed himself of the government of Rome and Italy, but without the title of emperor of Rome, or any other title taken from Rome, or making the city of Rome the seat of his empire or residence. He was styled king of Italy, and Ravenna became under Theodoric and his successors, after the defeat of Odoacer, the seat of the Gothic kingdom of Italy.

But, after some time, Justinian grew powerful in the eastern empire, or empire of the Greeks; and, after many victories in other parts, sends his victorious armies into Italy, under the command of the great generals Belisarius and Narses. They broke the power of the Gothic kingdom in Italy, and recovered the greatest part of Italy to the obedience of the emperors of Constantinople. The Greek emperors administered their government of Italy by deputies or lieutenants, who were styled dukes of Italy, as a very eminent historian remarks,† Exactis autem Gothis, expulsor ipse, victorque Narses, à Justiniano imperatore summæ rerum præpositus, titulo ducis Italiæ sumpto, Italiam, per hos provinciarum præfectos, pro suo arbitrio, administrabat.

But in a short time, the Longobards, or Lombards, invaded Italy, about the year of Christ 568.‡ They make a very swift progress, insomuch that, in the third year of their invasion, they proclaim Albion king of Italy;§ and, in effect, made themselves masters of all Italy, except Rome and Ravenna. At this time, though Rome was in the obedience of the eastern or Greek empire, yet still Rome was not the seat of the government; the chief governor resided at Ravenna, with the title of exarch of Ravenna; and imperial Rome, once the mistress of the world, was fallen into the low condition of a small duchy, subject to the exarchate. These exarchs continued, and with them this low condition of Rome, about one hundred and eighty-five years, from Longinus, who was made first exarch, A. D. 568, to Eutychius, the last exarch,* when Aistulphus, king of the Lombards, took Ravenna, A. D. 752.

This conquest of Ravenna by the Lombards had very great consequences; it at first gave Aistulphus an occasion of claiming Rome, as a part and parcel of the exarchate, which he had now annexed to his kingdom of Italy: for so he sets forth his title and pretensions to Rome, as part of his dominions: Quòd cùm ipse exarchatum Ravennatem teneret, ex antiquo instituto, se tanquam exarchum, Romanis quoque imperare, æquum esse, interpretabatur.†

Aistulphus, to make good his claim upon the Romans refusing tribute, enters their territory, and prepares to besiege their city. The pope, alarmed, you may be sure, with so near danger, immediately sends to Pepin of France, to pray his protection and assistance. The popes had lately very much obliged Pepin, in confirming the deposition of Childeric, the last of the first race of the French kings, to make way for Pepin and his family to the crown. Pepin had many reasons to protect the pope against the growing power of the Lombards in Italy: he first then endeavours by ambassadors to persuade the Lombards from committing hostilities against the city of Rome, and leave the pope in quiet; but persuasions not prevailing, he enters Italy with an army, beats Aistulphus, forces him to a treaty, in which he obliges him not only to renounce his claim and pretensions to Rome, as part of the exarchate he had conquered, but, moreover, to surrender the whole exarchate to the pope, and gave the temporal government of Rome, and the exarchate, for ever, to the pope and his successors, as the patrimony of St. Peter.

But the next year, Pepin being returned into France, Aistulphus, who could not think of performing so disadvantageous a treaty, again enters the Roman territory, and prepares for the siege of the city: Pepin returns into Italy with a powerful force; Aistulphus raises the siege of Rome, is himself besieged by Pepin, and finally forced to confirm and execute his treaty, and make over the whole exarchate to the church of Rome, or to St. Peter and his successors, for ever. Thus Pepin wrested the exarchate from the hands of the Lombards,‡ refused to restore it to the eastern empire, but confirmed it to St. Peter and his successors: the keys of the several cities belonging to the exarchate, together with the grant or charter, being with much solemnity laid on the altar of St. Peter, A. D. 756.

Thus Rome, which had lost the imperial government, A. D. 476, and had rather the show and appearance of a new form of government, than a real and proper government, under the Greek emperors, and their exarchs of Ravenna, for about one hundred and eighty-five years, obtained a perfectly new form of government, when it became the patrimony of St. Peter, and which has been the only form of government in Rome ever since.

The power of Rome seemed quite extinguished, and the Roman authority and dominion received a deadly wound, when the Goths put an end to the empire; imperial Rome was then brought so low, that no ground of rational hope was left, it should ever recover its power and authority again; and yet, after so many years, it revived once more, this deadly wound was healed, and it has continued a very long time: one of the most extraordinary forms of government the world ever saw.

This new form of government was raised and conveyed to the popes, as successors of St. Peter, by one of the principal kingdoms founded by the northern nations, on the ruins of the Roman empire; and this authority and dominion of the popes have been preserved to them all along, by the help and assistance of the several kingdoms erected in like manner.

In this history we may also see, on some accounts, an eighth form of Roman government; or, as it may on other accounts be called, a seventh, according as the exarchate of Ravenna shall be accounted or not accounted a proper form of Roman government. This, though it can but improperly be called a form of Roman government, yet was the only government, from the destruction of the imperial power, A. D. 476, to the establishment of the temporal power of Rome in the papacy, A. D. 756, that is, for very near the space of three hundred years.

It is farther worthy of observation, that the bare ecclesiastical supremacy of the pope, how great soever under another civil government of Rome, would never have been a proper government of Rome; but the power of the supremacy itself would have been bounded by it, and hindered from establishing an ecclesiastical monarchy. It is therefore very justly observed by one well skilled in history and politics,* "Though the church was never so abounding in riches and in great numbers of ecclesiastics, yet it was absolutely necessary, that the pope, if he intended to establish an ecclesiastical monarchy, should not be in any way dependent on any temporal prince, but that he should reside in a place which was free from all subjection to any civil power but himself, that he always should be possessed of such an estate as might be sufficient to maintain his grandeur, and not be liable to be taken away from him on any pretence whatsoever; where also his adherents might find a safe retreat, whenever they should be pursued by the civil power."

In this period of time, then, which begins the last form of Roman government, and which perfected the papal supremacy and spiritual monarchy, by a considerable independent temporal dominion, we have a very proper and natural agreement of history, with the description of this prophecy. This may, I think, direct us to a surer method of fixing the date of it, than uncertain inquiries, when the papal supremacy was established; for I conceive the prophecy rather points out the temporal power of the pope, as the last form of the government of Rome, which was also what principally established his supremacy, and perfected the project of spiritual monarchy.

Period 4.]—When this period shall have continued forty-two months, a time, times, and half a time, a thousand two hundred and threescore days, according to the style of prophecy, "the beast shall be destroyed, the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan, shall be bound a thousand years," xix. 20, xx. 2. This state of the church will be a fourth remarkable period.

Period 5.]—Yet when these thousand years shall be expired, Satan shall again be loosed out of his prison for a short time: this will make a fifth period, xx. 7.

This shall, for once more, occasion a new attempt of error and wickedness against truth and righteousness; but this attempt shall end in the final ruin of all the enemies of religion: fire shall come down from God out of heaven, to devour them; and the devil, the deceiver, shall be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night, for ever and ever, xx. 9, 10.

Period 6.]—Upon this the prophecy represents, as the conclusion of all things, the general judgment, the second death and punishment of the wicked.

Period 7.]—The happiness of the righteous and faithful servants of God and Christ, in a state of glorious immortality, make a seventh period, in an endless sabbath.

This order of the prophecies is, I think, intelligible and natural; and, I believe, more agreeable to the important facts in history, than other systems: and yet it is the truth of history which alone can show us, what has been the providence of God towards the church and world, from the time of this vision of St. John to our own days.

It is certain, such a plan of prophecy, and order of history, will well answer the useful designs of prophecy in general: to prepare the church to expect opposition and sufferings in his present world; to support good men under all their trials of faith and patience; to give encouragement to perseverance in the true religion, whatever dangers may attend it; to assure the attention of Providence, and the protection of God to his own cause, that no opposition shall finally prevail against it; that the judgments of God shall punish the enemies of true religion; that their opposition to truth and righteousness shall surely end in their own destruction; when the faithful perseverance of true Christians shall be crowned with a glorious state of immortal life and happiness.

If, by explaining this book of Revelation upon this plan, we shall find these intentions answered, and these truths verified in history, and confirmed by experience, we shall attain what is worth aiming at, to make this book appear more intelligible, certain, and useful, than it is commonly thought to be. For which reason, as many good persons have not given that attention to it they ought, they miss that encouragement, hope, and improvement, they might receive from it, and, I think, with some greater advantages than from a plainer manner of delivering even the same truths in other books of the holy scriptures: for almost every thing that is sublime, lively, and moving in the law and the prophets, receives new force in the strong representations, figures, images, and expressions, of this book.

The great truths concerning the majesty of God, the wisdom and care of his providence, the dignity, authority, and power of Christ, the protection of the church, the restraint and punishment of their enemies, and the final happiness of all who shall faithfully persevere in the true Christian faith and worship, are here delivered in such awful manner, such animated expressions, and such striking representations, as must greatly warm the spirits of good Christians. A regard to this book of Revelation, as a prediction of events by a Spirit of prophecy, which therefore will surely come to pass, and which cannot fail of their accomplishment, serves very wisely and powerfully to guard against the fears of men, by a full assurance of hope in God. It will animate every one, who looks upon the promises and threatenings of this book as a sure prediction of what shall come to pass, to resist every temptation of error and wickedness, with faithfulness, constancy, and zeal. The lake of fire and brimstone, and the terrors of the second death, the portion of the fearful and unbelieving, the glory and happiness of the holy Jerusalem, and a right to the tree of life, the portion of all the faithful, are represented in so strong and lively images, as are fit to fix the attention, and make way to the heart and affections, and engage them with zeal to follow the wise directions of understanding and judgment: and an exact conformity between these prophetic descriptions, and the real state of the church and world, for a long series of some hundred years, continually gives new evidence to the truth of the Christian revelation, and to the authority of the books of the New Testament; it greatly confirms our faith in the promises, and thereby gives them their full force and influence upon us.

As this seems to be the improvement the Holy Spirit of prophecy designed in this book of Revelation, let us consider whether a religious attention to these designs will not enable us to make this very useful improvement of it. There is reason to hope it may: for it is one prophecy of this book, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein," i. 3.

Objections considered.]—Yet notwithstanding these reasons, to recommend to us the study and improvement of these revelations, it may be proper briefly to take notice of some common objections which too often prejudice the minds of many against them.

Uncertainty of application.]—I have already observed, what I hope is sufficient to answer the charge of obscurity from the style of prophecy; but the objection goes farther than to the obscurity of expressions. This book of Revelation represents, some say, a great many persons and events, times and things, which men know not how to apply with any sufficient certainty. Hence we find so much difference between interpreters, and the same prophecy applied to a great variety of events; times often fixed, and often mistaken; that it should seem a point of plain wisdom not to be over-busy in such uncertain applications.

It will ever be a point of wisdom not to be over busy, or over-confident in any thing, especially in fixing periods of time, or determining seasons, which it may be are not to be determined, it may be are not fit to be known.

* Puffendorff, of the Spiritual Monarchy of Rome, s. 19.

It is a maxim of greater wisdom than it is usually thought, "Seek not to know what should not be revealed." Such are many future events. The precise time of our Saviour's coming to judgment was not revealed, because not fit to be revealed: the uncertainty of his appearance was of greater service to preserve a care of religion, than the revelation of it would have been; for the uncertainty itself gives many useful exhortations: "Watch, for ye know not at what hour the Son of man cometh." Suppose, then, some of the events described in this prophecy should be of doubtful application; suppose the precise time of the downfall of the beast, the slaying and resurrection of the witnesses, and the beginning of the thousand years' happy state of the church, should not so be determined, but it would admit of different calculations, may it not be wise, and therefore fit, it should be so? The certainty of those events in a proper time, though that time should not be precisely determined, will answer the greater ends of useful instruction; and if the revelation should go no farther than this, it would yet be a revelation of great benefit and advantage, as the certainty of the day of judgment in its proper time surely is, though "of that day and hour knoweth no man."

Besides, there is another wise reason, why the persons and events described in this prophecy should be express enough for the purposes of religious improvement, for the patience, hope, encouragement, and constancy, of the church, and yet remain with some uncertainty as to a particular application. It was no way fit, for instance, that the several woes and plagues prophesied to befall the Roman state and empire, should stand so plain in a book of Christian revelation, that every one could apply them to particular emperors, or any present administration of government. It was not fit, for instance, that Trajan, Hadrian, Severus, or Diocelesian, should be so described, as that all men should presently perceive they were personally pointed out. This might have rendered the sacred books of the Christian religion suspected as treasonable libels against the peace, the power, and the very being of the Roman empire. The persecutors of Christianity might have made this a plausible pretence to justify their greatest severities against the Christians, as enemies to the peace and government, as well as to the religion, of the empire. These are therefore uncertainties not to be complained of, because they are wisely fit and proper.

Yet still the great descriptions of God and Christ, of their care and power; the description of the old dragon, and his opposition to the church; the dangers and afflictions of the church, from idolatrous persecuting enemies; the duty of the church in the hour of danger and temptation: the security of the church by divine protection; the sure victory and final happiness of the church in the end, which are the things of chief design and principal use: these are all express enough, and none of these are either of doubtful or uncertain application. And even as to the other particulars, "he that hath an ear to hear," that will carefully and modestly endeavour to find out the meaning of these prophecies, may, I think, attain to a good and useful degree of understanding, in "what the Spirit saith unto the churches;" and may find the several particular events of these prophecies of as certain application, as it is convenient such prophecies should be.

Danger of enthusiasm.]—There is moreover another prejudice against the careful study of this book. Some think, or at least pretend to think, that a regard to prophecies and predictions, and especially to the prophecies of this book, may have dangerous consequences. It may, as they say they fear, be an encouragement to enthusiasm, and become an occasion of great disorders in the world, which sure it is wisdom carefully to watch against.

Enthusiasm, it is true, often has, and may again produce very mischievous effects. The church, at the time of this prophecy, saw one of the most memorable and fatal instances, in the rebellion of the Jews; and the destruction of their temple, city, and nation, which followed upon it. But though enthusiasm may abuse the best and most innocent principles in the world, or at pleasure make what principles it pleases, and move men by unhallowed means to promote the holy kingdom of Jesus, as we have too many instances of it; yet sure I am, there is no encouragement to it in any part of the Christian religion, or in any part of these prophecies. Here are no directions, or the least encouragement given to the church, or Christians, as saints, but to patience and perseverance, in the faith and hope of the gospel, from the protection of God: no encouragement of sedition or mutiny, of violence or injustice, no, not to their greatest enemies, or in their greatest dangers. The true means and methods of their safety will be found of a quite different nature. The time and way of the church's deliverance is every where represented, as appointed and directed only by the orders of God and Christ. Angels are every where represented as the appointed ministers to execute these orders; angels are to sound the trumpets of God's judgments, and to pour out the vials of God's wrath; so that the whole representation seems as if designed to teach Christians, they were to be watchful against all manner of rash and mutinous attempts of their own, and not run into rebellion upon any pretence of religion, as the Jews did, and met their ruin in it. They are directed to wait the time God has appointed for their deliverance; hoping that God will, by his own hand of providence, execute his designs of their protection and deliverance, in the most fitting time, and in the fittest manner, and by the most proper means: so that, except the wisdom and prudence of their own conduct, which is the duty of all men at all times, and is the farthest thing in the world from enthusiasm, either in life or religion, the church has no other directions in these prophecies, but to "stand still, and see the salvation of God." The whole scheme of this prophecy then, is so far from being an encouragement to enthusiasm, that it is a wise preservative against it; for the general doctrine of the whole book is this,—that the patience of the saints is the way to their victory.

Upon the whole, in these interpretations we are not to expect demonstrations, or such proofs as shall be liable to no manner of objections, or that some weak and warm heads may not wrest these prophecies as they do the other scriptures, and may do any principles whatsoever, to extravagant designs and actions: it should be sufficient to satisfy us, if we find a proper and likely sense of the prophetic expressions and descriptions, suited to the manifest wise design of the whole prophecy; and if these interpretations are supported by an application of events in history, that are justly applicable both to the prophetic descriptions, and to the series and order of the prophecies; if they are events worthy a spirit of prophecy to reveal, and agreeable to the spirit and intention of this prophecy in particular, we may, without exposing ourselves to the charge of being over-credulous, reasonably rest satisfied with them.

Then, we may represent these prophecies to ourselves in that noble and useful view in which a great author has placed them (Bossuet, Explic. of the Revelation, Pref.):

"In the Gospel of St. John we read the life of Christ on earth: a man conversing with men, humble, poor, weak, and suffering, we behold a sacrifice ready to be offered, and a man appointed to sorrows and death; but in the Revelation of St. John, we have the gospel of Christ now raised from the dead. He speaks and acts as having conquered the grave, and triumphed over death and hell, as entered into the place of his glory; angels, principalities, and powers, being made subject unto him, and exercising the supreme universal power he has received from the Father over all things in heaven and earth, as our Saviour, for the protection of his church, and for the sure happiness of his faithful servants in the end."

CHAP. V.

Chorus of angels and saints; or, the whole heavenly church sings a psalm of praise to the Lamb.

CHAP. VI.

The Revelation begins by opening the sealed book, which describes the future state of the church in seven successive periods.

SEVEN PERIODS.

First period, showing the state of the church under the heathen Roman emperors, from about the year 95, to about the year 323. The seals of the book opened in order - - - - - - - 95–323

Seven Seals.

1. First seal represents a white horse, the rider with a crown, going forth to conquer; signifying the kingdom of Christ, or Christian religion, prevailing against the opposition of Jews and heathen.
2. Second seal represents a red horse, power given to the rider to take peace from the earth; signifying the first memorable judgment on the persecutors of Christianity, in the destruction of the Jews under Trajan and Hadrian - - - 100–
3. Third seal represents a black horse, the rider with a balance to measure corn; signifying great scarcity of provision, near to famine, in the time of the Antonines - - - - - - - 138–
4. Fourth seal represents a pale horse, the name of the rider Death; signifying a great mortality and pestilence, wherewith the empire was punished in the reigns of Maximin and Valerian - 193–
5. Fifth seal represents the souls of the martyrs under the altar, their reward and deliverance in a short time; signifying the severe persecution in the reign of Dioclesian, with an encouragement to constancy, suitable to such times of difficulty - - - - - - - - - - - - - 270–
6. Sixth seal represents earthquakes, sun darkened, stars falling from heaven; signifying great commotions in the empire, from Maximian to Constantine the Great, who put a period to the persecution of Rome heathen - - - - - - - 304–323

CHAP. VII.

Interval between the first and second periods, represents an angel sealing one hundred and forty-four thousand with the seal of the living God; signifying great numbers forsaking the idolatrous worship of the heathen Roman empire, and embracing the profession of Christianity.

VER. 9.

Chorus of the heavenly church blessing God for his salvation. One of the elders shows unto St. John the happiness of those who were faithful and constant to true religion, in the great trial of so grievous persecution.

CHAP. VIII.

Second period reveals the state of the church and providence in the times following the reign of Constantine, during the invasion of the empire by the northern nations; the rise and first progress of the Mahometan imposture, till the stop put to it in the western empire, which reaches from about the year 337 to the year 750 - - - - - 337–750

Seven angels receive seven trumpets to sound.

Seven Trumpets.

1. First trumpet represents hail and fire mingled with blood, cast on the earth; signifying great storms of war to fall on the empire, and the blood that was shed in the reigns of the Constantine family, and their successors, till things were settled under Theodosius - - - - - 337–379
2. Second trumpet represents a mountain burning with fire, cast into the sea, whereby it became blood; signifying the invasion of Italy by the northern nations, and taking the city of Rome by Alaric - - - - - - - - - - - - 379–412
3. Third trumpet represents a burning star falling upon the rivers, which became bitter; signifying the ravages in Italy, putting an end to the Roman empire, and founding a kingdom of Goths in Italy itself - - - - - - - - - - 412–493
4. Fourth trumpet represents a third part of the sun and moon darkened; signifying, the wars in Italy between Justinian's generals and the Goths, whereby the exarchate of Ravenna was erected, and all the remaining power and authority of Rome quite suppressed - - - - 493–568

CHAP. IX.

5. Fifth trumpet represents the bottomless pit opened, and locusts coming out of it; signifying, the rise of the Mahommedan religion and empire, and the great progress of both, till a stop was put to them by a contention for the succession - - - - - - - - - - - - - - 568–675
6. Sixth trumpet represents four angels loosed, which were bound in the river Euphrates; signifying, the reunion of the divided Saracen power, the invasion of Europe by them, and threatening the conquest of it, till defeated by Charles Martel - - - - - - - - - - - 635–750

Third period of the vials reveals the state of the church and providence, in the times of the last head of Roman government, represented by the beast, for one thousand two hundred and sixty years, to its final overthrow, from about the year 756, to about the year 2016 - - - - - - 756–2016

CHAP. X.

An angel, or Nuntius, brings a little book, the remainder of the sealed book opened by the Lamb, and gives it to St. John to eat; signifying, a farther revelation of what was to follow in order of time, to the end of the world.

CHAP. XI.

Three general descriptions of this period:

1. First general description represents the temple measured: part given to the gentiles; two witnesses prophesy in sackcloth one thousand two hundred and sixty days; signifying, the corrupt state of the church, and the constancy of some faithful witnesses to the truth, though under severe persecutions during this whole period.

CHAP. XII.

2. Second general description represents a woman forced to fly into the wilderness for safety; and protected there one thousand two hundred and sixty days; signifying, the persecution and preservation of the church during the same period.

CHAP. XIII.

3. Third general description represents a monstrous wild beast rising out of the sea, with seven heads, ten horns, as many crowns, and titles of blasphemy, who was to continue forty and two months; signifying, that new Roman power, which should use its authority to promote idolatrous worship, and to persecute all who would not submit to it, and should be supported by another power like unto its own form and constitution, during the same period.

CHAP. XIV.

Chorus of the heavenly church celebrates in a hymn the happiness of those who remain faithful and constant.

CHAP. XV.

Nuntius, an angel, comes down from heaven to declare the certain and severe judgment of the enemies of truth and pure religion, in this period.

Seven angels receive seven cups full of the wrath of God; signifying, that the enemies of truth and pure religion in this period, shall be severely punished in the course of it, as well as they shall be utterly destroyed in the end.

CHAP. XVI.

The oracle gives order to the seven angels, to pour out their vials or cups.

Seven Vials.

First vial poured on the earth; a grievous sore on the worshippers of the beast, signifying the great commotions throughout the whole empire, under the family of Charles the Great, by which that family becomes extinct, and by which both the empire and crown of France are transferred to other families - - - - - - - - - - 830–

2. Second vial poured on the sea, it becomes as the blood of a dead man; signifying, the great bloodshed of the holy war, to recover Jerusalem from the Saracens - - - - - - - - - - 988 1040–

3. Third vial poured on the rivers and fountains; they become blood; signifying, the bloody civil wars between the Guelphs and Gibellines, the papal and imperial factions, when the popes were driven out of Italy into France - - - - 1190 1200–

4. Fourth vial poured on the sun, which has power given it to scorch men; signifying, the long wars in Italy, Germany, France, and Spain, occasioned by a long schism in the papacy. Turks take Constantinople, and put an end to the eastern empire. Pestilential diseases occasioned by intemperate heat - - - - - - - - - 1371 1378–

5. Fifth vial poured on the seat of the beast, or his throne; signifying, the Reformation, and the confirmation of it by the principal states of Europe, notwithstanding all opposition from the pope, and in opposition to the papal authority - 1530 1560–

6. Sixth vial poured on the river Euphrates, makes way for the kings of the east. This seems, in the order of the prophecies, to be yet future; but may likely mean some invasion of the pope's dominions from its eastern boundary, or the Adriatic - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - 1650 1670–1850

7. Seventh vial poured on the air, the seat of Satan's empire, describes the utter ruin of this persecuting idolatrous Roman government, or mystical Babylon, at the end of this period - - - 1850–2016

CHAP. XVII.

Nuntius, an angel interpreter, more fully explains the character of this idolatrous persecuting power, which should corrupt the church, and persecute the faithful during this period.

CHAP. XVIII.

Another angel sent from heaven, to confirm the utter and lasting destruction of this mystical Babylon, as a punishment for her idolatrous corruption and persecution.

CHAP. XIX.

Chorus of the heavenly church sings the praise of God, for his righteous judgments.

A vision of Christ, leading an army out of heaven, strongly represents the certain accomplishment of this prophecy.

CHAP. XX.

Fourth period. An angel sent from heaven to shut up Satan in the bottomless pit, as in a secure prison, for one thousand years, during which time there will be a happy state of the church, in purity, peace, and prosperity.

VER. 7.

Fifth period. After the thousand years of the church's prosperity shall be expired, Satan will be loosed again for a little season, a new attempt will be made to revive the corruptions of the church, and a spirit of persecution, which shall end in the final destruction of Satan's power, and of all the enemies of pure and true religion.

VER. 11.

Sixth period. The general resurrection and final judgment; the everlasting destruction of the wicked.

CHAP. XXI.

The seventh period concludes the whole prophecy, in the vision of new heavens, and a new earth, representing, in strong images, the extent, security, riches, and grandeur of the heavenly Jerusalem; signifying, the consummate happiness of the heavenly state.

CHAP. XXII.

Thus, the prophecies of this revelation issue in an eternal SABBATH: The sure reward of all who shall be found faithful and constant in the true religion of Jesus Christ.

The CONCLUSION confirms the truth and certainty of these prophecies, warns against corrupting them, exhorts to hope the accomplishment of them; a useful spirit and temper, to give good men consolation in all their present afflictions, and to preserve them from the corruptions of religion, how prevailing soever in their own times; which is

CHAP. XXII. VER. 6.

The useful moral and principal doctrine of these prophecies.

CHAPTER I.

SECTION I.

1 The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John:

2 Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

3 Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

Ver. (1.) This book contains a discovery or revelation of many secrets, which Christ made known concerning the present and future state of his church in this world; and which the divine wisdom directed should be made known, by a revelation from himself, to his faithful servants; containing an account of many things that should shortly begin to be accomplished, and which he revealed by his [1] angel to his servant John, in the following visions. (2.) Which revelations John has faithfully recorded, as they were revealed to him by Christ, even as he faithfully testified what he had seen of Christ's actions on earth. And what follows is a true and faithful relation of what he saw in his prophetic visions. (3.) And they are of such use to the faithful Christian, that he will be truly blessed, who shall so read and attend to the words of this prophecy, as to follow the counsels and instructions contained in it, who shall persevere in the faith, worship, and patience, of the gospel; for they are of immediate and constant use, as they will very soon begin to be accomplished, and will be punctually fulfilled in their order to the end of time.

4 John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne;

5 And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood,

6 And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

(4.) I John, therefore, who saw these visions, and record them for the benefit of the church, salute the seven churches which are in Asia, to whom I more immediately direct this revelation, wishing them all manner of spiritual happiness, from the eternal God, and from his [2] Holy Spirit; (5.) And from Jesus Christ our Saviour and Lord, who is a faithful Witness, whom God raised from the dead, the first-fruits of our resurrection, and thereby gave us full evidence and reasonable assurance of our own resurrection from the dead, and has made him supreme head over all persons, of what authority, dignity, or power soever, to whom we have the greatest obligation, as he has so loved us, as to wash us from our sins in his own blood, (6.) and has sanctified us to the service of God, consecrating us as his church, a kingdom of priests, to honour God and his Father, and to give us the privilege of a near approach unto him, with assurance of acceptance and favour: to him let the churches ascribe glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen.

7 Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

(7.) This prophecy, which I now record, you may observe, is agreeable to former prophecies, concerning the power and majesty of Christ's kingdom; Daniel prophesied of his coming with the angels of the host of heaven;* [3] and Zechariah, that "they shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and mourn;"† and our Saviour himself,‡ that "all the tribes of the earth shall mourn; for they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Such manifestations then of his glory and power, the Christian church had all reason to believe and hope for. (8.) And we have the more reason to heed, and give credit to these predictions of prophecy, because they are, in effect, promises of the supreme Governor of the world; who is ever the same unchangeable being, able to accomplish all his purposes from the first beginning of time to the last consummation of all things.

SECTION II.

9 I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10 I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, 11 Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. I.

Contents.—This chapter is an introduction, or preface, to the prophecies contained in this book. It represents the first vision John saw; the manner in which this revelation was made to him; and gives, in very lively figures, a view of the majesty, glory, and power of our Lord Jesus Christ, now in his exalted state: it teaches Christ's care of his church, now he is sat down at the right hand of God, in very beautiful and strong expressions, taken chiefly from the ancient prophets; very proper to confirm the faith and patience of good Christians, and encourage their perseverance, under all their afflictions and fears: the principal doctrine and design of the whole book.

[1] Ver. 1. By his angel.] In the style of prophecy, from whence the expressions of this book are chiefly taken, every thing is called an angel, that notifies a message from God, or executes the will of God. A prophetic dream is an angel; the pillar of fire that went before the Israelites, is called God's angel. The winds and flames of fire are angels to us, when used by God as voices to teach us, or rods to punish us: so that God is properly said to reveal by his angel, what he makes known, either by voice, by dream, by vision, or any other manner of true prophetic revelation.

[2] Ver. 5. From his Holy Spirit.] The Holy Spirit, I think, is meant by the seven spirits which are before the throne. Seven, in the language of prophecy, often expresses perfection, and may better be understood of the most perfect Spirit of God, the author of all spiritual blessings, than of seven angels, as a more natural interpretation of the expressions in prophecy, as well as much more agreeable to the manner of the gospel-blessing, from Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

[3] Ver. 7. Angels of the host of heaven.] Rabbi Saadias Gaon observes the clouds of heaven, they are the angels of the host of heaven; this is the great magnificence and power, which God shall give unto the Messiah. (Vide Pearson on the Creed, art. 7, p. 293, and Bishop Chandler's Defence of Christianity, p. 130.)

* Dan. vii. 13. † Zech. xii 10. ‡ Matt. xxiv. 30.

12 And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks;

(9.) Know then the time and occasion of these revelations I received from Christ, were thus: I who am a fellow-sufferer with you, on account of the gospel of Christ, was in banishment in the isle of Patmos, for my faithful adherence to the religion of Jesus Christ, and the truth of his gospel. (10.) There, on the day distinguished in the Christian church by the name of the Lord's day, on which the church is used to assemble for religious worship, the spirit of prophecy came upon me, in like manner as upon the ancient prophets; and the first thing I perceived, was a voice, strong and loud as the sound of a trumpet, and, attending to it, I heard this voice from heaven, or oracle of God, distinctly saying unto me, (11.) I am Alpha and Omega, I begin, and I finish all things, from the creation of the world, to the end of time, and the consummation of ages; regard the revelations thou shalt receive, as coming from me; write them down to preserve them for the use and benefit of the church, and send them in particular to the seven churches which are in Asia, who are concerned in the present use of them. (12.) This voice of the oracle called me to great attention, and made me turn to see whence this voice might proceed; then the spirit of prophecy continued the revelation is a prophetic vision, [4] for I saw as before my eyes the following representation: I saw seven golden candlesticks, or a lamp made of pure gold, having seven branches, like to the lamp in the holy place in the temple.*

13 And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

(13.) And as the priests, when they dressed the lamps, stood in the midst, to light the middle and largest of the branches first; so I beheld a person in the midst of this lamp, as if trimming the branches, not in the appearance of an angel, but in an appearance of human shape as a man; he was dressed in the rich habit peculiar to the high-priest: he wore the robe of the ephod, girt with the curious girdle, of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine-worked linen.†

14 His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

15 And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.

(14.) The appearance of his person was also very glorious, somewhat like the appearance of the Ancient of days, in Daniel.‡ The upper part of his body, his head, and hair, were exceeding white, and of [5] great lustre; his eyes had a piercing brightness, (15.) and the lower parts shone like the finest amber, or a refined and polished metal, and his voice was strong and full, like the sound of the sea, or some very great water.

16 And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp twoedged sword: and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.

(16.) I perceived farther, that this venerable person held in his right hand, as it were, seven stars, and a sharp twoedged sword seemed to go out of his mouth, and his whole appearance was as glorious as if I had beheld the full lustre of the sun at noon-day, when shining in its greatest brightness.

17 And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last:

18 I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

19 Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter;

20 The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

(17.) The sight of such a person, with so majestic appearance, struck me with great awe: insomuch, that, like a man in a swoon, I lost my senses for a time, but he raised me up, by laying his right hand upon me, and encouraging me, as the angel did Daniel;* and said unto me, Be not afraid, for though you may observe something in this vision of the majesty, power, and authority of my everlasting kingdom; (18.) yet observe also, this vision represents the High-priest and Saviour of the church, who died to redeem it unto God, and consecrate it a peculiar people, and who now ever lives to protect and bless it; and who has all authority and power in this life, and in the separate state of departed souls, after this life, to save it for evermore. This I confirm as a certain truth. (19.) Therefore lay aside your fear, and attend to the design of this vision; write down, and keep on record, what this vision reveals concerning the state of the church, of my power, and care of it, which are things of great concern to the church, and regard partly the present state of the church, and partly the several states of the church in future [5] times. (20.) To begin then to explain the meaning of this vision, observe what is to be understood by the mystical representation of the seven stars, and the seven golden candlesticks, or branches of the lamp: the stars are intended to signify the angels, pastors, or bishops of the churches; and the candlesticks to signify the churches themselves, consecrated to the service of God, following the instructions of their faithful bishops, in purity of doctrine, worship, and manners, shining as lights in the world, and honouring their profession of my gospel, and religion, before men.

[4] Ver. 12. In a prophetic vision.] The Jews accounted all degrees of prophecy were included in dreams and visions; In istis autem duabus partibus, somnio inquam et visione, continentur omnes prophetiæ gradus (Maimonides, More Nev. par. ii., cap. 26, p. 293); but yet the Jews were wont to make a vision superior to a dream; (vide Smith's Select Discourses of Prophecy, p. 175) so that this book is represented as the highest degree of prophetic revelation.

[5] Ver. 14. Of great lustre.] So λευκὸς, which we translate "white," properly signifies. Thus, Rev. xx. 11, "And I saw a great white throne;" that is, a throne with a glorious lustre. Λευκὸν (candidum) hic intellige splendidum cum majestate. (Grot. in loc.)

This being an appearance of the Shechinah, is to be considered as that always was, a representation of the divine presence, majesty, and glory; therefore the glory in which the Shechinah appeared in ancient prophecy, is very properly applicable to it.

[6] Ver. 19.] This distinction of things relating to the present state of the church, and of things relating to the future state of the church in aftertimes, may direct to one observation concerning this prophecy; That this first vision should seem to relate to the present state of the church; the following visions, to the future state of the church; which, I think, makes it more probable, to understand the epistles to the churches, as relating to the present state of the church in the days of the apostle, than to understand them as prophetic representations of the successive states of the church to the end of time: but I enter not into the opinions of learned men on that question, proposing to set the prophecies of this book in a plainer light if I can; not to make them darker, by new disputes, than they were before.

CHAPTER II.

SECTION III.

1 Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; [1]

2 I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: [2] and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted.[3]

4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

(1.) As the churches in Asia now labour under many discouragements and great trials of their faith and patience, write to them, as in my name, these directions and instructions proper for their warning and encouragement; declare, as from the Holy Spirit of revelation, my care of them, and power to protect them. In particular, write after this manner to the church of Ephesus; Though I am in heaven, yet I am concerned for the protection of my religion on earth, I will protect my ministers, who are careful to enlighten the church with the knowledge of truth and righteousness, of peace and happiness, according to the revelation of my gospel; and I will give all encouragement to the churches, and assistance, proper to answer their character as lights of the world, to adorn the Christian religion by purity of doctrine, worship, and manners. (2.) And let the church of Ephesus farther know, in this solemn manner, that in my observation of its behaviour, I take a particular notice of what deserves commendation; that it is careful to preserve good works; that it is diligent and zealous in the duties of religion; that it has shown a patience and constancy, as well as diligence and faithfulness, and expressed them in a very proper manner; not bearing those evil persons who would have corrupted the purity of the church with wickedness of life, and, examining the doctrines of such who would have imposed their errors on the pretence of apostolical authority, preserved the purity of faith and doctrine, as well as of life and manners. (3.) Let them know, I observe, that these things commendable in the church of Ephesus, are very eminent; they have borne great afflictions, they have long had patience, and, from a right principle of affection to my name and gospel, in which they have been very constant, as well as diligent, have not fainted under any difficulties or opposition. (4.) However, there are some things in the behaviour of this church that deserve reproof and censure, notwithstanding all that is commendable in it.

Tell them in my name, You have suffered your former affection to abate and cool; your affections for the institutions of the gospel, your charity for each other as brethren, and members of the true church of the living God, are not so warm and lively as once they were.

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate.[4]

7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

(5.) Take notice then of this declension of thy love, as a miscarriage that calls for repentance and reformation; this can only consist in regaining your former warmth of affection, so as to excite you to your former eminent acts of love and charity; if you neglect this warning and advice, if you will not repent and do your first works, I will soon punish your negligence and disobedience, by depriving you of those privileges of the true church, for which you are losing your esteem and affection. (6.) Yet still there is this encouraging in you, that though your love and affection are cooler than they were, yet you highly disapprove and warmly condemn the idolatrous liberties and unclean practices of the Nicolaitans, which I also highly disapprove and condemn. (7.) Let him therefore who is disposed to receive useful instruction, attentively consider what the Spirit of wisdom and prophecy reveals to the church, and let him be encouraged to faithfulness, perseverance, and constancy, in the Christian religion, being assured, that whosoever shall

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. II.

Contents.—In this and the following chapter, we have the prophecies which concerned the then present church, or "the things which are:" (i. 19) by which the state of the seven churches in Asia, at the time of the vision, seems to be described, in what was commendable, and deserved encouragement; in what was faulty, and called for reproof and reformation. This part of the prophecy is designed to show the constant care of Christ over the church both in the punishment of apostasy, and in the blessings of faithfulness and constancy. Each of these epistles is then to be considered as proper directions and encouragements, cautions and warnings, in every state of the church, where there are like commendable things to be praised and encouraged, or like faults and miscarriages to be reproved and amended; and it will represent the state of the church in every age, as, in every period of time, there will be some like things to be commended, and to be blamed. This is a representation of the state of the church, most proper to the design of the prophecy, to encourage faithfulness, patience, and perseverance, under all the discouragements the church might meet with. Christians were not to be discouraged on the one hand, because all things in the churches were not as they ought to be; nor yet, on the other hand, where they to neglect or overlook any miscarriage or imperfection, on pretence that the church in this world cannot arrive at perfection. They were to amend what was faulty, to improve what was imperfect, and to remain constant in the purity of Christian faith, worship, and manners, when the protection of Christ their Saviour promises them victory in the end, and to crown that victory with the glorious reward of eternal life.

[1] Ver. 1. Walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks,] Is an expression taken from the office of the priests in dressing the lamps, which was to keep them always burning before the Lord. I conceive, therefore, "walking" here may be designed to signify, not only a care to observe and know the true state of the churches; but moreover, to assist and promote their improvement in religion, or to assist the churches in their proper character, as consecrated to the service of God, that they may shine as lights in the world, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation (Phil. ii. 15).

[2] Ver. 2.] This observation of the commendable behaviour of the church of Ephesus, seems to direct us to observe how acceptable in the sight of God the care of the primitive churches was, to preserve purity by proper discipline, and a zeal against wickedness, as inconsistent with the profession of the gospel, as Mr. Waple well observes on the place.

[3] Ver. 3.] This third verse, as Mr. Waple observes, being much a repetition of what was said in the foregoing verse, seems to intimate that the sufferings, the diligence, and the patience of this church, were very eminent and remarkable, for so a repetition of the same thing sometimes signifies in scripture language.

[4] Ver. 6.] However antiquity differs concerning the original of the sect of Nicolaitans, it sufficiently agrees as to the libertine principles and impure practices they taught, used, and defended; insomuch that they allowed lewdness and adulteries, as well as idolatrous sacrifices, by placing them fight this good fight so as to overcome the enemies of truth and righteousness, so as not to be turned back from the holy commandment, by the temptation of an evil world, shall enjoy a state of full perfection and happiness in eternal life, as the first parents of the human race would have continued in the happiness of their paradisaical state, if they had not lost the privilege of the tree of life, being overcome by the temptation of eating the forbidden fruit.

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write; These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;

(8.) Write also another epistle to the church in Smyrna, and give it to understand these things, as a revelation from a most powerful and affectionate Saviour, from him who was before all things, and of whose kingdom and power there shall be no end: As my obedience to death showed how one dearly beloved of God might be afflicted in this life; and as my death has obtained eternal redemption for my people, and the new covenant confirmed by it has called them to the hope of everlasting salvation, so I am also raised from the dead, and live for ever, and have entered into the glory, the reward of my sufferings, which may greatly encourage and support all who shall be partakers with me, in suffering for righteousness' sake, that they shall also be partakers with me in glory.

9 I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich) and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan.

10 Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation [5] ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.

(9.) Let them know, I am not unacquainted with their true state and condition; I know their painful diligence in the good works of religion, and the many troubles they meet with on account of it; and, in particular, their low and poor condition, as to the riches of this world; though they have reason to account themselves rich, as they abound in good works, and enjoy the favour of God, with the hopes of the true religion; let them farther understand, I am sensible of the opposition they meet with, from a party which boasts in the privileges of the true church, but whose pretences are false and blasphemous; who are so far from being the true church of God, that they are a synagogue of Satan, by promoting error, superstition, and wickedness, the very things wherein the kingdom of Satan consists. (10.) Direct them, that they fear none of these sufferings, which such evil persons may inflict upon them; though God, for the trial of their faith and patience, may permit them to be cast into prison, and they may have great trouble for some considerable time, yet exhort them to be faithful even unto death, if their trial should reach to the danger of their lives, as well as of their liberty; assuring them, that their faithfulness shall finally be rewarded, with a crown of infinitely more value than the corruptible crowns men have in so high esteem here, even with a state of perfection, happiness, and glory, for ever.

11 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

(11). Let then every man attentively consider, what the Spirit of wisdom and revelation hereby teaches the church, and be encouraged to faithfulness and constancy, in the profession and practice of true Christianity: for whoever shall thus overcome the temptations of the world, shall not be hurt by the death of his soul in the world to come; but shall be delivered from the punishment of the wicked and faithless, when they shall be doomed to everlasting destruction.

12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write; These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges;

(12.) Send also an epistle to the bishop of the church in Pergamos; let them know these instructions and admonitions come from their Saviour; who, though he has a constant care of the churches, and their ministers, yet was represented in the vision you saw (i. 16), with a sharp sword going out of his mouth, to acquaint them, the power of the sword is an essential right of my government; that I shall be as ready to punish apostates and enemies of my kingdom as I am ready to protect and bless my people, in their perseverance and constancy, according to those rules I have settled, and declared in my word.

13 I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth.

(13.) Let them know, I consider what is commendable in them, every circumstance that makes their patience and constancy more eminent; I consider their good works, and I consider also, the temptations of the place where they live, where the powers of darkness and corruption have a numerous and powerful party. Yet, in this time of severe trial, when the evil spirit of persecution prevailed to put a faithful servant of my gospel to death in their city, so great was the power of Satan among them; yet they could not be prevailed upon to deny my name and religion.

14 But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.

15 So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate.

(14.) Notwithstanding this exemplary constancy, let them also understand there are some things that deserve reproof, and require reformation; they have some among them who have fallen into the prevailing corruptions. As the wicked advice of Balaam prevailed upon the children of Israel to commit fornication with the daughters of Moab, and so to join with them in their idolatry; which trespass was punished by a plague among the congregation of the Lord:* so there are some in the church of Pergamos, who give into the corruption of eating things sacrificed to idols, and allow themselves to commit fornication. (15.) There are some who go so far as to justify those miscarriages, by receiving the principles of the Nicolaitans, which I greatly disapprove, as most inconsistent with the purity of the Christian faith and religion, as revealed and taught in my gospel.

16 Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the [6] sword of my mouth.

(16.) Charge them therefore to repent of these miscarriages, and to return to the Christian purity of doctrine and manners, by a thorough reformation: otherwise, as these sins were punished, in former examples, by a plague, I also will very soon punish them in such manner as shall show my high displeasure at so great miscarriages in my church.

among things indifferent, and pleaded in justification of their own liberty in the use of both. And thus it seems to be explained in this very chapter (ver. 14), "Teaching to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication."

[5] Ver. 10. Ten days,] I conceive, is not to be understood literally; a short time of affliction indeed! hardly agreeable to a description of that tribulation this prophecy seems to prepare the church for. In scripture language, "ten times" are many times, Gen. xxxi. 7. 41; "ten women" are many women, Lev. xxvi. 26; "ten sons" are many sons, 1 Sam. i. 8; "ten men" are many men, Ecclus. vii. 9; and in common speech, ten signifies many; as Mr. Daubuz has observed in several passages of Plautus (Symbolical Dict. p. 96).

[6] Ver. 16. I will fight against them with the sword of my mouth,] Is, I think, an allusion to the sword, one of the ensigns of magistracy and government, to express the jus gladii, or the power of the sword, in the execution of justice

* Numb. xxv. 1, 2, xxxi. 16.

17 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, [7] and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

(17.) Let all who are disposed to receive useful instruction, carefully attend to these encouragements and warnings given by the Spirit of prophecy. He who, from these encouragements, shall overcome the temptations of the world, shall receive an abundant reward; I will bestow upon him all the rewards meant by the spiritual manna, the true bread of God, which came down from heaven;* and I will give him a stone, with an inscription on it, not as a ticket or warrant, to receive such small rewards as are usually given to those who obtain a victory in the public games, or assemblies; but such as shall be a warrant to receive so great a reward, that none can rightly comprehend the value of, but such who shall be possessed of it, and know, in experience, how great privileges, grace, favour, and happiness, it entitles them to, in the inheritance of the new Jerusalem.

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write; These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;

(18.) Write also to the bishop and church of Thyatira, as from me, who, though I was a man, by my natural descent from the family of David, yet am also truly the Son of God, and was declared to be so by the power of the Spirit, who discern all the secrets of men's hearts, how concealed soever they may be, whose ways will be found glorious in purity and upright judgment, who exercise loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth.†

19 I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first.

(19.) I observe and commend thy good behaviour in many things; all thy good works are remembered by me, which are done in my service, out of love to me, my name, and my gospel; as I approve thy faith, patience, and constancy in times of temptation and affliction, so I am pleased to find your affection and zeal in my service improving, that, after a long time of patience, your faith, affection, and constancy, appear more eminent than at the first.

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

21 And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.

22 Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.

24 But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden.

25 But that which ye have already hold fast till I come.

(20.) Yet, observe, there are some things in your conduct I take notice of which deserve blame, and call for reformation; you give too much allowance and countenance to some evil persons, who, like that wicked woman Jezebel, who defiled Israel with her idolatrous and lewd practices, set themselves to teach, and, on wicked pretences to prophecy and revelation, to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols, both which are contrary to the truth and purity of the doctrine and worship of my gospel. (21.) Though I have given these persons a long time to consider the evil of their behaviour, and to reform it, yet they are so corrupt in their minds, that they still remain impenitent and obstinate, and give no signs or hopes of amendment. (22.) Know, then, I will take a time severely to punish these persons for their evil principles and wicked practices; and this punishment shall reach all who are partakers with them in their wickedness, as well as themselves; instead of ease and pleasure, they shall have sorrow and tribulation; and this threatening shall be accomplished, as surely as the punishment was, which the prophet Elijah denounced in the name of the Lord against Jezebel,* except they repent of their evil deeds, and forsake them. (23.) Let them know, the punishment of the false teachers, and their followers, shall be so great, and so remarkable, that the churches shall observe a divine power in it, and learn to respect and honour the administration of my government; who, as I know the secrets of men's hearts, and most concealed principles of action, so "I exercise judgment in giving to every man according to his works." (24.) But, as many have kept themselves from these evil doctrines, which the deceiving spirits have been so industrious to propagate; and which, though they boast in them as deep knowledge and wisdom, are indeed the deep arts of deceit and error in the kingdom of Satan, to bring in all sorts of corruption, by teaching to account things unlawful and sinful, as indifferent and innocent: let all who have kept themselves from these pollutions be assured, my gospel shall impose no new burden upon them, nor lay any new restraints, as these false teachers would insinuate; but only confirm the laws of truth, righteousness, and goodness to make them free from sin, the truest and most valuable freedom and liberty. (25.) Let them be careful to hold fast to the end the doctrines and precepts they have already received from my gospel, as necessary to true religion, and to please God; and no other things that can affect their real liberty shall be imposed upen them.

26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations:

27 And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.

28 And I will give him the morning star.

29 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

(26.) To encourage them farther in their faithful constancy, acquaint them in my name, if they overcome these temptations, and keep the faith and holy commandment of my gospel, so as to persevere unto the end in truth and righteousness, I will make good the promise made to the church in prophecy, that it shall prevail against the superstition of the heathen world, whether maintained by the heathen nations themselves, or introduced by others into the Christian church. (27.) For truth and righteousness shall prevail against error and wickedness; the church shall have a power, by my protection, like that I received from my Father;† however obstinate any man be in opposition to and punishments. But as the word of God is the measure by which he proceeds in punishment and protection, this being the declaration of his mind and will, the power of the sword, in the execution of justice, is ever to be considered as used agreeably to such measures as the word of God has declared, according to the promises and threatenings contained in his revelation, or the word that goeth out of his mouth.

[7] Ver. 17. The hidden manna] May refer to the words of Christ, John vi. 51, "I am the living bread which cometh down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever." A much greater instance of God's favour and grace, than feeding the Israelites with manna from heaven.

truth and purity, my power shall break their obstinacy, and give success to a faithful defence of my gospel against all the idolatrous and immoral principles of the heathen nations.[8] (28.) I will yet farther reward the constancy of my faithful servants; I will give them so clear understanding in the privileges, promises, and blessings of my gospel, as if "a day-star arose in their hearts;"* they shall see with great clearness, as by a bright light, the great encouragement and certainty of their reward, and rejoice in hope that the end of their warfare shall be victory, and their victory shall be crowned with a glorious reward; for they themselves shall "shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as stars, for ever and ever."* (29.) Let every one who is disposed to receive useful instruction attend to these directions, which the Spirit of revelation and prophecy designs to teach the churches.

[8] Ver. 27.] The kingdom of Christ, and his power over the nations, signify the success of his gospel, and of the true religion revealed and instituted by him, in opposition to the errors, idolatry, and wickedness, which had corrupted the heathen world.

CHAPTER III.

1 And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.

2 Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

(1.) Write also an epistle to the bishop of the church in Sardis, to let the church know, as from me, who have all spiritual gifts in my power and disposal, and the bishops and pastors of the churches under my care and protection, that I know their behaviour and their state; I know, that though they make a fair profession of the Christian faith, yet that they have very much lost the life and influence of true religion; though they keep up a reputation among men, they have lost it in the sight of God, who regards the heart and inward temper. (2.) Exhort them, therefore, that they carefully watch over themselves; and, in especial manner, to confirm those good principles and dispositions, which are grown so weak as to be near extinguished: for even the good things which still in part remain among them are very defective, and want much of that perfection which true religion and my gospel require, to make them acceptable in the sight of God.

3 Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4 Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.

5 He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

6 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

(3.) Direct them, that they seriously call to remembrance what doctrines they received when my gospel was first delivered unto them, that they may closely adhere to the rule of faith, worship, and life, they were then taught; when they compare their present temper and actions with the purity of that rule, let them observe wherein they have departed from it, that they may be concerned for their miscarriage, and sincerely careful to amend it: for if they disregard this direction, they are to expect some sudden and unforeseen judgment, which shall come upon them at unawares, as a thief is used to surprise a house in the night. (4.) But let them also know, for their encouragement, though this is the bad state of the greater part of their church, it is not of all; there are a few who have preserved themselves from the common corruption, who have kept their purity, and acted truly agreeable to their Christian profession; let them know I account them worthy of great honour and happiness, and I will confer distinguishing marks of honour and favour upon them.[1] (5.) Let them understand that this honour and favour shall be shown to every one who, by perseverance in faith and purity, shall overcome the temptations of this evil world; his name shall remain secure in the register of those who are entitled to the promise of eternal life:[2] I will myself own them to be my disciples, and acknowledge them true members of my church, in the presence of my Father and his holy angels at the day of final judgment, which shall confirm to them the inheritance of everlasting glory and happiness. (6.) And let every one who is sincerely concerned to improve by these useful instructions, carefully meditate on these directions which the Spirit of prophecy here sends to the churches.

7 And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth;

8 I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

(7.) Write likewise to the church of Philadelphia, as from me, who am that Holy One whom the Father hath anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power to the holy office of

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. III.

[1] Ver. 4.] White or shining garments were marks of favour and honour; under the law, they were the garments of the priests, and worn in the courts of princes. Thus Pharaoh honoured Joseph, by arraying him in vestures of fine linen, as well as putting a gold chain about his neck (Gen. xli. 42). A white garment is also an emblem of purity, and therefore interpreted in this prophecy (Rev. xix. 8), of the righteousness of saints, as well as a mark of honour: whence we see the propriety of this emblem, of white or shining garments, to express the peculiar honour and favour God would show to them who remained constant and faithful in the purity of the Christian faith, worship, and life.

[2] Ver. 5.] This book of life, is an allusion to some book or register, in which persons' names were enrolled, and by which they had a claim to certain privileges. I think it is not material, whether it refer to the registers in which the genealogies of the priests were kept, in which, if a man was not registered, he was rejected, as not belonging to the family of priests; or whether it refer to the common registers, in which the names of free citizens were used to be enrolled, and by which they were to prove their right to the privileges of free citizens; for either will sufficiently explain the meaning of the expression: and they who are written in the Lamb's book of life, as it is called, Rev. xxi. 27, are sometimes represented as priests, sometimes as fellow-citizens with the saints, and heirs of the kingdom of heaven. The general meaning is, They shall have a sure evidence on record, of their right to all the privileges and blessings of the true Christian church, included in the promise of eternal life.

mediator between God and men, whose doctrines and promises are all true and faithful, who have received all power and authority in my spiritual kingdom, as the promised Son of David: so that none can exclude from the privileges of the kingdom of heaven those whom I shall receive into them; and none can bestow them upon those to whom I shall, by my word and judgment agreeable to it, deny them. (8.) Let them understand I know their state and condition; I have given them a great opportunity of propagating my gospel, and of improving themselves in holiness and comfort, the true blessings of it, nor shall it be taken from them: but as they have been faithful to my religion, though in a weak state of worldly power, greatness, and riches,[3] and have not given up my authority, or the obligation of my doctrines, to any of the prevailing corruptions;—

9 Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

10 Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

(9.) I will therefore powerfully protect them against all those evil persons who boast themselves to be the true people and church of God; but, by promoting the cause of error and wickedness, prove themselves by sure marks to be in the party of Satan: insomuch, that I will make those very persons, by whom they are now opposed and despised, to submit themselves to them, and honour them, as convinced that I favour them with particular marks of my affection; and I will cause them, as disciples, to sit down at their feet, to learn the truth from their instructions.[4] (10.) And encourage them with this hope, that as they have hitherto faithfully followed my directions to patience and constancy in their present trials, I will give them farther gracious assistance to persevere in greater temptations and more general trials. When Christians every where shall have the sincerity of their faith and their constancy put to a new trial, theirs shall be approved and found sincere, even at that time when many shall fall from their constancy, and forfeit the blessings of true religion.[5]

11 Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

(11.) Exhort them to continue in their good state and constancy, whatever trials they may still meet, for they will shortly meet with other trials; let them be careful, lest by yielding to any new temptations, they lose their hope, and their reward at last.

12 Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the[6] name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name.

(12.) For he that endureth to the end, and so shall overcome, has a glorious reward prepared for him: he shall have a high degree of honour in the presence of God, which he shall securely enjoy, without fear of losing it: he shall enjoy the glory of God, in the true heavenly church; and he shall be made a partaker of my own glory, in the perfection and full happiness of the heavenly state.

13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

(13.) Let every one who is desirous to learn the useful instruction of this encouragement to patience and perseverance, diligently attend to what the Spirit of prophecy teaches the churches, and directs them to observe in this epistle.

14 And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God;

15 I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: [7] I would thou wert cold or hot.

(14.) Finally, direct also an epistle to the bishop of the church of the Laodiceans, as from their Saviour, whose character is the truth itself, whose word may be fully relied upon in all things, and what he bears witness to is faithful and true, and shall surely be performed, and who is able to accomplish every thing he promises, as he was the author of the whole creation, and has supreme dominion over every creature. (15.) Acquaint them, I know their temper, how indifferent they are in the cause of religion; they make some pretences to it, but with no sincere or affectionate zeal.

16 So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.

17 Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked:

18 I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see.

19 As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.

(16.) Let them know from me, such indifference in religion is highly disagreeable to me, as lukewarm water to the stomach; and if they continue in this bad state, I shall surely reject and cast them off, as the stomach rejects what

[3] Ver. 8.] "By 'strength' here cannot be understood," says Mr. Waple, on the place, "inward and spiritual strength, or zeal and courage to propagate the truth; for that was great in them, and they have a high character and commendation given them for it by our Saviour: it means, that outward human strength, in which the might of the world consists, 1 Cor. i. 27." It seems a commendation of their zeal and courage, that, without countenance and protection, and in an afflicted condition, they should yet show so much faithfulness and constancy.

[4] Ver. 9.] Some interpreters understand this expression "to worship before thy feet," to denote submission and respect, instead of opposition and contempt; others, that it is an allusion to the Jewish custom, of disciples sitting at the feet of their teachers, to hear their instructions: I thought it therefore not improper to mention both in the paraphrase.

[5] Ver. 10.] This hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, seems to relate to the persecution under Trajan; which was greater and more extensive than the preceding persecutions, either under Nero or Domitian.

[6] Ver. 12. I will write upon him the name of my God, &c.] Is an allusion to inscriptions usual on pillars, which sometimes expressed the privileges granted to cities; sometimes the names of benefactors, in memory of privileges granted: the general meaning is, to show the great privileges and happiness of the faithful members of the church, in the constant favour of God. Thus the happiness of the church is expressed in ancient prophecy, "The name of the city from that day shall be, The Lord is there," Ezek. xlviii. 35; "And they shall call them, The holy people, The redeemed of the Lord," Isa. lxii. 12. This promise may well signify, that they who are faithful to God and Christ, to the end of this life, shall enjoy all the happiness of the church, in the heavenly state of perfection and glory. How great an encouragement to preserve the purity of Christian faith and worship, against all corruption, and to promote a reformation, wherever it is corrupted!

[7] Ver. 15.] "I would thou wert cold or hot," may be understood as an expression of great dislike, not as a proper wish or expression of what men really desire; though, on some accounts, even no profession of religion is preferable to an insincere and unaffecting profession of religion. This dishonours the profession of religion, which the other does not; and men are more likely to be brought to a sense of religion, when yet they have none, than when they satisfy themselves with a form of religion, without the power; which seems to be the temper Christ condemns in this church.

is greatly disagreeable to it. (17.) Show them their present duty, now they are so much mistaken in themselves; now they imagine themselves to be in so good a state as to want nothing; acquaint them, that indeed they are in want of all things truly good. They are in a wretched and miserable state, as they are poor in the fruits of righteousness, ignorant of the true perfection of religion, destitute of the righteousness which is of God by faith to forgive and cover their sins, and of the image of God to adorn their souls. (18.) Exhort them, that they be more zealous and careful to obtain the true riches, that they may be rich before God in good works, that the righteousness of God by faith may cover their sins, and the sanctification of his Spirit adorn their souls; and, by a true understanding in the nature and perfection of religion, they may see what they are to hope for, and to aim at. (19.) Then they will understand the wisdom of Providence even in their afflictions and trials; they will then observe a kind design in them, and improve them as a wholesome discipline of warning, correction, and amendment.

20 Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

21 To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

(20.) Direct them to consider this present warning, as a proper opportunity of improvement; which, if they shall mind, and faithfully comply with, as my church and people ought to do, they shall enjoy the comfort and blessing of my presence and favour; then their reward shall be great in the end. (21.) For he that shall overcome his temptations, shall as surely have all his sufferings rewarded, by a portion in the happiness and glory of my kingdom, as my sufferings have been rewarded, according to God's promise, with supreme dominion, and universal authority over all things in heaven and in earth.

22 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

(22.) And let every one who is well disposed to know his duty and his happiness, carefully mind, and faithfully attend to, these instructions, which by the Spirit of revelation and prophecy I send unto the churches.

CHAPTER IV.

SECTION IV.

1 After this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter.

2 And immediately I was in the spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne.*

(1.) After I had seen the foregoing vision, and writ down the directions I was ordered to send to the seven churches, a new vision was represented to me, of another kind; I perceived a part of the heavens opened, through which, as through a door, I could behold what was done therein: and the first thing I perceived, was a strong and loud voice, like the sound of a trumpet.[1] This voice called upon me, saying, Come up hither, and the orders and decrees of Providence in after-times shall be revealed unto thee. (2.) Immediately upon this, the Spirit of prophecy came upon me, and I had the following prophetic vision, strongly and distinctly represented to me, as before mine eyes.[2] This vision I saw was like that of Ezekiel, when he saw the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord; for I beheld, as if a throne was set up, and placed in heaven, and I beheld a person as sitting upon the throne.[3]

3 And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a [4] sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

4 And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold.

(3.) The person who appeared to sit on the throne, made a very majestic and glorious appearance, with a lustre that may be expressed to common conception, by the precious stones which the greatest princes of the world were wont to use as their ornaments, when they appeared in their highest grandeur and magnificence. There was moreover, in this representation, a rainbow of a very beautiful colour, round about the throne; so that I beheld a representation, expressive of God's glory, majesty, authority, power, and faithfulness to his covenant and promise. (4.) Round about this throne, on every side, at some distance from it, were placed seats for twenty-four persons, and twenty-four elders, or persons appearing with the habits and dignity of magistrates and chief ministers, were seated upon them, so as to encompass the throne; they wore white and shining gar-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IV.

Contents.—The former vision which John saw, contained in the foregoing chapters, represented the state of the church, as I apprehend, at the time of the vision, or, in the words of the oracle, "the things that are" (i. 19), and gave suitable directions to the churches, to encourage their faith and patience, and exhort their constancy and perseverance. Now John records a second vision, in which the oracle revealed to him "the things which shall be hereafter" (i. 19), or the things which were to come to pass, in successive order, from the time of the vision till the mystery of God should be finished. In order to raise the greater attention of the church, and to represent the certain event, and great concern, of the things revealed in this vision, God himself is represented as seated on his heavenly throne, in the midst of his angels and saints, and the whole general assembly of the heavenly church; in which the glorious majesty and almighty power of God, his faithfulness to his covenant and promise, in the care of his churches, and favour of them, are described in very lively and beautiful images; together with the high regard the churches ought always to have for the counsels, designs, and orders of Providence, declared and published in so solemn manner, in the general assembly of heaven, or, in the language of the Jewish doctors, in the consistory above, as Maimonides expresses it,* Non facit Deus quicquam, donec illud intuitus fuerit in familiâ superiori; or, in another expression, Ipse et domus judicii ejus; as if it was an order or decree published and registered in the supreme consistory of heaven. A very proper and useful preface to the several revelations of the following visions.

[1] Ver. 1.] This may probably allude to the custom of the Jewish church, that upon opening the gates of the temple, the priests sounded their trumpets, to call the Levites and stationary-men to their attendance.

[2] Ver. 2.] We have before observed, that a vision was accounted the highest and most perfect kind of prophetic revelation, on i. 12.

[3] This representation of the throne of God is very agreeable to several descriptions of the ancient prophets, as Isa. vi. 1—3, Ezek. i. 26, x. 1, Dan. vii. 9.

[4] Ver. 3.] Many interpreters have observed a mystical meaning in the colours and properties of the precious stones here mentioned; thus in the jasper, which Grotius supposes

* Ezek. i.

* More Nevochim, par. ii. lib. vi. p. 200, 201.

ments, proper to persons of high dignity and honour; and as persons of chief distinction in the courts of the greatest princes: they wore also crowns or coronets of gold upon their heads.

5 And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.

(5.) From the throne itself, there came flashings of a bright flame, which darted round about like lightning; and it was attended with such loud sounds as very much resembled the noise of thunder, as it was usual in the divine appearances to represent the awful majesty of the one true God, the King of Israel.[5] And as in the holy place in the temple, there were seven lamps continually burning before the presence, so here I saw, as the likeness of seven lamps burning before the throne of God, to signify the seven Spirits of God, with what purity, constancy, and zeal, the spirits of just men made perfect serve God in the general assembly of the heavenly church.[6]

6 And before the throne there was a sea of glass* like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind.

(6.) And as there was in the temple a large vessel, or laver of brass, called a sea, from the great quantity of water it held for the use of the priests, in the time of their service, that they might wash themselves, and be clean, and not die, for ministering before God under any pollution: so here I also beheld a vessel, much more glorious than the brazen sea; for it was made of transparent crystal, of great brightness and beauty.[7] And I saw moreover, in the middle of each side of the throne, in the whole circuit round about, four living creatures,[8] or cherubim of Ezekiel, which he saw in his vision; they appeared full of eyes, not only before but behind, so that they had a direct and full view every way of all things round about them.

7 And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf,* and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

(7.) These living creatures had the same likeness and appearance of the cherubim in former visions: for the first of these living creatures had a countenance or face as a lion, the second as a calf, the third as a man, and the fourth was in appearance like a flying eagle; to express the strength, firmness, and constancy, the understanding and good-will, and the ready activity, with which they serve God.

8 And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

(8.) These living creatures were moreover represented as in Isaiah's vision of the seraphim; they had each of them six wings, which they used in part to express their reverence, covering their faces and feet, in part to show readiness and expedition in performing the orders and commands of God; and every day and night they join in the adoration and worship of God, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, who ever wast, and for ever wilt be, the one true God, the everlasting Lord, and supreme Governor of all beings.[9] a diamond, he finds an emblem of the invincible power of God: Mr. Daubuz, who considers it only as a stone of a white and bright-shining colour, looks upon it as a symbol of good-will and favour. Thus, the sardine stone, which is of a red colour, with some signifies the active power of God; with others, it is a symbol of anger and displeasure in God, and therefore of destruction; to teach men, if they obey his oracle, he will show them the brightness of his countenance; but if they despise it, he will at last show them the redness of it, or his fiery anger, in their destruction. And thus the beautiful green of the emerald is supposed to signify great good-will and favour: but as it does not appear to me, that the prophetic representation intended such mystical meanings, in the colour of the stones, I shall choose to omit them; especially, as all who have a mind to know them, may find them in almost every exposition. [" We may observe, I think, concerning the prophetic style of scripture, what the abbot Fleury has justly remarked concerning the poetical:— We are not to imagine each word and circumstance has a particular application; the whole figure generally tends to one point only, or directly means but one thing: the rest is added, not to make a part of the comparison, but to paint more lively the thing from whence the comparison is taken." Calmet, Dissert. vol. i. p. 113.] But the rainbow we have reason to consider as a representation of God's faithfulness to his covenant and promise, as God himself had appointed it a token of his covenant; and promised, that "when the bow shall be seen in the cloud, I will remember the covenant that is between me and you" (Gen. ix. 13—15).

[5] Ver. 5.] There is an observable difference in the several descriptions of the throne of God, in the prophets, that it may be very proper to take notice of it: the glory, or Shechinah, in the temple, is represented as under the wings of the cherubim; for "the cherubim spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubim covered the ark" (1 Kings viii. 6, 7). In Isaiah's vision, the glory of the Lord is represented, as "sitting on a throne, and above it stood the seraphim" (Isa. vi. 1, 2); that is, above the place on which the throne was set, as attending ministers to him that sat upon the throne. In another vision, there is "the likeness of a firmament over the heads of the living creatures" (Ezek. i. 22), whom the prophet elsewhere calls "the cherubim" (Ezek. x. 20); or the cherubim were represented, as bearing up a crystal vault or seat, on which the throne of Jehovah was placed over their heads, and which they supported with their wings. This different description will be explained by an easy observation, that the Shechinah, or glory of the God of Israel, is represented in the temple, as the presence of a king in his palace; his throne is supposed seated in an apartment of state, and the cherubim are so placed, as to form a sort of canopy of state, under which he sits. In the vision of Isaiah, Jehovah is represented as sitting on his throne, or bed of justice, held in open court, in the porch, or at the gate of his palace; then the cherubim appear as attending ministers of the court, to receive and execute the orders of it. In the vision of Ezekiel, Jehovah is represented as going forth in solemn procession, and having his throne, or chair of state, borne up on the wings of cherubim, as the great kings of the east were used to be borne on the shoulders of their servants.

[6] The seven lamps, or candlesticks, are emblems of the church, and the Seven Spirits of God, of the all-perfect gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost. I have joined both senses together in the paraphrase, so as to unite both meanings into one; and to express what seems to be the principal intention of the figurative expressions, with what purity and perfection God is served by those who are wholly sanctified, and made perfect, in all grace and holiness, in the heavenly state.

[7] Ver. 6.] Several interpreters understand this crystal sea to be an emblem of the known rites of receiving converts into the Christian church by baptism, of the purity that sacrament signifies, and of the blood of Christ, by which they are washed and cleansed from their sins. To be sure, it has an allusion to that purity that is required in all persons, who have the honour and happiness of a near approach to the presence and throne of God.

[8] "Four living creatures:" so they are interpreted, Ezek. i., and so they should have been translated here; "four beasts" is a very improper expression, and may much darken the meaning of the vision.

[9] Ver. 8.] Mr. Mede, and many who follow him, suppose this description of the living creatures to be taken from the standards of the camp of Israel: supposing the standard of Judah was a lion on the east side of the camp; the standard of Ephraim an ox on the west side; the standard of Reuben, 11 Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

(9.) And when the cherubim, the representatives of the angels, who were nearest the throne, began their adoration and praise of God by a solemn thanksgiving, saying, Glory, honour, and thanks, be to the living and eternal God, who sits upon the throne; (10.) they were immediately answered by the twenty-four elders, who were round about the throne, at some farther distance; who, rising from their seats, and taking off their coronets, in the most humble posture of adoration, prostrated themselves before the throne, and worshipped the eternal living God who sat upon it; and joined in a doxology, saying, (11.) Thou, O Jehovah, art most worthy to receive the joint adoration of angels and saints, ascribing all glory, honour, and power, unto thee: for thou art the supreme God of all, who hast created all things; to whose will and power they all owe their beings at first, and by whom they all still continue to be what they are.

a man on the south side; and the standard of Dan, an eagle on the north side; and that these ensigns or standards figuratively expressed the strength and power of a lion, the constant labour and usefulness of an ox, the reason and prudence of a man, the quick sight and activity of an eagle: so that this represented the Christian church and priesthood, and expressed the several qualities of courage, labour, prudence, and activity, with which the Christian church and ministry were to maintain the honour of God, and cause of true religion in the world. But however ingenious and plausible this conjecture appears at the first sight, many learned persons, who have exactly considered it, find it has very little evidence or proof to support it. There is no mention of any such standards in Moses or the whole scriptures, in Josephus or Philo, or in any ancient writer, who can give any weight or authority to it. The reasons with which Aben Ezra endeavours to support it, are so weak in the opinion of the learned Bochart, that he has not scrupled to call them ridiculous: Sed hoc commento putidius nihil est (Hieroz. lib. iii. cap. 5, s. 8). There are, moreover, many reasons which make it highly improbable the Jews should use such standards in their camp, it being the unanimous opinion of the Jews, that images, as military standards, were contrary to their law, which forbade the making of images. And it is very unlikely, that when that people had suffered so much for making a golden calf, Moses should immediately make not only the image of a calf, but several other images, as ensigns or military standards, for a people so prone to idolatry; as the learned Witsius has more largely observed, Ægyptiacorum, lib. ii. cap. 13. These living creatures seem much more likely to be taken from the cherubim, in the visions of Isaiah and Ezekiel, and in the most holy place, which are plainly designed as a representation of the angels, which are ever represented in scripture as attendant on the Shechinah, or glory of God, according to the psalmist, Ps. lxviii. 17, "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels; the Lord is among them, as on Sinai, in the holy place." The great use of angels in this vision, and their great number, so that John heard the voice of many angels round about the throne (v. 11), make it probable, that as the twenty-four elders are placed about the throne, as representatives of the Jewish and Christian churches, now united into one, so the four living creatures, or cherubims, are alike representatives of the angels, who are round the throne of God, and minister to him. And so, according to a great author, the form of the cherubim expresses the great understanding and power of the angels; Cherubim summam, secundùm Deum, scientiam et potentiam angelorum indicâsse (Spencer, de Leg. Hebræ. lib. iii. cap. 5, dissert. 5, p. 253).

And this will also give a plain reason, which otherwise is not so easy to account for, why these living creatures, or cherubim, are nearer the throne than the twenty-four elders, and why they begin the worship of God before them; and it may also show, how proper this representation was of the cherubim, in the holy place, to show they are only to be considered as the servants and ministers of the one true God, and how improper to be made ensigns or standards, lest the people should esteem them as gods going before them, as they did account of the golden calf.

CHAPTER V.

1 And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals.

(1.) I farther beheld in my vision, and perceived, that the person who sat with such glorious majesty on the throne, in the midst of the cherubim and elders, the representatives of saints and angels, held in his right hand a roll of writing, but so rolled up, that what was written therein could not be read; nor could the volume itself be unrolled, to read it, it being sealed without, or on the backside, with seven seals, figuratively expressing, that the counsels of God, to be executed in their appointed time, though registered, as it were, and recorded, were yet, for the present, hid from the knowledge of all; as none can tell what is contained in a writing closely sealed up. [1]

2 And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

(2.) And I beheld in my vision, an angel of chief power, as attendant of the heavenly court; making proclamation with a strong audible voice, Is any being able and fit to reveal, and make known, the counsels of God, registered in this book, and to bring them into execution?

3 And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

(3.) And no being throughout the whole creation, neither of angels, nor saints in heaven, nor of men alive, nor of any departed souls, was able or sufficient to reveal these counsels of God, and to accomplish them; there was not one able to attain a clear understanding and knowledge of them for

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. V.

[1] Ver. 1.] This roll was not written on the backside, as well as within, as our translation seems to represent it, and as some interpreters have understood it: but, as Grotius has observed,* there ought to be a stop after the word "within" (ἔσωθεν), and it should be read, "Written within, and sealed on the backside," or, "on the backside sealed." Ita hoc distinguendum, ut diximus; non enim dicit librum "intùs et extrà scriptum," sed "intùs scriptum, extrà signatum." And this much better agrees with the design of sealing the book so carefully, according to the interpretation of a sealed book, by the prophet Isaiah, "And the vision of all is become to you, as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned; saying, Read this, I pray thee: and he saith, I cannot, for it is sealed" (Isa. xxix. 11). And though there is a passage in the prophet Ezekiel, that speaks of a roll, or book written within and without (Ezek.

themselves: so that the contents of this sealed book were known to no person whatsoever.[2]

4 And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

5 And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda,* the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

(4.) This gave me a great concern, insomuch that it melted me into tears, being greatly affected with the thought, that no being whatsoever was to be found able to understand, reveal, and accomplish the counsels of God, fearing they would still remain concealed from the church. (5.) But I was soon relieved of my fears, and comforted by the voice of one of the elders, who bade me refrain from weeping: for though none was yet found able to reveal and execute these purposes of God, in the course of future providence, yet there is one person described in ancient prophecy, as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and the Root of David, God's anointed King and Saviour, the true Messiah, who has obtained power, and is sufficiently able, to reveal those counsels of God to the church, and assure their accomplishment, by bringing them into execution.[3]

6 And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

(6.) Upon this, I observed in my vision a new representation, as of a Lamb that had been slain a sacrifice, standing just before the throne; and nearer, as within the circles of the cherubim and elders, than either of them; this Lamb was not only represented as a sacrifice, but with seven horns and eyes, to express, figuratively, all-perfect power, wisdom, and goodness, whereby he was able to reveal the will of God, and direct all things, with respect to the world and church, according to it; and to accomplish all God's designs of providence and grace.[4]

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne.

(7.) Being greatly comforted with this part of my prophetic vision, my hopes were farther raised, when I saw this person, so fully qualified to reveal and execute the purposes of God, actually undertake the performance of it: for I farther saw in my vision, this Lamb of God draw near, and receive the sealed book out of the right hand of the person sitting on the throne.

8 And when he had[5] taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints.

9 And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

10 And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

12 Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

(8.) No sooner had Christ received the book, and taken upon himself to reveal and execute the will of God contained in it, for the gracious protection of the church, and restraint of its enemies, but the whole consistory above, and heavenly church, joined in a solemn act of praise and adoration to the Lamb. I beheld the cherubim, in conjunction with the elders, prostrate themselves before him; each of them had harps, and golden censers with incense, fit representations of the prayers of the church, expressive of the most solemn worship; as thus the priests and Levites in the temple were used to worship the God of Israel.[6] (9.) They joined in praising the Lamb with a hymn, of a new composition, expressive of his peculiar honour, and their peculiar engagements; saying, Worthy art thou, O Lamb of God, to undertake the revelation and the accomplishment of the designs of God's providence towards the world, and of his grace towards the church: for thou wast slain a sacrifice of propitiation, to take away the sins of the world, and by thy blood hast redeemed many unto God, not only of the Jews, but of all nations of the earth; (10.) and hast made thy church a kingdom of priests unto God, consecrated to his service, and honoured with a near approach to his presence, to offer up

ii. 9, 10), it is to be observed, that roll was delivered open to the prophet, and spread before him, and not sealed at all; but the case is very different in a book or roll so firmly sealed as this: so that it was not to be read by any, as appears by what follows.

[2] Ver. 3.] "No person whatsoever," is the true meaning of the original, οὐδείς· "man" is not in the original.

[3] Ver. 5.] We may here observe, how expressly John confirms the application of these prophecies of Moses and Isaiah to Jesus, as the Christ and true Messiah.

[4] Ver. 6.] Horns are symbols of power and strength. Thus the psalmist calls Jehovah his "strength, and the horn of his salvation" (xviii. 2). They also signify a king, or monarch, a kingdom, or monarchy. Thus, in Zechariah, "The horns which scattered Judah" (i. 19. 21), are the kings or kingdoms of the heathen, who led the Jews into captivity at several times, and prevailed against the kingdoms of Judah and Israel. Eyes are a proper representation of observation, knowledge, understanding, and wisdom, and express fitly a wise direction and administration of government. Thus, Moses speaks of the knowledge and wise direction of Hobab, "Leave us not, I pray thee; forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes" (Numb. x. 31). "The seven Spirits of God," we have already observed (on i. 4), signify the most perfect Spirit, the author and giver of all spiritual blessings: so that this description of Christ represents him invested, as Mediator, with all authority, power, wisdom, and grace, able to reveal and execute the whole will of God, concerning the church and the world.

[5] Ver. 8.] Some interpreters understand the delivering of this book into the hands of Christ as an act of inauguration, or investiture into his regal power and authority; and that many of the expressions here used, are taken from the ceremonies of solemn investitures, in which, Mr. Daubuz observes, there are instances of several sorts of investiture by a book: but however ingenious this conjecture may be, it is supported, I think, only on a supposition, that the date of this vision begins at the ascension: and so with a solemn inauguration of Christ into his kingdom. But as this supposition does not so well agree with the time of the vision, when St. John was banished to Patmos, I only just mention it, and leave it to the reader's judgment.

[6] Harps were a principal part of the temple-music; vials were also of common use in the temple-service: they were not like small bottles, which we now call vials; but were like cups on a plate, in allusion to the censers of gold, in which the priests offered incense in the temple.* These censers were a sort of cups, which, because of the heat of the fire burning the incense, were often put upon a plate or saucer. The common custom of drinking tea, and other hot liquors, out of a tea-cup and saucer, will show the form of these censers. To offer incense to God, or before his presence, in the temple, was an act of honour and religious worship, peculiar to the priest's office; and the prayers of the church are often compared to it. Thus the psalmist, "Let my prayer be set before thee as incense" (cxli. 2). So that these expressions well represent the whole heavenly prayers, acceptable and well-pleasing in his sight; and therefore we may assure ourselves, from such grace and power, that thy kingdom and church shall be protected from the world, and finally prevail over it.[7] (11.) When the cherubim and elders had thus expressed their adoration of the Lamb, in singing this new hymn to his praise, the whole assembly and congregation of heaven joined together with them; a number of angels, not to be expressed, united their voices with the cherubim and elders; (12.) saying, Worthy is the Lamb of God, who was slain, to redeem us unto God by his blood; to receive from his church an acknowledgment of his great power, and riches of grace, of his wisdom and strength; to whom we ought to ascribe all honour and glory, with all the devotion of a grateful and thankful mind.

13 And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

(13.) I farther heard this act of praise, on so solemn an occasion, carried throughout every part of the creation, like the whole congregation of Israel, joining with the priests and Levites, in their worship: for every creature, with one voice, said, Let us ascribe all blessing, honour, glory, and power, to him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb of God, our Saviour, for ever and ever.

14 And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

(14.) This solemn act of worship, I perceived, was concluded by the cherubim, saying, Amen; and the twenty-four elders falling down, and prostrating themselves before the true God, who liveth and reigneth from everlasting to everlasting.[8] church of angels and saints, offering a very high act of religious worship and adoration unto Christ.

[7] Ver. 10.] Christ and his church reign on earth, when the truth and purity of the Christian religion prevail against the opposition and corruptions of the world: it is thus only the kingdom of Christ, which is not of this world, is set up in it, and the spiritual powers of his throne established; which lays no claims to any coercive powers of outward force, inconsistent with a dominion, which alone consists in willing submission and voluntary obedience.

[8] Ver. 14.] It was the custom, in the temple-worship, for the singers to make pauses. In every psalm, say the Talmudists, the music made three intermissions; at these intermissions the trumpets sounded and the people worshipped (vid. Lightfoot, Temple-Service, cap. 7).

CHAPTER VI.

SECTION V.

FIRST PERIOD—OF THE SEALS.

1 And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts saying, Come and see.

(1.) After I had beheld the sealed book delivered into the hands of the Lamb of God, that he might reveal the orders of God's providence contained in it, for the consolation and encouragement of the church, I farther beheld in my vision that he proceeded to open the seals of the book in order; and when he had opened one of the seals, I heard one of the four cherubim, who were near the throne, call upon me with an audible voice, and strong as if it had been the sound of thunder, and he said unto me, Come up nearer unto the book, that you may see what appears in it, now it is opened.

2 And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

(2.) I immediately obeyed the voice, and looking into that part of the book or roll that was unfolded, upon opening the seal, I saw a sort of hieroglyphic figure, with a motto. The picture was after this manner: there was drawn the figure of a person, sitting on a white horse, who had a bow in his hand, and a crown given unto him; so that he appeared as a prince riding in solemn procession, with his ensigns of state, as princes and generals were used to march, when setting out on some great expedition. He had a bow, an ensign of war; a crown, an ensign of command and victory; and he rode on a white horse, a symbol of joy and triumph. And, agreeable to this meaning, there was this motto, "Go forth conquering, and to conquer;" a promise of success, victory, and triumph (see the history of the first seal at the end of this chapter).

3 And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see.

(3.) I farther saw, in my prophetic vision, when the Lamb opened the second seal, and so unfolded another part of the roll, or book, that what was contained in that part of the roll lay open to sight. Then the second of the cherubim called upon me, as the first had done before, saying, Come near the book, and look upon this description, which is designed to represent the state of the church and world, in the following period of providence.

4 And there went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.

(4.) And when I came near, and saw what was contained in that part of the roll, I perceived a description, as in a picture, or on a medal, of another horse, as in the foregoing representation, but of a different colour: for this horse was not white, but red, or of a bloody colour,[1] a figure of great

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VI.

CONTENTS.—John had seen, in the former part of his vision, a representation of the majesty, glory, power, and supreme authority of God; and the sealed book, in which was contained the orders of divine Providence towards the church and the world, delivered to Christ, the Lamb of God, to open and reveal it, for the encouragement of the church to patience and faithfulness; together with the adoration of the church on this solemn occasion. Now this revelation of Christ begins with a prophetic representation of the future state of the church and world, so far as the wisdom and goodness of God thought fit to make it known, for the consolation of his faithful people.

This chapter contains the first period of prophecy, and a description of the state of the church, under the heathen Roman empire, from the time of the date of the prophecy to about the year of Christ 323, as I have endeavoured to show in the preface. Each of the prophetical descriptions is, in part, some figurative or hieroglyphical picture and motto; or some representation, in the style and figurative expressions of ancient prophecy, describing some particular dispensation of providence, proper and peculiar to the several successive states of the church and empire, during the space of time contained in this period: in which, therefore, we may hope to find both a wise and kind intention, in making known these dispensations of providence to the church, and a useful and profitable meaning of this first period of prophetical revelation.

[1] Ver. 4.] When the Moabites saw the waters red by the shining of the sun upon them, they said, "This is blood:"

slaughter, by means of the person sitting on him; which the motto, or legend, explained accordingly; "To take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another." This meaning of the representation was farther confirmed, by another figure of a great sword, put into the hands of the rider, signifying such a state of providence, as that the enemies of the Christian faith should fall upon and destroy each other, and execute upon themselves, with their own hands, the judgments of God, which were due to their opposition to the truth, and their persecution of righteousness (see the history of the second seal at the end of this chapter.)

5 And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

(5.) I farther observed in my vision, that the Lamb opened the third seal; and I heard the third of the cherubim calling upon me, to come and see what was contained in that part of the roll now opened to sight. And looking upon it, I perceived another figurative representation; for I beheld the picture of a person riding upon a horse, of a different colour from both the former. The horse on which this rider sat was of a black colour, expressive of a time of mourning and affliction;[2] and the person that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand, but not as a common representation of exact justice and righteous judgment, but to weigh corn and the necessaries of life, to signify great want and scarcity, and to threaten the world with famine, the next judgment of God to the sword.[3]

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

(6.) This meaning of the representation was confirmed, by a voice from the cherubim, saying, In the times of this prophecy, the price of a measure of wheat shall be a penny, and three measures of barley shall cost the same price; the whole wages of a man's labour for a day shall only purchase so much corn as is a usual daily allowance: so that all he can get must be laid out on the very necessaries of life, without any provision of other conveniences for himself or family, and a scarcity of oil and wine will make exactness in their measures very necessary also[4] (see the history of the third seal at the end of this chapter).

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see.

8 And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the field.

(7.) I farther beheld in my vision, as the Lamb went on to open the seals, that he unfolded that part of the roll which was fastened by the fourth seal, and the last of the four cherubim, which were about the throne, called upon me, to observe what appeared upon the opening of it. (8.) I then beheld another figurative representation. I saw, as in a picture, a horse of a different colour from the three former: this was a pale horse, an emblem of mortality and death.[5] And the person who sat upon this horse had the name of Death given unto him; and to show that this was intended, not of any figurative death, but of a proper death of the body, a figure representing the grave, or hell, was made his attendant;[6] and the meaning of this figurative description (see the history of the fourth seal at the end of this chapter) was explained by a motto, or inscription, "Let them kill the fourth part of the earth," intimating, they should destroy a very considerable part of the heathen Roman empire, by the several judgments of God, the sword, famine, pestilence, and wild beasts.[7]

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held:

(9.) Upon opening the fifth seal, I beheld something new in my vision; I saw a great number of persons, who had been slain in the several persecutions of the church, who had persevered in the worship of the true God, according to the gospel of Christ,[8] lying at the foot of the golden altar of incense;[9] intimating, that their constancy unto the death so naturally is the red colour a representation of blood (2 Kings iii. 22, 23).

[2] Ver. 5.] Black, in ancient prophecy, is an emblem of affliction; and, in particular, an affliction occasioned by famine: thus, in the expressions of Jeremiah, Lam. v. 10, "Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine."

[3] Thus famine is expressed by the prophet Ezekiel, iv. 16, 17, "Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem: and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment: that they may want bread and water, and be astonished one with another, and consume away for their iniquity."

[4] Ver. 6.] The measure of wheat is a chœnix, and the price a Roman denarius, or penny; of which Grotius* observes, the Roman penny was the daily wages of a workman, and a chœnix the allowance of corn for his daily provision: so that a penny for a measure of wheat, will in general appear a very excessive price; since corn, for one day's provision, would cost a whole day's wages. In another way of computation, if we reckon the measure of the chœnix to be about a quart English, and the Roman penny, or denarius, to be about eight-pence English,† the nearest a common computation of both, and there is no need here of more exactness, corn at that price will be above twenty shillings an English bushel; which, when the common wages of man's labour was but eight-pence a day, showed a very great scarcity of corn, next to a famine.

[5] Ver. 8.] Pale is a usual epithet of death; Pallidam mortem, dicunt poetæ, says Grotius.

[6] It is not unlikely, that the figures representing death, and the grave, might have their names expressed by some motto, or inscription; it was a thing so well known in the medals of those times, to write the names Pietas, Felicitas, Virtus, &c. under the figures designed to represent them.

[7] These are called the four sore judgments of God, in the ancient style of prophecy. Thus the prophet Ezekiel (xiv. 21), "For thus saith the Lord God; How much more when I send my four sore judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beast, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast?" Or, as the same prophet expresses those judgments of God, which none should escape (xxxiii. 27), "Say thou thus unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the beasts to be devoured, and they that be in the forts and in the caves shall die of the pestilence." The meaning of which prophetic threatening is plain, that the judgments of God were to be so great, and so universal, that men should be able to find no place of security against them, but some one judgment or other should meet them every where.

[8] Ver. 9.] The word of God, and the testimony which they held, is a description of faithful Christians, who persevered in the Christian faith and worship, notwithstanding all the difficulties of persecution. They are called, "the remnant which keep the commandment of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ," Rev. xii. 17. They are also described, as "the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands," Rev. xx. 4.

[9] Many suppose the expression, "under the altar," does allude to the ceremony of pouring out the blood, at the bottom or foot of the altar; but Dr. Hammond on the place has very justly observed, I think, that "this altar in St.

was an offering well received, and acceptable in the sight of God.

10 And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

(10.) And I heard these martyrs of Jesus expressing their faith in the promises of Christ, for whose religion they had suffered, by saying with united voices, O Lord God, thou art righteous in all thy ways, and faithful to all thy promises: now thy church has suffered a long time, and thy kingdom has been greatly oppressed by the kingdom of Satan; when will it please thee to make way for the glorious state of thy kingdom, and peaceful state of thy church, by breaking the power of Satan, and of the idolatrous persecutors of it?

11 And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellowservants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

(11.) I farther beheld, that hereupon, unto each of these persons was given a white shining garment, a robe expressive of the favour and acceptance of God, and a mark of approbation, honour, and dignity. [10] But, with respect to the judgments of God, which were to make way for the deliverance and peaceful state of the church, they were directed to wait a little longer; for though many had been slain already for the testimony of Jesus, yet there were other of their brethren, who should bear a like honourable testimony to the Christian faith and religion: however, this remaining time of trial should be short, for a little season only, when the testimony of the faithful martyrs of Christ should be completed; and then God, according to their prayers, would make way for a peaceful and prosperous state of the church (see the history of the fifth seal at the end of this chapter).

12 And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

(12.) I farther beheld in my vision, when the Lamb proceeded to open the sixth seal, there was represented to me a view of great disorder and confusion, of such changes and alterations, as if the world was about to be dissolved, and the order of nature to be set aside; for it seemed as if the earth was shaken with violent convulsions, as by a universal earthquake; that the sun shined not with its usual lustre, but looked black and dark, as in a total eclipse; that the moon, instead of appearing with its usual brightness in the heavens, looked of a dusky red colour, as blood.

13 And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

(13.) Even the stars also seemed to disappear out of their places in the heavens, and like meteors to fall down upon the earth, or as blasted fruit is blown down from the trees upon the ground by a violent storm.

14 And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

(14.) Yet farther it was represented to me in my vision, as if the order of heaven and earth was to be totally changed, so as not to be restored again. The alterations were so great, as if the heavens were no longer spread over the earth, but rolled up together as a roll of parchment, and the mountains and islands, the most secure from the danger of earthquakes, as having the firmest foundations, were not only shaken, but quite thrown down and destroyed, so as never to be restored again; to signify, [11] according to the expressions of ancient prophecy, such a downfall of the empire and power of Rome heathen, as should never be recovered; but the power of these idolatrous enemies of the Christian faith should cease and

John's vision, was not the altar of sacrifice in the court of the temple, but the altar of incense which was in the holy place; the whole scene of this vision being the sanctuary within the veil, where the altar of incense stood, the altar of burnt-offering standing without in the court." The blood of the martyrs is not compared with the blood of propitiatory sacrifices, but with the offering of incense on the golden altar; which offering was accompanied with the prayers of the congregation, to recommend them to God, according to the observation of a very learned author;* Cùm enim suffimenta sacra ita populi preces adumbrarent, ut sacerdos altera Deo adolens, alteras etiam ritû symbolico illi commendare, &c. A fit emblem of God's gracious acceptance of the constancy and perseverance of the faithful.

[10] Ver. 11.] When persons were approved, upon trial of their fitness for the priest's office, they were clothed with white garments, the proper habit of the priests: and rich garments, which it was usual for princes to send as presents, according to the customs of the eastern nations, were public marks of the prince's favour, and that he designed to confer honour on the persons to whom he presented them. This representation seems much to favour the immediate happiness of departed saints, and hardly to consist with that uncomfortable opinion, the insensible state of departed souls till after the resurrection.

[11] Ver. 14.] Great public calamities are described in the prophets, says a very celebrated author,† as if the order of nature was overturned, the earth quakes, the sun and moon are darkened, and the stars fall from heaven. This observation will give a plain and just sense to this part of prophetic description. There is no need with some to understand these expressions of real earthquakes and eclipses, the prophetic style plainly shows they are figurative expressions, describing great calamities and changes, which the judgments of God would bring upon the earth. The prophet Joel, describing, in the beautiful images of prophetic style, a famine to be occasioned by a great number of locusts, which were to devour the whole fruits of the earth, thus expresses it (ii. 10), "The earth shall quake before them, the heavens shall tremble, the sun and moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining." The prophet Isaiah, prophesying of a great destruction of God's enemies, for their opposition to his church, which he calls "the day of the Lord's vengeance," and "the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion," xxxiv. 8, thus describes it, ver. 4, "And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree." The general meaning of which expressions is explained in the following verse, ver. 5, "For my sword shall be bathed in heaven; behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment." In like manner the same prophet thus expresses the judgments of God in the punishment of sinners, xiii. 10, "For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine." The meaning of which is thus explained in the next words, ver. 11, "I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible." The prophet Ezekiel uses the same images, to express the downfall of oppressive empires and power. Thus in the prophecy of the destruction of the empire of Egypt by the empire of Babylon, Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8, "And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord God." As the prophecy contained in this revelation relates to the heathen Roman empire, and their punishment as persecutors of the true religion and Christian faith, there is a plain general meaning of these expressions, applicable to those calamities and judgments, by which that persecuting power was to be destroyed.

It is farther observed by many interpreters, that chief and principal persons, such as princes and rulers, are figuratively be no more, as the power of the Assyrians and Babylonians, the ancient enemies of God's people, was destroyed, and never recovered.

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains;

16 And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:

(15.) And so great was the punishment of these enemies of the Christian faith, that it reached persons of all ranks, states, and conditions, and filled their hearts every where with great apprehensions and fears; so that even those who had the highest authority, and governed the world as kings, such as were invested with great power, such as had grown very rich, persons in command and authority, or famous for strength or valour, persons of every condition, whether bond or free, endeavoured to find out some hidden place of safety and retreat, if possible, to conceal themselves, that these judgments might not reach them. [12] (16.) Nay, they were so concerned and dispirited, that they were rather desirous to be buried under the rocks and mountains, than so exposed to such terrible judgments, from the anger and power of the great Lord of the world, whose religion they had long opposed and persecuted. [13]

17 For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

expressed by sun, moon, and stars. It is an ingenious observation of Mr. Daubuz,* "That by the sun may be more particularly meant the heathen emperors; by the moon, the powers next to the supreme; by the stars, the less principal ruling powers of the idolatrous Roman empire; and farther, that by heavens may be meant the whole superior state of the Roman pagan world, civil and religious; and, finally, that by mountains and islands may be meant the strength and riches throughout Rome and its provinces, especially the idolatrous temples, with their treasures and revenues." These are ingenious conjectures, but I think not so plain and sure, as the general meaning fixed by the unquestionable use of these images in the former prophets.

[12] Ver. 15.] Thus the prophet Isaiah describes the fears of idolaters, and their apprehensions of the judgments of God, ii. 19, "And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth."

[13] Ver. 16.] These expressions seem to be taken from the prophet Hosea, who thus describes the consternation of those who had fallen off to idolatry in Israel, when their idolatrous places of worship should be destroyed, and they should be punished for their apostasy, x. 8, "The high places of Aven, the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed: the thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars; and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us:" that is, according to a very learned interpreter,* such calamities shall befall them, as shall make their lives tedious to them, and worse than any kind of death; so that they shall wish to die, rather than live as they do.

HISTORY OF THE SEALS.

First seal.—The person who seems here represented, is Jesus Christ, who had received a kingdom from the Father, which was to rule all nations; concerning whose kingdom it was foretold, that, all opposition notwithstanding, it should be preserved, and prevail; so that finally, all enemies to it should be subdued, and "the kingdoms of this world should become the kingdom of God, and of his Christ." These figurative representations of authority, government, success, and triumph, may be properly applied to the Christian religion, or kingdom of God and his Christ, now beginning to spread far and wide; and to comfort the faithful in Christ Jesus; that however the Jews on the one hand, or the heathen Roman empire on the other hand, greatly opposed and persecuted them, yet they should see the punishment of their enemies, both Jewish and heathen, and the cause of Christianity prevail over both, in a proper and appointed time. These expressions, and the interpretation of them, may receive some light from the style of the psalmist, Ps. xlv. 3, &c., "Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the king's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee. Thy throne, O God, is for ever: the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre." We have farther reason for the application of this prophecy to Christ, and the success of his kingdom, from an after-passage in this Revelation, xix. 11, &c., "And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse, and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns, and he had a name written which no man knew but himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood, and his name is called, THE WORD OF GOD." And again, xvii. 14, "These" (the kings that gave their power and strength to the beast) "shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings, and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful." Thus, with great propriety to the order and design of this Revelation, the dignity and power of Christ, the protection and success of his gospel, is the first part of prophecy, for the consolation of the faithful, as it is the chief end and design of this book.

Second seal.—According to the order we have observed in these prophecies, the several parts of each period being successive to each other, as well as the periods themselves, the events in history to answer this prediction are to begin in the first period of the heathen Roman empire, and nearest to the time of the vision; and then this prophecy will fitly refer to the mutual slaughters of the Jews and heathen, the common enemies of the Christian faith, and persecutors of the Christian religion; thus taking peace from the earth, and killing one another. If this vision, as some learned men have thought, was in the time of Nero's persecution, and so before the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, the dreadful slaughter of the Jewish nation in that war may be described by it; in which, according to some,* one million five hundred thousand, according to others, two millions of Jews were slain, besides the Romans slain by the Jews. But if this vision was in the time of Domitian's persecution, as is the most common and likely opinion, it will refer to some event in history, after the destruction of Jerusalem; for that slaughter being passed, can hardly be supposed the meaning of a prophecy, or prediction of a judgment to come. Now the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian will sufficiently verify this representation. In the latter end of the reign of Trajan,† the Jews rebelled in Egypt and Cyprus, and are reported to have put to death, with great marks of cruelty, four hundred and sixty thousand men; yet the Jews were every where subdued, and prodigious numbers slain by the Romans. Eusebius* remarks on this part of history, that "the doctrine and church of our Saviour daily increased; but the calamities of the Jews were aggravated with new miseries."

Not long after, in the reign of Hadrian, the Jews were led into a new sedition, headed by one who pretended to be the Messiah, who was called Bar Chocab, or "Son of the Star;" because he gave out, he was the Star foretold by Balaam. The whole Jewish nation arose against the Roman government, and for some time did great mischiefs to the Romans; but at last they were entirely cut off by the Romans, though with great loss to themselves. In these wars, besides what was lost on the Roman side, the Jews had a thousand cities and fortresses destroyed, with a slaughter of above five hundred and eighty thousand men.† Thus the persecutors of the Christian faith and church perish by each other's hands. The Romans, by their idolatrous worship of Jupiter Capitolinus, provoke the Jews to rebellion, and the Jews are destroyed following a false Messiah, as their leader, when at the same time they rejected the true Messiah, and persecuted his followers; and they fall by the hands of a heathen nation, which had joined with them in opposition to the Christian faith and profession: so that even the temporal evils the church was permitted to suffer by the persecution of its enemies, were not so great and dreadful as the calamities and judgments the providence of God permitted the persecutors themselves to bring upon each other, by their own hands: so that the faithful had no reason to complain, as if their afflictions were peculiar to themselves, or greater than what their enemies were corrected with. This period of history was about forty years after the vision.

Third seal.—According to the order of prophecy we have observed in this book, the events in history, to answer this prediction, are to be found in the next part of this period of the heathen Roman empire, or after the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian; now Antoninus Pius succeeded Hadrian, A. D. 138. Antoninus the philosopher, partly with Verus, and partly alone, and after them Commodus, governed the Roman empire, till within a few months of the reign of Severus, who began his empire, A. D. 193, a space of above fifty years.

Let us then see what the history of those times affords us, agreeable to this prophetical descriptiou. I think the description itself plainly expresses a great scarcity of provision; and though it does not foretell such a scarcity of provision as should amount to a famine, when no bread at all was to be had, which scarce ever happened in so many countries at once, as were subject to the Roman empire; yet it foretells that bread, the staff of life, should be so scarce as to be sold at an excessive price, so as to be a very heavy judgment on the greater part of mankind, who have their bread to get by their daily labour.

The fourth general persecution was within this period, near sixty years after the third general persecution by Trajan, A. D. 107. For Antoninus the philosopher, notwithstanding his other good qualities, had a strong superstition and zeal for the heathen religion, and began a new persecution against the Christians, about the year 165.

The state of the empire, under the reigns of this Antonine family, does properly and exactly answer this prophetic description.

But it will be proper to observe previously, that Mr. Mede, and after him, Mr. Waple, and others, seem to have been led into a great mistake, in their interpretation of this prediction, by a conjecture without reasonable foundation.

The third beast, or living creature, according to Mr. Mede's‡ supposition of the standards of the camp of Israel, stood to the south; and therefore showeth, as he observes, "this seal beginneth at the coming of an emperor, from that quarter, viz. Septimius Severus, an African, an emperor out of the south."

But as there seems to be little foundation for supporting a prediction, from the bare situation of the beast, east, west, noth, and south, if they had really been taken from the standards of the camp of Israel, there is yet less foundation for that supposition, as it is very uncertain, and indeed very improbable, the camp of Israel had any such standards from whence they are supposed to be taken, as we have observed more at large, on iv. 8. There was no need therefore for Mr. Mede to reject the common interpretation, so natural and proper, because the event was not answerable in the reign of Severus, since it was on no good foundation he fixed it to the reign of Severus: for if the beasts were not taken from the standards of the camp, or if they did not answer the situation of the standards, east, west, north, and south; or, finally, if standing to the south did not, in the intention of the prophecy, confine the time to the reign of an emperor born in Africa, there is no sufficient reason to confine this prophecy to the reign of Severus.

It is, on the contrary, for considerable reasons, directed to that part of the period of the heathen Roman empire, next after the preceding prophecy, which referred to the reigns of Trajan and Hadrian; and therefore may well be looked for in the reigns of the Antonine family: let us, then, see whether, in those times, history does not take notice of famine, and scarcity of provisions, as worthy the honour of a character in Mr. Mede's expression.

The testimony of Tertullian,* who lived in those times, is very plain, and allowed by Mr. Mede; he mentions unseasonable weather, and bad harvests, the judgments of God, for persecuting the Christians. Dolcamus necesse est, quòd nulla civitas impunè latura sit sanguinis nostri effusionem.—Areæ ipsorum non fuerunt, messes enim suas non egerunt; cæterùm et imbre anni præteriti quod commeruit genus humanum, apparuit cataclysmum scilicet.

But, says Mr. Mede, if the harvest failed in Africa some time, when Hilarianus was president, which he saith it did, it follows not therefore that this was general through the Roman empire, or in the age of Severus: whether it was in the age of Severus, is nothing material, but Africa was the granary of Italy, and a failure of harvest there must occasion a scarcity of provision in great part of the Roman empire: besides, it is observable, that Tertullian speaks of such a scarcity, as was felt in every city, and that the rains that occasioned it were so great, as to threaten the world with a second flood.

But let us consider what the historians take notice of, with respect to a scarcity of provisions in Italy, and Rome itself, under the reign of the Antonines.

Aurelius Victor, in the reign of Antoninus Pius, observes, that the scarcity of provisions occasioned such a tumult in Rome, that the common people attempted to stone him, which he chose rather to suppress by fair means, than by severity. †Usque eò autem mitis fuit, ut cùm ob inopiæ frumentariæ suspicionem, lapidibus à plebe Romanâ perstringeretur, maluerit ratione expositâ placare, quam ulcisci seditionem.

Julius Capitolinus‡ farther takes notice, that Antoninus Pius was fain to supply the scarcity of wine, oil, and corn, out of his own treasury; and that famine was one of the evils with which the empire was afflicted in his reign. Vini, olei, et tritici penuriam, per ærarii sui damna emendo et gratis populo dando, sedavit.—Adversa ejus temporibus hæc provenerunt, fames de quâ diximus, &c.

In the reign of his successor, Antoninus the philosopher, we have a like account of scarcity of provision, to a famine; Mr. Echard§ has thus expressed it: "The birth of this prince (Commodus) was signalized by many deplorable disasters, particularly the river Tiber, by an inundation, overwhelmed a considerable part of Rome, bore along with it a multitude of people and cattle, ruined all the country, and caused an extreme famine; this inundation was seconded by earthquakes, burning of cities, and a general infection of the air, which immediately produced an infinite number of insects, who wasted all that the floods had spared." This account is taken, I suppose, from Capitolinus and Victor; for Julius Capitolinus thus mentions these calamities:‖ Dabat se Marcus totum philosophiæ, amorem civium affectans; sed interpellavit istam felicitatem securitatemque imperatoris, prima Tiberis inundatio, quæ gravissima fuit; quæ res et multa urbis ædificia vexavit, et plurimum animalium interemit, et famen gravissimam peperit.

Aurelius Victor thus:* Terræ motus, non sine interitû civitatum, inundationes fluminum, lues crebræ, locustarum species, agris infestæ prorsùs, ut propè nihil, quo summis angoribus atteri mortales solent, dici seu cogitari queat, quod non illo imperante sævierit.

In the next reign, of Commodus, Xiphilin† observes from Dio, there was such scarcity of provisions, that the people of Rome rose, and actually killed Cleander, the emperor's favourite, in the sedition. Nam cùm esset fortè magna inopia rei frumentariæ, eamque Dionysius Papyrius præfectus annonæ fecisset majorem, ut populus Romanus culpam in Cleandrum propter furta quæ faciebat, conficeret, haberetque odio, eumque, id quod accidit, interficeret.

The scarcity of provisions, in every reign of the Antonines, continued to the empire of Severus, who heartily set himself to remedy so great an evil, and make it the great care of his life: which plainly shows, it was a very pressing evil; and that, through frequent wars, bad harvests, and a mismanagement of the public stores, scarcity of provisions was a distinguishing judgment of those times. So Ælius Spartian observes, in the life of Severus,‡ Rei frumentariæ quàm minimam receperat, ita consuluit, ut excedens ipse vitâ, septem annorum canonem populo Romano relinqueret.

And thus also the reign of Severus appears a proper end to the judgment of this prediction.

Fourth seal.—The period of history, which in order of time answers to this period of prophecy, is the state of the Roman empire, after Severus, which begins about the year 211. In this time the persecution of the church was very severe: so that our ecclesiastical historians reckon four of the general persecutions, in the space of less than thirty years, under the reign of Maximin, Decius, Gallus and Volusian, and Valerian.

In this period of time, the several sore judgments of God were united, in the punishment of a persecuting empire, the sword, famine, and pestilence. The sword and famine, which were judgments of the foregoing seals, are continued in this, and the pestilence is added to them. The pestilence seems to be made the more distinguishing judgment of this seal. The name of the person sitting on the pale horse was Death,§ which is the proper expression in the scripture language for the plague, as the prophet Jeremiah used the word מות, "death," for the plague; and the LXX. render דבר, "pestilence," by Θάνατον, "death." Accordingly, we find all these judgments, in a very remarkable manner, in this part of history.

The state of the empire was very much disturbed both by foreign wars and intestine troubles; very few of the emperors but met with a violent death; so that besides thirty persons, who all pretended to the empire at once, there were twenty acknowledged emperors in the space of sixty years, from Caracalla, A. D. 211, to Aurelian, 270. These intestine divisions gave great heart and strength to the enemies of the Roman empire, and great advantages to the Persians, and northern nations, against it; so that Valerian, in whose reign the persecution was very violent, was taken prisoner by Sapores (or Sha Pur), king of Persia, kept captive by him, and treated with great severity to his death. Famine and scarcity of provisions are the usual effects of war, especially of civil wars. The spoil of armies, the fears of the country, and the want of hands for husbandry, hardly fail of producing scarcity, near to famine; especially when unseasonable weather shall also spoil the fruits of the earth. Mr. Mede observes, from Dionysius of Alexandria, and Cyprian, that both war and famine were the judgment of these times.

"After these things," says Dionysius, speaking of the persecution of Decius, "war and famine came upon us."‖ Cyprian,¶ in his Apology for the Christians, to Demetrius, proconsul of Africa, takes notice of the more frequent wars and famines of those times, that they were falsely charged upon the Christians; Sed enim cùm dicat plurimos conqueri, quòd bella crebriùs surgant, quòd lues, quòd fames sæviant, quódque imbres et pluvias serena longa suspendant, nobis imputari, tacere ultrà non oportet. It is remarkable that Cyprian, in the same Apology, expressly declares his judgment, that these great calamities were according to former predictions, and brought upon the world, not because the Christians rejected the idolatrous Roman worship, but because the Romans rejected the worship of the true God. Quòd autem crebriùs bella continuant, quòd sterilitas et fames sollicitudinem cumulant, quòd sævientibus morbis valetudo frangitur, quòd humanum genus luis populatione vastatur, et hoc scias esse prædictum.—Non enim, sicut tua falsa querimonia et imperitia, veritatis ignara, jactat et clamitat, ista accidunt, quòd dii vestri à nobis non colantur, sed quòd à vobis non colatur Deus. And, finally, he makes this the consolation of the Christians in their sufferings, Certi et fidentes, quòd inultum non remaneat quodcunque perpetimur; quantóque major fuerit persecutionis injuria, tantò et justior fiat, et gravior, pro persecutione, vindicta.†

Pestilence seems designed the judgment of this prediction; Mr. Mede observes,‡ from Zonaras and Lipsius, that a pestilence, arising from Ethiopia, went through all the provinces of Rome, and for fifteen years together incredibly wasted them. Neither did I ever read of a greater plague (saith an eminent man in our age), for that space of time or land. This pestilence is mentioned by Zonaras, in the reign of Gallus and Volusian, about the year 251.§ The words of Zonaras are so agreeable to the prophetic description, that it may be useful to insert them:—"He (Gallus) was very severe to the Christians, many being put to death by a persecution, not less grievous than that of Decius; under him the Persians renewed their motions, and settled in Armenia; an almost innumerable company of Scythians fell upon Italy,‖ and ravaged Macedonia, Thessaly, and Greece; a part of them, from the Palus Mæotis, broke through the Bosphorus into the Euxine sea, and laid waste many provinces; and many other nations rose against the Romans. Moreover, a plague then infested the provinces, which, beginning in Ethiopia, spread itself almost through the whole east and west, destroyed the inhabitants of many cities, and continued for fifteen years." Zosimus,¶ a heathen historian, takes notice of the same calamity: "While war raged in every part, a pestilence spread through all towns and villages, and destroyed the remainder of mankind; that so great a destruction of men had not hitherto ever happened in former times." I shall only add the short character of Eutropius, of the times of these emperors, Gallus and Volusian; he observes, their reigns were only memorable for pestilence and grievous distempers: Solâ pestilentiâ, et morbis, atque ægritudinibus, notus eorum principatus fuit.

Fifth seal.—The period of history which in order of time answers to this period of prophecy, is the state of the church and Roman empire, after the reign of Aurelian, about the year of Christ 275, which we have endeavoured to show was the period of the foregoing seal.

This period is marked in the prophetic description, by a time of severe sufferings, in which many gave up their lives, in honourable testimony to the Christian faith and religion; but it is also described but as a short time before their sufferings should end, and the church should enjoy a state of peace and prosperity, in a quiet and free profession of the Christian faith and worship. The seal then naturally leads us to consider the state of the church and empire, in the reigns of Dioclesian and Maximian.

Dioclesian began his reign about the year 284, which he appointed the beginning of a new civil era; but which the Christians, on account of the heavy and grievous persecution in his reign, were used to call "the era of the martyrs:"

this was indeed the last, but the most extensive and furious of all the persecutions. We have a large account of it from Eusebius and Lactantius, who were themselves witnesses of it. It may however be sufficient to represent it in the words of Mr. Echard,* who has well abridged the larger accounts: "As this was the last persecution, so it was the most severe of all others, like the last efforts of an expiring enemy, who uses his utmost power and strength to give a parting blow. It were endless, and almost incredible, to enumerate the variety of sufferers and torments; it is sufficient to observe in this place, that they were scourged to death, had their flesh torn off with pincers, and mangled with broken pots, were cast to lions, tigers, and other wild beasts, were burned, beheaded, crucified, thrown into the sea, torn in pieces by the distorted boughs of trees, roasted by gentle fires, and holes made in their bodies for melted lead to be poured into their bowels. This persecution lasted ten years under Dioclesian, and some of his successors; and the incredible number of Christians that suffered death and punishment, made them conclude, that they had completed their work; and in an ancient inscription they tell the world, that they had effaced the name and superstition of the Christians, and had restored and propagated the worship of the gods. But they were so much deceived, that this hastened the destruction of paganism, and shortly after, Christianity became victorious, and triumphant over all the powers and artifices of mankind." Thus exactly does this period of history answer the description of prophecy, in a state of very great sufferings; but which, for the consolation of the faithful, was very near its end.

Sixth seal.—The period of history, which in order of time answers to this part of prophecy, is after the heavy persecution of Dioclesian. It was to be but a short time after, in the expression of the prophecy, "a little season," when there should be a very great change and alteration in the heathen Roman empire, attended with great calamities brought on the persecutors of truth and righteousness; even such as should break in pieces their oppressive power.

And the next state of the Roman empire will fully answer this description.

Dioclesian and Maximian resigned the empire, and retired to private life, being both forced to it by Galerius, as Lactantius very particularly relates it.† Upon the death of Constantius, and the accession of his son Constantine to his part of the empire, Maxentius got himself declared emperor at Rome; Galerius, to suppress this rebellion, persuades Maximian to resume the empire, which he does; but, in a short time, has the mortification of being deposed; and soon after, for attempting the life of Constantine,‡ is forced to put an end to his own life, by an ignominious death.

Galerius was smitten with a very loathsome and incurable distemper, attended with such insupportable torments that he often endeavoured to kill himself, and caused some of his physicians to be slain, because their medicines proved ineffectual: he at last began to think of the Christians; he put an end to their persecution by a public edict, in which he in particular requires their prayers for his recovery, Unde juxta hanc indulgentiam nostram, debebunt Deum suum orare pro salute nostrâ, et reipublicæ ac suâ.§ Yet soon after this public acknowledgment in favour of Christianity, he died of his loathsome distemper, about the year 311.

Constantine, who became a great favourer of the Christians, marches against Maxentius, who opposes him with a great army of one hundred and seventy thousand foot, and eighteen thousand horse; after a fierce and bloody battle, Maxentius was defeated by Constantine.‖ Upon this victory, Constantine, who had secured by it the whole empire of the west, gives free liberty for the open profession of the Christian religion.

In the east, Maximin revoked the liberties granted the Christians, makes war with Licinius; but being defeated, with great slaughter of his numerous army, puts many heathen priests and soothsayers to death, as cheats. Not long after,* as he was endeavouring to try the event of a second battle, he was struck with a violent distemper, with intolerable pains and torments all over his body; he wasted to nothing, became quite blind, and died raging and in despair; confessing upon his death-bed,† that all this was but a just punishment upon him, for his spiteful and virulent proceedings against Christ and his religion. Lactantius has these remarkable words, Cum jam terrâ marique perterreretur, nec ullum superesset refugium, angore animi ac metû confugit ad mortem, quasi ad remedium malorum, quæ Deus in caput ejus ingessit.‡ And so, taking poison, he died in that miserable manner.

Constantine in the west, and Licinius in the east, remained now sole emperors; Licinius severely persecuted the Christians in his part of the empire; a war breaks out between the two emperors; Licinius, notwithstanding a stout resistance, was overthrown, and forced to fly: but soon a second war began, which was carried on with greater fury than ever; Licinius is again defeated in a general battle,§ in which, it is reported, one hundred thousand men were slain. He is taken prisoner; and though his life was then spared, yet, upon new attempts against the life of Constantine, he is put to death, and with him ended all the heathen power of Rome.

A little after this, Constantine removes the seat of the empire from Rome to Constantinople, forms a new model of the Roman government and empire, puts the administration of the government into the hands of four principal officers, called "prætorian præfects," abolishes all the power of paganism, and establishes the Christian religion throughout the empire.

Thus, by great and frequent calamities, in which so many emperors had their share one after another, this wonderful change was wrought in the heathen Roman empire: their power to oppress and persecute the Christian religion fell, like the Assyrian and Babylonian persecutors, never to rise any more.

This part of history is so easily applicable to the prophetic description, that I shall only represent it in the words of Mr. Daubuz:‖ "From this account it appears, that the pagan Roman emperors were deprived of their government, and came to miserable ends:—that the pagan Roman Cæsars fell in battle, or were put to death:—that the religion of the idolaters received a mortal wound, all the colleges of pontifices, augurs, vestals, in a word, all the pagan priests and religious officers throughout the empire, being brought under the power and dominion of a Christian prince:—that many of the pagan officers, civil and military, were displaced, and Christians put in their room;—that there was a thorough change in the government, and that paganism lessened by degrees, till it entirely disappeared:—that the greatest of the persecutors acknowledged and confessed the justness and cause of God's judgments:—and, lastly, that upon this change, all the idolaters, upon account of their horrid cruelties and barbarities against the Christians, could not but be in daily expectation of the severest punishments."

To this I shall add but one remark, That this part of history is very proper to the general design of the whole Revelation, to support the patience, and encourage the perseverance, of the church, in such an instance of God's power and faithfulness in the protection of the Christian religion, and punishment of its enemies. We see, in this period, during the persecution of Rome heathen, the church in a state of trial and suffering, yet preserved and protected, and finally obtaining a state of peace and safety, when all the power of their persecutors was totally destroyed by God's overruling providence. This history verifies the general truth of all the prophecies, and the particular predictions of each of them severally. A strong encouragement to the patience and constancy of the true church!

CHAPTER VII.

SECTION VI.

INTERVAL BETWEEN THE FIRST AND SECOND PERIODS.

1 And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.

(1.) Now after my former visions, which represented the providence of God towards the church and world, to the downfall of the heathen Roman empire, the state of the church and world next to follow, was also represented to me in another prophetic vision; in which I beheld four angels, representing the government of providence, as directed by God's will and command, and executed by his messengers or ministers. [1] Those angels were represented as placed at the four chief points from whence the winds are used to blow, to restrain them from blowing with violence on any part of the world: to show, God designed in his providence to put a stop to the tumults and commotions that had before so much disturbed the world, and to give the church and world a time of peace and rest [2] for a season.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,

(2.) I farther beheld in my vision, another angel, as ascending from the eastern point of the heavens, who appeared with the seal of God in his hand, as sent on some particular message; this angel, as he came on, made proclamation with a loud voice, that the commotions and disorders of the world should cease for a time;—

3 Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

(3.) That a state of peace and quiet should continue until he had sealed the servants of God, till many should receive the distinguishing mark or seal of the Christian church, the sign and testimonial of their Christian profession, and consecration to the service of God, and of God's peculiar favour to them, as his church and peculiar people. [3]

4 And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

(4.) And the number of those who were thus sealed, and consecrated to God, as his church and peculiar people, was very great; a number that figuratively expressed many persons of all people and nations, professing the Christian faith, and serving God in the worship of the Christian church, now the true Israel of God, it being the square number of twelve, multiplied by a thousand. [4]

5 Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6 Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nepthalim were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VII.

CONTENTS.—The former chapter concluded the first period, and the sufferings of the church under the persecution of the heathen Roman empire. The second period of prophecy begins with the opening of the seventh seal, and is contained in the events which attend the sounding of the trumpets; an account of which we have in the eighth and ninth chapters. In this chapter, I conceive, we have an account of a little pause, or interval, to describe the state of things, for a short time, between the two periods. After these things, that is, after the prophetic vision that represented the first period, John saw, in other visions, what is related in this chapter. This seems a representation of a state of peace and quiet throughout the earth, especially in the Roman empire, and of the great number of persons in every nation, which came into the profession of Christianity; of the encouraging protection that was given to the Christian church, of thankful acknowledgments for the goodness and power of God and Christ, by the whole church, in such eminent instances of favour and protection; and, finally, of the happy state of all the faithful confessors and martyrs, who, after a short time of tribulation, for the faith of Christ, and constancy in his religion, have attained to a state of everlasting rest, in happiness and glory.

Thus wisely does this part of prophecy promote the principal design of the whole, to encourage the faith and patience, the hope and constancy of the church, under all opposition and sufferings. It seems designed to show, with the certainty of prophetic revelation, that as God directs all things in the world by his providence, so he will direct them to serve the designs of his goodness to the church; and that the great revolutions of the world shall often be in favour of true religion, and for its protection; and to assure the faithful, that all they suffer for the sake of truth and righteousness, shall soon be rewarded with a state of peace, honour, and happiness.

[1] Ver. 1.] An angel, in prophetic style, expresses everything that brings a message from God, or executes the will of God, as, a prophetic dream, a pillar of fire, &c. (see note on i. 1).

[2] Winds are emblems of commotions, and very properly, as they are the natural causes of storms. Thus this figurative expression is used, and explained by the prophet Jeremiah, xlix. 36, 37, "And upon Elam will I bring the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will scatter them towards all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcast of Elam shall not come. For I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before them that seek their life: and I will bring evil upon them, even by fierce anger, saith the Lord; and I will send my sword after them, till I have consumed them." To hold the winds, that they should not blow, is a very proper prophetic emblem of a state of peace and tranquillity.

[3] Ver. 3.] Sealing has several intentions in the style of prophecy, which may be seen in Mr. Daubuz's Symbolical Dictionary; as, preservation and security, secrecy, confirmation, and authority. But, I conceive, the principal meaning here is to denote propriety, in allusion to the custom of sealing things, that it might be known to whom they belong. Now, as the sacraments of circumcision under the law, and baptism under the gospel, were used as public marks of consecration to God, as his peculiar people, and of God's favour to his church, as his peculium, this expression, of "sealing the servants of God," may well be understood, I think, of a great addition to the numbers of the Christian church by baptism; or receiving the seal of the Christian religion, the mark of God's peculium.

[4] Ver. 4.] This single passage, says the Bishop of Meaux,

(5—8.) This great number of people, which professed the faith and worship of the Christian church, were in proportion out of every place and nation, as if a proportional number had been sealed out of every one of the tribes, into which the children of Israel had been divided, according to the number of their patriarchs, as if now all the nations of the earth who were to be blessed in the Christian church had succeeded in their room, as the true Israel of God; for it was represented to me in my vision, as if twelve thousand were sealed in the tribe of Judah, as many in the tribe of Reuben, and a like number in every one of the other tribes.

9 After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

(9.) After I had beheld this happy and prosperous state of the church, at the end of so many and grievous afflictions, I saw, in my prophetic vision, the whole church of heaven, joining in a solemn act of praise. The song of praise began with the united voices of an innumerable company of persons of all nations and countries, who were clothed in white garments, marks of piety, honour, and dignity; and they had palm-branches in their hands, emblems of joy and victory;—

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

(10.) And they said with a loud voice, Salvation be ascribed unto our God, the supreme and sovereign Lord of all, who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb of God, who has all power to protect and save his faithful servants.[5]

11 And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God,

(11.) Then the angels of God, who stood round about the throne, and the twenty-four elders, with the four living creatures or cherubim, prostrated themselves before the throne of God, joining in the same act of worship and thanksgiving with the saints.

12 Saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

(12.) For they said, Amen, to their hymn of praise; and added, Let all, with a sincere and devout heart, ascribe unto God, blessing, glory, wisdom, thanksgiving, honour, power, and might, for ever and ever. Amen.

13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?

(13.) To give me a more exact information concerning these persons who were clothed in the white robes of purity, honour, and dignity, one of the elders led me on by a question, to ask of him a fuller account of them.

14 And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

(14.) Whereupon he gave me this account of them: These persons whom you behold appearing in this state of honour and happiness, were very lately in a state of great afflictions and suffering for the sake of their faith and constancy; but having kept the faith, they have received the blessings Christ obtained by his blood, for his church and faithful people; they are now cleansed from all impurity, adorned with all perfection, and advanced to this state of glory and happiness in which you see them.

15 Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.

(15.) They are counted worthy to appear in the immediate presence of God, even here before his throne, and have obtained the honour and happiness of a constant attendance upon God; and, like his angels, cease not day or night to praise him: and the presence of God will be an everlasting spring of happiness and joy to them.

16 They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.

(16.) They shall no more be subject to any of their former troubles or afflictions. None of the natural or common evils of the world below shall reach them any more.

17 For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

(17.) For it shall be the care of the Lamb of God to bless them, who has all power to make them completely happy. He shall bless them with perpetual everlasting joys; and every sorrow, with every cause of sorrow, shall be fully taken away for ever.[6] may show the mistake of those who always expect the numbers in the Revelation to be precise and exact: for is it to be supposed, that there should be in each tribe twelve thousand elect, neither more nor less, to make up the total sum of one hundred forty and four thousand? It is not by such trifles, and low sense, the divine oracles are to be explained: we are to observe, in the numbers of the Revelation, a certain figurative proportion, which the Holy Ghost designs to point out to observation. As there were twelve patriarchs, and twelve apostles, twelve becomes a sacred number in the synagogue, and in the Christian church. This number of twelve first multiplied into itself, and then by a thousand, makes one hundred forty and four thousand. The bishop observes,* in the solid proportion of this square number, the unchangeableness of the truth of God and his promises: perhaps it may mean the beauty and stability of the Christian church, keeping to the apostolical purity of faith and worship.

[5] Ver. 10.] This vision, especially when compared with the former in the fourth and fifth chapters, is to be understood, I conceive, of the church in heaven; as heaven seems to be the proper scene of the vision, so the innumerable company of saints with whom the angels join in the following words, in the presence of God and the Lamb, is meant naturally to be understood, I think, of those who, having been faithful unto death, had received the crown of immortal life, in the state of heavenly happiness. And I question, whether the praises of the church on earth will answer the prophetic description, or the intention of the prophetic Spirit, in the great encouragement it designed to give to faithfulness and constancy. I think, to understand it of the heavenly church, is a natural sense of the expressions, a sense proper to the design of the prophecy, as it represents the faithful martyrs and confessors, once so great sufferers on earth, now blessed saints in heaven.

[6] Ver. 17.] Interpreters are not agreed in the proper meaning of this description. Some understand it of the peaceful and prosperous state of the church on earth. In some cases, very strong expressions of prophetic style, are to be softened to a sense that will agree to a happy state of the church in this world. Others, who observe the force of these expressions, and how much they agree with the description of the new heavens and new earth, ch. xxi., understand it of the happy state of the church for one thousand years, which they also suppose a resurrection-state of the martyrs. I shall only observe, that as the time of the thousand years is, according to the order of this prophecy, very distant, I think, from the time to which this part of it refers, I can by no means suppose the Spirit of prophecy designed this description should be applied to the state of the millennium. And though the description may be softened to such a sense, as may represent the peaceful and prosperous state of the church under Constantine, yet, I think, the sense given in the paraphrase is more agreeable to the expressions of this description, and to the design of the prophecy; which, when united together, are the surest rules of interpretation to follow.

CHAPTER VIII.

SECTION VII.

SECOND PERIOD—OF THE TRUMPETS.

1 And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.

(1.) After the space of time allowed for sealing the servants of God, and a great addition was made to the Christian church, which greatly lessened the power, and weakened the opposition of idolatry to Christianity, I had a farther revelation in my prophetic vision, to show what would be the state of the church and world, after so great a change in favour of the Christian faith and religion. I observed, that now the Lamb opened the seventh and last seal; and hereupon it was represented to me, as if there had been a state of silence in heaven for about half an hour, like the silence in the temple-worship, when the whole congregation was at private prayer and devotion. [1]

2 And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets.

(2.) I farther beheld, in my vision, seven chief angels standing before the throne of God, as attendants to receive his orders, and to execute them, after the manner of the great princes of the east, who were used to be so attended by the princes and chief officers of their court. And I beheld also in my vision, that seven trumpets were given to these seven chief angels, to each of them one.

3 And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne.

(3.) Then I saw another angel, like the priest chosen to offer incense, by lot, standing at the golden altar, having a golden censer, and much incense, [2] to offer with the prayers of the saints, who were at their private devotions in silence: this incense the angel offered at the golden altar, which was before the throne, there being in this representation of the heavenly presence no veil, and so no distinction between the holy and most holy place.

4 And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hands.

(4.) And I perceived the smoke of the incense, which the angel offered with the prayers of the saints, who were at their private devotions, ascended up before God. A testimony of God's gracious acceptance of their worship, and of the continuance of God's protection and blessing to his faithful worshippers.

5 And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth: and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake.

(5.) I farther beheld in my vision, that the angel who had offered the incense took his censer; and going down from the golden altar to the altar of burnt-offering, he filled it with burning coals, and cast them down upon the earth: and immediately thereupon, there arose a terrible storm, with great noise, thundering, lightning, and earthquake, representing new commotions in the world, and some great calamities by the righteous judgment of God. [3]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. VIII.

CONTENTS.—This chapter opens the second period of this prophecy, which begins upon opening of the seventh seal, and is distinguished by the sounding of seven trumpets. This period of the trumpets contains a prophetic description of the state of the world and church, for a considerable space of time after the empire became Christian, during the continuance of the empire in the successors of Constantine. It describes the great devastation of the Roman empire, by the several nations that broke in upon it, and finally put an end to it. It describes a time of great calamity, a state of new trials. It shows the church what it was to expect in new dangers, and opposition, after it should be delivered from the persecution of the heathen Roman government. And when the Christian religion should have the protection of the laws, and the favour of the emperors, the church would still have great need of caution, watchfulness, patience, and constancy; and there would be still this encouragement to faithfulness and perseverance, that though the opposition in this period of time would be very great, yet neither should this prevail against the cause of truth and righteousness; the Christian faith and religion should be preserved, and in the end triumph over this opposition, as it had before over the former opposition, from the heathen emperors of Rome. And thus fully answers the general design and use of the prophecy, to direct and encourage the constancy of the Christian church in faith and patience, whatever opposition it may meet with from the world.

[1] Ver. 1.] Most interpreters agree, this silence in heaven for half an hour, is an allusion to the manner of the temple-worship, that while the priest offered incense in the holy place, the whole people prayed without in silence, or privately to themselves (Luke i. 10). On the day of expiation, the whole service was performed by the high-priest; to which particular service Sir Isaac Newton* has observed an allusion: "The custom was, on other days, to take fire from the great altar in a silver censer; but on this day (of expiation), for the high-priest to take fire from the great altar, in a golden censer; and when he was come down from the great altar, he takes incense from one of the priests, who brought it to him, and went with it to the golden altar; and while he offered the incense, the people prayed without in silence: which is the silence in heaven for half an hour." It is true on the day of expiation, the high-priest did all the service himself; he used a golden censer, and took his hands full of incense: yet it may be a question, whether the mention of a golden censer, and much incense, may not refer to the great glory and perfection of the heavenly worship, as well as the peculiar service of the high-priest. On this supposition, a golden censer and much incense, will not require the hands of a high-priest; for the offering of incense was usually assigned, by lot, to any one of the priests of the course: and this, I think, will be found more agreeable to the following parts of the prophetic description.

[2] Ver. 3.] These censers were the same with the vials full of odours, mentioned v. 8: the offering incense on the golden altar, seems to determine this allusion to the constant offering of incense in the temple, and not to the service peculiar to the high-priest on the day of expiation; and fully shows the propriety of this vision, in not representing the high-priest—which, in this prophetic vision, would have been the Lamb—as personally officiating in this act of worship.

[3] Ver. 5.] These voices, thunderings, lightning, and earthquake, seem to me to mean something very different from "an allusion to the voice of the high-priest reading the law to the people, and other voices, and thunderings from the trumpets and temple music, at the sacrifices and

* On Apoc. p. 264.

6 And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

(6.) This part of the vision having prepared my attention to observe what should be revealed at each angel's sounding of his trumpet, as before upon opening the seals, in order, I perceived the seven angels preparing to sound their trumpets.

7 The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.

(7.) The first angel soon sounded his trumpet: upon which there followed a great storm of hail, and even of fire mingled with blood; which burned up and destroyed a great part of the trees, and green grass of this earth. A proper representation of great commotions and disorders in the world, attended with great bloodshed, and destruction of many of the several ranks and conditions of men[4] (see the history of the first trumpet at the end of this chapter).

8 And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: and the third part of the sea became blood;

(8.) I then perceived the second angel sounded his trumpet; and I beheld, as if a great mountain, all on fire, had been cast into the sea; by which a very considerable part of the waters of the sea was turned into blood.

9 And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.

(9.) And a very great part both of the creatures which live in the sea, and the ships that pass on it for business or defence, was destroyed in great numbers. A proper figurative representation of a farther judgment, which should reach the capital city of the empire, and many of the provinces; destroying their power and riches, dismembering them from the empire, and depriving it of all future support and assistance from them[5] (see the history of the second trumpet at the end of this chapter).

10 And the third angel sounded, and there fell a lightnings from the fire of the altar."* Nor can I conceive that the voices, thunder, lightning, and earthquake, consequent upon the angel's casting fire into the earth, show, "that during the offering of the incense, or at least immediately upon it, the voice of God was heard, his word was preached, and the gospel was spread to the enlightening of man."† These expressions much rather denote some great judgment on the earth, or Roman empire. Thunders and lightnings, when they proceed from the throne of God (Rev. iv. 5), are fit representations of God's glorious and awful majesty; but when fire comes down from heaven upon the earth, it expresses some judgment of God on the world, as in this prophecy, xx. 9, "A fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them:" and in like manner, when great Babylon "came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath;" xvi. 19, "there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings, and a great earthquake." This being mentioned previous to the sounding of the trumpets, I think it may be understood as a general description of the many calamities of this period, notwithstanding the seeming secure prosperity of the Christian church.

[4] Ver. 7.] A thunder-storm and tempest, that throws down all before it, is a fit metaphor to express the calamities of war, from civil disturbances or foreign invasion, which often, like a hurricane, lay all things waste, as far as they reach. In the language of prophecy, this is a usual representation; so the prophet Isaiah expresses the invasion of Israel by Shalmaneser king of Assyria: "Behold the Lord hath a mighty and strong one, which as a tempest of hail and a destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, shall cast down to the earth with the hand" (Isa. xxviii. 2). And the same prophet in general thus expresses the judgments of God; "Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts, with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire" (Isa. xxix. 6): meaning likely the invasion of Sennacherib. The prophet Ezekiel expresses the judgments of God on the prophets who deceived the people, saying Peace, where there is no peace: "Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury, and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury to destroy it" (xiii. 13).

It is likely here is also an allusion to one of the plagues of Egypt, which was a destroying storm or tempest: "For the Lord sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along upon the ground, and the hail smote, throughout all the land of Egypt, all that was in the field, and brake every tree of the field" (Exod. ix. 23).

It is a just observation of Sir Isaac Newton,‡ that "in the prophetic language, tempests, winds, or the motions of clouds, are put for wars; thunder, or the voice of a cloud, for the voice of a multitude; and storms of thunder, lightning, hail, and overflowing rain, for a tempest of war, descending from the heavens, and clouds politic. In like manner* the earth, animals, and vegetables, are put for the people of several nations and conditions. Trees, and green grass, express the beauty and fruitfulness of a land; and when the earth is an emblem of nations and dominions, may signify persons of higher rank and of common condition."

"Trees here," says Mr. Waple,† "according to the prophetic scheme of speech, signify the great ones; and grass, by the like analogy, signifies common people;" or, as Mr. Mede,‡ "From the analogy it is easily gathered, that green grass is taken for the common people, when, as here, it is joined with trees."

Whether it was the intention of the prophetic style to be so particular, I take not upon me to determine; but it seems plain, it is designed to express some great calamities brought on the empire, when it is represented as a storm that destroyed not only the green grass, which is more easily blasted, but which destroyed also a great part of the trees, which are supposed more likely to withstand the violence of a storm; and it seems to point out these calamities as the effect of wars and bloodshed throughout the Roman empire, in the beginning of this period.

[5] Ver. 9.] In the style of prophecy, a mountain signifies a kingdom and the strength of it, its metropolis, or capital city. Thus the prophet Jeremiah foretells the downfall of Babylon, li. 25, "Behold I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth; and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain." The prophet himself explains the literal meaning of these figurative expressions, ver. 27, "Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz." The plain meaning of the figure of a burnt mountain, seems also taught by the prophet ver. 30, &c., "They have burnt her dwelling places; her bars are broken. One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to show the king of Babylon that his city is taken up at one end, and that the passages are stopped, and the reeds they have burnt with fire, and the men of war are affrighted." The general meaning of this prophecy is farther thus explained, ver. 58, "Thus saith the Lord God of hosts; The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates shall be burnt with fire; and the people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary." All efforts to preserve their city and empire, says Mr. Lowth on the place, shall be as insignificant, as if men wrought in the fire, which immediately destroys all the fruits of their labours: or, as the words may be better translated, "And the people shall labour for a thing of nought, and the folks shall weary themselves for that great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters;

(10.) And I farther perceived in my vision, that the third angel sounded his trumpet; upon which I beheld a representation as of a large star, all on fire, which, like a flaming torch, fell down from heaven upon a great part of the rivers, and fountains of waters.

11 And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

(11.) Upon which, as if wormwood had been mixed with the waters, it made them so bitter, they were no longer wholesome to drink; but, like waters infected, they occasioned the death of many people. Denoting a farther judgments on the Roman empire, on the capital and seat of the empire; signifying a thorough desolation and downfall, not only weakening it, by dismembering its provinces, but putting an end to all power and authority of the government itself[6] (see the history of the third trumpet at the end of this chapter).

12 And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

(12.) I moreover beheld in my vision, when the fourth angel sounded his trumpet; and the events which were to follow upon it were represented by a very great and gloomy darkness; as if a thick cloud had so darkened the air, that neither the light of the sun, moon, or stars, could be perceived through it; so far was it from the brightness of a clear day, that there was not so much as the brightness of a clear night, but all around was cloudy and dark. A fit representation, to express the last desolation of the imperial city, which God's righteous judgments had doomed (as Babylon heretofore) to a loss of all power, and of all authority[7] see the history of the fourth trumpet at the end of this chapter.

13 And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabiters of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

(13.) After this, I farther perceived in my vision, that an which shall be fuel for the fire;" i. e. they shall not be able to preserve their city, but it shall be taken, and become a prey to the flames.

Great disorders and commotions, especially when kingdoms are moved by hostile invasions, are expressed in the prophetic style, by carrying or casting mountains into the midst of the sea. "Therefore we will not fear though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea" (Ps. xlvi. 2).

The sea, in the Hebrew language, is any collection of waters, as Mr. Daubuz* observes. Now as waters are expressly made a symbol of people in this prophecy, xvii. 15, "And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are people, and multitudes, and nations and tongues," the sea may well represent the collection of many people and nations into one politic body or empire; and when a sea is considered as an empire, or a collection of people into one body politic, the living creatures in that sea will be the people, or nations, whose union constitutes this empire. And the prophet Ezekiel, by a like figure, describes the destruction of the inhabitants of Egypt, by the death of all the fish of the rivers, xxix. 3, &c., "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold I am against thee, Pharoah king of Egypt.——I will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales.——I will leave thee thrown on the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers." These expressions seem explained by the prophet to this meaning: "Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee.

Ships, from their use in trade, are a proper representation of the riches of a people; and as they are of use in war, especially to the maritime nations, they are proper emblems of strength and power. As ships were of both uses in the Roman empire, they may well be understood both of the riches and power of the Roman empire.

Thus we have a description, in this part of the second period of prophecy, of a judgment to come on the empire, in which the capital should suffer much, many provinces should be dismembered, as well as invaded, and the springs of power and riches in the empire should be very much diminished. Let us consider how the next period of history agrees with the description of prophecy.

[6] Ver. 11.] Stars, in prophetic style, are figurative representations of many things; among others, they signify kings, or kingdoms, eminent persons of great authority and power. Thus, in the prophecy of Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 17, "There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel." Thus the power of the horn of the he goat, prevailing over other powers, is represented in Dan. viii. 10, "And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them." The downfall of the kingdom of Babylon is represented by a like figurative expression, the fall of Lucifer, or the morning-star, Isa. xiv. 12, "How art thou fallen, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!" The most natural interpretation of this symbol seems to be this: That as the rising of a star denotes the rise of some new power or authority, so the fall of a star from heaven signifies the fall of some kingdom or empire.

Rivers and fountains of waters may be considered as the source and spring of waters, which, running in a common channel, make a sea. And then, as a sea, or collection of waters, denotes a collection of many people into one government, the rivers and fountains of waters may represent the seat of the empire or people, which have enlarged their dominion, by reducing other nations into provinces; so that, in this sense, rivers and fountains of waters may denote the original country or seat of the empire, in distinction from the provinces.

Rivers, and fountains of waters to supply them, may also be considered as necessaries to the support of life. Drying up rivers and fountains of waters expresses a scarcity of things necessary: thus when Hosea prophesies that Samaria shall become desolate, he thus expresses it: "Though he be fruitful among his brethren, an east wind shall come, the wind of the Lord shall come up from the wilderness, and his spring shall become dry, and his fountain shall be dried up: he shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels" (xiii. 15). And thus the prophet Isaiah describes the destruction of Egypt, xix. 5, "And the waters shall fail from the sea, and the river shall be wasted and dried up."

And, finally, there seems an allusion in this description to one of the plagues of Egypt. "And Moses and Aaron did so, as the Lord commanded; and he lifted up the rod, and smote the waters that were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of his servants; and all the waters that were in the river were turned into blood. And the fish that was in the river died; and the river stank, and the Egyptians could not drink of the water of the river; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt" (Exod. vii. 20, 21). Here then, we have a prophecy which aptly expresses a judgment to come on the seat of the Roman empire, which should destroy the power of it in its spring and fountain, and cut off all its necessary supports; as when rivers and fountains, so necessary to life, are infected, and become rather deadly than fit for use.

[7] Ver. 12.] Darkening, smiting, or setting of the sun, moon, and stars, says Sir Isaac Newton,* are put for the setting of a kingdom, or the desolation thereof, proportional to the darkness. And when darkness is opposed to light, Mr. Daubuz observes,† as light is a symbol of joy and safety,

* Symbol. Dict.

* Par. i. p. 18. † Symbol. Dict. 76

angel flew, as it were, through the midst of heaven, and proclaimed, for the information of all, with an audible voice, Though the judgments signified by the four trumpets which have already sounded are very great and formidable, yet greater judgments still remain to be inflicted on the earth, in the events that are to follow upon sounding the three trumpets that yet remain.[8]

so darkness is a symbol of misery and adversity. According to the style of the prophet Jeremiah, "Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness" (xiii. 16). The darkness of the sun, moon, and stars, is likewise observed to denote a general deficiency in government, as the prophet describes a day of severe judgment: "For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon shall not cause her light to shine. And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible" (Isa. xiii. 10, 11). And thus the prophet Ezekiel describes the destruction of the kingdom of Egypt, xxxii. 7, 8, "And when I will put thee out," or, as in the margin, "extinguish thee," quite deprive thee of all authority and power, "I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light. All the bright lights of heaven will I make dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith* the Lord God." As this is the meaning of these figurative expressions in general, it is also a good rule of interpretation to apply the particular meaning of such descriptions, according to the subject, to the order and sense of action then referred to, and intended to be represented by such descriptions.* In this view, considering that the subject, order, and scene of action are the downfall of the Roman empire, and of the power and authority of Rome, the imperial city, it will very fitly and properly represent an entire extinguishing of all authority and power in Rome, once the seat of empire; putting out or extinguishing, in the language of Ezekiel, the splendour of authority and power, as well as taking away the full exercise of it. Not only the brightness of the day, and light of the sun, but the fainter light of the night and moon, nay, even the little glimmering light of the stars, shall be put out.

[8] Ver. 13.] Several interpreters suppose this part of the vision a representation of some faithful witnesses against the superstition, idolatry, and growing corruptions of those times. So Mr. Daubuz observes, preaching against errors is prophesying against them; and by that bringing down the judgments of God upon the impenitent, he supposes the dreadfulness of the woes of the three trumpets is proclaimed to the corrupt members of the church; because, as they were endued by the divine revelation with more knowledge than before, being all Christians by name, they therefore deserve to suffer more for their crimes than plain heathens, such as were chiefly concerned in the former judgments. The greater guilt of a corrupt church is indeed a good reason for severe punishment, and will justify the ways of Providence in these heavy judgments on the empire, now Christian, yet going fast into corruption of doctrine and manners, and even to incorporate the heathen superstition and idolatry into the Christian worship; but whether this part of the vision means any more than to raise attention to the following events, which were to be very calamitous and extensive, I shall leave to the judgment of the reader.

* Daubuz, Prelim. Disc. rule 1.

HISTORY OF THE TRUMPETS.

First trumpet.—Let us briefly consider how this prophetic representation was verified in correspondent history.

The former period put an end to the persecution of heathen Rome, by the empire of Constantine the Great, a Christian prince, and protector of the Christian religion, about the year 323. Then was a time of peace and rest to the empire, as well as the church; which answers well to the time appointed for sealing the servants of God in their foreheads: but this is represented as a short time; and the angels soon prepared themselves to sound, when there would be new commotions to disturb the peace of the empire and church.

If we look into the history of the times which immediately followed this great revolution of the Roman empire under Constantine, from heathen to Christian, we shall find it thus: Constantine came to the whole power of the empire about 323, and continued possessed of that power about fifteen years, to the year 337.

During all this time the empire had a state of tranquillity unknown for many years: there were no civil disorders; and though the Goths made some incursions into Mœsia, the most distant parts of the Roman dominions, they were soon driven back into their own country. The profession of Christianity was greatly encouraged, the converts to it from idolatry were innumerable; so that the face of religion was in a very short time quite changed throughout the Roman empire. Thus the providence of God, notwithstanding all opposition, brought the Christian church into a state of great security and prosperity.

But on the death of Constantine the state of things soon altered again. He was succeeded by his three sons in different parts of his empire; by Constantine in Gaul, Constans in Italy, and Constantius in Asia and the east. Constantius, in a short time, sacrificed his father's near relations to his jealousy of power:* differences arose between Constantine and Constans; Constans surprised his brother Constantine, and put him to death. In a little time after, Constans himself is put to death by Magnentius, who assumed the empire. At the same time Constantius, in the east, was hard pressed by the Persians; but apprehending greater danger from Magnentius, marches against him: the war between them was very fierce and bloody; insomuch that Victor* observes, it almost ruined the whole strength of the Roman empire: Hôc tempore Constantius cum Magnentio apud Mursiam dimicavit; in quo bello penè nunquam ampliùs Romanæ consumptæ sunt vires, totiusque imperii fortunæ pessumdatæ.

A little after this bloody intestine war, all the Roman provinces were invaded at once, from the eastern to the western limits,† by the Franks, Almans, Saxons, Quades, Sarmatians, and Persians; so that, according to Eutropius,‡ cùm multa oppida barbari expugnâssent, alia obsiderent, ubique fœda vastitas esset, Romanumque imperium non dubiâ jam calamitate nutaret.

It is a very remarkable part of this history, that this storm of wars fell so heavy on the great men of the empire, and in particular on the family of Constantine, though so likely to continue in so many of his own children and near relations; and yet, in twenty-four years after his death, these commotions put an end to his posterity, in the death of his three sons; and in three years more extinguished his family, by the death of Julian, in a battle against the Persians.

The following reigns of Jovian, Valentinian, Valens, and Gratian, to the time that Gratian nominated Theodosius to the empire, are one continued series of trouble, by the invasion of the several provinces of the empire, and bloody battles in defence of them, for about the space of sixteen years, from the year 363 to 379. Claudian has well expressed the misery of those times to his son Honorius:§

* Zosimus, lib. ii. 217.

* Aurel. Victor, p. m. 465.
† Zosimus, lib. iii. 137.

Nulla relicta foret Romani nominis umbra,

These great calamities, which in so short a time befell the Roman empire, now Christian, and in particular the family of Constantine, by whom the great change in favour of Christianity was brought about, was a new and great trial of the faith, constancy, and patience of the church. As it became the wisdom and justice of divine Providence to punish the wickedness of the world, which caused the disorders of those times, the wisdom and goodness of Christ chose to forewarn the church of it, that it might learn to justify the ways of Providence, and not to faint under the discipline of affliction, when the great misimprovement of the best religion had made it both proper and useful; and when likely such afflictions, so soon after their great deliverance from the opposition of Rome heathen, would be very unexpected, and the more discouraging.

Second trumpet.—The former period of history was from the death of Constantine the Great to the reign of Theodosius; who for some time preserved the empire from invasion, and left it to his sons, Arcadius and Honorius, A. D. 395.

The youth and weakness of these princes, the intrigues and ambition of the chief ministers and governors of the eastern and western parts of the empire, the jealousies and contentions between Stilicho and Ruffinus, so weakened the empire, that it soon became a prey to the northern nations. Sigonius,* who has given us an accurate history of these later times of the Roman empire, observes, that the empire itself began to shake on the death of Theodosius: Theodosio exempto, simul etiam robur ac dignitas ipsius titubare imperii cœpit. The chief men of the empire, to serve their private ambitions, excited Alaric, at the head of the Goths, to invade Greece; Alaric enters Greece, the straits of Thermopylæ being purposely left open to him; he lays waste the whole country, destroys the cities, puts to death all the males grown up to age, and gives all the women and children, with the whole riches of the country, in plunder to his army, according to Zosimus.†

The year 400, or five years after the death of Theodosius, is marked out as one of the most memorable and calamitous that had ever befallen the empire. Annus hic, says Sigonius,‡ à Christo nato quadringentesimus, omnium, quos occidens vidit, maximè memorandus extitit————Neque enim ullum sive bellicæ calamitatis, sive barbaricæ feritatis, sive vesanæ cujusdam libidinis, excogitari exemplum potuit, quod non in ipsas provincias, civitates, agros, hominesque passim cum maximâ atrocitate sit editum. Five years after, A. D. 405, Rhadagaise entered Italy with an army of two hundred thousand men; and though he was defeated by Stilicho, yet he had ravaged the country before his defeat with such success, that the heathen Romans publicly declared Rome was given up to destruction because it had forsaken the worship of the heathen gods; and that the only way to restore the Roman fortunes, was to restore the ancient Roman religion, or idolatry, as Sigonius§ observes.

In the letter end of the year 406, the Alans, Vandals, and other barbarous people, passed the Rhine, and made the most furious irruption into Gaul, that had yet been known; passed into Spain, and from thence over into Africa; so that the maritime provinces became a prey to them, the riches and naval power of the empire were much diminished, and almost quite ruined.

But the heaviest calamity fell upon the capital, and city of Rome itself: for Alaric enters Italy in the year 409, and after wasting all the country round about, oblata omnia oppida populans, ac miserabili strage vastans, says Sigonius, at length laid siege to Rome, which was then afflicted both with famine and a pestilential distemper.‖ The city was forced to save itself from this danger, by all its riches, and purchased a peace of Alaric on very hard conditions. He raises the siege for awhile, but soon returns; is received into the city, and makes Attalus the governor of Rome emperor. Soon after he deposes Attalus, and makes peace with Honorius, on condition he should be acknowledged his associate, and have Gaul given to him and to his army. Fœdus his conditionibus est percussum, ut Alaricus socius Honorii esset, atque in Galliâ sedes sibi suisque locaret.* However, not satisfied with Honorius, and his performance of the conditions agreed between them, he continues the siege of Rome, and at last takes it, and gives the plunder of it to his soldiers, which also occasioned its being set on fire; so that Sigonius† represents it, on all those accounts, as a very great and memorable calamity. Insignis fuit calamitas, et rerum humanarum contemplatione memorabilis, quòd urbs quæ de omnibus gentibus triumphaverat, tam facilè à barbarâ et adventitiâ gente, capta, spoliata, atque combusta sit.

This calamity of the capital city of the empire was followed by the spoil of the greatest part of all Italy in like manner; in which the Christian bishops, and their churches, were principal sufferers. Alaricus, urbe captâ et spoliatâ, egressus, animum inde ad ulteriorem populandam, vastandamque Italiam contulit: itaque Latium, Campaniam, Apuliam, Calabriam, ita cum toto exercitû peragravit, ut locum nullum intactum à vexatione ac direptione reliquerit. Atque imprimis, quasi Romanâ victoriâ efferatus, in ecclesias, sacerdotes, episcoposque, extorquendi auri gratiâ, debacchatus, simul omnia humana divinaque jura polluerit.‡

It is worthy observation, that this great calamity which befell the Roman empire, both in Italy and in the capital itself, much increased the prejudice of the heathen Romans against the Christian religion; as if Rome had suffered greater calamities now it was Christian, than while it was heathen. A fit period of history, and becoming the Spirit of prophecy to reveal to the church, to confirm the faith and patience of the church, in such a state of providence, with a full persuasion of the justice and wisdom of it; and that still the cause of true religion should be supported even under so great calamities as these; but with an admonition, that the justice and wisdom of God would punish the sins of Christians, as well as of heathens; and that the outward profession of the best religion should not be a protection against those judgments they had deserved by their iniquities; for God, the righteous governor of the world, is no respecter of persons: "Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" says God to his own church of Israel (Jer. v. 6—9), when "their transgressions were many, and their backslidings increased."

Third trumpet.—The last period of history, correspondent to the foregoing prophecy, ended in the peace which Italy and Rome enjoyed, after the taking of Rome by Alaric, and dismembering many of the provinces of the empire, when Athaulphus left Italy, and went to settle in Gaul. The emperor Honorius returned joyfully to Rome, to the great satisfaction of the city, in the year 412. Honorius Romam repetiit, ac lætus, tanquam exoneratâ aliquandò tandem incumbentium Gothorum mole Italiâ, secunda vicennalia ludorum apparatû magnifico edidit, populo Romano, post diuturnas tenebras lucem se tandem aliquam otii ac libertatis aspicere, gratulante.§

Yet, though Rome and Italy recovered themselves into a pretty good state of peace and liberty, many of the provinces were quite dismembered from the empire. The Goths, Burgundians, Franks, Vandals, &c., possessed themselves of the better parts of France and Spain.

Valentinian, son of Placidia, succeeded his uncle Honorius, about the year 425. In his time began those new invasions of the empire, which put an end to the imperial dignity and power of Rome, and founded a new kingdom in Italy itself.

In the year 427, Genseric, with an army of eight thousand Vandals, seized on Africa, and founded a kingdom there. The Romans had given up the defence of Britain, so that the Britons were fain to call in the Saxons to their aid, in the year 449.* Attila, though soundly beat at Chalons, in the year 451, so that one hundred and seventy thousand, or, according to some, three hundred thousand, fell in the battle; yet, the next year, he marches with another numerous army into Italy, and destroys all before him. Jam omnia quæ intra Apenninum et Alpes erant, fugâ, populatione, cæde, servitute, incendio, et desperatione repleta erant; nullaque mali facies aberat, nefaria per omnes ordines, sexus, et ætates, barbarorum avaritiâ, crudelitate, ac licentiâ pervagante.†

Rome and Italy were scarce freed from these troubles, when new evils succeeded.

Genseric is invited from Africa to revenge the murder of Valentinian: he lands in Italy in the year 455, marches directly to Rome, takes the city, and plunders it, carries away all the public and private riches, makes an incredible number of the citizens captives, and takes the empress Eudoxia (who had desired his assistance to revenge the death of Valentinian), together with her daughters along with her, into Africa.

The name of the Roman empire continued for a few years longer, as in a dying condition, under several successors, till the year 476. Odoacer, drawing together an army of the several nations in Germany, enters Italy by the Trentin, subdues the whole country, takes the city of Rome, and in it the emperor Momyllus, or Augustulus, whom he deposes, and takes to himself the title of king of Italy.‡ Thus Italy, and Rome itself, became the possession of the conquerors; and the Roman name, power, and empire, were from that time extinct. Atque his quidem variis atque ancipitibus rerum temporumque successibus, Roma, jam quartum, post Christi annum jam quadringentesimum, capta, Italiaque à barbaris firmo tandem possideri imperio, cœpta est.§

Odoacer did not indeed continue his kingdom long; for Theodoric, at the head of the Goths in Illyricum, attacked Odoacer's new-founded kingdom in Italy; and, according to Paulus Diaconus,¶ so fully with the consent of Zeno, then emperor of the east, that he made a grant of Italy to Theodoric. Italiam ei per pragmaticam tribuens, sacri etiam velaminis dono confirmavit. Theodoric engages Odoacer, overcomes him, and puts him to death; and so founded the Gothic kingdom of Italy, which continued many years under his successors, till it was subdued by Narses for the emperor Justinian, A. D. 553.

Thus Rome itself, and Italy, the seat of the empire, according to the prophetic description, became a prey to the barbarous nations, and followed the fate of the provinces.

However, even under the Gothic kingdom, Rome, though it lost the supreme authority of empire, was permitted to retain some appearance of its ancient form of government and magistracy. Theodoric made Ravenna the seat of his kingdom; yet Rome retained its senate and consuls, and the image of its former government. Jam verò nullum Romanum institutum mutavit; siquidem et senatum, et consules, patricios, præfectos prætorii, præfectum urbis—cæterosque qui fuerunt in imperio, magistratus retinuit.¶

Fourth trumpet.—This figurative representation will very properly express the following period of history, and the true state of the city of Rome, once the imperial city, and mistress of the world.

We have seen, in the former parts of this period, the loss of the imperial authority, when Theodoric founded the Gothic kingdom of Italy, and made Rome subject to it, A. D. 493. But it was observed, that he then left to the city of Rome some appearance and splendour of its ancient government, in a senate, consuls, and other magistrates.

Now, in the reign of Justinian, emperor of the east, this new kingdom of Italy is overthrown, and new and great calamities befall that miserable country. Gothorum in Italiâ imperium concidit, atque ipsa Italia omnis atrocissimarum calamitatum exempla persensit.

In the course of this war, Belisarius, the imperial general, takes Rome, A. D. 536. The next year, Vitiges, king of the Goths, besieges it with an army of one hundred and fifty thousand men. In this long siege, which continued above a year, the Romans were afflicted both with famine and pestilence, and suffered extremely, though at length the Goths were fain to raise the siege. Totilas, king of the Goths, afterward takes Rome, A. D. 546; it is retaken by Belisarius the next year, and again taken by Totilas about two years after.

During this war, which lasted for twenty years, Rome was besieged and taken five times: the city and whole country suffered all the evils of war in every place; and the event was, to reduce Rome to the lowest and meanest condition, in the loss of all authority and power, being made entirely subject to the exarchate of Ravenna.

For Narses, having quite subdued the Gothic kingdom of Italy for the emperor of the east, was constituted governor of the whole country, with the title of Duke of Italy,* and all the governors of the several cities were only inferior officers under him.

A little after the exarchate of Ravenna was established by the emperor Justin II., Longinus is sent into Italy: he appoints a new form of government: the seat of government was from that time fixed at Ravenna, and every city of Italy entirely subjected to the exarch, both in things civil and military. Is (Longinus, says Sigonius,) primùm Ravennæ, non Romæ, præfecturæ sedem posuit; nec se ducem sed exarchum Italiæ, quemadmodùm et Africæ exarchus erat, vocavit: et provinciarum consularibus, correctoribus, præsidibusque sublatis, singulis civitatibus singulos duces imposuit, ac varios eis ad reddenda jura judices assignavit.†

Thus Rome lost all her dignity and authority, her senate and consuls, and was put upon a level with all the lesser cities and towns of Italy, and became also a small duchy of the exarchate. Parem itaque faciens urbem Romam aliis Italiæ vel urbibus vel oppidis, hâc unâ in re illam honoravit, quòd impositum tunc magistratum præsidem appellavit, sed qui successerunt appellati sunt duces: ut posteà per multos annos, sic Romanus appellaretur ducatus, sicut Narniensis Spoletanusque est dictus; neque post Basilium, qui cum Narsete consul fuit, vel consules Roma habuit, vel senatum legitimè coactum, sed à duce, Græculo homine, quem exarchus ex Ravennâ mittebat, res Romana per multa tempora administrata est.‡

This was a new form of government, altogether unknown before; and though it might be called, in some sense, a form of Roman government, as the exarchs of Ravenna were lieutenants for the Roman emperors of Constantinople, yet it was such a form of government, by which Rome seemed to have received a mortal wound: for that imperial city was deprived by it of all authority and power, and seemed to have lost all hopes of ever recovering them again, when it was made a small duchy, entirely subject to another city, where the emperors, lieutenants, or exarchs, had fixed the seat of their residence and government of Italy; and this, by the appointment and constitution of the emperors of the east, in virtue of their claim to the sole authority of the Roman empire.

CHAPTER IX.

1 And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from [1] heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the [2] bottomless pit.

(1.) On the sounding of the fifth angel which followed, I saw in my vision a star fallen from heaven, or an angel come down from thence, to whom was given the key of the abyss, or bottomless gulf; which fitly expressed a commission from God, to permit Satan, at the head of the kingdom of darkness, to infest the world with some new and great temptation, as if Satan, at the head of his apostate angels, was let loose to disturb the earth, and deceive the nations of it.

2 And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

(2.) And I beheld in my vision, that the angel who had the key of the bottomless pit opened it, and immediately there seemed to break out of the pit a very thick and dark smoke, as if it had been the smoke of a burning furnace; and the smoke was so thick, that it intercepted the light of the sun, and made the whole air dark round about. A very proper representation of great errors, darkening the understanding, obscuring the truth, and attended with violence and destruction.[3]

3 And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power.

(3.) I farther perceived this smoke out of the bottomless pit brought locusts along with it, and scattered them over the earth; and they had power given unto them, not unlike the natural power of scorpions, to do harm. A proper similitude to express a great multitude of people, marching with great speed and swiftness, to plunder and destroy their neighbours.[4]

4 And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads.

(4.) I observed one thing very peculiar to these locusts, and different from what was to be expected from the natural locusts: they had an express direction, not to prey upon or destroy the grass, trees, and fruits of the earth, as natural locusts are used to do; but, as persons compared to locusts, for multitude, and swiftness to spoil, they were to hurt men, and yet to hurt only such as had not the seal of God on their foreheads. Which may properly mean, that these locusts are to be understood, figuratively, for a great number of spoilers; as if Satan, at the head of the powers of darkness, was leading on a great company, both to corrupt and ravage the world: yet, in this extraordinary judgment of God on a corrupt church, he would take care to preserve the interest of true religion and Christianity among a faithful people. He would protect them in such manner, that they should preserve their religion, and the profession of it, notwithstanding the great difficulties those enemies to Christianity should bring upon them.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. IX.

[1] Ver. 1. A star fallen from heaven.] Stars, in the language of prophecy, signify angels. The angels of the heavenly host, as well as the angels or bishops of the churches, seem to be called stars in scripture; as when, at the creation, "the morning-stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy," Job xxxviii. 7. In like manner, when this abyss, or bottomless pit, is shut up, it is represented in this prophecy to be done by "an angel coming down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit." These expressions are so nearly the same, as well as upon the same subject, that they may well be taken in the same sense, and so used to explain each other. It is a general expression of the Jews, concerning the works of God, that he sends an angel to do them: so that Maimonides* observes, Non enim invenies Deum ullum opus fecisse, nisi per manus alicujus angeli. And Hermas,† who lived very near the time of this revelation, and seems to have designed, in several passages, to imitate it, speaks of the angel, appointed over the beasts, appearing for his preservation; Misit Dominus angelum suum, qui est super bestias, et obturavit os ejus, ne te dilaniaret.

This expression then, "a star fallen from heaven," or, "an angel come down from heaven, with a key to open the bottomless pit," seems naturally to mean the permission of divine providence of these evil and calamitous events, which are described to follow upon opening the bottomless pit, which could not have happened but by the permission of the divine providence, and according to the wise and holy orders of the divine government: for the providence of God could as surely have prevented the temptations of Satan, and the powers of darkness, as if Satan and his angels had been fast locked up, and secured in a safe prison; so that he sends an angel, his messenger, with the key of the bottomless pit, to open their prison, and permit them to go out, to teach, that they can only act so far as they have leave and permission, and can always be restrained and shut up again, at the good will and pleasure of the supreme Governor of the world.

[2] The abyss, or bottomless pit, is explained in the prophecy itself, to be that place where the devil and Satan are shut up, that they should not deceive the nations (Rev. xx. 1—3). The abyss seems also to be used in the like sense, when the devils besought Christ, that he "would not command them to go out into the deep;" in the original, "into the abyss," or bottomless pit (εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον). The learned Grotius* observes, that this abyss, or bottomless pit, is the same with what Peter calls hell, or Tartarus: "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, σειραῖς ζόφου ταρταρώσας, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment" (2 Pet. ii. 4).

Now this prison of Satan, and of his angels, by a righteous judgment of God, is permitted to be opened, for the just punishment of apostate churches, who would not repent of their evil works. We may then say, with an eminent interpreter,† "Behold something more terrible than what we have hitherto seen! hell opens, and the devil appears, followed by an army, of a stranger figure than St. John has any where described." And we may observe from others, that this great temptation of the faithful was to be with the united force of false doctrine and persecution. "Hell does not open of itself," as the Bishop of Meaux observes; "it is always some false doctor that opens it; by which means Satan is loosed to deceive the nations."

[3] Ver. 2.] As great smoke hinders the sight, so do errors the understanding. He keeps to the allegory, says Grotius, for smoke takes from us the sight of the stars; smoke, especially when proceeding from a fierce fire, is also a representation of devastation. Thus, when Abraham beheld the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. xix. 28), "Lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of the furnace." The great displeasure of God is represented by the same figurative expressions of smoke and fire. "Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth. There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it" (Ps. xviii. 7, 8).

[4] Ver. 3.] Locusts and grasshoppers are expressly made to signify both the multitude of the eastern nations invading Israel, and the swift progress and destruction they made:

5 And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man.

(5.) And I farther perceived, they did not receive a commission to take away men's lives, when they invaded and spoiled them; they were to torment them for a space of time, for five months: and their torment was resembled to the pains and uneasiness which men feel, when they are bit by a scorpion.

6 And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.

(6.) Yet, though they had not a commission to take away men's lives, they should make their lives so uneasy and miserable to them, that they would rather choose death than life, and desire to die rather than remain in their misery. [5]

7 And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men.

(7.) The appearance of these locusts was such, as in part resembled the locusts described in the ancient prophets; but in part differed from those descriptions, as well as from the description of natural locusts. They were like unto horses prepared for battle; but they seemed to have a sort of golden coronets on their heads, and to appear with the countenance and visage of men. [6]

8 And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.

(8.) Yet, with a manly countenance, they dressed their head and hair in an effeminate manner; and were as ready for rapine, and intent upon it, as if they had teeth hard and strong to devour, as the teeth of lions. [7]

9 And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.

(9.) As they were thus fitted to destroy, they were also well defended against opposition, as if they were armed with iron breast-plates; and they invaded their enemies with a great noise, as if many chariots and horses were rushing into battle. [8]

Judg. vi. 5, "For they came with their cattle and their tents, and they came as grasshoppers for multitude, for both they and their camels were without number: and they entered into the land to destroy it." And thus also the locusts, in the prophet Joel, i. 6, are represented; "For a nation is come upon my land, strong, and without number." The same word in the original, ארבה, is, in the one place, translated "grasshopper," in the other, "locust."

[5] Ver. 6.] The time in which these locusts were to torment men, seems an allusion to the time in which natural locusts are used to do harm, and after which they die. They are hatched, as Bochart observes, about the spring, and die at the letter end of summer; so that they do not live above five months. So that learned interpreter* of scripture understands the expressions at the fifth and tenth verses; Ita quòd, versû quinto et decem, nocent hominibus per quinque menses, videtur ideò dici, quia locustæ verè natæ, sub finem æstatis obeunt; nec supra quinque menses vivere solent.

The time of five months may likely mean, that the invasions of this people meant by the locusts should be, after the manner of the locusts, during the summer months. This seems a more natural meaning than a certain number of prophetic years, during which space of time their power should continue, as some interpreters have thought. If any have the curiosity to see an interpretation of these five months, for one hundred and fifty years, at the proportion of thirty days to a month, he may find it in Mr. Daubuz and Waple, or in Mr. Mede. He may see another interpretation for three hundred years, because the five months are twice mentioned at the fifth and tenth verses; but as I see no reason for such interpretation, so I perceive no certainty in the application.

The torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man, is great and very painful, according to the learned Bochart. He observes, from Dioscorides, Cùm quis à scorpione morsus est, locus quamprimùm inflammari incipit, durusque esse et ruber, et vehementi dolore affectus.† Inflammation and violent pain are fit similitudes to express great uneasiness and torment. The same learned author farther observes, that scorpions, as locusts, hurt only during the summer months. Nec fustrà est, quòd mysticis locustis, quæ scorpionum caudas habent, non datur potestas nocendi hominibus, nisi per menses quinque: quippe ut locustæ, ita nec scorpiones, diutiùs nocent, nam per frigora torpent, nec quidquam ex iis est periculi. Tertullianus, "Familiare periculi tempus æstas."‡

[6] Ver. 7.] Joel, speaking of the natural locusts, observes, "The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses, and as horsemen so shall they run" (ii. 4). This representation of their swift motion, is supposed by some to be an allusion to the form of their heads, as the head of a locust naturally resembles the head of a horse. Locustæ, says Bochart,* ab Italis vocantur cavalette; hinc Albertus, lib. xxvi., Caput habent figurâ equi. And Theodoret, on this passage of Joel, Si quis locustæ caput diligenter consideret, persimilem equo inveniet. It is, to be sure, a beautiful representation of the swiftness and expedition with which an army, consisting principally of horsemen, invade and ravage a country.

Some interpreters† understand these crowns of gold they wore on their heads, to represent the victories of this people, by faces as the faces of men, that they had seemingly reasonable and plausible pretences for their invasions. Others understand it a description of the proper habit of this people, that they should wear ornaments on their heads, like crowns or mitres. "The mitre of the high-priest was called by the ancient Greeks, tiara, cidaris, and sometimes diadema; they were a sort of linen turban, commonly white: and such were the diadems of kings, which Ammianus calls fasciolam candidam, regiæ majestatis insigne."‡ This linen covering of the head, with the plate of gold, in which "Holiness to the Lord" was inscribed, is called the holy crown; so that a turban, with a gold ornament, in the language of the scripture, is a crown of gold (Lev. viii. 9).

[7] Ver. 8.] By "hair, as the hair of women," some understand, that their pretences should be insinuating and deceitful; but it seems rather to refer to some effeminacy in their dress, by which this people should be distinguished, probably such an appearance as Mr. Daubuz has described from Pliny,§ Arabes mitrati degunt, aut intonso crine, barba eraditur præterquam in superiore labro. So that the Arabians, though they affected to wear great moustaches, yet wore long hair, tressed and plaited after the manner of women; and hereby, says Mr. Daubuz, is set forth, together with this their custom, their effeminacy and lust, to which they were extremely addicted. Servius, on Virg. Æn. lib. ix. ver. 616, "Et habent redimicula mitræ," Pilea virorum sunt, mitræ fœminarum.————Alii mitras meretricum esse voluerunt.

"Teeth, like the teeth of lions," is a description of locusts in the prophet Joel, "Whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek-teeth of a great lion" (Joel i. 6), to express great rapaciousness, and how easily they destroy all before them.

[8] Ver. 9.] It is observed of the locusts, in Joel ii. 8, "When they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded." And it is observable, says Mr. Daubuz, that the natural locust hath about its body a pretty hard shell, of the colour of iron. Armavit natura cutem, says Clau-

10 And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.

(10.) They had moreover this peculiar in their form, that they had tails as scorpions, and in them stings, by which they were able to do great hurt and mischief in the places which they invaded; and thus, though locusts, they were able to torment as scorpions do.[9]

11 And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon.

(11.) Though the natural locusts have no king,[10] yet these figurative locusts have one, who is the angel of the bottomless pit, that evil spirit, the prince of the power of darkness, who, from the constant evils he is designing and doing in the world, is called the Destroyer.

12 One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

(12.) Such woful judgments the church is to expect, when the righteous providence of God shall give permission to the destroyer to punish the sins of men; and even when this woe shall be passed, the church is to expect yet farther woes, when the sixth and seventh angels shall sound their trumpets (see the history of the fifth trumpet at the end of this chapter.

13 And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God,

(13.) I farther perceived in my vision, when the sixth angel sounded his trumpet, a voice, as coming from the golden altar which stood before the presence of God, as in the temple, or from the altar of incense, the place of prayer and intercession; where the angel having a golden censer offered incense with the prayers of all saints (viii. 3), to express that no intercession should avail to prevent any longer the execution of the following woes. A just punishment of the world, for sins unrepented of, and of the church, for great corruptions unreformed.[11]

14 Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates.

(14.) This voice from the altar of incense was directed to the sixth angel, who had just sounded his trumpet, commanding him to set the four angels at liberty, who, for the present, were restrained in and about the eastern parts; that, their restraint being taken off, they may again execute the judgments of God, by invading the several parts of it.

15 And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.

(15.) Accordingly, the restraint was taken off from the four destroying angels, and they were permitted to afflict the inhabitants of the earth for a determined time; their restraint was taken off but for a season, as if the very time was ascertained by years, days, months, and even hours, in which they have a permission to punish the world, by taking away the lives of a considerable number of the inhabitants thereof.[12]

dian; so that herein the symbol of the breast-plate is exactly suited to the natural locust. The prophet Joel, ii. 5, also describes the locusts, "Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap———or, as a strong people set in battle array;" to express the terror and consternation they shall occasion by their invasions.

[9] Ver. 10.] Whether these tails, and stings as scorpions, were designed to express, that these people should spread the poison of error and delusion where they come, or only to express the great pain and uneasiness their invasions should occasion, I leave to the judgment of the reader.

[10] Ver. 11.] It is an observation of Agur, "The locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands" (Prov. xxx. 27).

[11] Ver. 13.] In this prophecy, as well as in other passages of scripture, especially the prophetical, the several providences of God are represented by the ministration of angels, whom God sends as his messengers, to execute his will. It may be here understood, as a publication of the purpose and design of Providence, from the horns of the altar of incense; so that no intercession should prevent it.

[12] Ver. 15.] It has been a question, why these angels are represented as four. Some interpreters have supposed the number four relates either to four princes, or four principalities. Hence some suppose the four angels to be one of the Turkish princes and his three sons, as Mr. Daubuz. Mr. Mede takes them to be the tetrachy, or four governments of the Turks in Asia, Aleppo, Damascus, and Antioch; or, according to Sir Isaac Newton,* the four kingdoms of the Turks seated upon Euphrates: that of Armenia Major, seated at Miyapharekin, Megarkin, or Martyropolis; that of Mesopotamia, seated at Mosul; that of all Syria, seated at Aleppo; and that of Cappadocia, seated at Iconium. But as these governments were not erected till the death of Melech Shah, who died A. C. 1092, they far outrun the date of the present period, even by some hundreds of years.†

Nor does there appear any necessity to understand the four angels, either of four princes, or of four governments; for the number four, as Mr. Daubuz‡ observes, is often a number denoting a universality of the matters comprised, as in Jer. xlix. 36, the "four winds" signify all the winds; in Isa. xi. 12, "the four corners of the earth," denote all the parts of the earth; and in Ezek. vii. 2, "the four corners of the land," signify all parts of the land of Judea: and therefore, with Philo,* four is a number of universality in nature. It should seem then a very natural interpretation of the four angels, to understand them of the whole power of these destroyers, gathered together from the four corners, or every quarter of the land they dwelt in; and spreading themselves towards the four winds, or the several parts of the earth, without restraint.

The time here spoken of, an hour, a day, a month, and a year, may also be understood in general for a limited time and season, as in this prophecy the ten kings are said to receive power, as kings, one hour with the beast, or at the same, and during the same time (Rev. xvii. 12).

Mr. Daubuz† seems to have expressed the general meaning of these words very well; the aforesaid angels were prepared by God, for a year, month, day, and hour; namely, so as to be ready, upon any occasion of warning, to put this great event in execution: so that there seems no necessity of making this time three hundred and ninety-one prophetic days, denoting so many years. It rather seems to signify, that these incursions of the destroyer should be under a limitation, and like the inroads of an enemy, who in a short time are beaten back, or, at a set time, usually retire of themselves.

Some‡ understand the third part of men, as a symbolical character of the Roman empire, as the Roman empire has been computed to be one-third part of the earth. And a very learned person§ supposes, that the trumpets principally, if not solely, regard Europe, the famous τὸ τρίτον, or "third part" of the world, known in the days of the vision. But, I conceive, this expression is chiefly designed to signify many, or a very considerable part; as in the foregoing parts of the vision (ch. viii.), tho "third part" of trees was burnt up; the "third part" of the sea became blood; the "third part" of the creatures died; a star from heaven fell upon a "third part" of the rivers; and a "third part" of the waters became wormwood; a "third part" of the sun was smitten; and "the day shone not for a third part of it:" and afterward, "the tail of the dragon drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth" (xii. 4). A third part therefore seems most plainly and naturally to mean a considerable part of the 16 And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them.

(16.) I soon perceived in my vision a farther explication of these four destroying angels, let loose for a determined time, to slay a great part of the inhabitants of the earth; for there appeared a most numerous army of horsemen, too many to be expressed, almost, in plain numbers, being two hundred thousand thousand. [13]

17 And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone.

(17.) As these armies of invaders were represented very numerous, so both horses and riders appeared very terrible; the horsemen appeared in bright and shining armour, having breastplates as of fire, jacinth, and brimstone, which appeared like a mixture of fire and smoke; and the horses they rode upon had a terrible appearance, as well as their riders: for their heads looked fierce as lions, and they seemed to cast fire and smoke out of their mouths. [14]

18 By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.

(18.) And by these terrible armies, a great part of the people whose countries they invaded was killed and slain; so that the miserable inhabitants of those places suffered all the evils of slaughter and bloodshed, as well as of rapine and spoil.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

(19.) And the power of these formidable armies to do hurt was so great, that they were likened to those serpents of which naturalists speak, with two heads, one at each end of their body, capable therefore of doing harm, both with their mouths and tails: so that not only was their front terrible when they marched, but they did great mischief also in their rear, and wherever they left parties behind them, in the countries they had overrun. [15]

20 And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:

(20.) Yet, notwithstanding these severe judgments upon the world, for the corruption of true religion, they who escaped them were not reformed by them; they still went on to corrupt the purity of religious worship, with downright idolatrous practices, as well as they gave themselves up to all unrighteousness and wickedness: for they worshipped devils, or demons; they made angels, and the souls of departed men, as well as the images of the saints, the object of their prayers and adoration.

21 Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

(21.) In such a general corrupt state of religious worship they continued, as might be expected, impenitent and unreformed in the iniquities of common life: so that all the abominable iniquities of the heathen world were found among them; such as deceit, injustice, uncleanness and debauchery, poisonings, and open murders. Just reasons why they were visited with so awful judgments, and why they were given up to the farther punishment of that dreadful woe that follows under the next and last trumpet [16] (see the history of the sixth trumpet at the end of the annotations).

whole; and "to destroy a third part of men," will then signify, that the destroying armies, represented by the four angels, now loosed from the river Euphrates, which had been one of the great boundaries of the kingdom of the Jews, and was then of the Roman empire, should take away the lives of a great number of persons, whose countries they should, on this permission, invade.

[13] Ver. 16.] The number in the original is "myriads of myriads," which I suppose is to be understood of many myriads; as when we say, thousands of thousands, to express many thousands, or a company almost innumerable. We can hardly conceive this number was intended to be the real muster of any army whatsoever, which never was known to consist of any thing like two hundred millions of horsemen. It seems then to mean, that the armies of these destroyers should be principally horsemen; and that their numbers should be so great, that the report of them should be hardly credible.

[14] Ver. 17.] The colour of fire is red, of hyacinth blue, and of brimstone yellow: these are the colours of fire and smoke mingled together. The learned Dr. Hammond observes,* these three colours may be used (as in prophetic style it is ordinary) to express a terrible appearance, which is commonly represented by a flaming fire. It is not indeed impossible, as the same learned interpreter observes with Grotius, that by fire, smoke, and brimstone, may be meant fire-balls, or darts, with something burning at the end of them, called falaricæ, engines of known use, especially in sieges; but there is no sufficient reason, I think, to make it more than conjecture. There is still less reason, I conceive, to make these expressions signify cannon and gunpowder, the use of which was absolutely unknown, some hundreds of years after the time this prophecy was to be fulfilled, in the successive order of the prophecies of this book. Besides, it is to be observed, this is a description of the breast-plates of the horsemen, not only of their weapons or engines of war; and seems therefore to describe properly the terror of their appearance when marching to war.

[15] Ver. 19.] The power in the mouth and in the tails, as serpents, is plainly an allusion to those serpents which are supposed to have two heads, one at each end of their body, as Pliny describes the amphisbæna;* Geminum caput amphisbænæ, hoc est ad caput, et ad caudam, tanquam parum esset uno ore fundi venenum. A proper representation of a furious and terrible invasion.

Whether it be farther meant by these expressions, according to several learned interpreters, that they did not only do mischief by their conquests, but also by false doctrines; that they should not only pull down the states, and destroy the people they invaded, but that they should also plant a false religion in the places they conquered, I shall leave entirely to the judgment of the reader.

[16] Ver. 21.] I have rendered the original word, φαρμακειῶν, "poisoning," rather than sorceries, or witchcrafts. Herein I have followed the learned Grotius, In eâdem domo, alii alios veneno necabant. This wicked practice of poisoning grew general, especially in Italy, and, according to historians, in the church of Rome itself; but the reader is at liberty to prefer the other sense given by interpreters, and to understand by it witchcrafts, sorceries, charms, exorcisms, and pretended miracles, by which men are often seduced to idolatry, and kept in idolatrous practices: or we may understand, with a learned author,† "the numberless artificial methods of making men very religious, without any virtue," to be what the scripture calls sorceries.

HISTORY OF THE TRUMPETS.

Fifth trumpet.—The foregoing prophecies of this period have brought us, by various steps, to an entire subversion of the western empire, when Rome lost all its authority and power, was no longer a seat of government, but a petty duchy governed by an officer appointed by the exarch of Ravenna, and serving under him; who, as the emperor's lieutenant, had the chief command through all his dominions in Italy. This exarchate began, according to Sigonius, A. D. 566, according to Petavius, A. D. 568.

The present prophecy describes a very remarkable judgment, which should follow in the course of providence. It is marked by peculiar circumstances of woe and afflictions, as if Satan, at the head of the powers of darkness, had broke the prison of the bottomless pit, and was come abroad into the world, to spread all the evils of ignorance, error, deceit, violence, spoil, and slavery, among men.

There are many circumstances in this description, peculiar and distinguishing marks of this judgment: the ignorance and error they should progagate, their number and hardiness, the customs, habits, and manners of this people, and of their invasions, the mighty progress they should make, and their different treatment of Christians and idolaters, are sufficient to point out this memorable event of providence to our observation. This new trial of the faith and patience of the saints, and new judgment of God upon such Christians themselves, as corrupted the purity of Christian faith, worship, and manners, was worthy the Spirit of prophecy to reveal; and the protection of the church, so as to preserve the Christian faith and religion, in a time of so great danger, was a very wise and useful encouragement to the faith and constancy of the church, which is the general and immediate intention of all the revelations of this prophecy.

The next scene of providence, which greatly surprised the whole world, as well as the Christian church, was the rise of Mohammed, and a more wonderful progress of a new religion, and a new empire, than the world had ever seen before.

About the year of Christ 606, Mahomet* (as his name is usually writ) began to pretend to revelation, and converse with the angel Gabriel, in a solitary cave near Mecca, in Arabia. In the year 608, which was the fortieth of his age, he began to take to himself the style of "the apostle of God;" and to propagate his imposture, he pretended not to deliver a new religion, but to revive the old religion God first gave to Adam:† and, by many other specious pretences of receiving his revelations from the angel Gabriel, he gained several proselytes. Yet the people of Mecca, where he lived, were so averse to his imposture, that they resolved to strike at the root, and prevent the spreading of farther mischief, by cutting him off who was the chief author of it;‡ so that he was forced to fly from Mecca to Medina, then called Yathreb. This was in the year 622, from which flight of Mahomet, the Hegira, or computation of time among the Mahometans, begins.

From this time he tells his disciples, his religion was not to be propagated by disputing, but by fighting.§

Accordingly, the next year, 623, he fell upon the traders of Mecca, though guarded by one thousand men, and beat them;‖ and spent the rest of the year in robbing, plundering, and destroying, all those who would not come in to him, and embrace his religion.¶

The next year, he continued the same course, and fought a battle with a large number of his opposers, in which he was overborne, and himself grievously wounded. To prevent the ill effect this disgrace might have on the minds of his followers, he taught them, that the time of life being determined by God, they who should be slain in battle died no sooner than they must otherwise have done; and as they died fighting for the faith, they gained the crown of martyrdom, and the rewards of paradise.

In the year 627* he was attacked by an army of ten thousand men, from which danger he very dexterously extricated himself; and, the same year, was inaugurated in the supreme authority, and made head in all things civil and religious.†

In the year 629 Mahomet had an army of ten thousand men;‡ so that he very soon brought most parts of Arabia into his power.

In the year 630 he turned his arms towards Syria. In 631 all the Arabs came in and submitted to him; and in the following year he himself died, being sixty-three years of age, according to the Arabian account, which make only sixty-one of ours;§ so that Mahomet, in the space of twenty-three years, founded a new religion, and a new empire, throughout the large country of Arabia, a country bigger than Germany, Italy, Spain, France, Great Britain, and Ireland, together: which, as Dr. Prideaux observes, "God has permitted, in his all-wise providence, to continue a scourge unto us Christians, who having received so holy and so excellent a religion, through his mercy unto us in Christ Jesus our Lord, will not yet conform ourselves to live worthy of it."

This new government and religion were in some danger, on the death of its founder, by a competition for the succession; but Abubeker,‖ who succeeded, soon suppressed several rebellions, and in particular subdued Moseilam, who pretended himself a prophet, in opposition to Mahomet; and having settled his affairs pretty well at home, thinks of putting in execution Mahomet's commission, of fighting for the religion of God.¶ He therefore sends armies into Babylon and Syria, and summons his forces together, by this remarkable letter:

"In the name of the most merciful God, Abubeker, &c. to the rest of the true believers, health and happiness, and the mercy and blessing of God, be upon you. I praise the most high God, and I pray for his prophet Mahomet. This is to acquaint you, that I intend to send the true believers into Syria, to take it out of the hands of the infidels; and I would have you to know, that fighting for religion is an act of obedience to God."

In this short reign, which was but two years and a few months,†† the Saracens made a great progress, beat the army of the Greek emperor, and slew, according to their own account, fifty thousand men, took Damascus, and entered far into Syria. Omar, who immediately succeeded Abubeker, reigned ten years and a half, drove all the Jews and Christians out of Arabia; subdued Syria, Egypt, and other parts of Africa, besides the greatest part of Persia; took the city of Jerusalem; and in the battle of Yermouk, as Abu Obeidah, the general, wrote to the caliph,‡‡ they killed one hundred and fifty thousand, and took forty thousand prisoners; and adds, "As to those that fled into the deserts and mountains, we have destroyed them all, and stopped all the roads and passages; and God has made us masters of their country, and wealth, and children."

Othman continued the Saracen conquests; the whole Persian empire fell into their hands, in the year of the Hegira 31, A. D. 651, and Syria, with Egypt, were brought into full subjection. But,

Upon the death of Othman, the quarrel about the succession put a considerable stop to the Saracen arms. This seems to make the death of Othman a proper period to the first progress of the Mahometan empire and religion, and a proper end of that part of history that is correspondent to this part of prophecy.

To this account of the rise of the Mahometan religion and empire, it may be proper to subjoin some remarks on the customs of this people, the manner of their making war, and invading their neighbours.

It was observed from Pliny, that the Arabians wore a sort of turbans, or mitres, on their heads; that they dressed and twisted their hair in a particular manner, so that one party of the Saracens was distinguished by it from another. "It is remarkable," says Ockley,* "the sect of Ali have not only a turban after a different fashion, but they also twist their hair after a manner quite different from the rest of the Mussulmans."

They used also the custom of wearing beards:† Ebn Hanníf, Ali's governor of Basora, had his hair cut off, and his beard spoiled, in contempt. Ubi cùm Ebn Haniffum ipsi ab Hali præfectum prehendissent, crinibus avulsis et barbâ depilatâ demiserunt. At least, according to Pliny, they left some hair, like moustaches, on their upper lip: so exactly did their dress answer the description of crowns, faces of men, and hair as the hair of women.

The care of the Arabians about their horses, and the excellency of their breed, are taken notice of by all who mention them.

It is well known, the manner of invading their neighbours was by sudden incursions during the summer months; retiring again, and dispersing themselves to their own homes, during the winter; and gathering together the next spring for a new summer's invasion.

According to the military laws and constitutions of the Mahometans,‡ war was forbid during the sacred months, which were the two first and the two last: Aggredi bello hostes suos omni tempore fas esse pronunciavit (Mohammed), exceptis quatuor mensibus anni, duobus primis, et postremis; qui propterea sacri appellantur.

A sufficient number is appointed by the same constitutions,§ to be sent out yearly, as may make the Mahometans equal or superior to the enemy: Istiusmodi copiarum eductio singulis annis ad minimum semel fieri debet.

Their military laws make also a great difference between those people they call Harbi, and the People of a Book. The Harbi were either atheists and persons of no religion, or idolaters, who did not worship the true God, according to any book of revelation; these were not tolerated in the Mahometan law, but they were to be prosecuted with war, till they embraced the religion of Mahomet. But the People of the Book were such as worshipped God, according to some book of revelation, as the Jews and Christians; these were to be prosecuted with war till they embrace Mahometanism, or agree to pay a tribute: but then they were to be left in peace, and in the quiet use of their own religion, even where the Mahometan authority was fully settled.‖ Thus the very laws of Mahomet made provision not to kill those who professed the worship of the true God, but only to torment them by their invasions, and making them tributaries.

It was moreover a common injunction to spare, as much as possible, the countries they invaded: "Destroy not palm-trees," says Abubeker to Yesid, "nor burn any fields of corn; cut down no fruit-trees, do no mischief to cattle, only such as ye kill to eat."¶

Yet the military laws adjudged so many persons to captivity, and the condition of the women in particular was so deplorable, being so much in the power of persons who gave the greatest liberty to their lusts, that though their lives were spared, many were like to prefer death itself to the hard condition to which they were reduced.

Upon the whole, the sudden invasion of the Saracens, the swift and almost incredible progress of their arms, many circumstances peculiar to this people, and their invasions, which sufficiently distinguish them from all the invasions of the northern nations, very properly answer the prophetic description of these locusts out of the bottomless pit.

Sixth trumpet.—The period of history which corresponds with this period of prophecy, is determined by the successive order of prophecies and events to the times soon following the former history, which described the rise and amazing progress of the Saracen empire and Mahometan religion; which, like locusts out of a bottomless pit, spread themselves in a very short time over a great part of the world. I shall not therefore take notice of Mr. Mede's application of this prophecy to the rise and progress of the Turks, or Ottoman empire founded by them; though Mr. Mede's great learning and reputation have caused many others to follow him, yet the rise of the Ottoman empire is so low, that it is by far too great a step from A. D. 655, in which the former prophecy ended: for Othman, the founder of the empire, died in the year of the Hegira, 727, A. D. 1326.* This time will farther also fall far into the time of the next period of prophecy. These considerations make such application, I think, inconsistent with the order of the book itself, which it seems plainly to mark out to us in successive periods.

Let us see, then, whether the history of the Saracen empire, in the times that soon followed after the foregoing prophetic description of the rise of it, does not answer this description, and is not most likely designed by it.

One considerable mark of this period, is loosing the four angels which were bound in the great river Euphrates (ver. 14), signifying, that the providence of God had, for some time preceding this period, laid a restraint upon these furious invaders of their neighbours, and the progress of their imposture.

Accordingly we find, that upon the death of Othman, about the year 655, there were great contentions concerning the succession;† Ali, Moawiah, Telha, and Zobier (or Azzobier), had each of them a considerable party to advance them to the caliphate, or succession in the Saracen empire. These pretensions occasioned several quarrels, which put a stop to the foreign conquests of the Saracens, and ended in the almost entire ruin of Ali's family, and therein of Mahomet's own; for Ali had married Mahomet's daughter.

At the death of Othman, Moawiah was governor of Syria, and Amrou of Egypt.‡ Ali, at the first, obtained a complete victory over Telha and Zobier, two of his competitors; yet Moawiah and Amrou resolved to stand it out to the last against Ali.§ These contentions occasioned the deaths of so many persons, that at last three men, zealous for the Saracen affairs, agreed to kill all the three pretenders to the caliphate: one of them struck Moawiah in the reins, but the wound proved not mortal:‖ another of them, mistaking for Amrou a person whom Amrou, being indisposed, had appointed to supply his place that day in the mosque, killed him dead on the spot; and going to execution, said, without any concern, "I designed Amrou, but God designed another."¶ The third of these conspirators had better success in the execution of his design against Ali; for he gave him a mortal wound in the head, as soon as he came into the mosque, of which he died in a few days. The contention did not end with the death of Ali; it continued a long time between his family and the family of Moawiah: Hasan, Ali's eldest son, was forced to abdicate in favour of Moawiah;†† Hosein, Ali's second son, with several of his family, was killed in the field: yet still many disturbances were occasioned by the friends of Ali's family and the enemies of Moawiah's. Almochter, pretending to avenge the death of Hosein,‡‡ is made caliph by his party, A. D. 685: he pursued all who had a hand in the death of Hosein, and destroyed them with variety of deaths: he never pardoned any of those who declared themselves enemies of the prophet, nor those whom he could believe to have dipped their hands in Hosein's blood, or that of his relations;§§ so that it is said, that he killed near fifty thousand men of those people, without reckoning those who were slain in the battles which he fought.

These intestine divisions and quarrels bound up the Saracens from their usual invasions and incursions,‖‖ and kept them about the river Euphrates, near which most of their battles between each other were fought. Moawiah found it necessary to make a peace with Constantinus Pogonatus, emperor of Constantinople, and even agreed to pay him a considerable tribute; and Abdolmelic, one of his successors, was obliged to make a like peace, on promise of paying tribute to Justinian II. the Greek emperor.

Thus were the destroying angels bound up for about fifty years, during the reigns of Ali, Moawiah the first, Yesid, Moawiah the second, Merwan, and Abdolmelic, caliphs of the Saracens.

But then, these destroying angels were loosed again; the divine providence took off the restraint of the Saracen invasions. Walid united the power of the Saracen empire, and invaded the western parts of Europe with such numerous armies, and swift successes, as threatened the loss of all Europe, and even to extinguish the Christian name and religion.

The Saracens passed over into Spain, A. D. 713. The next year, they obtained a complete victory over a numerous army of the Spaniards; they who speak the least, say it was an army of one hundred thousand fighting men: what number was killed, was not known; "I suppose," says our historian,* "they were so many, it was hard to count them:" for this only battle robbed Spain of all its glory, and in it perished the renowned name of the Goths. After this battle, the Saracens divided their forces, and soon overran the whole country; so that in three or four years, they were possessed of all Spain, except a few inaccessible places in the mountains, and which the Saracens slighted. The misery of this invasion, so agreeable to the prophetic description, is so well expressed by the historian,† that I shall give it in his own words: "Certain it is, Spain was now in a deplorable condition, almost all brought under the dominion of the Moors; there was no sort of misery but the Christians endured; women were ravished from their husbands, children from their parents, and all they possessed taken from them, without any redress to be hoped for. The country yielded not its usual product, both in regard of the unseasonableness of the weather, and for want of labourers; the churches were profaned and burnt; dead bodies lay about the streets and highways, and nothing was to be seen or heard, but sighs and tears; nor was there any calamity but what Spain groaned under, God permitting the innocent to suffer with the guilty, to punish the horrid wickedness of those times."

But the Saracens did not confine their ravages to Spain; they soon passed the Pyrenean mountains into France. After many ravages in several parts of the country, they came to a decisive battle with Charles Martel, in which Abdirachman was killed, with his numerous army. This victory secured the state of Christianity, which would likely have been the prey of those barbarous invaders, if they had then gained a victory over the French, and possessed themselves of their country, which was then the only rampart of Christianity, as a judicious historian observes.‡ The infidels, as another historian observes, advanced as to a certain victory; whereupon ensued one of the bloodiest battles, and most obstinate fights, that has been seen in the world: of the Moors, there were four hundred thousand, with their wives and children, as designing to dwell in France.——The slaughter was incredible; three hundred and seventy thousand Moors were killed, and among them their general. This fortunate battle was fought, says Mariana,* in the year of our Lord 734, twenty-one after the conquest of Spain. It put a full stop to the farther progress of the Saracen armies in Europe, and gave courage and strength to the remaining Christians in Spain; so that in time they drove the Saracens quite out of their country.

There is another part of this prophetic description which deserves particular notice, and which seems to point out this period of history for the accomplishment of it: the rest of the men who were not killed by these plagues, yet repented not of their idolatry; the worship of saints and images, which so nearly resembled the heathen idolatry, had made great advances about this time. Leo Isaurus, emperor of the east, was much concerned at it; it gave great offence to the Mahometans, and often provoked them to persecute the Christians as idolaters. In the east, Leo Isaurus, and his son Constantius Copronymus,† at this very time endeavoured to put a stop to these idolatrous customs of worshipping images; and in order to prevent it, ordered all images to be taken out of the churches: but these endeavours to preserve the church from idolatry, and remove this just prejudice against the Christian worship, were warmly opposed by the bishops of Rome. The emperor Leo had sent his orders into Italy, A. D. 702, to remove images out of the churches there: the then pope of Rome, Gregory II., confirmed the worship of images by a synod, and rejected the order of the emperor, with severe reproaches on himself; and finally, according to Baronius's own account, he excommunicated the emperor, and on that pretence, forbade all payment of taxes to him in Italy, and freed the people from all manner of obedience to him, as their prince. Tandem et anathematis pœnam, ita quoque Baronius, eoque prætextû interdictum, quo tributa Italica sisteret, et obedientiam omnem, tam civilem quam ecclesiasticam, toto occidente, deinceps exhiberi Græco imperatori prohiberet.‡

This defence of the idolatrous worship of images was so obstinate, that at length it prevailed to a solemn confirmation of it, by the authority of councils, both in the east and west: so far were they from repenting of their abominations.

And this brings us to the end of the second period of prophecy, and within a very few years of the beginning of the third period, in the temporal power of the popes of Rome; which was, in some sense, the seventh, or, in another sense, the eighth head of Roman government, as we have before observed,§ to which the following visions of this Revelation relate.

CHAPTER X.

SECTION VIII.

INTERVAL BETWEEN THE SECOND AND THIRD PERIODS.

1 And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire:

(1.) After my former vision, related in the foregoing part of this prophecy, I beheld another vision, introductory to a farther revelation concerning the state of the church and world; for I beheld a mighty angel coming down from heaven: he appeared as clothed with a cloud; a mark of great power and majesty: a rainbow, the symbol of God's covenant and mercy, was on or round his head; and his appear-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. X.

Contents.—The foregoing chapters have given us a prophetic description of the two first periods, or of the state of the world and church under the persecution of Rome heathen; of the troubles occasioned by the invasions of the northern nations, which broke the power of the Roman empire, and divided it into several new governments; and finally, of the rise and progress of the Mahometan religion and empire, which caused so many evils throughout the greatest part of the world, both in the eastern and western empires.

This tenth chapter seems to be an interval between the second and third periods, in which the scene of the vision alters, preparation is made for a new prophecy, representing a new state of the world and church for a new period of "forty-two months," "a time, times, and half a time," or "twelve hundred and sixty days," being "the days of ance was very glorious, for his face shone with a lustre like the brightness of the sun, and his feet with a splendour as if they had been a flame, or pillars of fire.[1]

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth,

(2.) And the angel whom I beheld coming down from heaven, held a little book, or roll, open in his hand, the remaining part of the sealed book, or roll, which the Lamb had opened; and when he was come down to our globe, he stood upon it, having one foot on the sea, and the other on the earth, the chief parts of which it consists; the prophecies yet to be revealed out of the little book, or roll, relating to the greater part of the inhabitants of the world.[2]

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices.

(3.) This mighty angel, standing on the earth and sea, made proclamation with a voice, loud, strong, and awful, as the roar of a lion. Upon which I heard several distinct voices, as from the clouds of heaven, and loud as thunder.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.

(4.) As I was about to write down what was spoken from the seven thunders, I was forbid by another voice from heaven, saying unto me, Do not write down what the voices from the seven thunders have uttered, that they may not be publicly revealed in this prophecy.[3]

5 And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven,

6 And sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer:

7 But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

(5.) But though I was not allowed to reveal what the seven thunders had uttered, yet the angel proceeded to give a farther revelation of the providence of God towards the world, and his church in general; and to confirm the truth and certainty of his revelation, he took his oath in the most solemn manner: for, lifting up his hand to heaven, (6.) he sware by the eternal God, the Creator of all things, that the time of the glorious state of the church, though sure to be accomplished according to God's promise in its due time, [4] should not be as yet; (7.) but in the next period, or in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, who was yet to sound, the voice of the seventh angel, when the mystery of God shall be finished."

The scene of vision is represented different from the foregoing; it is not now before the throne of God in heaven, as in the fourth chapter, but on earth, as the first scene, ch. i. For John saw "an angel come down from heaven" (ver. 1); the angel stood on the sea and on the earth, and he lifted up his hand to heaven" (ver. 5), when "he sware that time should be no longer" (ver. 6).

This introduction to the third period represents "an angel coming down from heaven, with a little book open in his hand." A voice from heaven directs John to "take the little book from the angel, and to eat it up;" because he was still to continue his prophecy, and to reveal many things contained in it: for he was to "prophesy again, before," or "concerning, many people, and nations, and tongues, and kings" (ver. 11). Or he was to represent, in new prophetic descriptions, the state of the church and world in the period or times that should successively follow the former times, of which he had already prophesied, and which was to contain a prophecy, as is afterward declared, for the space of twelve hundred and sixty prophetical days. The meaning of which will be best explained by a paraphrase upon the representations themselves.

[1] Ver. 1.] To come in the clouds, or with the clouds of heaven is, among the Jews, a known symbol of divine power and majesty.* It may refer to the expression of the psalmist, "Thou art very great; thou art clothed with honour and majesty; thou coverest thyself with light as with a garment" (Ps. civ. 1, 2): alluding to the bright and shining cloud in which the divine presence was used to appear. Grotius observes a like notion among the heathen, that they represented their deities appearing covered with a cloud:

Tandem venias, precamur,
Nube candentes humeros amictus
Augur Apollo.†

A rainbow, by its natural properties, as a gentle rain while the sun shines, was a proper emblem of God's covenant with mankind after the flood, and fit to be made a sign that God is always mindful of his covenant and promise. The brightness and splendour of the sun and of fire were also proper figures to express the majesty of a divine appearance.‡

[2] Ver. 2.] It is an observation of a great author,§ that this description of an angel coming down from heaven is in the form in which Christ appeared at the beginning of this prophecy; and it may farther direct us to understand this mighty angel of Christ, that he appeared having a little book opened in his hand. The same illustrious interpreter judiciously remarks, that "this little book is the same that he had newly opened; for he received but one book from him that sat upon the throne, and he alone was worthy to open it." It does not seem to be another book, as some have thought, but the remainder of the same book, or roll, which the Lamb took out of the right hand of him that sat on the throne (v. 7). It may be called "a little book," or roll, being only the remainder of what had been opened or revealed already, the seventh and last seal, and so the whole book had been opened before (ch. viii.). This seems the plainest and easiest account of the little book, as well as most agreeable to the order of the prophecies, this containing what was to happen "in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall sound" (ver. 7). Earth and sea are, in scripture language, a description of our world, or this terraqueous globe, as the heavens and earth are a description of the universe in general, or the whole visible creation; and so the inhabitants of the earth and sea seem in this prophecy to mean the inhabitants of this world: "Woe unto the inhabitants of the earth and sea! for the devil is come down unto you" (xii. 12); that is, when the dragon was cast down unto the earth.

By "the earth," the Jews understood, as Sir Isaac Newton observes (p. 276), the great continent of all Asia and Africa, to which they had access by land; and by "the isles of the sea," they understood the places to which they sailed by sea, or the several parts of Europe: and hence, in this prophecy, the earth and sea are put, he observes, for the nations of the Greek and Latin empires: in this sense, the angel, putting his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth, will represent him standing with one foot on Asia, and another on Europe; to signify the prophecies he was to reveal would relate to both the empires of the east and west: but I think the former sense the more natural.

[3] Ver. 4.] When a voice from heaven commanded the apostle not to reveal what was spoken by these voices, it would be ridiculous to go about to explain it. It is sufficient to observe, it was not proper to remain on record a public revelation to the church in general, however proper it was to be revealed to the apostle in particular, which might be for many wise reasons; though for what particular reasons must be as unknown to us as the revelation itself is.

[4] Ver. 6.] That "time should be no longer," does not mean that time itself should be no more; in the original, χρόνος οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι, is literally, "The time shall not be yet."

the mystery of God, in his providence towards the church, should be perfected; and then, as he had promised in the prophetic oracles, the glorious state of the church should be no longer deferred.

8 And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth.

(8.) I was then directed by another voice from heaven to go up to the angel who stood upon the sea and the earth, and receive from him the little book which he held open in his hand.

9 And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey.

(9.) I thereupon did as the voice from heaven commanded me, and desired the angel to give me the little book, which he did, saying unto me; Take this little book, consider it carefully, and digest it well in thy mind; and thou shalt find, in the events it shall reveal unto thee, an occasion for comfort and joy, for grief and sorrow.

10 And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.

(10.) I accordingly took the little book out of the angel's hand, and deeply meditated on the contents of it; and found it to contain in part things of great consolation, and in part things that gave me great concern and sorrow.

11 And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

(11.) And the angel from whom I had received the little book, acquainted me that I was to consider the prophecies contained in it were not intended only for my private instruction and meditation; they were prophecies which concerned the public, many nations, and people, which I was to publish in farther revelations, for the public use and benefit of the church. [5]

Some understand it, that the time of fulfilling the prophecy should be no longer delayed; or, as Grotius on the place, Non diù erit quin arcanum Dei impleatur: but I think both the intention of the prophecy, and the more literal meaning of the expression, better agree with Mr. Daubuz's interpretation:* "The angel in the vision declares upon oath, that the glorious state of the church shall not be as yet; but that, however, it would not be long to it: for in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall sound (that is, in the period of prophecy to which the remainder of the book yet unrevealed relates, under the seventh trumpet), the mystery of God shall be perfected, as he had declared to his prophets." This was a consolation proper to the general design of the prophecy, as there was but one period of time yet remaining, viz. during the voice of the seventh and last angel; and then the accomplishment of the promises, in the happy and glorious state of the church, should be accomplished and fulfilled, without any farther delay. This was however attended with a most useful caution, that the church is to prepare, in this period, for new trials of faith and patience, though in the end the mystery of God shall be finished or perfected.

* On the place.

[5] Ver. 11.] "To eat," says Mr. Waple, "signifies to meditate and to digest divine truths." "Thy words were found," says the prophet (Jer. xv. 16), "and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart." Our blessed Saviour uses the same metaphorical expression, when he speaks of himself as "the bread of life," in many passages of the sixth chapter of John. As this prophecy was to reveal the providence of God during the period of the seventh angel, in which, as there was a revelation of great opposition to true religion, and persecution of the faithful professors of it, so was there also a revelation of divine protection during the time of trial, and of a sure accomplishment of the promised glorious and happy state of the church in the end. The meditation of such a state of providence might well occasion a mixture of joy and grief in the apostle's mind, as it is like to do in the minds of all who so understand it and consider it.

FIRST DESCRIPTION OF THE THIRD PERIOD.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XI.

CONTENTS.—We are now come, in this eleventh chapter and the following, to the third and longest period of this prophecy, distinguished by the seven vials, as the former were by seven trumpets and seven seals. As this is a period much longer than either of the foregoing, it seems to have a more full and copious description; and the state of it is represented by several prophetic images, as by measuring the temple; by the prophecy of two witnesses; by the vision of a woman flying into the wilderness; and the representation of one wild beast rising out of the sea, and of another coming up out of the earth.

So that here are two distinct representations of the state of the church during this period, and another representation of the persecuting power from whence the afflicted state of the church should proceed; and in the end of this, as in each period, here is a representation of the church's deliverance out of its afflicted state. And, in particular, the afflictions of the church are to end with this period, in the most happy and glorious state of peace and prosperity, of truth, purity, and protection; and not to be succeeded in a very short time by a new period of troubles and afflictions, to try the faith and patience of the saints, as the former were.

It appears that the representation of the two witnesses, of the woman in the wilderness, and of the beast, are several representations of the same time or period, in different views. The time for the witnesses to prophesy in sackcloth is a thousand two hundred and threescore days (xi. 3). The woman is nourished in her place in the wilderness for a time, and times, and half a time (xii. 14), or three years and a half, equal to twelve hundred and sixty days, according to the ancient year of three hundred and sixty days. And so the prophecy itself interprets it, xii. 6, "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days." It is farther observed concerning the period of the beast, that "power was given to him to continue forty and two months," a time equal to "three years and a half," or "twelve hundred and sixty days." They are into my hand, with which I was directed to measure the temple, and the court wherein the altar stood, in which the priests worshipped God, and performed the duties of their office, and into which such as offered private sacrifices for themselves were admitted. A proper representation of the true worship of God, and of such as were true worshippers of him.

2 But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.

(2.) But as to the other court of the temple, the place where the Israelites were used to assemble when they come up to the temple to worship, I was directed not to measure it, for this reason, that it should become common and profane, being permitted to be used and possessed by gentiles. A fit representation of great corruption in the common and usual worship of God, by heathen doctrines and idolatrous therefore to be looked upon as different descriptions of the same period, for the more distinct explication of the prophecy, and greater certainty of its true meaning.

But before we enter upon the particular meaning of each representation, it may be proper to observe something as to the proper time of this period, as to its beginning and continuance.

As interpreters, for very different reasons, have fallen into very different accounts of both, it has occasioned no little uncertainty and disorder in the different interpretations given of it.

The papists are very unwilling protestants should find any of the corruptions of the Roman church in this prophecy; they have therefore used all their art and learning to finish all the prophecies in this book in much less time than twelve hundred and sixty years, in the downfall of Rome heathen, when the empire became Christian, under Constantine, A. D. 323. They must therefore make the time of this period no more than twelve hundred and sixty natural days, or three common years and a half. And in this the Bishop of Meaux* greatly triumphs over the protestant interpreters, that they should make a year not to signify one year, but three hundred and sixty years.

There are also some learned interpreters among protestants themselves, who think the whole prophecy reaches but to a small period of time. Grotius,† and after him Dr. Hammond, in support of that opinion, make the duration of this period much less than twelve hundred and sixty years: for to understand the twelve hundred and sixty days, according to the style of prophecy, for so many years, is inconsistent with their favourite schemes, and must quite overthrow them.

But it appears, I conceive,‡ from many reasons, that the opinion which assigns a short time to the whole prophecy is without all foundation, and expressly contrary to the intent of the prophecy, which is to extend to the day of judgment.

It is also a considerable circumstance to strengthen the interpretation of days by years, that as it is agreeable to the style of prophecy, it is most agreeable to the plan of this prophecy. It is a good rule of Grotius,§ that the circumstances of the subject ought to direct how we are to understand an expression: vox hebdomadis generalis est, et tam de annis quàm de diebus rebusque aliis accipi potest; quomodò autem accipienda sit, docere nos debet loci cujusque materia. Let us then see how justly preferable the prophetic interpretation of a day for a year is in this place.

It is agreeable to the ancient style of scripture, in the days of Moses, Numb. xiv. 34, "After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall you bear your iniquities, even forty years." The punishment of the people was to be as many years as the days of their transgression; so that "each day for a year" seems an allusion to some known method of counting, in which days were answered by years.

The prophetic style of Ezekiel farther confirms it: Ezek. iv. 6, the prophet is directed to "lie on his right side, and bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days." This is explained to signify, according to the style of prophecy, so many years: "I have appointed thee each day for a year," or, as in the margin, "a day for a year, a day for a year." So that in this figurative interpretation, each day, in the prophetic representation, is to be answered by a year in the historical event.

In the prophecy of Daniel, this manner of prophetic expression is used again; Dan. ix. 24, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." All who consider this a prophecy relating to the Messiah, for which there are abundant and unanswerable reasons, must consider the seventy weeks as so many times seven years, not as so many weeks of natural days.

It is a criticism below such great men as Grotius and the Bishop of Meaux, that because hebdomas signifies a number of seven, it may signify seven of any thing, according to the circumstance of the place; and therefore a week (hebdomas), which is so called because it contains seven days, may signify seven years. A week primarily signifies seven days, and properly nothing but seven days: a week (hebdomas) never did signify seven years, and only can do so as the figurative expression of prophecy puts a day to signify a year.

The particular circumstances of prophecy add a farther strength to this interpretation, that the twelve hundred and sixty days are to be understood of so many years.

The order of the prophecies of this book shows, that these twelve hundred and sixty days contain the whole time of the third period; or all the time wherein the witnesses prophesy, the woman is in the wilderness, and the beast has power given unto him: that is, all the time of the last state of the church's sufferings, to that glorious state of the church, when Satan shall be shut up in the bottomless pit for a thousand years. In this period the seven vials of God's wrath are to be poured out, and all the historical events that relate to them accomplished; this period is to last till the mystery of God shall be finished. These events are too many, and the times in which they are to be accomplished too long, to be comprised within three years and a half, or twelve hundred and sixty natural days.

The order of the periods shows this third is not to begin until the two former are passed; until the nations which had destroyed the Roman empire had divided it among themselves; till the imperial government of Rome was passed away,* as the preceding forms of government were before it; till another form of government should be established in Rome, which, on some accounts, should be called the seventh, and on other accounts the eighth form of government; when Rome, once the powerful mistress of the world, after she had lost her dominion, and seemed to lose it without hope of recovery, should be restored to power and empire again, which was to continue during the twelve hundred and sixty days of this period, and then to be utterly overthrown, and never to rise again.

Now, as a great variety of concurring circumstances shows the beginning of this period, about the year 756, when the popes were invested with the temporal dominion of Rome, in which only time the several descriptions of this period do all exactly agree, the twelve hundred and sixty days of this prophecy are to last so long as this power is to continue: which seems evidently to show that we are not to understand twelve hundred and sixty natural days the time of this period, but so many prophetic days, in which a day is given for a year.

It being necessary to premise so much concerning the prophetic account of time in this period, I shall only farther modes of worship: which state of corruption, I was informed, was to continue for the space of forty-two prophetic months, or twelve hundred and sixty years. [1]

3 And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

(3.) Yet in this prevailing state of corruption, God will raise up witnesses to the truth, who shall sufficiently testify against the prevailing false doctrines and idolatrous worship, and denounce the judgments of God against the apostasy. These witnesses, like the prophets of old, shall prophesy in garments of mourning, and meet with great oppression; yet they shall persevere with an immovable Christian courage to assert the truth, and oppose the corruptions of this period, during its whole continuance. [2]

4 These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth.

(4.) This small church of faithful worshippers, who refuse to comply with the more general corruptions of faith and worship, shall be constantly supported and encouraged in the profession of true religion; faithful instructors shall excite them to constancy and perseverance, and they shall glorify God by a constant testimony of truth; as if a lamp was kept always burning, by a continual supply of oil from a living olive-tree, constantly feeding it with oil, that it may never go out. [3]

5 And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

(5.) Moreover, the judgments these witnesses to the truth shall denounce against such persons as reject their testimony, and persecute them for their sincere and faithful warnings, shall as surely be executed, as the judgments denounced by the former prophets were; God will assuredly punish those who reject and despise their warnings, with many great and severe judgments. [4]

6 These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

(6.) God will vindicate the honour of these witnesses, and the truth of their testimony, by as great and remarkable judgments in their times, as in the times of any of the ancient prophets; as when, for instance, Elijah prayed, and it rained not on the earth; or, as when Moses turned the waters of Egypt into blood. God will surely avenge their cause as his own, and punish their enemies with all those observe, that we have three distinct representations of it in the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth chapters.

The first, by the figure of measuring the temple, and prophesying of the two witnesses.
The second, by the figure of the woman in the wilderness. And,
The third, by the power and persecution of the beast.
I proceed to explain each of these, as they are severally represented, in their order.

[1] Ver. 2.] A measuring rod was a sort of pole about ten feet long, made of a kind of reed, which was both strong and light, such as was commonly used in measuring buildings and lands. Lightfoot* observes, "that (besides the priests who ministered in the court where the altar stood) persons offering a sacrifice came into the court of the altar to present their sacrifice before God, and lay their hands upon it."

This representation seems to be taken from the prophet Ezekiel's vision (ch. xl.) in which he beheld a person with a measuring rod, taking the dimensions of the buildings of a temple; showing the prophet, in vision, the model or plan of a new temple, to encourage the Jews to faithfulness in their religion, with the hopes of seeing the temple and true worship of God restored again. The temple and temple-worship was a proper figure of Christ's church, and of the spiritual worship instituted by him. It was, therefore, very proper to represent the state of the Christian church by like figures. What is peculiar in this, and wherein it differs from Ezekiel's representation, is the direction to measure only the temple and inner court, where the altar stood, but to exclude the other court. This signifies plainly enough, that, in this period of the church, but a small part should be preserved in purity; that there would be some sincere and faithful worshippers, but they would be few in comparison with a greater and more numerous part of the church, which should be corrupted with the doctrines of heathenism, and corrupt the worship of God with idolatrous customs; as if the outward courts had been given up to the gentiles to profane, while the few faithful worshippers of God, who adhere to the faith and worship taught in the word of God, shall be confined, as it were, within the inner court.

One general representation of this period, then, is after this manner: God will preserve a church in purity of faith and worship, but it will consist only of a small number, when, at the same time, the greater part of the church shall fall into great corruptions; in particular, they shall corrupt the Christian faith and worship with many false doctrines and practices, taken from heathen superstition and idolatry.

[2] Ver. 3.] This representation shows in general, that as God raised up prophets in the ancient church, to witness against the idolatrous corruptions of religion, and denounce the judgments of God against those who were guilty of them, so it should be in this corrupt state of the Christian church. It is a sufficient reason, why these witnesses are said to be two, as two was the legal number of witnesses, and as, in the times of the ancient prophets, on greater occasions, two were usually joined together, as Moses and Aaron in Egypt; Elijah and Elisha, in the apostasy of the ten tribes; Zerubbabel and Joshua, after the Babylonish captivity. As this testimony of the witnesses is to be of equal duration with the apostasy itself, it cannot well be meant of any two particular persons; nor is there, I conceive, any reason to understand it of any two particular churches, or bodies of men, in perpetual succession. It sufficiently answers the prophetic description, if there be, during the time of the apostasy, a sufficient, though small number, who, like Elias and Elisha, shall testify and declare against the idolatrous customs and practices of their times.

Calmet justly observes, "These witnesses do not mean two particular persons, but all the martyrs in general." The name of "prophesying" here signifies persons full of the Spirit of God, preaching God's word, and bearing witness to the truth.

[3] Ver. 4.] This representation of the candlesticks and olive-trees seems taken from the prophecy of Zechariah (ch. iv.) in which Zerubbabel and Joshua are represented by two olive-trees on each side of the candlestick, which empty oil through two golden pipes out of themselves (ver. 11, 12), to express, that Joshua and Zerubbabel should be protected by divine Providence, to go through all the difficulties which lay in the way of finishing the temple, and re-establishing the Jewish state, not indeed by human force and power, but by God's protection, and his all-powerful providence; "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

[4] Ver. 5.] When Ahaziah sent companies to seize on the prophet Elijah, "fire came down from heaven, and consumed them" (2 Kings i. 10). And God threatens those who rejected the warnings of the prophet Jeremiah (Jer. v. 12. 14), "They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he; neither shall evil come upon us; neither shall we see sword nor famine.——Wherefore, thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Because ye speak these words, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them." That is, God would certainly bring on Judah and Israel, all those judgments with which he had appointed to punish them for their obstinate apostasy. The certainty of these judgments is well expressed in these words, "And if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed." The enemies of truth and righteousness shall have no power to protect themselves against the judgments of God, or find any means to escape, when God decrees their punishment.

plagues, which, according to his direction, they shall denounce against them. [5]

7 And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.

(7.) Notwithstanding, during the time these witnesses shall faithfully bear their testimony to the truth, and against the corruption of the Christian faith and worship, that persecuting power, which, according to a following representation, is to arise in this period, out of the bottomless pit, shall continually oppose these witnesses, and so far prevail, as to inflict many evils, even to death itself, upon them. [6]

8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.

(8.) And these faithful witnesses shall be treated with such cruel severity by their persecutors, that they shall be denied the common decency of burial. Such persecuting powers may well be compared to Sodom or Egypt, for pride, wickedness, and cruelty, to those who put Christ himself to death, for bearing testimony to the truth: yet, in all their distress, they may comfort themselves, that they suffer with Christ, and for his cause, and from persons whose idolatry and cruelty make them as Sodom or Egypt. [7]

9 And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

(9.) The corruption in the days of this period shall be so very great, that the people in general, in all places, shall be violently prejudiced against these faithful witnesses; insomuch that they shall, with great inhumanity, deny them the decencies of burial, and express the fierceness of their displeasure and wrath, by all methods of public disgrace. [8]

10 And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth.

(10.) And the inhabitants of the earth shall greatly rejoice in this persecution; they shall express it by sending gifts to one another, as a testimony of mutual congratulation, on occasions of public joy. For now they hope to be delivered from the trouble and uneasiness, occasioned by the reproofs of these prophets, and the judgments they threatened them with, on account of their corruptions. [9]

11 And after three days and an half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them.

(11.) Yet, notwithstanding the cruelty of these persecutors prevailed, while the beast was permitted to make war with the saints, and to overcome them, it shall be however but for a limited time; then the power of God shall be manifested, in a remarkable manner, for their deliverance: as if dead bodies were raised to life, and made to stand up on their feet, those faithful witnesses shall, with surprising success, maintain and propagate the true worship of God, to the great terror and amazement of their persecutors. [10]

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.

(12.) As these witnesses were represented raised from the dead, in conformity to the resurrection of Christ; so farther in imitation of his ascension into heaven, they are repre-

[5] Ver. 6.] What God does, according to his word by his prophets, is, according to the style of prophecy, said to be done by them. "Behold," says God to the prophet Jeremiah, i. 9, 10, "I have put my words in thy mouth. See, I have set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build and to plant." In the prophet Hosea, "Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the prophets of my mouth," are observed by interpreters to be equivalent expressions (Hosea vi. 5). Thus, when God brings those judgments upon the world, which he directed his prophets to declare in his name, they may be said, in the style of prophecy, to smite the earth with plagues, as they will; because God will accomplish what, according to his word, they shall denounce against the opposers and corrupters of true religion.

[6] Ver. 7.] What we render, "When they shall have finished their testimony," Mr. Daubuz renders, "While they shall perform their testimony." The original may mean the time of their testimony, as well as the end of it; ὅταν τελέσωσι, as, ὅταν παραδίδωσιν ὑμᾶς, "When they deliver you up" (Matt. x. 19). And τελέω signifies to perfect and complete a thing, as well as to end or finish it: so Christ, upon account of his sufferings, is said to be "made perfect through sufferings" (Heb. ii. 10). The most probable sense appears to be, that the witnesses are to meet with opposition and persecution, during the whole of this period; as the woman was to be in the wilderness, and the beast was to have power, twelve hundred and sixty days, so the witnesses were to prophesy, and to be persecuted, during the same time. They are not single persons, but a perpetual collective body of men, or a succession of witnesses, against the errors and false worship introduced into the church.

[7] Ver. 8.] "The great city," is that city which "reigneth over the kings of the earth" (Rev. xvii. 18), or Rome, the empress of the world. "Streets" of the great city, are its public places throughout its dominions; for the great city is not considered so much in its buildings, as a seat of empire. It is Rome, and the Roman empire, says the Bishop of Meaux; and, taking the great city for Rome, and its empire, he adds, "It is literally true, that Jesus Christ was crucified there, even by the Roman power." And it is moreover true that the same Rome which crucified Christ in person, crucified him also every day in his members. The general meaning of this passage is well expressed by Mr. Daubuz; "The dead bodies of the witnesses shall lie throughout the extent, in the most conspicuous places, or the chief and principal parts of the antichristian jurisdiction."

[8] Ver. 9.] The time in which the people shall show this inhumanity to the witnesses, is said to be three days and a half, which is not to be understood literally for so many natural days only. "Can any man believe," says Mr. Mede, "that the small space of three days and a half is sufficient either for spreading the fame of the death of the witnesses, or for sending the messenger with gifts to and fro among the nations?"—"Yet the expression," says Mr. Daubuz, "is very suitable to the decorum of the symbol of a dead body, that will keep no longer unburied without corruption." There seems, I think, an allusion in the three days and a half, to the time of our Saviour's lying in the grave. Such was the humanity of the times in which Christ suffered, that they permitted his friends to lay his body in the grave; but such shall be the inhumanity of these persecutors, as to deny the rites of burial. Why the time is signified by three days and a half, we shall see farther on ver. 11.

[9] Ver. 10.] The prophets, who reproved the corruption of their times, were used to be accounted disturbers of the public peace, and were often an uneasiness to persons, who, however corrupt they were, could not bear reproof. Thus, when Ahab saw Elijah, he said unto him, "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" The prophets, who preach against the errors of the world, are treated as public enemies, seditious persons, and even as the cause of those public calamities, which they foretell as the punishment of a perverse generation.

[10] Ver. 11.] A day sometimes signifies a season, or undetermined portion of time: "The day of temptation in the wilderness" was forty years (Heb. iii. 8, 9). Day and year are sometimes joined together, for season and time in general: Isa. xxxiv. 8, "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompense for the controversy of Zion." So dies is used with elegance, by the best authors, for time in general: Opinionum commento delet dies.

It is a good rule to judge what portion of time may be sented as ascending in a public manner, in the presence and to the great confusion of their enemies, who shall behold them, after all their oppression, exalted by the glorious power of God, to a state of great honour and influence, as well as of security and peace. [11]

13 And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

(13.) This great power of the witnesses, and prevalency of their doctrines, shall however be attended with great commotions in the world, with great and signal calamities inflicted on that great city, which had for so long time opposed the truth, and oppressed the faithful. A very considerable part of its power shall be taken away, and many persons shall be cut off in her defence, and many others shall be affrighted with the judgments of God, and made sensible of the wickedness of oppressing truth and righteousness, and shall glorify the true God, by forsaking their idolatry, and assisting the cause of pure and true religion. [12]

14 The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly.

(14.) Let not, however, any person imagine, that the church shall be free, in this third period, from opposition and persecution, and trials of their faith and patience, any more than in the two former periods; for a third woe is to follow upon the second, to try them that dwell upon the earth. [13]

15 And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.

(15.) I then perceived in my vision, that the seventh angel sounded his trumpet, upon which proclamation was made with a loud voice in heaven, declaring, that the kingdom of God, and his Christ, the true Christian religion, should triumph over all opposition, and flourish with great success and prosperity throughout all the future ages of time.

16 And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God,

(16.) And the twenty-four elders, whom I saw in my first vision, representing the true church of God, as sitting on seats placed round about the throne of God, arose from their seats, and prostrated themselves before God, to worship him.

17 Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned.

(17.) And they worshipped God by a solemn act of praise, saying, We give thanks unto thee, O Jehovah the Almighty, and everlasting God, that it has pleased thee to show thyself superior to all the opposition of the world, that thou art able to protect, and, according to thy promise, to exalt thy faithful servants in the end.

18 And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be designed by such indeterminate expressions, to consider what is necessary or proportional to the season spoken of. In this place, as Mr. Waple observes, it seems to be necessary that "three days and a half" should be brought to comport with three times and a half, twelve hundred and sixty days, and forty-two months. Thus the time of the witnesses' suffering will be in proportion to the time of their prophecy, which is to be a time of persecution. It will agree with the other representations of the same state of the church, by the woman in the wilderness, and the season of the beast, or time of his persecuting power, which relate to the same period, and help to explain it.

[11] Ver. 12.] To be exalted to heaven, or cast down to hell, signifies, in scripture language, the happy state of those who enjoy the blessings of true religion, or the miserable condition of those who are deprived of them for despising them. Thus our Saviour speaks concerning Capernaum: "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down unto hell" (Matt. xi. 23). The destruction of Satan's power by the kingdom of God, or the success of true religion by the gospel, against the idolatry and wickedness of the world, is expressed in the same figure, Luke x. 18, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." The pride of Babylon is, in like manner, described by the prophet Isaiah, xiv. 13, "For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God." The fall of that haughty persecuting empire is described in the same figurative language, ver. 12, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning!" In this sense, the ascension of the witnesses into heaven, will mean the great success of the doctrines of pure religion taught by them, and the mighty efficacy with which they shall prevail, in the reformation of the church from idolatrous and superstitious corruptions.

[12] Ver. 13.] Interpreters are much divided, as to the tenth part of the city which fell by the earthquake, whether it denotes Rome under the papacy, as Mr. Mede supposes Rome at present to be just the tenth part of ancient Rome; or, whether it means some notable part of the ten kingdoms into which the Roman empire was divided in this period; or suppose, with some, the kingdom of France, or, with others, the fall of the Greek church and empire of Constantinople, under the power of a Mahometan government, or whether it may not mean the whole papal jurisdiction, because it is represented in prophecy under the figurative expressions of "ten toes," "ten horns," "ten kings."

This diversity of opinion had its rise, it may be, from an endeavour to fix too particular a sense on a general expression. We have already observed (ii. 10), that the numbers ten and seven are figurative numbers, denoting multitude, frequency, and perfection. A deliverance out of the many troubles of life, is expressed in the book of Job, by being delivered out of "seven troubles" (v. 19). The seven Spirits of God figuratively express the perfect grace of God's Holy Spirit; the number ten, in like manner, is used to denote many or often. Jacob complained, that Laban had "changed his wages ten times," or very often (Gen. xxxi. 7). When Elkanah said to his wife (1 Sam. i. 8), "Am not I better to thee than ten sons?" the plain meaning is, than many sons. In like manner, Solomon observes of wisdom (Eccles. vii. 19), "Wisdom strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men, which are in the city;" or, than several mighty men. These instances, more of which may be seen in Mr. Daubuz,* are sufficient to show that the numbers seven and ten may be understood of many, or a sufficient number of any thing. The tenth part of the city falling by an earthquake, may then be understood very properly of some considerable part of the empire, the city being considered as the seat of empire and government; it may signify the downfall of some considerable supporters of the beast's persecuting power. The slaughter of seven thousand men may, in like interpretation, mean, such as shall continue to support and assist the antichristian power of this period, in opposition to the kingdom of God and Christ, to the cause of truth and righteousness.

There seems to be a propriety, in these more general expressions, in a general representation of this period, the more particular account being reserved for the after parts of the vision: so that this part of the prophecy seems to show, that judgment shall come on the persecutors of the true church, in full proportion to their iniquities, when the faithful witnesses to the truth shall be eminently protected, and their cause shall wonderfully prevail.

[13] Ver. 14.] We have the mention of three woes, ix. 12, "One woe is past, and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter." This first woe was under the sounding of the fifth angel, when the bottomless pit was opened, with the rise of Mahomet's power and imposture; the second woe is reasonably understood to be during the sounding of the sixth angel, when the four angels were loosed to slay the third part of men (Rev. ix. 13—15), when the Saracens were judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth.

(18.) For though the nations of the earth have, with great fury, persecuted the true religion, now the day of thy wrath is come, to punish them in righteousness, and to vindicate the cause of thy servants, who have been faithful unto death: the time is come to finish the mystery of thy providence towards the churches, and to give the reward promised to prophets, and confessors, and all true Christian worshippers, of every kind and degree: and to destroy them at the last, who, for so long time, by their false doctrine and persecution, had corrupted and destroyed the greater part of the world. [14]

19 And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

(19.) Upon this, I beheld the temple of God in heaven opened, so that I could see the ark of the covenant, the mercy-seat, and place of God's presence, for it was not hid behind a veil: representing not only a state of peace and liberty for the church, the place of worship being opened, but also that, in this state of the church, the true worship of God will be used in great perfection. This happy state of the church shall be attended with great and heavy judgments on the enemies of true religion; a storm of vengeance shall come down from heaven on their heads, terrible as when earthquakes are joined to thunder and lightning. [15] permitted to endanger the whole western empire, and the Christian name and profession every where; the third woe, which was soon to follow the second, will begin its proper order, in the day of the voice of the seventh angel. It may be proper to observe, the woes are designed to represent an afflicted state of the church, rather than calamitous times to the inhabitants of the world in general: so that we are, I think, to consider it as a useful prophetic warning, that this third and last period would call for as much caution and constancy as either of the former. They who will faithfully adhere to the purity of true religion, must expect to find opposition, and meet with woe.

[14] Ver. 18.] Κρίνειν, judicare, sæpe est vindicare, itaque שפט, quod est κρίνειν, vel δικάζειν, judicare, per ἐκδικεῖν, vindicare vertitur, as Grotius* observes. So that, to judge, or try the cause of the dead, or of the martyrs for the truth of the Christian religion, may very naturally be understood to mean, a vindication of their cause, by some eminent act of providence in favour of it; as to vindicate, is a proper sense of judging; and, I think, more proper to the order and intention of the prophecy, than to understand it of the general judgment, which, according to the order of these prophecies, is not to be till after the prosperous state of the church, in which Satan is to be bound for a thousand years.

[15] Ver. 19.] Grotius thinks, that the lightnings and thunderings belong to the next chapter, and refer to a new prophecy; but we may observe, the end of this period is described in the same manner, xvi. 18—21. These voices, thunders, lightnings, and great hail, are interpreted expressly of an exceeding great plague, so that men blasphemed on account of it. This is called, giving unto Babylon "the cup of the wine of the fierceness of God's wrath;" to express the great calamities and desolation with which God, at the end of this period, will punish the obstinate persecutors of his pure worship and true religion, and publicly vindicate the righteous cause of his faithful martyrs.

CHAPTER XII.

SECTION X.

SECOND DESCRIPTION OF THE THIRD PERIOD.

1 And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars:

(1.) I beheld, in a second vision, another representation of this period: there appeared in heaven the figure of a woman, in the most glorious manner imaginable: she seemed to be surrounded with sun-beams, as with a glory; to stand upon the moon, and to have a crown upon her head, in which twelve stars were set as so many diamonds, an image that strongly expressed a state of great dignity and honour. [1]

2 And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

(2.) This woman was farther represented to me in the vision, as a fruitful mother, ready to be delivered of a child,

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XII.

CONTENTS.—We come now to a second representation of the same third period of prophecy, that is, the state of the church and world in the days of the voice of the seventh angel; or, while the woman who fled into her place in the wilderness was nourished there for a time, times, and half a time, or three years and a half, equal to forty-two months, which are equal to twelve hundred and sixty prophetical days, the exact time in which the witnesses were to prophesy. As the former representation showed, that true religion should be preserved among a few faithful confessors, though in a constant state of severe persecution, so this represents the state of the church, under the figure of a woman, persecuted so as to fly into desert places to hide herself; yet preserved and fed there, notwithstanding all endeavours of a furious serpent, ready to destroy her. This plainly describes an afflicted and persecuted state of the church in general, during this period; in which false and idolatrous worship shall be in great power, and the faithful profession of the true religion shall expose men to great danger: that, however, still the true worshippers of God shall be preserved, though in an obscure state, and be enabled, notwithstanding all opposition, to keep and maintain the truth unto the end.

[1] Ver. 1.] It was a well-known custom, at the time of this prophecy, to represent the several virtues and public societies by the figure of a woman in some peculiar dress, many of which are to be seen in the Roman coins; in particular Salus, the emblem of security and protection, is represented as a woman standing upon a globe, to represent the safety and security of the world under the emperor's care, as in a coin of Hadrian's: Globum pede calcans, significans, se imperante, orbi salutem publicam datam.* The consecration of the Roman emperors is expressed in their coins by a moon and stars, as in two of Faustina, to express a degree of glory superior to any on earth.†

Never was any image more expressive of honour and dignity than this in the vision. To stand in the midst of a glory made by the beams of the sun; and upon the moon, as above the low condition of this sublunary world: to wear a crown set with the stars of heaven, as jewels, is something more sublime than any thing whereby antiquity has represented their societies, their virtues, or their deities.

The reader may farther observe in this representation, if he please, with Mr. Daubuz, that the sun may signify Christ; the moon, the Holy Ghost; and the twelve stars, the twelve apostles. Or, he may understand it with Mr. Mede, of the church shining round about, by the faith of Christ, the Sun of righteousness, treading under foot the rudiments of the world, whether Jewish shadows or gentile and to bless the world with a fair and numerous posterity.[2]

3 And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads.

(3.) Besides the figure of the woman, I beheld a representation of another nature: there appeared a great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, and a crown on each of his heads, to show there was a fierce and powerful enemy of the church, intent to make use of all its power, if possible, to destroy it.

4 And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born.

(4.) The power of this dragon was represented so great, that he seemed, by his tail, to strike a great number of the stars out of their places in the heavens, and throw them down on the earth: he seemed to watch the woman with great attention, whom he perceived ready to be delivered, with manifest marks of a design to destroy the child, so soon as it should be born. A fit figure to express the great power of Satan, and his kingdom, their constant opposition to truth, and unwearied endeavours to stop the progress and success of the gospel.[3]

5 And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.

(5.) However, the woman ready to be delivered brought forth a man child, to intimate, that the Christian church should be continued by a constant succession of converts, notwithstanding all opposition. Thus Christ's kingdom should prevail over all enemies, and break all opposition, as the ancient oracles prophesied concerning him, that he should "rule all nations as with a sceptre of iron." As soon as this child was born, I beheld it caught up to God and his throne, to intimate God's care and protection of the true Christian church, and the safety of the church in God's protection.[4]

6 And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

(6.) I perceived also, that the woman was preserved as well as the child she brought forth; but it was by flying into a wilderness, where she found a place provided for her retreat, and where she was taken care of, by the protection of divine Providence, during the time of this period: to intimate, the condition of the church would be difficult and dangerous in these times, like the Israelites, when they wandered in the wilderness; or, as Elijah, when he fled from the persecution of Ahab: yet a divine protection should preserve it, as the Israelites were fed with manna, and Elijah by ravens.

7 And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

(7.) This state of the Christian church was farther represented by a battle in the air, between Michael and his angels on the one side, and the dragon, or the devil, and his party, on the other.

8 And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

(8.) In the conclusion of which, the dragon and his party were so far from obtaining a victory, that they were totally defeated, and driven out of the field of battle.

9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

(9.) Thus the dragon, or old serpent, which in the scriptures means the Devil, and Satan, who had deceived the world into error, idolatry, and wickedness, was cast down, together with his party and followers: to intimate, that there should be a smart contention between faithful Christians, and the maintainers of error, idolatry, and wickedness, which should at the last end in a complete victory over the enemies of true religion.[5]

10 And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.

(10.) I perceived this blessing of the church was acknowledged in a public act of praise and thanksgiving unto God, who had thus manifested his power in the deliverance of his people, and the advancement of his own spiritual kingdom, by the profession and practice of Christianity. For now superstitions, and glorious with the ensigns of the apostolical offspring. Or, he may consider, with Mr. Waple, that the apostolical doctrine is the chief ornament, crown, and glory of the church.

But, however he shall choose one or other of these more particular allusions, this will remain a sure general meaning, —that the blessings of true religion, in the revelation of Jesus Christ, as taught by his apostles, that is, of the true Christian religion, deserve the highest esteem and honour, however they may be despised by the world.

[2] Ver. 2.] The metaphor of a mother, blessed with a fair posterity, is very proper to represent the public happiness, by an increase both of numbers and strength. It is an easy figure to consider the church as a mother, and the converts to truth and righteousness, the true worshippers of God, as her children. The expressions which represent her as a woman in travail, may principally mean her fruitfulness, and denote the number of converts to true religion, rather than the afflictions of the church on account of her profession. The happiness of the empire in the fruitfulness of the imperial family, is often expressed in coins, Fœcunditas Augustæ, seculi felicitas.

[3] Ver. 4.] The devil is often represented in scripture as a dragon, and the old serpent; and the prophecy itself so explains it, ver. 9, "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world." He seems represented by a great, and red, or bloody-coloured dragon, to describe both his power and cruelty in opposing true religion. The seven heads and crowns, and ten horns, is a description so exactly agreeable to the description of the beast, in the thirteenth and seventeenth chapters, that it may, I think, be justly understood as a limitation of the opposition here meant, to the times of the beast, or to that time when the Roman power was represented by ten horns, as well as by seven heads and crowns; or not before ten kingdoms were erected by the nations which broke in upon the Roman empire, and divided it into many independent governments; that is, properly, during the time of this third period.

[4] Ver. 5.] Grotius supposes, I think with great probability, that these expressions, "And her child was caught up unto God and his throne," are an allusion to the preservation of Joash, in the time of Athaliah's usurpation, when she put to death all the rest of the royal family (2 Kings xi. 2, 3); "Jehosheba took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons which were slain.——And he was hid in the house of the Lord six years." He was kept safe in one of the chambers of the temple, till he was brought out by Jehoiada the high-priest, and restored to the kingdom of David. Thus the true worshippers of God shall not all be destroyed by the enemies of religion; some, like Joash, shall be kept safe, as if in heaven, the true temple, till they shall appear publicly with victory over their enemies.

[5] Ver. 9.] Many interpreters understand this victory over Satan, in which he is represented cast down from heaven with his angels, to be intended of the heathen power of Rome; so that idolatry had lost the advantage of the civil establishment throughout the Roman empire. In this period, the temporal power of Rome, as we shall hereafter see, was to be in the hands of one, who styles himself, "The head of the Christian church." It was a great victory over Satan

Satan had lost the opportunity of accusing Christians as guilty of impiety, for refusing to conform to the religion of the empire and idolatrous worship of the gods of Rome, or censuring their zeal for the true Christian religion as insincere; asserting, that they would soon renounce the profession of it, if they were to suffer on account of it.[6]

11 And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

(11.) The patience, faith, and perseverance of the church, were sufficient to show Satan a false accuser, and obtained a great advantage for them; as they were an eminent proof, that they preferred the cause of true religion to every thing else: and as their Saviour confirmed his doctrine with his blood, they were ready to confirm their testimony, by constancy unto death, according to the grace and spirit which the church should receive from Christ their Lord.

12 Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabiters of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

(12.) Let therefore angels and saints, and the whole church rejoice, and be thankfully sensible what salvation Christ has obtained for his people, and shall assuredly bestow upon them. Yet let all the inhabitants of the earth consider, that this victory over Satan notwithstanding, his power is not yet quite destroyed, he will still be able to do great mischief, and will attempt it with the more wrath, as the time of his opposition is much shortened.

13 And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child.

(13.) The devil will show his wrath upon this great loss of his power, now the profession of Christianity so universally prevails against heathen idolatry, so long supported by the power of the empire; he will still find out new ways to persecute the true church, and those who are careful to preserve the purity of true religion.

14 And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

(14.) However, the true church, represented by the woman, appeared to be assisted against the wrath of the devil; eagles' wings were given unto her, that she might escape into a place of retirement and safety, which was provided for her during the time of this period.[7]

15 And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.

(15.) The devil, as the inveterate enemy of true religion, attempted, if possible, to prevent the escape of the church, into a place of safety, though in secret retirement; he cast out, as it were, a flood of waters, to destroy her, before she should be able to reach the wilderness.[8]

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

(16.) But this danger of the church shall be prevented, by a remarkable protection of divine Providence, raising several of the inhabitants of the earth to help the escape of the faithful worshippers, as if the earth had been commanded to open itself and receive the flood, that it might not overtake them who were flying from it.[9]

17 And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

(17.) It was moreover represented to me, that though this providential assistance of the church favoured its escape, it rather increased the rage of Satan: he continued with fresh fury, and in all possible methods, to excite and carry on the persecution of the true worshippers of God, according to the purity of the gospel, and revelation of Jesus Christ; who would not submit to the idolatrous doctrines and corrupt worship introduced into the church in this period.

and his power, when Christianity had fully prevailed over heathenism in the empire; and we may add, it was also a considerable victory over Satan, when an effectual stop was put to the Mahometan imposture in these western parts: though, as we shall observe in the following parts of this representation, the devil, notwithstanding this diminution of his power, is still to retain sufficient to do great mischief within this period, and will use it with much wrath, against the true worshippers of God and his faithful servants.

[6] Ver. 10.] "These expressions," says Mr. Waple, "are taken from Job and Zechariah, where the scriptures, speaking after the manner of men, represent Satan as accusing good and pious men before God. This he does, by aggravating their faults and imperfections, and by exciting wicked men to raise false accusations against them, as was notoriously done against the primitive Christians." Mr. Daubuz observes, "The accuser, according to the custom of the eastern nations, and in some cases by the law of Moses, was appointed to be the executioner (Deut. xiii. 9): so that when the church is no longer in danger of persecution for the profession of Christianity, Satan is said to be thrown down, as having lost the power of accusing and executing such as make open profession of it."

[7] Ver. 14.] To "bear on eagles' wings," is an allusion to the strength and swiftness of an eagle's flight, and does well express the readiness and power with which God does often deliver his church out of its dangers; but whether the two wings of an eagle are here put to signify the eastern and western parts of the Roman empire, of which an eagle is the armorial ensign, I shall leave to the reader's judgment.

[8] Ver. 15.] Floods and inundations often come so suddenly, and with such violence, as to drown or carry away all things within their reach, and give no time for an escape. They are a proper figure to express some great and sudden danger. Nahum thus describes the judgments of God, which shall utterly destroy his enemies (i. 8), "But with an overflowing flood, he will make an utter end of the place thereof." So that by this similitude, we may well understand some quick and smart attempt of the enemies of true religion, to cut off all hope of safety for the true worshippers of God, even in retirement.

[9] Ver. 16. And the earth helped the woman.] The figure in general is a natural representation of stopping the course of a flood, by receiving it into some great opening or gap in the earth; and earth, taken in its most natural interpretation, for our habitable world, and the inhabitants of it, will fully answer the meaning of the figurative expression. Thus, the general meaning will be to this purpose: The providence of God will raise up some persons, who shall aid and assist true Christians, notwithstanding the violence of persecution. I do not perceive there is need of a more particular application of the word "earth," to the corrupt part of the church, and that it became master of its conquerors; the barbarous nations at length receiving the manners, religion, and the very name of Romans.

It seems more agreeable to the design of the prophecy, and of this representation, to understand it of assistance from some persons of power and authority in the world, giving protection to the witnesses, against the growing corruptions of these times, not permitting the decrees and edicts for establishing idolatrous doctrines and worship to be immediately executed, or so suddenly as to suppress all opposition, and not give time for a sufficient number of confessors to stand up in the cause of truth, and continue to maintain it. The historical events, answering this prophetical description, which we shall afterward see, will, I hope, more clearly explain it.

CHAPTER XIII.

SECTION XI.

THIRD DESCRIPTION OF THE THIRD PERIOD.

1 And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy.

(1.) After the two foregoing visions, I beheld a third, farther to explain them: I seemed standing by the sea-side, when I perceived a wild beast rising out of the sea, of a very remarkable form. It had seven heads and ten horns, with a crown on each horn, and a blasphemous inscription on each of his heads, to denote a new form of government, that was to be erected in the city of Rome, by the great commotions of the world, after the imperial power had been destroyed, and the empire should be divided into ten distinct and independent kingdoms or sovereignties. [1]

2 And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.*

(2.) The form of this wild beast, which I saw in my vision, was made up of some likeness to the several beasts of prey, the leopard, the bear, and the lion; the persecuting empire, in Daniel's vision, being represented by these beasts, famous for strength and rapaciousness, in seizing and devouring their prey. They were a proper figure to signify the rise of a new empire, powerful, tyrannical, and cruel: and that the old serpent, the devil, who had hitherto persecuted the true worshippers of God, by the several great monarchies of the world, would engage this new power, advanced in the seat of the last of these monarchies, the Roman empire, to use that power in the persecution of true religion, as the preceding tyrannies had done before it. [2]

3 And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIII.

CONTENTS.—In this chapter we have a farther account of the state of the church and world, in this third period. The representation of the wild beasts in this vision, refers to the same times with the two former visions, of the witnesses prophesying in sackcloth, and the woman flying into the wilderness. Power is given unto the beast to continue, or to make war, and prevail forty-two months (ver. 5).

This vision gives a more distinct account of the manner and means by which the true church and worshippers of God should be persecuted, and so greatly oppressed, as is represented by the woman's flying into the wilderness, and slaying the witnesses. So that this representation, in conjunction with the two former, will afford us a sufficient description of the state of providence, and the church, with the useful lessons of caution, patience, and faithfulness, in times of great corruption and great danger, which are the principal intentions of the Spirit of prophecy, in the whole of these revelations.

[1] Ver. 1.] A "beast," θηρίον, signifies a wild savage beast. In the prophecies of Daniel, beasts are known symbols of the monarchies represented in his visions (ch. vii.). In the after parts of this prophecy, it is expressly interpreted by an angel to mean a king, kingly authority, or government; "And there are seven kings, five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth (king or government), and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition" (xvii. 10, 11). The horns are, by the same angel, interpreted to mean kings, or kingdoms (ver. 12). "And the ten horns which thou sawest are (or, signify) ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet (at the time of the vision); but receive power as kings one hour with the beast:" μίαν ὥραν, in the same season or time with the beast.

The rising of the beast, then, will signify, the rise of some new dominion or government; the rising of a wild beast, θηρίον, the rise of a tyrannical government; and rising out of the sea, that it should owe its original to the commotions of the people: so "waters" are interpreted by the same angel, ver. 15. In the visions of Daniel, the four great beasts, the symbols of the four great monarchies, are represented rising out of the sea in a storm: "I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea, and four great beasts came up from the sea" (Dan. vii. 2, 3).

"Seven heads" are interpreted by the angel to signify seven mountains, and seven kings (xvii. 9, 10). Hence, we may sufficiently understand, that by this beast was meant a Roman government, different from that in being at the time of the vision, and which was to arise after the imperial government should be passed away, as five other forms of government had passed before it. That some form of government in the city of Rome is signified by it, seems very evident; for the seven heads are, in one figurative meaning, interpreted to signify seven mountains; and it is expressly called, "the great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth," xvii. 18. Urbs septicollis, orbis caput, and, orbis terrarum domina, are sufficient descriptions of Rome in Roman authors, and as well understood as if Rome itself had been expressly named. Upon the heads of this beast were names or inscriptions of blasphemy. This government is elsewhere described as a mystical Babylon, full of names of blasphemy, xvii. 3—5, to signify, that it should establish and propagate idolatrous doctrines and worship; for, as idolatry is a reproachful contempt of the one true God, worshipping and serving the creature more than the Creator, it is called blasphemy in the style of the prophecy. The idolatry of the Jews is called, "burning incense upon the mountains, and blaspheming upon the hills," Isa. lxv. 7; so the prophet Ezekiel, xx. 27, "In this your fathers have blasphemed me;" that is, by offering their sacrifices on high places, and in groves, according to the rites of the heathen idolaters.

This beast had also ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, or each of his horns was crowned. According to the interpretation of the angel, xvii. 12, "The ten horns which thou sawest are (or, signify) ten kingdoms which have received no kingdom as yet, but receive power one hour (or, in the same hour, at the same time,) with the beast."

This state of Roman government, then, as it was to be a new form of government, it was also to be contemporary with ten kings or kingdoms, which were to be so many distinct governments, at the same time and in the same period with it. But neither of them was to receive his power till the king or form of government then in being, that is, the imperial, should pass away, and another was come, which was to continue a short space.

These several descriptions together, all which must be united in the kingdom of the beast, seem plainly enough to denote a new form of Roman government, after the imperial government should cease, and after the exarchate of Ravenna should be suppressed, when the Roman empire should be divided into ten distinct governments or kingdoms; which can be no other than the government of Rome in the hands of the popes.

[2] Ver. 2.] "From hence it appears," says Mr. Waple, "that this was the fourth or Roman monarchy (in one form of it), because it is made up of the three former, whose people and nations it conquered, and out of whose ruins it grew; and because it had all the qualities of subtlety and cruelty which are thought to be signified by these beasts." It is observed by Mr. Daubuz, that the powers constituting the beast carried on the same design against true religion, though in another form, as the dragon did, when the empire was to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast.

(3.) I perceived also, that one of the seven heads of this beast appeared to have received such a wound as seemed to be mortal; but this mortal wound was healed up, though the scar remained as a mark of it. This cure was so remarkable, as occasioned wonder and astonishment in all who beheld it. To signify, that this new power arose in the Roman empire, after that empire had received such a blow in one of its heads, or forms of government, as left no human probable prospect that Rome should ever rise to power and empire any more; and it would be greatly to the astonishment of the world, to see the power of Rome revive again, in the new form of government represented by the beast. [3]

4 And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?

(4.) The world was generally seduced to comply with the idolatrous practices the old serpent, the devil, introduced anew, by means of this new-erected power in Rome, the greater part of the world acknowledged this authority, and submitted to it without opposition, as thinking it would be in vain to withstand it. [4]

5 And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months.

(5.) The manner in which the beast exercised the power he had received was thus represented, that he greatly magnified himself above others, and claimed unlimited powers and authority to enforce what he required; and the time wherein the beast was permitted to establish idolatry, was the same with the term of the church's state of persecution, represented by the witnesses, and the woman flying into the wilderness, or forty-two months, equal to twelve hundred and sixty prophetical days, or so many years. [5]

6 And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

(6.) And this new-erected government of Rome used the authority it had attained, in making and publishing constitutions for the establishment of idolatry, in contempt of God and his true worship, and by all methods of oppression and persecution forcing the church to comply with them, and yield obedience unto them. [6]

7 And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.

(7.) The power of this new Roman government became so great by divine permission, that it prevailed against the worshippers of God, either to force them to a compliance with the corruptions established by its authority, or to persecute them for their constancy; and this oppressive power was extended far and wide over many nations and people.

pagan. The description itself naturally expresses a new power rising up in the Roman state, mighty and terrible, directed by the perpetual enemy of true religion, to persecute the faithful worshippers of God. The general meaning of this part of the vision is well expressed by Mr. Mede: "I saw, saith John, the type of the last state of the Roman empire, wherein, governing under the seventh head, it should be divided into ten kingdoms; and yet, even as he had done under his former heads, he should blaspheme the only true God, by the worship of idols." May we not here observe, that the prophecy speaks of the civil power of Rome? why should we then search after it in an ecclesiastical supremacy?

[3] Ver. 3.] The seven heads being interpreted by the angel to signify seven kings, or forms of government, may well direct us to understand this deadly wound of one of these heads to be the destruction of one of those forms of government, in such manner as to threaten the utter overthrow of all power in Rome, as in Babylon; so that it should never rise to be the seat of empire again: therefore, they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, when they behold "the beast that was, and is not, and yet is" (Rev. xvii. 8). The most natural interpretation of which expressions seems to be, that the world beheld with great wonder, a city once so powerful quite destroyed, for some time ceasing to be an empire, and deprived of all authority, yet rising again to empire, and regaining a great authority, in a very surprising manner. It seems also plain, by comparing this description with the seventeenth chapter, that the head which was mortally wounded, was the sixth head or form of government, at the time of the vision; "Five of the seven kings are fallen," says the angel to John, ver. 10, "and one is, and the other is not yet come." The form of government in being at the time of the vision was the imperial; and after the imperial government ceased in Augustulus, Rome was no seat of government during the exarchate of Ravenna, and had no human prospect of being the seat of empire again, till this new power arose, when the exarchate was given to the popes, and Rome became the seat of their government, and has continued so ever since. It seems also intended by the angel's interpretation, that we should consider the city of Rome, as marked out in this prophecy for the seat of government, to prevent mistakes, that we should not understand this prophecy of an empire or government, in any other place than the city of Rome, though it should take the name and style of the Roman empire, as the Greek emperors, and the emperors of Germany, have severally done. This may give us a good reason, why the city of Rome, in this prophecy, is described by its natural situation, as well as by its government, and why seven heads are interpreted to mean seven mountains, as well as seven kings.

[4] Ver. 4.] "They did freely yield themselves in obedience to the beast," says Mr. Mede, "as to one who so far excelled in power, that none was able to make resistance." "The admirers of the beast," says Mr. Daubuz, "look upon him as superior to all other powers, and therefore obey his commands in committing idolatry; and, in doing this, worship also the beast. For to commit idolatry, through fear of any power, makes that power his god, because master of his conscience: as to worship the beast, in the eastern style, was to be subject to it, so to be subject to it, in its idolatrous constitutions, or exercising the great authority and power which it had received from the dragon, may be said to worship the dragon in worshipping the beast, and yielding obedience to its idolatrous constitutions."

[5] Ver. 5.] The "mouth speaking great things," seems to be taken from the description of the little horn in Daniel's vision, vii. 8, and is explained, ver. 11, by "the voice of the great words which the horn spake;" and yet farther, xi. 36, by the description of a king, who "shall do according to his will, and shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods: this mouth, speaking great things, may then well signify claims of unlimited authority, a proud and severe execution of tyrannical power. "We may here note," says Mr. Daubuz, "that to speak great things and blasphemies, are put together, as the one signifies tyranny, and the other idolatry; if we join both together, they will signify to establish idolatry by tyranny;" or, according to Mr. Mede, he exercised his power in two things, in blasphemy against God, and persecution of the saints. Power was given to him (the beast) to continue (in the margin, "to make war"), in the original, ἐξουσία ποιῆσαι· this seems well explained by a power to do what he pleased; meaning either an authority to make what constitutions he should think fit, or power to put those constitutions into execution, by punishing every one who should refuse obedience to them.*

[6] Ver. 6.] Any acts of idolatrous worship may well be expressed by blaspheming God and his name, as they deny to the true God his distinguishing honour, and give it to creatures, whether to images, saints, or angels. The church, as it is called "the temple of God," the place of God's presence, is properly also called his "tabernacle." "They that dwell in heaven," are understood by Grotius of all saints, all Christians, whose conversation is in heaven. This form of 8 And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

(8.) Insomuch, that all the inhabitants of the earth, where this new power reached, were prevailed upon to receive his idolatrous constitutions, and yield obedience to his tyrannical authority; such true and faithful servants of God only excepted, who were enrolled in the registers as heirs of eternal life, according to the promises of Christ's gospel, who, from the beginning, was the true propitiation and mediator of acceptance and blessing.[7]

9 If any man have an ear, let him hear.

(9.) And now let every good Christian, who is desirous to preserve himself in an hour of temptation, and preserve the hopes of eternal life, attentively consider the cautions, warnings, consolations, and encouragement, of this prophecy.

10 He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

(10.) For every one may be assured, that God, the righteous governor and judge of the world, will finally render to every man according to his works, and punish the enemies of his church in due time, with a punishment equal to their tyranny and persecution. This consideration may support the patience and faith of the saints: they shall triumph in the end over all their enemies, God shall vindicate their cause, and maintain his own honour, in the punishment of their oppressors.

11 And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.

(11.) I farther beheld in my visions another appearance, as of a second wild beast, rising out of the earth, which had two horns, like the horns of a lamb, but his voice was like that of a dragon, to represent another persecuting government, exercising its authority with a show of meekness and charity, but carrying on the opposition of the devil, the old serpent, to pure religion, and promoting idolatry by persecution.

12 And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

(12.) And this second persecuting power had all the powers of the first or new-revived form of Roman government, and used its authority to spread the power of this new Roman government beyond the bounds of its own proper dominion, so as to oblige the several nations to yield obedience to the new authority revived in the city of Rome, after it had been so long deprived of all authority, and seemed to have lost all hope of recovering it.[8] expression seems to be taken from the prophet Daniel, viii. 10, where it is said of the little horn which came up out of one of the four horns of the he-goat, or one of the princes which arose in one of the four kingdoms into which the empire of Alexander the Great was divided, that it "waxed great even unto the host of heaven, and it cast down some of the host, and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them." On these expressions, Mr. Lowth seems justly to observe, that as the faithful are heirs of the kingdom of heaven, so the names and titles of the heavenly church are sometimes given to that on earth; the Christian church is called, "the Jerusalem which is above," Gal. iv. 26, and the governors of it are styled "angels," Rev. i. 20. In like manner, the host of heaven means here the Jewish church: "they which dwell in heaven," especially when mentioned with "the tabernacle of God," may be understood, according to the prophetic language, of the true church, and worshippers of God. Then to blaspheme them that dwell in heaven, will signify the contempt and injurious manner with which this new government of Rome shall treat the true worshippers of God, as well as God himself, and his name. But as many interpreters of great judgment and learning, Mede, Waple, Daubuz, &c., give another sense of "the tabernacle of God," and "them that dwell in heaven," it will be fit to set it before the reader. By the tabernacle of God, they understand the body of Christ, which is blasphemed by the doctrine of transubstantiation, and the idolatrous practices consequent thereupon, adoring the bread, instead of Christ the tabernacle of God, and blaspheming the heavenly inhabitants, the angels and saints in heaven, by giving them worship and adoration; and, as Mr. Mede adds, disgracing the blessed spirits with contumelious and wicked fables and miracles. Which of these the reader will prefer, must be left to his own judgment; the former seems to me the more probable, as well as the more natural and easy interpretation.

[7] Ver. 8.] Perseverance in the faith of the gospel, and true worship of God, in this great hour of temptation, which would deceive all but the elect, is very usefully represented as the character of those whose names are registered in the Lamb's book of life; to show, that they who endure to the end shall be saved; and that the salvation of God, through Christ, belongs to none but those who shall persevere. A powerful motive and encouragement to constancy, the great design of the whole revelation; and which is therefore most properly kept in view, in every part of it. We have already observed, "to write names in the book of life," is an allusion either to the registers in which the families of the priests, or freemen of cities, were used to be entered upon record (iii. 5).

[8] Ver. 12.] Interpreters differ very much as to the true intention of this prophetic description, and what is meant by this second beast coming up out of the earth.

With some* it signifies philosophy, and, in particular, the Pythagorean, a great support of the Roman idolatry, with its pompous speculations and pretences to divination and miracles.

Others suppose it means some one or more sorcerers, or magicians, who were heathen, and made use of by the devil, to support and advance heathenism and idolatry; so that an author of great name† concludes, it is most reasonable to interpret this second beast of Apollonius Tyanæus, who is reported to have done such feats and miracles, as are compared by Hierocles to the miracles of Christ, and preferred before them.

Others‡ understand this second beast of the pope with his clergy: they observe, "The pope himself, and alone, though he may be termed a false prophet, yet he maketh not up the beast, except his clergy be joined with him; since the beast doth signify a company of men, composed of a certain order of members, like as a beast hath, not one man alone."

Mr. Whiston's§ notion seems much the same with this of Mr. Mede: he understands the second beast, of the rise of antichrist, strictly so called, the pope of Rome, and his subordinate hierarchy.

Mr. Waple‖ observes, "As by the former beast, the papacy, as monarchic and imperial, was fitly represented; so, in this type, there seems to be a representation of the apostate hierarchy, or of the whole body of the ecclesiastics, as antichristian; and a body politic (signified by a beast in prophecy), under two co-ordinate powers or horns, by which the hierarchy of the eastern and western parts of the empire, before the pope came to be a horn, or to have his antichristian supremacy, is very fitly typified."

Mr. Daubuz supposes "the former wild beast consisted of the antichristian civil powers, which were to be in the Roman empire during the second period of the church, and that the Christian ecclesiastic powers, in the said empire, during the said space of time, are the beast which is here intended; and therefore, that the two horns are the successive lines of the bishops of Rome and Constantinople, having under them the whole body of the corrupted clergy, as the former beast had that of the laity; both these bishops having pretended to be universal bishops of the church."

Finally, The illustrious Sir Isaac Newton¶ observes, "The second beast which rose up out of the earth was the church of the Greek empire: for it had two horns like those of a lamb, and therefore was a church, and it spake as the dragon, and therefore was of his religion; and it came out of the earth, and by consequence in his kingdom."

To take off somewhat of the uncertainty so great a variety of opinions is apt to occasion, let us attend more closely to the prophetic description itself: it will, I apprehend, lessen the number of opinions, to show some of them inconsistent with plain and obvious circumstances of the prophetic description.

It is an observation of consequence, that the vision of this second wild beast, arising out of the earth, was after the vision of the first beast which rose out of the sea, and cannot signify any power to arise in the Roman empire before that time.

This second beast, moreover, exercised the power of the first beast before him, as a sort of lieutenant or deputy to him; in particular, to bring all persons, where his power reached, to receive the authority of the first beast, "to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed," says the prophecy expressly. So that this description is inconsistent with any power opposite to the authority of the first beast, as well as it is with any power that rose up before it.

It seems also very probable, that this second beast, whatever is meant by it, had a power and authority very like the power and authority of the first beast, and very nearly resembling it: "He exerciseth all the power of the first beast," ἐξουσίαν τοῦ πρώτου θηρίου πᾶσαν ποιεῖ. He had the exercise of the whole power; so that of what nature or kind the authority and power of the first beast were, the authority and power of the second beast were of the same kind. Hence this description will be also inconsistent with any supposition that makes the authority and power of the second beast contrary to, or different from, the power of the first.

We have already observed, from many concurring circumstances, that the first beast did not arise till the imperial government had passed away; till Rome seemed to have lost irrecoverably the seat of empire; till the Roman empire was divided into ten kingdoms; till the city of Rome should receive a new form of government, and become a seat of empire again; till a government should be erected in the city of Rome, in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, which was to persecute the saints one thousand two hundred and sixty years. All these considerations determine the rise of the first beast out of the sea to be, when the exarchate of Ravenna was given to the papacy, when Rome was made the seat of the pope's temporal dominion, and the last form of Roman government began, which has lasted ever since to this day.

We fully know in history what this power of the papacy is: the popes claim the supreme authority, as heads of the church in things religious, and they have civil authority, as sovereign princes, in their own dominion, which is expressively called, "the patrimony of St. Peter."

This plain account of the prophetic description, will much lessen, I think, the variety of opinions before mentioned; not to remark, that the philosophy, or magic, of Apollonius Tyanæus, is no form of government, which is the true meaning of beasts and horns, in the language of the prophets. It may be sufficient to show, that the philosophy of the bishop of Meaux, that the magic and miracles of Apollonius Tyanæus, with the learned Grotius and Dr. Hammond, are absolutely inconsistent with the time of this period, wherein the first beast rose up out of the sea, which yet was before the time when this second beast rose up out of the earth; neither will the prophetic description, for the same reason, agree with Mr. Waple's opinion, that this second beast means the hierarchy of the eastern and western parts of the empire, before the pope came to be a horn, or to have his antichristian supremacy. The same reason holds against Mr. Daubuz's opinion, that the first beast consisted of the antichristian civil powers; and the second beast of the antichristian ecclesiastical powers, especially as he understands it, that, from the times of Leo, there was in the church a double ecclesiastical monarchy of two bishops œcumenical, who pretended to have all the power of the Lamb. For this dispute between the two sees of Rome and Constantinople was long before the city of Rome became the seat of empire in the papacy; nor can a contest for a power between the two metropolitans of the eastern and western empire, be well understood of the power of the second beast, which was to exercise all the power of the first beast; not to weaken or suppress it, but to promote the power of the first beast, and to force all persons to submit themselves to it. And this observation is also a considerable difficulty in Sir Isaac Newton's opinion, that this second beast was the church of the Greek empire. We may observe, that to place the rise of the two beasts, at the division of the empire between Gratian and Theodosius, A. D. 379,* greatly antedates the true time of the last form of Roman government, and throws back the third period very far into the second, contrary to the order of the prophecy. It is farther to be observed, that the Greek church was so far from using its power and authority, to force all persons to submit to the papacy, that it was used in continual opposition to the authority of the Roman church; it not only denied the pope's supremacy, but separated also, with great warmth, from its communion: and the Roman church is so far from esteeming the Greek church as a friend, that it treats it as an apostate church, in a state of schism and rebellion.

Finally, Mr. Mede's opinion, that the second beast is the pope with his clergy, has many difficulties attending it. The first beast is represented as distinct from the second, and from the ten kings or kingdoms, though they give their power and strength to the beast; and therefore cannot well be the whole state of the ten kingdoms growing up again into one Roman commonwealth, united with the pope as high-priest. Besides, if the power of the pope in Rome be the first beast, the same papal power can hardly be intended, with very little alteration, by the second beast. It must, in all likelihood, signify some distinct persecuting power, of like nature and kind with the first, supporting and advancing the authority of the first. Perhaps it may be said, these observations, by lessening the uncertainty occasioned by so many different interpretations, may make the matter worse, and leave no certain interpretation, at all.

I hope not. Let us see, then, whether we cannot find out what will answer this prophetic description in all its circumstances.

We are then to find out a power, which is to arise after the first beast, in which a supremacy in spirituals was united with the authority of a temporal prince, in the popes.

We are, moreover, to find out a power, like that of the papal government, which is to execute all the power of the first beast; which seems to express a like power, in which civil and religious authority shall be united.

We are also to find out such a power, as shall be used to support and advance the authority of the popes, and force obedience to it.

We need not look far in history, I think, to find a power that fully answers all these characters.

We have seen at large in the preface, how Pepin of France gave the exarchate of Ravenna to the church of Rome: this was the rise of the first beast, in the temporal dominion of the popes over Rome, and the countries that compose the state of the church, as St. Peter's patrimony.

A little after this time, the emperor Charles the Great, and his successors, endowed several churches in their states with large temporal estates, to which were annexed the jurisdictions and royalties which, in those times, were used to belong to the most honourable tenures, such as earldoms, duchies, and principalities; whereby they had a temporal authority added to their spiritual, very nearly resembling that of the church of Rome, in virtue of St. Peter's patrimony.

could cause fire to come down from heaven,* at whose prayer fire from heaven burned the sacrifice, and consumed those whom Ahaziah sent to seize him.† [9]

14 And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.

(14.) The advantages these pretended miracles had obtained over a great part of the world, by their credulity and superstition, were artfully improved to deceive them yet farther, so far as to persuade them to deify the pope, or erect an idol to his honour; so that they were taught it was their duty to pay a religious obedience, in all things, to his authority and orders, as to God himself and his word.

15 And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

(15.) This image whereby the pope was deified, is not to be understood of a lifeless and dumb idol; but, like those statues of the heathen gods, which gave forth oracles, as if animated by an indwelling spirit: so the orders and constitutions of the pope were published to the world by the subordinate clergy, as oracles, obliging all nations to a religious obedience, and supporting their authority with all their power, treating all men as worthy of death, who should refuse an entire submission to them in any particular.

16 And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads:

(16.) The obligation of this entire submission and obedience to the papal decrees was carried so high, that every person, of whatever rank or condition, was to make some public acknowledgment of it, as servants were used to be marked by their masters, or as persons consecrated to some heathen deity were used to mark themselves with some figure, as a badge, denoting the deity to whom they were consecrated.

17 And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.

(17.) It was made so penal, for any to omit this profession of obedience to the papal constitutions, that no man was permitted to buy or sell, but was deprived of all commerce with men, and civil privileges of life, if he did not, some way or other, make this profession. [10]

18 Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.

(18.) It will be a considerable point of knowledge, in this mystical description, to find out, by a given number, the name of this beast, so as to know when this idolatrous tyrannical power shall arise; and from thence know what power is meant by this prophetical representation. Now there is a certain number, which, in a way of reckoning usual among men, will teach it; that number is six hundred and sixty-six. [11]

These powers went on still increasing, till, in some short process of time, especially in the Germanic empire, they became to be real principalities. Several bishops of Germany have been, for many centuries, in the rank, and have enjoyed the full powers and authority of sovereign princes; some have attained the highest dignity, and chief administration of the empire, as electors, in all things equal, in some things superior, in dignity and authority, to the other princes of the empire, not excepting such electors of the empire as are kings. This has been long the fixed and settled constitution of that principal government of Europe, which now uses the style of "the sacred Roman empire."

It is easy to see how nearly this authority resembles the powers of the papacy, or first beast; and it is easy to observe, in the constant course of history, that this authority has been used all along, to cause the earth, and them that dwell therein, to worship the first beast, or to obey his commands in all things. By this it is, that popes have had the power, as well as the insolence, to tread on the necks of kings and emperors. And it has been the great support of the idolatrous worship of that church, against all the powerful and promising attempts of reformation.

It is a just remark of Bishop Burnet,‡ that this appeared so early as the days of Charles the Great himself. "He had raised the church so high, and given it such dominions, and had, by so many repeated laws, established their jurisdiction and temporalities, that it was not perhaps in his power, chiefly in his old age, when the vigour and heat of his spirits had failed, to rectify what was amiss."

To this, I think, all the other parts of this prophetic description will agree, as we shall more fully see hereafter. Nor does it much differ from the opinions of Mr. Mede, Waple, Whiston, and Daubuz. It supposes this description to mean the same body of men, the clergy, subordinate to the pope, promoting his power and authority; it only takes in a point of view, and period of time, more agreeable to the order and circumstances of the prophetic description.

[9] Ver. 13.] The idolatry of the church of Rome has been greatly supported by a pretence to miracles, though the most of them have plain marks of falsehood and imposture; yet the Roman church is so fond of a pretence to miracles, that it has made it one of the marks of the true church, and has persuaded the credulous, ignorant, and superstitious, to believe it, who are always the larger number of mankind.

[10] Ver. 17.] Many learned men have thought these expressions relate to the manner in which Ptolemy Philopater persecuted the Jews; "He forbade any to enter into his palace, who did not sacrifice to the gods he worshipped: whereby he excluded the Jews all access to him, either for the suing to him for justice, or the obtaining of his protection in what case soever they should stand in need of it." He ordered by another decree, "That all of the Jewish nation that lived in Alexandria should be degraded from the first rank of citizens, of which they had always hitherto been from the first founding of the city, and be enrolled in the third rank, among the common people of Egypt; that all of them should come thus to be enrolled, and at the time of their enrolment have the mark of an ivy-leaf, the badge of the god Bacchus, by a hot iron impressed upon them; and that all those who should refuse to be thus enrolled, and be stigmatized with the said mark, should be made slaves; and that if any of them should stand out against this decree he should be put to death." Thus the history is related by Dr. Prideaux,* from the third book of the Maccabees.

[11] Ver. 18.] The number six hundred and sixty-six is given as a number by which the name of the beast may be found out. The number is designed to have some sort of secrecy in it. The number itself is the same in all the places of units, tens, and hundreds, 666. This some have observed as a part of the mystery; but they should have observed, that though this is true in the English way of numeration, the original does not use three figures, but three different letters of the Greek alphabet, χ ξ ϛ. Prophetic numbers will often require some skill in calculation; to find out, for instance, when days are to be taken for years, or from what time any particular calculation is to take its date.

In the application of this number, some wisdom will be required; perhaps it will principally lie in finding out after what manner the calculation is to be made. The exhortation, "Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast," seems to intimate, that if men hit on the right way of counting or calculating, they will find the meaning of it; for "it is the number of a man," a way in which men are used to number, says Mr. Waple, as the "measure of a man," is a measure in use among men (Rev. xxi. 17): and "to write with a man's pen," is to write with such a pen, and with such characters as are in use among men (Isa. viii. 1).

The great authority of Irenæus, who wrote so near the time, within less than a hundred years of the Revelation itself, and whose master Polycarp was a disciple of St. John, gave great weight to his opinion. Many have taken his manner of counting for granted, that it must be some name, the letters of which will make the number six hundred and sixty-six. And many have been satisfied in the name he proposes to answer this number, which is the Greek word Λατεινος.

There had been more reason to follow Irenæus, had Irenæus himself been fully satisfied in his own interpretation.

It is justly observed by the Bishop of Meaux,* that Irenæus does not propose his opinion with any authority as an interpretation coming from John, but as a conjecture of his own. Farther, Irenæus mentions two other names as answering this number, besides Lateinos; Euanthas and Teitan. He expressly adds, that he is not positive in that matter; and gives this reason for it, if it had been necessary to know the name exactly, John would himself have revealed it more clearly. Nec asseverantes pronunciabimus, hoc eum nomen habiturum, scientes quoniam, si oporteret manifestè præsenti tempore præconari nomen ejus, per ipsum utique editum fuisset, qui et Apocalypsim viderat, neque enim ante multum temporis visum est, sed penè sub nostro seculo, ad finem Domitiani imperii." Thus expressly does Irenæus† himself declare, that he delivers his opinion only as a conjecture of his own, and that he knew no particular interpretation of it from John.

This number has been found out in so many other names, that this way of reckoning may seem at least very uncertain. The Bishop of Meaux finds the number six hundred and sixty-six, in the words DIoCLes AVgVstVs; Grotius in the word ΟΥΛΠΙΟΣ, Ulpius, the name of Trajan; Mr. Daubuz finds it in the Hebrew word רומיית, or Romani; and besides many other names F. Feuardentius‡ mentions, in his annotations on this passage of Irenæus, he finds the number six hundred and sixty-six, in the name of Martin Lauter, which, he says, was the original way of spelling the name of Luther. He farther finds the same number in the word Moametis, as he chooses to spell the name of Mohammed. Many more instances may be seen in Calmet.§

Every one may be sensible, with Irenæus,‖ there is much uncertainty in this way of reckoning; it is with him, suspicari et divinare nomina, quandò multa nomina inveniri possunt, habentia prædictum numerum. And this makes him so cautious, not to appear positive in delivering his own opinion.

Many learned persons have thought, that this way of counting the number of the beast, is not the true secret of calculation. They observe another method of calculation used in this prophecy. One hundred and forty-four thousand is the mystical number of Christ's kingdom, or the true church. It is agreed by interpreters, this number is a square number, raised from twelve as the root; for twelve, multiplied by itself, gives one hundred and forty-four. Twelve is a remarkable number in the Christian church, on account of the twelve apostles, on whose doctrines the faith and worship of the church is built: as it was a remarkable number in the Jewish church, on account of the twelve patriarchs, heads of the twelve tribes of Israel; and as the twenty-four elders seem to be these two numbers added together, Mr. Potter, therefore, and many who follow him, think this number of the beast ought to be calculated in like manner. They observe, this number of the kingdom of antichrist is to be raised from the number twenty-five, which is not an exact square root, but gives six hundred and twenty-five, near enough to six hundred and sixty-six, which is not a precise square number. They farther observe, that twenty-five is a very remarkable number in the antichristian Roman state, describing the papacy in many of its most essential parts, the particulars of which may be seen at large in Mr. Potter's discourse, and in other authors from him. But this way of calculation is not without its difficulties and uncertainty, any more than the former.

May there not be another method of calculation, more natural and easy than either of the forementioned? A number that shall show the time of his becoming the beast, to use Mr. Waple's words? The learned Grotius seems to have had such a method of counting this number in his view, when he explains the words of the prophecy by the time when idolatry shall revive, and recover strength: Qui sapit, notet tempus idololatriæ, animos et vires resumentis; ubi id evenerit, apparebit Christi præscientia.

The number six hundred and sixty-six may then be a number, which, counted from a given period in prophecy, may very nearly point out the time when this wild beast shall arise, or when the forty-two months are to begin; in which period, power was given him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them. Thus, the years in Daniel were to be computed "from the going forth of the commandment" (Dan. ix. 25), and the time of the coming of the Messiah was to be learned from that calculation.

If we thus compute the number six hundred and sixty-six, from the time of this prophetic vision, we shall find it falls in exactly enough with the time wherein the papacy received the temporal power, and became the beast, or was constituted the last government of Rome, which is a principal character of the beast in this prophecy.

The new government of Rome was erected A. D. 756: taking the general received opinion, that the time of this Revelation was about A. D. 94, counting six hundred and sixty-six years from that date, will be A. D. 760, within four years of the time wherein the beast is supposed to rise. And this small difference will be easily accounted for, either by allowing some small uncertainty as to the time of vision, or some small variation from the precise year, for the sake of making the number of just six hundred and sixty-six, which has more of the air of a prophetical number than six hundred and sixty-two. Possibly this number may reach four years beyond the investiture, to take in the full and actual possession of what was granted to the church, as St. Peter's patrimony.

This way of counting is sufficiently certain to determine who the beast is, as it points out the time when he was to receive his power, with such certainty, that it cannot be mistaken; with as much certainty as Daniel's weeks pointed out the time of the coming of the Messiah.

And it is a considerable part of knowledge in this prophecy, and would have prevented many mistakes, into which many good and learned men have fallen, with respect to the time when the power of the beast was to begin, and by consequence when it was to end, to have observed, that this number was to be a period of years, from the time of the vision, before which the beast was not to receive his power; and that from the end of that period, he was to continue one thousand two hundred and sixty years.

Nor ought this method of calculation to be set aside, as new and singular; Grotius, we have already seen, seems to have had it in his thoughts. The very learned and industrious Calmet takes notice of this way of computation expressly, that some have thought the number of the beast does not signify the cipher of the beast, but the time when he was to appear. Que le nombre de 666 ne marquait pas ici le chiffre de la bête, mais le tems auquel elle devait paraître.*

SECTION XII.

HISTORY OF THE THIRD PERIOD.

The three foregoing chapters, xi. xii. xiii., are a prophetic description of the third period: they represent the state of providence, and the church, in so many views, in which so many particulars are to concur, that if they shall be found to answer exactly, in time and circumstances, to real historical facts, it will add great weight to the prophecy, to the directions, exhortations, and encouragements, designed by it, to faithfulness and constancy in the Christian faith and worship, to patience in persecution, to hope and trust in the care and power of God, who will assuredly make good all his promises, and encourage us to consider all the prophecies of this book as such.

The prophetic description of this period is the largest and most particular of any, and points out the time when it is to begin and when it is to end with greater exactness. The state of the church in this period is agreeable, in general, to the representation of the church in the foregoing periods; a state of danger and persecution, from the enemies of truth and righteousness, under the influence of Satan, endeavouring to deceive the world, and to corrupt it by idolatrous doctrines and worship.

It is represented as a state wherein the number of faithful confessors shall be few, yet enough to bear testimony to the truth, and preserve it, though they shall be persecuted unto death for their testimony, which yet shall continue twelve hundred and sixty years, in spite of all endeavours to suppress it; and, in that space of time, the providence of God shall often appear to vindicate their cause, by severe and heavy judgments on their enemies: and this afflicted state of the church shall end at the last, in victory, peace, and happiness.

The church is farther represented in this period in a state of danger, like the Israelites in the wilderness, or like the prophet Elijah in the persecution of Ahab; that it will have no safety but in places of secrecy and retirement; or, as David was forced to fly for refuge to the wilderness, from the persecution of Saul, so the woman flies into the wilderness from the dragon, who was ready to devour her. In this retirement, the church shall be preserved; so that no attempts of error to corrupt it, or of persecution to destroy it, shall prevail against it. But the prophetic description of this period is most particular, in the account it gives of the means by which the church, in this period, shall be brought into such danger, and the faithful confessors of truth be so oppressed and persecuted.

It describes therefore in this period the rise of a new idolatrous and persecuting power; it describes it by so many and so particular circumstances, as distinctly show the time when it is to arise, the place where it is to have its seat of empire, the manner in which it shall use its authority, and how long it shall continue; and these are, on many accounts, so uncommon and extraordinary, that nothing but a true Spirit of prophecy could foresee or foretell: for it represents this new idolatrous persecuting power in these remarkable particulars:

It is a new government or dominion, arising out of the commotions occasioned by the invasion of the Roman empire.

It was a new government to arise after the imperial government had ceased, and Rome had been under another form of government, which was to continue for a short time.

It was a new government to arise, after the Roman empire was cantoned and divided into several distinct kingdoms, or into ten independent royalties and dominions. It was a dominion to be erected in the city of Rome, so as to make the city founded on seven hills, and once mistress of the world, a seat of empire again in this new government. It was to be a new dominion arising in Rome, at a time when all human views represented the power of Rome so totally subverted, as not to allow any hope of its recovery.

It was to be a government resembling the former Roman empire, in propagating idolatrous doctrines and worship, in opposing the truth, and oppressing all who should make profession of it.

The power and authority of this new Roman government were to be supported and extended by another power like unto it in nature and kind, by pretended miracles and wonders, and by outward force, obliging all people to submit to the authority of this new erected empire in the city of Rome. This new dominion is to continue the persecution of the true church for the space of twelve hundred and sixty years.

And it is a government which they, who have wisdom in the calculation of numbers, according to the usage of scripture prophecy, may find out by the number 666.

These several particulars appear in the description itself, as we have seen in the foregoing explanation of it.

Are there then any real historical facts, that answer to all these various and circumstantial descriptions of prophecy? If there are, they will greatly confirm the truth of the Revelation, and should awaken our attention to the design and meaning of it.

The two former periods ended two states of danger to the Christian church; the first, from the opposition of the heathen Roman emperors, by the conversion of Constantine, about A. D. 322. The second danger was from the heathen northern nations who invaded the Roman empire, but who were converted to Christianity themselves, and received it in their several dominions; and from a greater danger, by the surprising progress of the Mahometans, from which this western part of the world was delivered, by that memorable battle in which Charles Martel defeated their numerous army, and slew three hundred and fifty thousand of them, A. D. 734.

About this time, several of the characters of the first beast which rose out of the sea exactly fall in together.

This is a period of time, when the imperial government of Rome entirely passed away. Momyllus, or Augustulus, the last of the Roman emperors, was deposed, and the kingdom of the Goths was established in Italy; the exarchate of Ravenna had taken from Rome all show of authority, and Rome had been governed, for some time, as a small duchy, in all things subject to it, as a parcel of the exarchate. This seemed a mortal wound to the city of Rome; so that when the exarchate was conquered by the Lombards, A. D. 752, Aistulphus claimed Rome, as belonging to the exarchate.

At this time, the Roman empire was cantoned out,* and divided into many separate and independent kingdoms; so that the ten kingdoms, in the prophetic description, were ready to support this new dominion of Rome with their power.

About this time, the exarchate of Ravenna, which, for some years, kept up a show of Roman government in Italy, under the lieutenants of the Greek empire, was subdued by the kingdom of the Lombards, and that form of government was never revived again.

These very remarkable circumstances, which were all to fall in together at this time, appear to agree very well with the known truth of history.

And if we calculate the number 666 from the year 94, the time of the vision, it falls in with the time in which the order of the prophecies directs us to place the beginning of this period.

But let us proceed, and farther consider some extraordinary events, which happened at the same time, and which answer to the most particular circumstances of the prophetic description.

We find in history, that the exarchate of Ravenna was conquered by Aistulphus king of the Lombards, A. D. 752. Upon this conquest, he claims Rome as a part of it, marches to besiege the city; and Rome, which had been so long in subjection to the exarchate, was, in all human probability, like to remain in subjection to the kingdom of the Lombards: nor was there any reasonable prospect of defending itself, or preserving its own liberty, much less of rising to empire and dominion.

---

* Vid. Preface.

But the pope, who had lately obliged Pepin of France,* flies to him for protection.

Pepin undertakes to support the pope, enters Italy, forces Aistulphus not only to quit all claim to the city of Rome, but to give up the exarchate of Ravenna to Rome; which, after some contest, was solemnly ratified, A. D. 756.

Thus Rome acquired a new state and dominion in this new patrimony of St. Peter, of which Rome became the seat and capital; and thus, contrary to all expectations, a new form of Roman government arose, which has continued now for near a thousand years: so that this new unexpected government of Rome has already continued longer than any preceding form of government whatever, and has continued in this extraordinary form of government, without any alteration, when the several kingdoms of Europe, especially the several states of Italy, have often changed their masters, and altered the very forms and constitutions of their government.

That this new Roman government has proved a persecuting power, promoting idolatrous doctrines and worship, will appear, with the plainest evidence, from history.

About this time, superstition was running fast into idolatry; the worship of images, the most common act of heathen idolatry, though expressly forbid by the second commandment, began to be received among Christians. The emperor Leo endeavoured to put a stop to it in the eastern empire; he appointed, by an edict in the year 730, to take all images out of the churches, and burnt them, says Dupin:† an author whom I the rather choose to use in this historical account, because of his religion as a papist, that his testimony may be freer from all suspicion.

His son Constantine Copronymus followed his father's example, called a council at Constantinople, A. D. 754, of three hundred and thirty-eight bishops, who made a decree against the worship of images. This council, says Dupin, was not received in the church of Rome, but the emperor ordered his decree to be executed in all parts of the east.

When Irene became mistress of the eastern empire, she resolved upon a new council at Nice, to which she invited pope Adrian, about the year 787. The pope's legates had the first place; Tarasius, patriarch of Constantinople, the second; and the deputies of the bishops of the east, the third. The letters of pope Adrian were read, approving of the worship of images. The council proceeded to decree, that the images of Jesus Christ, the holy Virgin, angels, and saints, were to be placed in churches, to renew their memory, and express the veneration men have for them; and to salute, honour, and worship them, but not with that adoration which is peculiar to the divine nature.‡

Thus ready and zealous were the popes to promote the worship of images: as soon as the acts of the council were brought to Rome, the pope sent extracts of them to France; Charles, then king of France, caused the extracts to be examined by the bishops of his kingdom; they composed a treatise, which was publised in the name of Charles the Great, against the decision of the council at Nice; Charles sent this treatise to Rome, and presented it to pope Adrian by Engilbert; but the pope returned an answer, in which he maintained the decrees of the council of Nice.

The authority of the pope could not however carry his point in France, at that time:§ a council was held at Frankfort, in the year 794, in which the worship of images was debated, and the council condemned all sort of adoration or worship of images. France and Germany continued long to follow this council of Frankfort, in opposition to the council of Nice, and authority of the pope.‖

It may be of use to remark this opposition to the worship of images, at the beginning of it, for two reasons; the one, to show that it was all along supported by the authority of the popes, and at length established by their power. The other, to show in this memorable instance, that "the earth helped the woman;" the western princes opposed themselves to the pope's authority, gave time and opportunity to the church to confirm the faithful worshippers of God, against this dangerous idolatry, which has been so much increased since, and so fully established by the popes in the councils of Lateran and Trent.

The council of Lateran confirmed the doctrine of transubstantiation, after it had been long contested and opposed in the church. Verum Christi corpus et sanguis, in sacramento altaris, sub speciebus panis et vini veracitèr continentur, transubstantiatis, pane in corpus, et vino in sanguinem, potestate divinâ.*

This doctrine being thus settled, the proper adoration of the sacrament of the altar was an easy consequence. The council of Trent therefore, over and above the adoration of images and invocation of saints, expressly requires the same adoration of the consecrated elements, as are due to the supreme God himself. Nullus itaque dubitanda locus relinquitur, quin omnes Christi fideles, pro more in catholicâ ecclesiâ semper recepto, latriæ cultum, qui vero Deo debetur, huic sanctissimo sacramento in veneratione exhibeant.—— Nam illum eundem Deum, præsentem in eo adesse credimus, quem pater æternus introducens in orbem terrarum, dicit, Et adorent eum omnes angeli Dei.†

Innumerable instances of history will farther show, how far this new Roman power has supported idolatry by persecution; which is a principal part of the prophetic description. They have not only practised persecution on many occasions, but they have given it the solemn sanction of general councils. By the council of Lateran, all are declared heretics who oppose their decisions, which they call, "the holy, orthodox, and catholic faith;" of which the doctrine of transubstantiation and the worship of the bread and wine were declared a part. They excommunicate and anathematize all whom they have thus made heretics. Thus condemned, they are given over to the secular powers to be punished: and all the civil powers are obliged to take an oath, on pain of ecclesiastical censures, that they will endeavour to exterminate all who are declared heretics by the church, out of their dominions; and if any civil power shall refuse to do so, after admonition, it shall be certified by the pope, who shall declare all his subjects absolved from their allegiance; and declare, it is free for any catholic to seize his dominions, and exterminate the heretics, to preserve it in the purity of the truth. Si verò dominus temporalis, requisitus et monitus ab ecclesiâ, forsan suam purgare neglexerit ab hâc hæreticâ fœditate, per metropolitanum et comprovinciales episcopos excommunicationis vinculo innodetur, et si satisfacere contempserit intra annum, significetur hoc summo pontifici, ut ex tunc, ipse vassallos ab ejus fidelitate denunciat absolutos, et terram exponat catholicis occupandam; qui eam, exterminatis hæreticis, sine ullâ contradictione possideant, et in fidei puritate conservent.‡

We have a remarkable instance how this decree has been executed, in the case of the Count of Toulouse, for not suppressing the Albigenses in his dominions: an army of cross-bearers was raised against him by the pope's means: it consisted, according to Mezeray,§ of five hundred thousand persons (though, he supposes, not all soldiers), among which were five or six bishops. They took the town of Beziers, and put all to the sword, to the number of sixty thousand persons; pursuing the war with like cruelty and fury in many other places. And Montfort, the general of this holy war, was rewarded with the greatest part of the Count of Toulouse's dominions; having deposed him, as a favourer of heretics, he was, for his good service, declared lord of all the countries he had conquered.

Immediately after this famous decree of a general council for persecution, and as a comment upon it, the inquisition began:‖ Dominic was made first inquisitor by pope Innocent III. This "holy office," in the style of the Roman court, has improved the methods of persecution far beyond what was known in the days of ancient Babylon and Rome, and has long been the most dreadful and barbarous tribunal the world ever saw, for all ensnaring arts of injustice in persecution, all inhuman severity and cruelty in punishment; as is evidently proved at large, in Limborch's History of the Inquisition.

To show, in one instance more, how exactly this persecuting power answers every particular of the prophetic description, I shall just mention the bull of pope Martin V. which directs the persecution of the followers of Wickliffe, John Huss, and Jerome of Prague. "We will and command, that, by this our authority apostolical, ye exhort and admonish all the professors of the catholic faith, as emperors, kings, dukes, princes, &c. that they expel out of their kingdoms, provinces, cities, towns, &c. all and all manner of heretics, according to the effect and tenor of the council of Lateran.——That they suffer none such within their shires or circuits, to preach, or to keep either house or family, either yet to use any handicraft or occupation, or other trades of merchandise, or else to solace themselves any ways, or frequent the company of Christian men. And furthermore, if such public and known heretics shall chance to die (although not so denounced by the church), yet in this so great a crime, let him and them want Christian burial.——The residue let the foresaid temporal lords, &c. take amongst them, with condign deaths, without any delay to punish."* They are enjoined to punish heretics with condign death; that is, they were to commit them to the flames, and burn them.

It is moreover to be observed, as a farther agreement with the prophetical description, that this tyrannical power, supporting idolatrous doctrines and worship by persecution, was greatly assisted by another like power, in which, as in the papacy, both spiritual and temporal authority were united.

Many bishops, especially the bishops of Germany, had large temporal dominions bestowed upon them, in which they have regal and sovereign authority; they receive homage, and an oath of fealty, from their subjects; they have the supreme power of the sword, both in the punishment of their subjects, and in making war; they coin money, levy taxes, make treaties with the other states of the empire, and with foreign princes; and have all the rights of sovereignty, in as full manner as any of the secular electors or princes of the empire.

A very great part of Germany is thus in the hands of ecclesiastical persons, with temporal jurisdiction. It has been observed, that in about seventy years, from A. D. 936 to 1002, the three Othos, who succeeded each other in the empire, gave two-thirds of the estates of Germany to ecclesiastics; as Heiss,† a Roman catholic historian, informs us, On remarque même, que son grandpère, son père, et lui, ont donné aux ecclesiastiques les deux tiers des biens d'Allemagne.

These ecclesiastical princes of Germany, notwithstanding their temporal sovereignty, have great dependence on the popes; they are obliged to send immediately to Rome, for a confirmation of their elections; and to omit it, is a reason sufficient for the popes to set aside their election as defective; and to take care of the church, or present to it, in case they should find their elections uncanonical.‡

Besides their dependence upon the popes, their interests were so mutually linked together, that they supported them as one common interest with all their joint powers. It would be tedious to enter into a detail of particular instances; I shall only mention one, in the warm contest between the popes and emperors, about investitures.

Hildebrand, a man of business and intrigue, of a bold and pushing temper, was chosen pope about A. D. 1073, by the name of Gregory VII. He resolved to wrest out of the hands of the emperors the investiture of bishops, a power they had long been possessed of, to nominate the bishops in their dominions, and put them into the possession of their bishoprics and estates. The pope resolved to take this power from the emperors, as a thing unjust and sacrilegious; but the true motive, as Mezeray§ honestly observes, was a design upon the empire of Italy, and to subject all princes to the power of the papacy. Son vrai motif était le desir de l'empire d'Italie, et d'asservir tous les princes sous la puissance pontificale.

The quarrel between the pope and Henry IV., then emperor, ran so high, that the pope excommunicated and deposed him; and procured Rodolf, duke of Burgundy and Swevia, to be chosen emperor in his place. Many of the ecclesiastical princes, with Sigifrid, archbishop of Mentz, at the head of them, abjured Henry, took up arms against him, and vowed perpetual enmity. Thus an historian of great reputation:* Atque hi omnes quos memoravimus, ad Saxones sine cunctatione, desertâ Cæsaris optimatumque causâ, deficiunt. Ad prætextum mutatæ voluntatis religionem obtendunt, Henricum communi concilio abjurant, se perpetuò ejus fore hostes, quoad vita suppetet, jurejurando sanciunt; posteà arma capessunt, Cæsari insidiantur; ejus rebus studentes oppugnant; insontes, et qui neutri parti favebant, qui fidem regi servabant, rebellare recusabant, pacem et otium bello præferebant, armis se commiscere abnuebant, Simoniaci, Nicolaitæ, hæretici appellabantur, proscribuntur, in sceleratorum numero habentur, aris, sacris, convivio, colloquio, suppliciis, à conspectû conjuratorum arcentur. So zealous were they to cause all, both small and great, to submit to the decrees and authority of the pope.

After the death of Rodolf, the legate of the pope, then Pascal II., excommunicates the emperor again; upon which the diet deposed the emperor, and chose his son Henry (whom they had prevailed upon to rebel against his own father, and assist in dethroning him) for emperor in his room. The archbishops of Mentz and Cologne were deputed,† with the bishop of Worms, to take the crown and imperial ornaments from the emperor; which they executed accordingly. Sigonius himself, a very zealous papist, thus reports it: Henricum mox, Moguntinus, Coloniensis, et Wormaciensis, antistites, à conventû missi, adierunt, eumque nomine omnium imperatoria insignia sibi reddere imperârunt, quibus filium ejus induerent. Then alleging some crimes against the church, in his appointment of bishops, said to be committed by him, they added, Ob has res, pontifici et principibus Germaniæ placuit, te non piorum communione solùm, sed regni possessione etiam, deturbare.‡

Henry V. having thus usurped his father's empire, was very careful at first to please the court of Rome, and favour the ecclesiastical states in all things; but, in some time, considering that the papal party only made use of him for their own ends, resolved to stand up for the honour and authority of the empire. The quarrel grew warm between him and pope Pascal.§ The emperor enters Rome, takes the pope prisoner, with several cardinals. The pope, in this distress, consents to yield the investitures, in great measure, to the emperor; and together with the sixteen cardinals, confirmed it by oath on the evangelists. The pope kept up appearances outwardly, but secretly managed by his legates to break his engagements. Hereupon, the better part of the ecclesiastical princes of the empire would not receive the agreement. Albert, who had been the emperor's chancellor, and whom he had lately made archbishop of Mentz, moved by the pope's legates, who every where stirred up the bishops to arms against the emperor, as a person excommunicated, carried on such intrigues in the following diets of the empire, that they decreed, the pope had a right to revoke his agreement in a council.‖

The pope accordingly assembled a council at Lateran, A. D. 1112, which burned the agreement between the pope and emperor, and excommunicated the emperor. Upon which the archbishops, bishops, prelates, and chapters, resolved to maintain themselves, in disposing their vacant benefices, by their own election, without any regard to the emperor.¶ Albert, or Adelbert, archbishop of Mentz, formed a powerful league against the emperor. Hæc autem ubi trans Alpes perlata sunt (the decrees of the Lateran council) archiepiscopus Viennensis grave in Henricum anathema explicuit, et Moguntinus, cum quibusdam principibus, apertam contra eundam conjurationem inivit.

The infidelity of the archbishop of Mentz, against his former master and benefactor (as Heiss* himself, a Roman catholic, observes), was carried on under pretence of the interest of the church, and was supported by the intrigues of Rome; and proceeded so far, that armies on both sides took the field, and were near an engagement; when, to avoid the effusion of blood, and mischiefs of civil war, the emperor was forced to submit to the decision of another council at Rome. This council was held at Lateran, A. D. 1122, and, as was to be expected from such a method of deciding a question between the emperor and pope, it was decided for the pope, in favour of the ecclesiastical elections, and against the emperor's right of nomination and investiture.

Thus the great contested point was gained by the popes; in obtaining which, the ecclesiastical princes of the empire exercised the power of the ecclesiastical prince of Rome before him; and "caused the earth, and them that dwell therein, to worship him," and submit themselves to his authority.

There are two other considerable parts of the prophetical description, the historical accomplishment of which we are also to inquire after. They are the two witnesses, and the woman flying into the wilderness.

Several learned persons have shown, at large, a continual succession of faithful witnesses to the truth of the Christian faith, and who have borne testimony against the usurped authority of the popes, their idolatrous doctrines and worship, which are the main points of the antichristian apostasy.

A very great part of the church, from the beginning, opposed the worship of images: the council of Frankfort solemnly declared against all manner of adoration. On condamna toute sorte d'adoration, ou de culte des images.†

In every after age, some persons appeared in opposition to the idolatrous principles and practices countenanced in the church of Rome, and against the tyrannical persecuting power used in support of them.

In the following age, between the years 800 and 900, Claude Clement, bishop of Turin, a disciple of Felix Urgel, opposed not only the worship of images, but all religious use of them. And though Jonas, bishop of Orleans, and others, wrote against Claude, as carrying the point too far, yet, as Dupin‡ observes, they disallowed all worship of images.

In the same age, about A. D. 931, Paschase taught the real presence in the sacrament, a doctrine that soon became the foundation of another idolatrous practice, in the worship of the consecrated bread and wine. No sooner was this doctrine published, but many found fault with it; particularly Ratramne, a monk of Corbie, wrote a book on purpose against it. John Scott, being also consulted by the emperor Charles the Bald, opposed the explication of Paschase; and, Dupin§ allows, advanced propositions contrary to the doctrine of the church, concerning the real presence. Their opposition was not only to some expressions of Paschase, as the church of Rome would persuade, but to the doctrine itself, as it is received and taught in the church of Rome.

In the next age, the tenth, there remained many disciples of Claude of Turin, who, in the parts about Piedmont especially, preserved and maintained his doctrines against the worship of saints and images:‖ or, as Aurelius Rorencus, a Piedmontese historian, observes, from the times of Claude of Turin, that heresy continued throughout the ninth and tenth ages.

There were many also in the same age who adhered to the doctrines of Ratramne, against the real presence, in the English church, as well as others. Odo, archbishop of Canterbury, about the year 934, found many who questioned it; so that he was fain to cure their infidelity by miracles; for according to the tale, he actually changed the bread into flesh, and the wine into blood, and then turned them back again to their proper forms. Plurimos, de veritate Dominici corporis dubitantes, ita roboravit, ut panem altaris versum in carnem, vinum calicis in sanguinem propalàm ostenderet, et denuo in genuinam speciem retorta, usui humano conducibilia faceret.*

I mention this instance the rather, as it is not only a proof that the doctrine of the real presence was opposed, but as it also shows what use was made of pretended miracles, to deceive men; as it is one part of the prophetical description, that the world should be deceived by such miracles "to worship the beast." St. Dunstan, his successor, took the same course of deceiving the world; he was, in particular, famous for taking the devil by the nose, with a hot pair of tongs; a crucifix is said to have made a speech in favour of his zeal against the married clergy. Such mighty wonders as these had a great influence on men's minds, in those days of darkness and superstition.

And it may not be amiss to observe, once for all, that these miracle-stories are of such consequence in the Roman church,† that they are expressly made one of the marks of the true church. But to return:

In the next age, the eleventh, besides the many who adhered to the doctrines of Claude of Turin, Ratramne, and Scott;‡ Berenger, favoured by Bishop Bruno, publicly opposed the real presence, and had many disciples. He was excommunicated, and his writings condemned, together with Scott's book, in a council held at Paris, about the year 1050; and the doctrine of Berenger was condemned as heretical. The council decreed the author of that heresy, and his followers, should be obliged to retract it, or be persecuted to death.§

How far soever Berenger might be prevailed upon by force to soften the doctrines he published, which is usually represented by papists as retracting them; Dupin‡ acknowledges, that if he did really change his opinion, it could not be but a little before his death; that his doctrines occasioned a considerable controversy in his life, and many of his disciples continued firm to it after his death.

In like manner, in the following twelfth age, Dupin¶ observes in general, "There were many heretics (as he calls them), in many places, who openly attacked the sacraments of the church, and despised her most holy ceremonies; that the severity with which they who were taken were punished, did not hinder the sect from increasing: that their doctrines spread through all the kingdom of France; many heretics appeared, whose chief view was to dissuade men from communion with the church in its sacraments, and to overturn its hierarchy, order, and discipline."

To omit particular persons, historians place in this age the Vaudois and Albigeois: the one so called from Peter Waldo, a merchant of Lyons; the other, from the city of Albi, in the diocese of Toulouse, to which a great number retired for safety from persecution.

These Waldenses and Albigenses grew numerous and powerful in the following thirteenth age. Pope Innocent III. set himself to put a stop to them; he not only appointed his legates to preach against them, but excited the secular princes and the common people to destroy them. He published a crusade against them, which occasioned a long war between Montfort, general of the cross-bearers, and the count of Toulouse, in which much blood was spilt, and many lives sacrificed to the support of the pope's authority, and in defence of idolatrous doctrines and worship.

In the next age, the fourteenth, the Vaudois continued in great numbers, and their opinions spread in almost every country: John Wickliffe, a man of great reputation in the university of Oxford, began in England to oppose the power and authority of the pope, as well as the real presence, and several particular corruptions of the Roman doctrines and worship. "He left many writings," says Dupin, "to support his doctrines, and many disciples, who continued to teach his errors." Wickliffe was supported during his life by many great men; but they who followed his doctrines after his death were very severely persecuted. This occasioned the spreading of his opinions in Bohemia; for some of his writings were carried thither by one of his disciples, Peter Payn; so that, in a little time, the doctrine of Wickliffe corrupted, says Dupin,* many members of the university of Prague. It is also likely, that some of the Vaudois, who were in many parts of Germany, had also reached Bohemia, and had spread their doctrines there, at the same time that Wickliffe taught them in England.

In the next age, the fifteenth, John Huss, a man of great consideration in the university of Prague, and with him Jerome of Prague, opposed the condemnation of Wickliffe's writings. John Huss continued both to preach and write against the pope, and the corrupt usages of that church, till both were condemned by the council of Constance, and put to death.

Their death greatly moved the Bohemians; many of the nobles of Bohemia and Moravia entered into a league, not to receive the decrees of the council of Constance, and to defend the memory of John Huss and Jerome of Prague. These were called, "the Bohemian brethren." They were divided into Calixtins and Taborites; the Calixtins, more strictly following the opinion of John Huss, principally opposed the corruption of the church of Rome in denying the cup in the sacrament to the laity. The Taborites received the common principles of the Vaudois and Wickliffe; denied the doctrine of transubstantiation, the pope's authority, and most of the corruptions of the church of Rome.

The next age, the sixteenth, brings us to the time of the protestant Reformation, by Luther, Calvin, and others; the history of which, and its opposition to the church of Rome, are so well known, that we need not enter into particulars.

Thus we see how the providence of God raised up witnesses to the truth in every age, who appeared in a public manner to testify against the general corruption of the church, its idolatrous doctrines and worship, and its persecuting power, notwithstanding all the arts and cruelties used to oppress them.

It may be proper to add a few remarks to this short account of these faithful witnesses, concerning the doctrines they maintained, and concerning the number of those who thus gave testimony to the truth.

Concerning the doctrines they maintained, it is evident, that Claude of Turin, and his followers in Piedmont, in the ninth and tenth ages, were express against all worship of images, one point with which the idolatrous corruption of the Roman worship began, and in which it still very much consists; and these idolatrous corruptions seem to be what the witnesses were chiefly to prophesy against. Now Claude of Turin believed, says Dupin,† as the Iconoclasts, "that images ought to be removed out of the churches. In defence of which doctrine, he opposed the authority of a council, and of the pope, who confirmed it, and commanded that images should be every where received."

The doctrines of Ratramne, Scott, and Berenger opposed the doctrine of the real presence, as soon as it appeared; which soon became another occasion of idolatrous worship: for the council of Trent, as we before observed, decreed the same worship to the consecrated bread, as is given to the true God himself.

In this opposition to the doctrine of transubstantiation, the authority of the pope was directly concerned, as well as the truth of the question; for both councils and popes had made use of their authority in it.

Berenger was excommunicated by pope Leo IX.‡ in a council, condemned by the councils of Verceil and Paris, and again by pope Victor II.: yet, in answer to pope Alexander II., who wrote to him to renounce his error, instead of obeying, says Dupin,§ he boldly acquainted him, he would do nothing; and remained in his opinions with obstinacy. It is worth remark, that this Alexander was predecessor to the notorious Hildebrand, who, when pope, by the name of Gregory VII., carried the authority of the popes to the highest pitch, and used it in the most tyrannical manner: yet this Hildebrand himself treated Berenger with great mildness, when he had prevailed upon him to make a confession, in words of ambiguous and doubtful meaning (often the case of subscriptions), though there was so much reason to believe he had not altered his opinion. This seems to show, as Mr. Basnage* justly observes, "that they had a great regard for Berenger; that his doctrine made great progress; and that the Roman church itself was greatly divided about it."

When we come to the times of the Vaudois and Albigeois, we meet with a great deal of unfair management, to misrepresent them and their opinions. They are charged by some popish authors, more especially by the Bishop of Meaux, with holding the doctrines of the Manichees.

It is not to be dissembled, says Basnage,† that in the many parties who opposed the errors and usurped authority of the popes, there were some Manicheans out of Bulgaria, who, when driven from thence, spread themselves in Italy, and the northern provinces of France; but these are in justice to be distinguished from the Waldenses and Albigenses, and not confounded with them, as the learned Basnage has fully proved against the Bishop of Meaux.

Dupin plainly distinguishes the Manichees from the Vaudois, and assures us they were much worse heretics. "There arose," says he, "at the same time, many particular sects of heretics worse than the Vaudois, who revived the ancient errors of the Manichees." But he observes of the Vaudois,‡ that "they greatly increased in the thirteenth age, notwithstanding the inquisition, and spread themselves into Arragon, and the valleys of Piedmont, where they continued still holding the same doctrines, till they united, in the year 1536, with Œcolampadius, and the other sacramentaries."

The judicious French historian, speaking of the several sects of those times, observes, it would require a volume to mention all the sects, their several names and opinions, which were alike in some points, and different in others; but I think, says he,§ "they may be reduced to two, viz. the Albigeois and Vaudois; and that these had very near the same opinions with those whom we now call Calvinists."

He farther observes, speaking of the heretics in the province of Languedoc,‖ that "there were two sorts; the one ignorant, given to dissolute manners, with very gross and foul errors; and these were a sort of Manichees; the other, more knowing, less irregular, and very far from such foul actions, held almost the same opinions with the Calvinists, and were properly Henricians and Vaudois."

De Serres,¶ another French historian, though he warmly condemns the Albigeois for their separation from the church of Rome, yet acknowledges, "he hath seen the reasons of their separation in a very ancient manuscript, and that they were perfectly agreeable to those which Wickliffe and Luther renewed; that they would not own the authority of the pope, nor acknowledge him to be universal bishop; that they rejected images, purgatory, the merit of works, indulgences, pilgrimages, vows, celibacy of the clergy, invocation of saints, and trading with sacred things."

A contemporary historian, Puy Laurens, has observed concerning these Vaudois, that "they disputed with great subtlety against the Manicheans. And, by many of their ancient writings, it appears they asserted Rome to be Babylon; that the mass was a pure human invention; that the prayers of the living are unprofitable for the dead; that the invocation of saints is criminal, and the adoration of bread, idolatry:" as may be seen at large in Mr. Basnage's excellent History of the Religion of the Reformed Churches. As to the doctrines taught by Wickliffe in England, we may take them from one of our own historians, a great enemy to Wickliffe and his opinions, which he censures as erroneous, heretical, absurd, and contrary to the catholic faith. But he informs us they were such as these: "That the sacrament is not the true body of Christ, but its figure; that the Roman church is not the head of all churches more than any other church, nor was greater authority given by Christ to Peter than to any other apostle; that the pope of Rome has no more power of the keys than any other priest; that the gospel is a sufficient rule for every Christian in this life. These were the doctrines his followers publicly professed and taught."

Concerning the number of these faithful witnesses, who thus testified against the corruptions of popery, it appears to have been very considerable, although all methods of oppression and persecution were used to destroy them. We have seen them arise in every age of the church, and appear in almost every place in Italy, France, Spain, England, Germany, and Bohemia. They were so many who protested against the corruptions of popery, that their persecutors were fain to raise numerous armies against them. The many thousands which perished by these armies, and the inquisition, are a full evidence that they were in themselves a great number, and that they persevered with a surprising constancy in their testimony against the corruptions of the Roman communion, though they were persecuted to death with great cruelty, and after death treated with great inhumanity.

So exactly does the general state of the church and world answer the description of prophecy, in a great variety of events, and for a long time together. We have already seen the prophetical description verified, in the history of near a thousand years, in so long a continuance of a tyrannical power, corrupting the faith and worship of the church, and persecuting the professors of the pure Christian faith and worship; who yet have continued, during all this time, faithful witnesses against these corruptions; who have constantly persevered in their testimony, though under the most cruel sufferings on account of it.

And what but a Spirit of prophecy could have drawn, so long beforehand, a description of so many concurrent events, so very unlikely to happen, and which were to continue for so long a time; and yet so exactly agreeable to historical truth, and the general state of the church and world, for a thousand years together, and yet which was not to begin till near seven hundred years after the prophecy was published? These are strong marks of a real Spirit of prophecy in these revelations, which should greatly recommend them to us, and persuade our serious attention to "what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

CHAPTER XIV.

SECTION XIII.

1 And I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads.

(1.) After the very melancholy representation I beheld in the foregoing visions, of the state of the church and world, I saw a more comfortable and encouraging vision, in another figurative description of the state of the church. It was represented to me, as if a Lamb (which signified Christ in former visions) was standing on mount Sion, the place on which the temple stood, and therefore an emblem of the church;* and having with him the symbolical number of a hundred and forty-four thousand, which before had represented the true church apostolical, consisting of faithful worshippers, who had the seal of God, the Father of Christ, represented by the Lamb, a mark of their consecration to God, and that they were owned of God as his chosen and favoured people.[1]

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps:

(2.) I observed farther in my vision, how this glorious heavenly church was employed; for I heard the sound of a voice as from heaven, strong as the roaring of the sea, and loud as thunder, but musical and harmonious, as if a great number of voices were joined in full concert, with symphonies of musical instruments, as in the solemn worship of the temple.[2]

3 And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

(3.) For they were engaged in a solemn act of worship before the throne of God, his most immediate presence, in company with those living creatures which represented the angels of God, and with the four-and-twenty elders, who signified the patriarchs and apostles,* as representatives of

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIV.

Contents.—The description of the melancholy state of the church and world, during this period, in the foregoing chapters, might be apt somewhat to discourage good Christians and the faithful worshippers of God; for though God, by a Spirit of prophecy, had before revealed this suffering state to the church, and so it was represented, as what divine providence thought fit to permit, and what was therefore reconcilable to the goodness and power of the great Governor of the world; yet it was a very useful design of these revelations, to subjoin proper principles of consolation and encouragement to such a melancholy representation of temptation, danger, and suffering.

This seems the intention of this fourteenth chapter, in which the scene of the prophetical vision is changed from earth to heaven, from a view of the church under the persecution of the beast, to a view of the church in the presence of the Lamb; delivered from the state of corruption and oppression, so much to be expected from this evil world, and arrived at a state of complete and perfect religion and happiness in the heavenly church.

This vision then represents the sure destruction of the enemies of truth and righteousness in the end, however they may prevail for a time; it shows the very great reward of the faithful, and dreadful punishment of the apostate, who shall fall from the faith and purity of Christian worship, in the day of trial. Thus, this part of the prophecy unites the strongest principles of warning, caution, encouragement, and hope, than which nothing could be more proper or useful for the church, in such a state of providence; or, to the general design of the whole prophecy, which is to exhort and encourage the constancy and patience of the saints, in all their trials. When we consider this chapter in this view, it will show a more easy, natural, and proper connexion between this vision and the foregoing, than is usually observed; and make the whole plan and design appear more regular and exact than it is usually thought to be.

[1] Ver. 1.] Most of these expressions will be found explained in the notes on vii. 10. This seems farther to confirm what we there observed, that we are rather to understand these praises of the heavenly church, than of the church on earth. The plan of these prophecies often introduces the church in heaven as a chorus, with great propriety and elegance, as a noble and moving part of the drama. The church in heaven making suitable reflections on the events foretold in these prophecies, greatly serves to raise the attention of good Christians, and teach the high concern they have in them. How wisely is the church on earth instructed, animated, and encouraged, by the sentiments, temper, and devotion, of the church in heaven, in its most perfect state of glory and happiness!

Some copies read, "Having his name (the name of the Lamb) and his Father's name written on their foreheads." The sense will be much the same, which way soever we read it.

[2] Ver. 2.] These expressions are a plain allusion to the strength and harmony of the temple music, where so great the Jewish and Christian churches, now united into one. The psalm of praise they sung was of a new composition; the full knowledge and understanding of which was peculiar to those persons who had been truly consecrated to God, and had been delivered from the corruptions so generally prevailing in the world.

4 These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb.

(4.) These persons were such as persevered in purity, not defiling themselves with any of those idolatrous corruptions, which are so properly called fornication and adultery in the ancient prophets. They did not forsake Christ and his true religion, to join in the service or worship of any idol. They were fixed in a constant purpose of following the directions of Christ, and the institutions of his gospel, in whatever they taught, though contrary to the principles and practices in fashion, though they were exposed to trouble and persecution on account of it. As the first-born and first-fruits under the law were holy and consecrated to God, so were these persons redeemed from the rest of mankind, freed from the antichristian corruptions of the church, to serve God according to the truth of the Christian religion, faith, and worship.

5 And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.

(5.) They were such as worshipped God in sincerity and truth; they were upright and honest in their profession, to hear and obey the voice of the Lord their God, not teaching the commandments of men for doctrines of divine authority, or by false traditions making the commandments of God of no effect. They are accepted of God, however censured or condemned by the world, and declared, by the supreme Judge of all, members of his true church, which is a glorious church, holy, and without blemish.

6 And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

(6.) As a farther motive to Christian patience and constancy, this vision of the happy state of faithful Christians was followed by another. I perceived an angel flying through the air, as a messenger of some important news from the upper to the lower world. This was to publish to all people the unchangeable constitution of the Christian religion, which should remain always the same, in the truth of its doctrines, the certainty of its rewards and punishments, to everlasting ages.

7 Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

(7.) For the angel declared with a strong voice, to command attention, that God would surely inflict a severe punishment on all manner of antichristian idolaters; the hour of his judgment should as certainly come as it was foretold. It greatly therefore concerned all to fear God, and give glory to him only; for this is the worship due to the Creator of all things, the only supreme Lord and Governor of the whole world. [3]

8 And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

(8.) This more general sentence of judgment against idolatrous corruptions of the Christian faith and worship, was applied more particularly to the antichristian corruptions of this period; for the former angel was followed in the vision by a second, who very distinctly proclaimed, that Babylon was to be destroyed, that great city Rome, which had abused her latter as well as former power, in maintaining and propagating idolatrous doctrines and worship.

9 And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

(9.) These two angels were followed in the vision by a third, to show the great importance of the message, and of attention to it. This third angel declared the great danger of complying with the prevailing corruptions of those times; and denounced a severe judgment against all persons who should submit to this antichristian power, or any ways profess obedience to it, by any public act of acknowledgment or homage.

10 The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

11 And the smoke of their torment ascended up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

(10.) For he declared every such person liable to the most severe punishment, to the most fearful plagues of divine vengeance, without hope of any mercy to soften or allay them; the wrath of God shall be as a cup of poison, composed of the strongest ingredients, without any mixture to weaken it: the deadly effects of which no antidotes can prevent. Such shall be the wrath of God, that even death itself shall not free them from it, but their torment shall be great, as if they suffered the pains of the fiercest fire; and they shall suffer this punishment, to their greater shame and confusion, in the presence of Christ and his holy angels. (11.) And their torments shall be endless, as well as most severe; the fire that torments them shall never be extinguished, and the smoke of it, which shall ascend up for ever and ever, shall show it everlasting. Nor shall they have any time of respite or ease; neither day nor night shall bring them any relief; their torments shall never cease, or their pains be lessened for ever. [4] a number of voices and instruments were used, in singing psalms and praises to God in their most solemn acts of worship.

[3] Ver. 7.] In the style of prophecy, to show the certainty of the prediction, things to be after accomplished are represented as already done. This shows the propriety and elegance of the expression, that an angel should say, "The hour of judgment is come," so long before the accomplishment, as another angel, to foretell the future downfall of Babylon, followed, saying, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen." The record of this prophecy by John, is a constant preaching of the everlasting constitution of the gospel to men; whether it means any particular opposition to the corruptions of the church in this period, as several learned men have thought, whether it intimates by whom such opposition shall be made, wherein they much differ, I shall leave altogether to the reader's choice. The certainty of the revelation thus solemnly delivered by an angel, seems to me the chief, if not the only design of the prophecy.

[4] Ver. 11.] We have already seen, that to worship the beast and his image, to receive his mark, in the forehead or in the hand, mean a submission to the authority of this wild beast, the persecuting power revived, in the last government of Rome, and so manifestly used to establish the idolatrous doctrines and worship of the Roman church. The wine of the wrath of God, and the cup of his indignation, are expressions taken from the language of the prophets. The portion assigned by the providence of God to men, is called the "portion of their cup." It was not only customary to treat friends with a cup of wine, as a mark of affection, but to execute also the sentence of death on offenders, by making them drink a cup of wine in which some strong poison had been infused. Such was the noted execution of Socrates, by a cup of poison. The scriptures mention "a cup of blessing and consolation," and "a cup of trembling and astonishment." God speaks to the prophet Jeremiah, of "the wine-cup of his fury, which he was to cause the nations to drink," Jer. xxv. 15, and ver. 18, this is explained by making them, "a desolation, an astonishment, a hissing, and a curse." Grotius seems to give a just account of the expression "without 12 Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

(12.) In this the patience of the saints shall be manifested and perfected; herein their perseverance will consist, that notwithstanding all the evils of persecution, they continue constant in obedience to the commands of God, as the rule of their religion, and steadfastly maintain the truths of Christ's revelation, the rule of their faith and worship, in opposition to all doctrines and worship contrary to it, by what authority soever they shall be imposed on the church.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them.

(13.) As a farther encouragement of faithfulness and constancy, I was directed by a particular voice from heaven, to declare the unspeakable blessing of all such who shall be faithful; as they die in the faith, they die in the favour of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Spirit of revelation assures them, not only of an end to all their afflictions in a short time, but that all their patience and faithfulness, in the hour of temptation and persecution, shall be rewarded gloriously in a state of perfect and unmixed happiness.[5]

14 And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.

(14.) The sure execution of the judgments denounced against the corrupters of the Christian religion, was farther confirmed by another vision. Christ himself was represented sitting upon a bright cloud, which was spread under him, as a seat of judgment. He appeared as a man, or like the Son of man, in the visions of Daniel,* with a golden crown on his head, the ensign of royalty and sovereign power; and, to express the meaning and design of his appearance to judgment, he bore in his hand a sharp sickle, wherewith men are used to cut down or to reap corn.

15 And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe.

(15.) Soon after, I beheld an angel come out of heaven, the true temple and most glorious seat of God's presence; he came to bring order, or give the word, as from God, when the execution of his judgments should begin; and spake with a very strong voice to him that sat on the bright cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap; the appointed time of judgment is come, the world is ripe for it, let it be no longer delayed, but immediately executed.

16 And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

(16.) Whereupon the order of God was immediately executed; the inhabitants of the earth were cut off as corn is cut down with a sickle, at the appointed time of harvest.[6]

17 And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

(17.) I farther beheld in my vision, another angel coming out of the true temple, which is in heaven; he also appeared with a sharp sickle in his hands, to assist in this execution, and finish the destruction of the enemies of true religion.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

(18.) And another angel came out from the altar, on which the fire was used to burn continually; he was sent to bring orders to the angel that had the sharp sickle, which he delivered in a loud voice, saying, Begin to put in execution the righteous judgments of God on this wicked generation. The time of God's vengeance, his appointed time, is fully come, and the iniquities of the inhabitants of the earth have made them fully ripe for destruction.[7] mixture," κεκερασμένου ἀκράτου, to intimate, that the poisonous ingredients were infused in pure unmixed wine, to take a stronger tincture, and become a more deadly potion. The judgment itself may well be understood of all the heaviest evils we feel in the present life, or fear after it, without cessation, and without end. A most useful warning, in an hour of so dangerous temptation; a most powerful encouragement to undergo any sufferings in the cause of truth, when all who betray it, or forsake it, are sure to suffer so much more than any can suffer for their faithfulness and constancy in the defence of it.

[5] Ver. 13.] Some interpreters understand "dying in the Lord," to signify being put to death for constancy in the true religion. Others think, to "die in the Lord," may mean more generally to die in the faith and obedience of the gospel of Christ, as the Bishop of Meaux: Qui meurent dans le Seigneur, c'st en général tous les saints, et en particulier les saints martyrs, qui meurent pour l'amour de lui.

The expression "from henceforth," ἀπαρτι, may admit of different interpretations; it will well mean, that as they who die in the Lord have, from that time, finished their state of temptation and affliction, and from thenceforth "rest from their labours," in like manner "their works follow them;" and from that time they receive their reward.

Mr. Daubuz's observation seems natural and just: "The blessedness promised consists in their being happy in their separate intermediate state, and in their having at the resurrection their full reward."

Every one will see, how great this encouragement is to patience and perseverance, the great intention and principal doctrine of all these prophecies.

[6] Ver. 16.] The opinions of interpreters differ very much as to the meaning of this part of the vision. Many seem very wide of the purpose. "Harvest" may sometimes be taken in a good sense, in some places of scripture, and may mean God's bringing or gathering together his people; or in particular, gathering together the saints departed in Christ. But as these expressions are plainly taken from the prophet Joel, iii. 13, "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get ye down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great," the harvest and vintage are expressive of judgment. "The harvest is ripe," means the same thing as their wickedness is great, or their iniquity is fully ripe. This sense gives a proper and easy connexion to the several parts of this vision with each other. According to the Bishop of Meaux, "After the denunciation of the judgment of God, behold the execution." The general ideas of a harvest and vintage, express the vengeance of God on the enemies of his people. The person who executes this vengeance is Jesus Christ, who himself comes to execute this judgment upon his enemies: so that we may here also observe, it is not an angel, as elsewhere, but the Son of man, Jesus Christ himself, who strikes this blow, who has the chief and principal hand in it, though angels are also sent to accompany him, and assist in the execution; to show, that this stroke of vengeance on Rome is with all the force of a divine hand. It is executed on orders brought by angels from the temple, or presence of God, "out of the temple which is in heaven" (ver. 17). This may well mean that there is an appointed time, when the judgment of God shall come on his enemies, as there is in the course of natural providence, a time appointed for the season of harvest. The one shall as surely come in its appointed time as the other.

[7] Ver. 18.] The "angel who had power over fire," is an allusion, according to Mr. Daubuz, to the office of that priest who was appointed by lot, in the temple-service, to take care of the fire upon the altar, and who was therefore called "the priest over the fire."* Grotius, more simply,

* Dan. vii. 13

* Maimon. More Nevoch. p. 282.

19 And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God.

(19.) Immediately upon this order, the angel began to cut down those wicked persons, whose iniquities had made them ripe for destruction, and delivered them over to divine vengeance, which should press them hard with grievous afflictions, as grapes are pressed in a wine-press.

20 And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

(20.) The destruction of those enemies of God and true religion, the supporters and favourers of that tyrannical idolatrous power, which had so long and so cruelly persecuted the saints, was great beyond expression; as if their blood had been shed in such quantity, that it covered the earth for many miles, and yet was so deep, as to reach up to a horse's breast.[8]

"Having the office of God's vengeance;" Habens potestatem supra ignem, habens ministerium iræ divinæ. According to the theology of the Jewish doctors, omnis virtus vel facultas, quam præfecit Deus alicui rei, vocatur angelus illi rei præfectus.

[8] Ver. 20.] To tread a wine-press, is a prophetic description of destruction. The expressions of the prophet Isaiah, lxiii. 3, "I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with me," are thus explained by the prophet himself, "I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment." The images in this vision are very strong and expressive; the largest wine-presses were used to be in some places out of the city. This is "the great wine-press of the wrath of God;" and seems to intimate the great numbers that shall be involved in this general destruction. The great quantity of blood mentioned in the vision, is a strong image representing some great slaughter of the enemies of God and true religion; but what particular judgment this prophecy describes, is not well agreed by interpreters. The order of these prophecies, and the series of this part of them, will not, I think, allow us to understand it of any judgment on Rome heathen, or indeed of any judgment before the time of the third period, in which the beast arose; for before that time none worshipped the beast, or his image, or received his mark, but these are the persons to whom this prophecy plainly relates.

Nor does there seem sufficient reason to understand the harvest of the reformation begun by Luther,* whereby the good corn was separated from the earth, or protestants from the idolatry of the Roman church: for the harvest, as well as the vintage, is designed to express an approaching day of great wrath. Nor did the state of Europe, during the reign of Queen Anne,* so exactly answer, I think, to all the characters of this prediction, as some have observed.

The order of these prophecies, and the more natural connexion of this part of them with the rest, direct, as I apprehend, with more propriety, to understand it of the great judgment to be inflicted at the end of this period, on the beast and his followers. It will then mean that great judgment which is more particularly and fully explained in the eighteenth and nineteenth chapters, and which is to make way for the happy state of the church, prophesied of in the twentieth chapter.

This judgment then seems still to be future. It will be prudent therefore to leave the time of its accomplishment more fully to explain it. In the mean time, we may have, however, as much encouragement to patience and perseverance, as awful warnings against apostasy, and yielding to the common corruptions of the age, as if all circumstances of the judgments foretold had been more particularly revealed. We know, in the strong and lively images of the general description, that this judgment will as certainly come as the appointed time of the harvest; that in the appointed time it shall be executed by a hand which no power can resist, and from which none can escape; that in this day of judgment, God's wrath, and the destruction of his enemies, will be so great and terrible, that the boldest images can hardly represent to our imagination what the enemies of true religion shall feel them to be in reality.

Mr. Waple observes upon this chapter, that a certain order of voices is plainly represented, which being also seven in number, and distinctly reckoned up, may very well be accounted the seven thunders, opened into loud and distinct voices. It is fit the reader should be acquainted with this conjecture, and then that it should be left to his own judgment.

CHAPTER XV.

SECTION XIV.

1 And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

(1.) I beheld another wonderful vision, which the Spirit of prophecy represented to me, as in heaven; seven angels appeared, agreeable to the number by whom God executed his judgments in the former periods, who were appointed for the execution of God's last judgments, on the enemies of the Christian church, in which the wrath of God was to be finished, in the full and final destruction of his antichristian enemies.

2 And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God.

(2.) I moreover saw, as in my former vision of the divine presence,* that there was a large crystal vessel like the molten sea, in the temple, but far more glorious. It seemed more shining and lively than bare crystal, having the lustre of a red or fiery colour intermixed with it; round about the crystal vessel stood those happy servants of God, who, by their faith and patience, had preserved themselves from the antichristian apostasy; who had not acknowledged the authority of the beast, by an act of submission. They had, as in the temple-service, harps in their hands, to accompany their psalms of praise with symphonies of music.[1]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XV.

Contents.—The prophecy proceeds, in this and the following chapters, to open farther the appointed punishment of Rome, for her oppression of the truth, and persecution of the saints. This chapter represents the solemn manner in which preparation is made for the execution of these judgments, as the next describes the actual execution of them. The happy state of God's faithful servants, and the joyful thanksgivings with which they celebrate the goodness of God in the protection of their cause, are very elegantly represented, to encourage their constancy and perseverance.

[1] Ver. 2.] Interpreters are not agreed what is meant by this "sea of glass, mingled with fire." It is supposed by

* Chap. iv. 6.

3 And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints.

(3.) These happy saints, who had obtained the victory by their patience and constancy, were employed in a grateful acknowledgment of the goodness of God, from a joyful sense of their former deliverance and present happiness, as the Israelites sang the praises of God for their deliverance at the Red sea, in a hymn composed by Moses: so these saints, having obtained a greater deliverance and salvation by Christ, sang a psalm of praise, of the same spirit with that of Moses, but in a style suited to their deliverance and salvation by Christ; saying, Thy works, O Lord God Almighty, are most great and wonderful; thy ways, as the King of saints, are most righteous and faithful.

4 Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

(4.) What abundant reasons have all people, from what thou hast done for us, to worship thee as God, and give honour to thy name, as glorious in holiness; so that none among the gods is like unto thee! All nations shall acknowledge thee the one true God, by worshipping before thee; being convinced, by the judgments, that in the greatness of thine excellency, thou hast overthrown them that rose up against thee; that thou art the strength of thy people, and their salvation.[2]

5 And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened:

(5.) When this hymn of praise was ended, the last judgments of God were farther represented to me in vision. I beheld, as if the most holy place, or inmost part of the temple, the seat of God's glory and of the oracle, was opened, as when the high-priest went into the holy of holies.[3]

6 And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.

(6.) And I beheld seven angels appointed to execute these judgments, coming out from the most holy place, as having received their instructions from the oracle of God himself. They appeared in habits like those the high-priest wore when he went into the most holy place, and consulted the oracle.

7 And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever.

(7.) When these angels, having received their commission, came out of the most holy place, the contents of their commission were revealed in the following prophetic representation: One of the four living creatures, representatives of the angels, gave to each of them a vial or cup, not with incense in it, as in the temple worship, but each of them was filled with ingredients of deadly qualities, by which were signified the wrath of God; who, as he is the everlasting God, is ever able to judge and to punish his enemies according to their works.

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

(8.) Hereupon I farther beheld, as if the cloud of glory, the symbol of God's presence and power, filled the whole temple, as when the presence of God entered the tabernacle of Moses, so that it was not to be approached till the judgments of God should be finished, to express that the glory of God's justice, power, and truth, was highly concerned to see these judgments duly and fully executed.[4] some* to signify the pure state of the church, and the fiery indignation to be poured out of the vials; or to denote a multitude of saints,† whose state is to be like a "sea of glass," a pure and holy life in a very unsettled condition, while they also endure the fire of persecution; or it is supposed to denote, that God, the searcher of hearts, finds them pure as crystal, and warmed with the love of God,‡ as love is compared to fire, or a holy people, perfectly pure, and inflamed with the love of God. It is also supposed,§ that it is an allusion to the deliverance of the Israelites from the hands of the Egyptians, when they had passed the Red sea; whereby is signified the preservation and security of the saints, during the pouring out of the vials upon the wicked. But as the scene of this vision is in heaven, and as the vision represents the happy state of those faithful servants of God, who had overcome the corruptions of the world, it does not seem so natural a description of their state in this life; it has a more easy allusion to the sea, or large vessel of water in the temple: but this being a crystal vessel, shining with rays of a lively red, as if fire or some bright light shone through it, it may well represent the more perfect purity and active zeal of the heavenly church; and how much more glorious every thing is in the state of the church above, than the faint and typical representations of it were in the material temple.

[2] Ver. 4.] The Bishop of Meaux justly observes, the song of praise, after the passage of the Red sea, agrees perfectly well to the martyrs, after they had shed their blood, or to those who were passed through a state of persecution to a state of rest and happiness; that, by the song of Moses and the Lamb, we may understand two psalms of praise, or one and the same psalm, composed in imitation of the song of Moses.

In fact, most of the expressions of this psalm, though not in the very same words, yet, in their plain sense and meaning, seem to be taken from the song of Moses, of which it is a sort of Christian abridgment.

* Waple. † Daubuz.
‡ Grotius, Meaux. § Waple, Daubuz.

[3] Ver. 5.] "The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony," seems plainly to be meant of the most holy place. The whole tabernacle was called, "the tabernacle of the congregation which is without the veil, which is before the testimony," Exod. xxvii. 21. It is also called, "the tabernacle of witness," Acts vii. 44. In this tabernacle, there was the sanctuary, or holy place, without the veil, and another room within the veil, called the most holy place, in which was the visible testimony of God's presence, and seat of the oracle, between the cherubim over the mercy-seat (Exod. xxv. 22).

This prophetic representation seems intended to show these judgments of God, threatened, in these prophecies, to be inflicted on the enemies of truth and righteousness, were surely to be accomplished in their appointed time, as the oracle of God was a sure declaration of his will. It is pronounced as a decree from the throne of the great Lord and Sovereign of the whole creation, which he will certainly put into execution.

[4] Ver. 8.] The cloud of glory was the visible manifestation of God's presence in the tabernacle and temple; it expressed the presence of God, for protection and for judgment. The glory was a sign of protection, at erecting the tabernacle, and at the dedication of the temple: but in the judgment of Korah, the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation, when he and his companions were swallowed up by the earth (Numb. xvi. 19). In like manner, when the congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron (ver. 42), and were gathered together against them, they looked towards the tabernacle of the congregation, and behold the cloud covered it, and the glory of the Lord appeared. This was the forerunner of judgment: for immediately Moses directs Aaron to go quickly and make atonement, because "wrath is gone out from the Lord, and the plague is begun" (ver. 46.) So proper is this emblem of smoke from the glory of God, or from the cloud of glory, to express the execution of judgment, as well as to be a sign of favour. Both proceed from the power of God, and in both he is glorious.

CHAPTER XVI.

SECTION XV.

1 And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

(1.) All things being thus prepared, the angels having received their instructions from the oracle, and their vials full of the wrath of God from one of the cherubim, I heard the voice of the oracle give the word of command to the angels, to pour out their cups in their order; for the inhabitants of the earth were ripe for those judgments which the justice of God had appointed for their punishment.

2 And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.

(2.) The first angel immediately obeyed the voice of the oracle, and poured out his cup upon the earth. This was followed with a grievous plague upon those who had fallen in with the corruption of the Christian faith and worship, or were assisting in the persecution of the faithful witnesses against the prevailing corruptions. They were themselves punished with great afflictions, as if a noisome and painful ulcer had broken out on their bodies (see the history of the first vial at the end of this chapter).

3 And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.

(3.) After the judgments of God signified by pouring out the first cup on the earth, the second angel obeyed the command of the oracle, and poured out his cup on the sea. Upon which the waters of the sea became as congealed blood, so that no creature could live in the sea, but died; to represent another great judgment, the effect of the wrath of God upon the promoters of the great apostasy, and persecutors of God's faithful servants and witnesses [1] (see the history of the second vial at the end of this chapter).

4 And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

(4.) After this I beheld the third angel poured out his cup full of the wrath of God, in its order. This cup was poured on the rivers and fountains of waters, so that they were changed into blood. An emblem of great bloodshed, the righteous punishment of those antichristian powers, for shedding the innocent blood of God's faithful servants. [2]

5 And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus.

(5.) The angel who ministered in the execution of this judgment of God on the kingdom of the beast, acknowledged the righteousness of God, and began his praise, saying, How does thy righteousness appear in thy ways of providence, O God, who art unchangeable in thy perfections, and constant to thy righteous administration of government, throughout all ages! How manifest hast thou made it to them who will attentively consider thy ways, by this judgment on the kingdom of the beast!

6 For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

(6.) They have, with a cruel execution of tyrannical op-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVI.

Contents.—This following chapter, contains the judgments themselves signified by the seven vials full of the wrath of God; and gives us a prophetic representation of each of them in their order; and are an exact description of the greater and more eminent judgments of God on the inhabitants of the earth, for their enmity to true religion, and persecution of the saints, during this third and last period.

[1] Ver. 3.] "Earth and sea," in scripture language, are a description of our habitable world, as "heavens and earth" are of the universe in general; as we have observed in the note on x. 2. As by "earth" in the former vial, we understood the countries, with their inhabitants, subject to the new western empire erected in this period, and owning the authority of the beast; so the sea will best be understood of the same persons, under a different figurative description. The difference between the expressions of earth and sea may very probably mean, that the former judgments were chiefly inflicted on the inhabitants residing in the inland provinces of the western empire; but that the judgments of this vial are chiefly inflicted on such of the subjects of this empire as went out by sea to foreign countries, and aboard fleets, especially on the Mediterranean sea, which is used to be styled in scripture "the sea," and "the great sea."

The sea becoming "as the blood of a dead man," so that "every living soul died in the sea," are descriptions which seem to be taken from the description of the plagues of Egypt; by one of which (Exod. vii. 20, 21), "all the waters were turned into blood, so that all the fish that was in the river died, and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt."

The general meaning of these figurative expressions seems to point out some very great mortality or slaughter, so that many persons shall perish in some undertaking, or lose their lives in some expedition, chiefly carried on by sea. Mr. Daubuz observes, from an expression in the prophet Daniel, vii. 2, that "the four winds of the heavens strove upon the great sea," that hereby is meant a comprehension of several kings or kingdoms in a state of war, fighting against each other to enlarge their dominions.* He applies this interpretation to our present prophecy. This vial has its effect in war, the sea being a symbol of a multitude in war. He adds, "It must be such a war, that all the corrupted church must be concerned therein; and it must also be on a religious account: the corrupted Christians must, as it were, bring it upon themselves: and that the men concerned in the wars predicted should die therein."

[2] Ver. 4.] It is observable, there is a great conformity between these three first vials and the three first trumpets, ch. viii., especially as to the parts of the world on which these judgments were to come. In the first trumpet, hail and fire, mingled with blood, were cast upon the earth; at the sound of the second trumpet, a burning mountain of fire was cast into the sea, and the third part of the sea became blood; when the third angel sounded, a burning star fell from heaven upon the third part of the rivers and fountains of waters. Here the plagues of the first vial, in like manner, fall upon the earth; of the second vial, upon the sea; and of this third vial, upon the rivers and fountains of waters.

We have seen the general meaning of "rivers and fountains of waters," according to the style of prophecy, in the note on viii. 10. It may be sufficient just to mention here, that as the countries belonging to any state are divided into earth, sea, and rivers, so this distribution of the kingdom of the beast is an intimation, according to the figurative style of prophecy, that every part of that kingdom should, in proper time and order, receive the punishment due to its apostasy and wickedness.

Dr. Hammond observes, that there is no reason to fix any new critical notion singly to either of these expressions, but to take them altogether for what was meant by the land: as when God is described, xiv. 7, as the Creator of heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of water, the latter three are set to denote what is elsewhere ordinarily called the earth, and no more, in opposition to heaven, that is, this inferior terrestrial globe, and all in it. According to pressive power, shed the blood of thy saints and prophets; and now thou hast inflicted on them the punishment they have so justly deserved, and given them blood to drink by a great effusion of their own. [3]

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

(7.) This praise of God was continued by another angel, who stood by the altar, in the presence, to express the consent of the heavenly church, to praise the Lord God Almighty, and to celebrate his justice and faithfulness in punishing the enemies of truth and righteousness, and the persecutors of his faithful servants (see the history of the third vial at the end of this chapter).

8 And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire.

(8.) I farther beheld in my vision, the fourth angel obeyed the voice of the oracle; he poured out his cup full of the wrath of God upon the sun, whereby the heat of it was so violently increased, that, like a burning season, it gave great uneasiness and pain to the inhabitants of the earth.

9 And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory.

(9.) They were greatly afflicted, as in those violent heats, which are used to burn up the fruits of the earth, to produce scarcity and famine, with an unhealthful air, dangerous distempers, great faintness, and pains. Yet these judgments of God, one after another, made no impression on their hearts, they were still hardened in wickedness; they even blasphemed the name of God, who thus justly punished them, instead of repenting of those sins which had deserved these judgments, and so justly brought them upon them (see the history of the fourth vial at the end of this chapter).

10 And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain,

(10.) I farther beheld in my vision, that the fifth angel poured out his cup in his order; in which period the wrath of God was more remarkably to affect the seat, or throne and kingdom, of the beast. The extent, authority, and power of his antichristian empire were to be greatly obscured, and the influence of his government much diminished; so that they bit their tongues for vexation, as persons full of anguish and rage.

11 And blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

(11.) Yet still these judgments had no effect to reform these enemies to the truth and purity of the Christian faith and religion; they rather blasphemed the supreme Governor of the world, by accusing his providence, on account of the evils which came upon them, but had no thoughts of repentance for those evil actions, the true reason why they were punished (see the history of the fifth vial at the end of this chapter).

12 And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

(12.) The sixth angel poured out his cup also, in his order, immediately after the foregoing. The punishment figuratively represented by it, was drying up the river Euphrates, so famous as a boundary against the invasions of the eastern nations, that they might have an easy passage to invade their neighbours; signifying, a way should be prepared for the enemies of this antichristian kingdom to break in upon it. [4]

13 And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.

(13.) I farther saw, in my prophetic vision, another figu-

this meaning of the expressions, these plagues will chiefly denote some judgments to be inflicted on the kingdom of the beast, and the more considerable parts of it. It is a judicious observation in general, that we should carefully avoid carrying any figurative expression of prophecy too far, which has often lost the true meaning in the end.

Probable reasons are however alleged for a more particular application of these expressions. "Rivers and fountains of waters" may not unfitly signify the original countries, or seats of empire, in distinction from the provinces, as fountains are the original of rivers, which run in one common collection of waters into the sea; and as waters are necessary for life, so, when they are infected and become deadly, they are an emblem of such judgments as should cut off the very supports of life. Finally, the waters becoming blood, so that God gave them blood to drink, because they shed the blood of his saints and prophets, seems farther to show, that this judgment was to consist in much bloodshed and slaughter; as they persecuted the martyrs by shedding their blood, they should suffer in like manner, and their blood should be shed by each other's hands, according to the expressions of this prophecy, xiii. 10, "He that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword;" or, in the words of the author of the Wisdom of Solomon, concerning the punishment of Egypt, "That they might know that wherewithal a man sinneth, by the same also shall he be punished" (xi. 16).

[3] Ver. 6.] The remark of the Bishop of Meaux on these words deserves to be taken notice of: "They have their bellyfull of blood, of which they are so greedy, especially in civil wars, where each one seems to drink the blood of his fellow-citizens."

[4] Ver. 12.] The antichristian kingdom of the beast is described all along in expressions taken from the ancient prophets. It has, therefore, in prophetic style, its barrier, called Euphrates, in allusion to that river so memorable in the history of the Assyrian and Babylonian empires, and so often represented in scripture as the frontier and boundary of the holy land; great rivers, such as was Euphrates, being usually both boundaries and barriers; so that to dry up a river, or the waters of it, that the kings on the other side may pass over it, is a very natural figure to express the invasion of one kingdom by another, and that the usual boundary or barrier is not sufficient to prevent an invasion, or to keep the nations on each side within their own bounds.

"The kings of the east," in the language of scripture, were such as reigned to the eastward of Judea, or on the east side of the river Euphrates. These were, in their order, the Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian, who all were to pass the river Euphrates when they invaded Judea. So that the expression of drying up the water of the river, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared, will very properly signify such kingdoms or empires as shall border on the kingdom of the beast, especially to the east, or to the eastward of the boundaries and barrier of his dominions.

Some interpreters consider this expression as a more particular allusion to the memorable taking of Babylon by Cyrus: for Cyrus took the city by night, having first dried up the stream of the river Euphrates, which ran through the city, by turning the channel into a lake, according to the account given both by Herodotus and Xenophon, as well as by the scriptures, as Dr. Prideaux observes.*

The Turks are originally an eastern people; their dominions are the eastern boundaries of the pope's territories, especially as Naples and Sicily are accounted fiefs of the Roman see. They may then be intended by the kings of the east, and the river Euphrates may signify the Adriatic sea, or gulf of Venice, which is the eastern boundary of the pope's dominions, even of the exarchate of Ravenna, which is most properly the patrimony of St. Peter, in the style of the Roman court. As this sixth vial or cup is to be answered by some historical event, after the preceding weakening of the papal power by the protestant reformation, it rative representation, as if the dragon, or emblem of the devil, and the beast, the emblem of this antichristian power, and the false prophet, the emblem of those who, by false doctrines and all the arts of deceit, endeavoured to support and propagate these antichristian corruptions, sent forth unclean spirits resembling frogs; each of them one. [5]

14 For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

(14.) These three unclean spirits were a representation of persons who had the bad qualities of demons or devils, fully possessed with their bad temper, and engaged to oppose the truth and power of religion, by all the deceitful arts of error and false reasoning, by imposing upon the weak and credulous, by pretences to wondrous and miraculous works. These were employed to use all their evil arts and wicked policy, to excite the princes and great men of the world to unite more firmly against truth and righteousness, the cause of God and religion, and to make a new effort to establish error and corruption.

15 Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

(15.) When it was thus foretold that these evil agents would manage with great art and address in support of their bad cause, the Spirit of wisdom added a useful caution, that the faithful servants of God should use great care to preserve themselves from being deceived; they should remember the warning of Christ their Lord, that his coming would be with surprise, as when thieves come unexpectedly in the night. Let all then who would faithfully persevere watch over themselves, to maintain their purity and integrity, lest, when Christ shall come, they be exposed to shame and disgrace, without any covering for their sin and folly.

16 And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

(16.) For Satan, by these evil seducing spirits shall gather many of all ranks of men into a place where they shall be destroyed, which may therefore, in the style of prophecy, be called the mountain of Mageddo, famous in the history of God's people for several memorable slaughters, and which became a proverbial expression for a place of destruction and mourning. [6]

17 And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done.

(17.) Upon this great and last effort of the antichristian powers to support the throne of the beast, the seventh angel, who had the last cup, full of the wrath of God to pour out, poured it into the air, the seat of Satan's empire, and his residence. The meaning of this judgment was explained by the oracle, for a voice from the throne of the temple in heaven declared, It is done, the mystery of God is finished; and this last cup of God's wrath has fully finished God's judgments on the persecutors of his church, in their final destruction. [7] seems probable this prophecy is not yet accomplished; I shall not therefore attempt to apply any particular history to it, but shall leave a fuller explication of it to future times, and shall only make these general remarks upon it.

First, That it seems to intend some farther judgment on the pope's kingdom, and most likely by some invasion of his dominions; as it is pouring out a vial or cup full of the wrath of God, it must, I think, be understood of some punishment inflicted on the beast's kingdom, as all the former vials were; and as it is preparing a way for the kings of the east, it most likely means some punishment to be inflicted by an invasion from some empire or kingdom on its eastern boundary.

Secondly, This judgment most probably means some descent of the Turks, who are now the eastern neighbours of Italy, and may some time or other have an opportunity, as they always have an inclination, to break in upon a country that lies so near, and is so inviting; or if any other nation should become the eastern neighbour of Italy, even the empire itself might not spare the Roman territories, the better to support its own pretensions and claims on the other kingdoms and states of that fine country. But this I propose only as a probable conjecture.

Yet I may observe, that I apprehend the order and series of those prophecies will not admit the interpretation of some authors, who understand it of the conquest of the eastern empire, by the taking of Constantinople. This would greatly confound the periods, and throw the prophecies out of all order. This period must, according to the series of the vials, fall in, I think, within some time between the years 1700 and 1900.

Besides, the conquest of the eastern empire will not, as I apprehend, answer a particular judgment on the papal power and kingdom, which seems to be the plain and direct intention of the prophecy itself; so that, without saying what in particular, we may probably conjecture, it will be some future judgment on the papal power, by some future invasion of the pope's dominions from the east. Though it is proper to acquaint the reader farther, that some learned men understand a figurative Euphrates, some obstacles that stopped the princes of Europe from attacking directly the church-empire, especially in its ecclesiastical capacities; that this Euphrates will be dried up, or these obstacles removed, when the terror formerly arising from the bulls, edicts, and censures of Rome shall be shaken off, and the neighbouring princes and states shall attack the popes themselves, if they shall either excite their subjects to rebellion, or disturb them in their government: or even, if they shall refuse what their powerful neighbours require and demand of them, of which we have some eminent instances in the chief Roman catholic powers, Spain and Portugal themselves not excepted.

[5] Ver. 13.] This is the first time in which "the false prophet" is mentioned. It is observable, he is always mentioned together with the devil and beast, as one of the three principal enemies of pure religion; he is referred to as a known character taken notice of before; he is represented as one who wrought miracles before the beast (xix. 20). Now, in the description of the enemies of true religion (ch. xiii.), we have express mention of three chiefs: the devil; the first beast that rose out of the earth; the second beast, that rose out of the sea: this second beast was to "do great wonders, to cause them that dwell on the earth to worship the first beast." This agrees so exactly with the character of the false prophet here, that I think we may consider it as a different title of the second beast; for the meaning of which, see notes on xiii. 12.

[6] Ver. 16.] Mageddo, or Megiddo, was a city belonging to Manasseh, out of which they could not drive the Canaanites, when the kings of Canaan fought by the waters of Megiddo (Judg. v. 19). It was also famous for the defeat of Ahaziah and Joram, by Jehu, when both the kings of Judah and Israel were slain (2 Kings ix. 27). It was afterward memorable for the death of king Josiah, slain by Pharaoh-necho, king of Egypt (2 Kings xxiii. 29). So that the "mourning in the valley of Megiddo," is used as a proverbial expression by the prophet Zechariah, for a great mourning (xii. 11, 12).

Whoever the three unclean spirits are, whether, as Mr. Daubuz has hinted, the monks, the religious knights, and the secular clergy, of the Roman church, or, more at large, all who warmly engage in support of this antichristian throne and kingdom; they yet seem plainly to intimate some powerful league or confederacy, by which the principal popish powers shall be engaged with all their forces in some war, in which they shall be totally overthrown, and which shall end in their final destruction, as seems to be more fully expressed in the description of the seventh vial, or last cup. So that we may conjecture, the fulfilling of this part of the prophecy is reserved for the times near the end of this period; the more full explication of which ought, as I apprehend, to be referred to those times themselves.

[7] Ver. 17.] Satan is represented in scripture, the god of this world, the chief director and agent of all the corruption in it, and is called "the prince of the power of the air," Eph. ii. 2. So that "pouring the vial into the air," is a

18 And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.

(18.) When the voice of the oracle had pronounced, It is finished, the air on which the vial was poured appeared in violent commotions; there followed thunders and lightnings, as if nature was in convulsions; there was such an earthquake as had never been before since God had placed man on the earth to inhabit it; to represent the very great and terrible commotions of the world, when God should appear in so remarkable a manner, to destroy the powers of the prince of the air, with his associated antichristian powers of the earth.

19 And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.

(19.) The effects of this tempest and earthquake reached the several cities of the antichristian nations, and the great imperial city itself. It quite threw down several cities to the ground, and split the city of Rome in several parts; to represent that this judgment should punish mystical Babylon with very great and exemplary severity.

20 And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.

(20.) This punishment was so general on all the antichristian powers, that it reached every place, nor could men find protection against it any where; it was like a hurricane that reached islands and mountains, and utterly destroyed them, as well as it threw down cities and towns in valleys, and on the land.

21 And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

(21.) Yet farther to show how terrible this judgment should be, besides the representation of thunder, lightning, and an earthquake, by which cities and towns were thrown down and destroyed, there fell a great hail, with stones of so extraordinary weight, as were sufficient to kill all who fled into the open fields for safety; to represent that this severe and heavy judgment was general every where; that none were able in any place to escape their share in the punishment: yet even these judgments could not overcome the obstinacy of the enemies of truth and righteousness. The anguish of their minds on account of these plagues made them more uneasy and discontented; they blasphemously censured God's government of the world, which at once served to aggravate their guilt, and illustrate the justice of God, in the severity of his righteous judgments upon them.[8] proper expression to point out the very seat and foundation of Satan's power and authority, as god of this world, whereby he worketh in the children of disobedience. Satan is perhaps called "the prince of the power of the air," to signify that his power is only in this lower world, or, in the language of scripture, over things done under the sun, where there are so many children of disobedience, whom he may work up to serve his evil purposes. And this representation seems to intend, that when this last vial should be poured out, Satan shall be bound up; his power shall be so restrained, that he shall no longer be able to prevail, either to corrupt the truth of the Christian religion, or persecute the faithful professors of it.

[8] Ver. 21.] The fulfilling of this part of the prophecy is, according to the order and series, at so great distance, that we can only guess at the historical events which are to answer them, and even such conjectures will likely be very uncertain too: yet as these prophecies are designed for the benefit of the church in every age, to encourage patience and faithfulness, from hope in God's promises of protection and deliverance, we learn in general this useful and certain truth,—that the remaining efforts of the antichristian powers against the truth and purity of the Christian faith and religion, whatever they may be, shall as surely be punished in the times yet to come, as we have seen they were punished in the times already past. And farther, we may well be satisfied, that this plague, which will fall in with the times of the last period, at the end of it, suppose, from about the year 1900 to about the year 2016, shall quite destroy the tyrannical and persecuting power of the antichristian kingdom, and make way for the next period, the pure and happy state of the Christian church, which, in the order of these prophecies, is to follow upon the downfall of mystical Babylon, when the dragon, which is the devil and Satan, shall be bound and shut up in the bottomless pit (Rev. xx. 2, 3). This may then be looked upon as a sure word of prophecy, that this antichristian power must and shall certainly fall in God's appointed time, though all the powers of wickedness unite all their strength, and collect all their force together to defend it; the last vial shall have as sure an effect as all the former vials have already had. This should encourage the faith and patience of all saints, exhort them to "be steadfast and unmoveable, always to abound in the work of the Lord; for his counsel shall stand for ever, and the thoughts of his heart unto all generations."

HISTORY OF THE VIALS.

First vial.—This plague of the first vial, or cup, seems to be an allusion to one of the plagues of Egypt, when Moses and Aaron took up ashes of the furnace, and sprinkled it up towards heaven, and it became "a boil breaking forth with blains upon man and beast" (Exod. ix. 10); or to the afflictions of Job, when Satan, by God's permission, smote him "with sore boils from the sole of his foot unto his crown" (Job ii. 7).

Painful and noisome distempers of the body are very proper emblems of an afflictive condition of life; hence, for "every man to know his own sore and his own grief," are expressions of the same meaning in the language of scripture (2 Chron. vi. 29).

Such general interpretations of these plagues would give us a very useful sense of this part of prophecy, if we were to understand no more of it than this—That the justice of God will, by a series of events in providence, to the end of the world, punish the enemies of true religion, and those who persecute his faithful servants. This would be an encouragement to faith and patience; a reasonable warning not to be partakers in such guilt, lest we also be partakers of such punishments, even though we should be of the same opinion with an eminent author:* "As to the vials, though they do plainly reach in a series to the end of the world, I am not satisfied with any exposition I have yet met with concerning their precise time or contents."

The plan of these prophecies, the order of the periods, the successive series of events, may, however, I conceive, give a farther light to the general expressions, and furnish us with particular facts in providence, important in themselves, and properly applicable to the several prophetical descriptions; such as may show, that the historical events of this period are as agreeable to the revelation of prophecy as any of the former.

It is true, as the same ingenious author observes, "modesty and sobriety are in all things commendable; and in nothing more, than in the explication of these sacred mysteries." I shall endeavour, therefore, with the modesty due to such inquiries, to mention such events in history as I think applicable both to the description and order of the prophecies; leaving it to the judgment of the readers, to give them what degree of evidence they shall think they deserve: only premising this observation—there is a general use to be made of a more general meaning, for the encouragement of faith and patience, and to warn us against falling in with the great apostasy of this period, though we should not be satisfied with the precise time or contents of each particular judgment signified by the several vials in their order.

These vials, full of the wrath of God, seem plainly determined as to their time, to this third period; and this renders all expositions of them improbable, which refer them to any part of history before the period itself begins. This one consideration may set aside many of the expositions which learned men have given us of them: they are to be poured out upon those who had the mark of the beast, and who worshipped his image; they are therefore to be considered belonging to the times in which the beast reigns, and are to be looked for in the times after the popes were invested with the temporal power of Rome, which is evidently the last form of Roman government, and has now continued to be so for near a thousand years to our times.

It seems farther a very natural rule of interpretation, to consider the vials in successive order, describing the events of providence, at proper intervals, one after another, during the twelve hundred and sixty years in which this third period of prophecy is to continue; so that the last plague is to end with the downfall of this mystical Babylon. Let us then see, whether, following this guide, we may not find out something concerning the times and contents of these vials, which may give us reasonable satisfaction.

This plague of the first vial will then be the first in order, and in time; this will direct us, I think, to look for it in the times next to the rise of the beast; and, for its contents, in the first remarkable punishment on the supporters of this antichristian power.

We have already seen, that the pope received the temporal power of Rome, together with the exarchate of Ravenna, as the patrimony of St. Peter, about the year 756, by the assistance of Pepin, king of France.

Charles the Great, son of Pepin, was proclaimed emperor by the pope's means, A. D. 800. This prince carried the French monarchy to a very large extent, having France, Germany, and Italy within the bounds of his dominion; in quality of emperor, he confirmed the grant of the exarchate to the popes, and enlarged the donation of his father Pepin.*

Charles the Great, like another Constantine, seemed to have laid the foundation of a great and prosperous empire for his family, and a state of great outward prosperity for the church.

But it appeared, in a very few years, that notwithstanding all the care of Charles the Great, and his son Lewis, surnamed the Pious, that all sorts of corruptions gained ground, and continually prevailed both in church and state. The worship of saints and images, the doctrine of purgatory, and masses for the dead, the doctrine of the real presence, and adoration of the consecrated bread, the perfection and merit of a monastic life, the superstitious and idolatrous worship founded on these doctrines, became the sum of religion. The state of the church in these times is not unfairly represented by a very learned historian.† Nimis increvit hôc seculo per civiles et bellicas calamitates, indulgentiamque principum, vitio cleri, ambitione pontificum, desidiâ monarchorum, fœda corruptio et vere antichristiana, in doctrinâ, cultû, moribus, regimine.

The doctrine of the pope's supremacy and power over the whole church was in particular carried to a great height; great indeed, as represented by the Roman writers; in particular, that the imperial dignity was conferred, and the translation made of the empire from the Greeks to the French, by the proper authority of the Roman bishops; so that cardinal Baronius observes, that the title of the western empire was taken from the Greeks, by the pope's authority, for heresy: Jacuisse absque possessore titulum occidentalis imperii, à Græcis ob hæreses, auctoritate pontificiâ, sublatum. This authority is asserted to be seated in the pope, and, by divine right, in him primarily: Ex insitâ ipsi Romano pontifici, concessâ divinitùs, auctoritate, ex potestate quæ in ipso primariò resideat. Hence the whole power of the emperors is said to be wholly from the grace of God, and of the apostolic see: Igitur Dei, et apostolicæ sedis gratiâ, totum hoc esse, quod consecuti sunt occidentalis orbis imperatores.* More may be seen to the same purpose in the learned Spanheim.

It would be too long to mention the intrigues by which the popes endeavoured to weaken the imperial power, and render the emperors odious and contemptible, as a noted French historian† observes. "Pope Gregory IV. had a great hand in the troubles of the emperor Lewis the Pious, gave secret encouragement to his sons, in their mutual rebellion, and to Ebbo archbishop of Rheims, and the bishops of France, when they actually deposed him at Compeign, A. D. 833." ‡ Fovisse eum (Gregorium papam) nefario studio, rebellionem filiorum Ludovici, in optimum ac munificum in Romanam ecclesiam principem, demerendo sibi Lothario, cujus rei non unum documentum est.——Nec dubium est, quin clàm à pontifice inducti fuerint episcopi Gallicani, principibus Ebbone Rhemensi, et Agobardo Lugdunensi, quum deposuère imperatorem, apud Compendium diœcesios Suessionensis, anno 833.§ This was so fully known, that many of the clergy of France publicly charged pope Gregory with it. Quare idem Gregorius pontifex à Franciæ melioribus episcopis accusatus est, quòd immemor esset pastoralis officii, moderationis, jurisjurandi facti imperatori. Dupin‖ gives very near the same account with Spanheim.

A little after this, pope John VIII. assumed the authority of giving the empire to Charles the Bald of France, in prejudice to the rights of Lewis of Germany, the elder branch. Mortuo Ludovico Imperatore, in præjudicium Ludovici Germanorum regis, fratris natû majoris, ad imperii Romani sceptra provehit, ac coronam imponit, interpretatus sincerum beneficium, et jus apostolicæ sedis.¶ "His holiness," says a popish historian, "with the other prelates, judging they had more to get by Charles than Lewis, gave him the preference, and crowned him emperor on Christmas-day, anno 875." But Charles, as the same historian observes, obtained this favour of the pope, at the expense of the rights of his imperial crown and sovereign dignity; insomuch that, of a superior, which he was before, he became a sort of vassal. He also gave up many of the rights of the Gallican church, and promised by oath to protect the pope against all persons.††

These ambitious views and growing power of the bishops of Rome,‡‡ greatly weakened the government and authority of that family, to which it owed its greatness and support. It proved a painful sore, and incurable ulcer, and was in great measure the cause of those many evils, which for so long a time afflicted the inhabitants of the earth, during the quarrels and contests between the successors of Charles the Great, which ended at last in their ruin, carried the crown of France to Hugh Capet, and transferred the kingdom to another family, and the imperial dignity to the Germans, another nation and people; and in these evils, Italy and Rome itself had their share, according to the righteous judgments of God.

The sons of Lewis the Pious, among whom his empire was divided, could no more agree among themselves after their father's death, than they could with him while he was living: their differences were only to be decided by the sword. The battle of Fontenay, A. D. 841, was obstinate and bloody; a hundred thousand men were slain in battle: a blow that so weakened the family of Charles the Great, that it could never after recover itself. Depuis le commencement de la monarchie Française jusqu'à ce temps que j'écris, says a celebrated French historian,§§ il ne s'est point repandu tant de sang Francais en quelque journée que c'ait été; il y perit cent mille hommes, horrible plaie, et que affoiblit si fort la maison Carlienne, qu'elle ne s'en put jamais remettre. Cædes miserabilis facta, says another historian,* omnis prope nobilitas Francica cæsa, pertinaci inter se certamine.

The emperor Charles, surnamed Le Gros, reunited most of the dominions of Charles the Great; he inherited Germany from his father, and upon the death of his cousin Lewis, succeeded him in the empire of Italy and kingdom of France. He was crowned emperor by the pope, A. D. 880, and received king of France A. D. 884, the French passing over Charles the Simple, as too young for government: but this prince was soon forsaken by his subjects, who chose in his room Arnold, his brother's natural son, about A. D. 887. The defection was so general, that he was reduced to great misery and want; insomuch, that he had not a servant to attend him, nor a penny to buy him bread; only Luitprand bishop of Mentz had any pity for him, and at last kept him from starving. En sorte, says Mezeray,† qu'il ne lui resta pas un valet pour le servir, ni un seul denier pour vivre, il n'y eut que Luitperd evêque de Mayence, qui en eut pitié et lui donna à manger.

At the death of this Charles Le Gros, the family of Charles the Great was reduced to two princes, Arnold natural son of Carloman, and Charles surnamed the Simple; but there were several persons of great power descended from some of the daughters of Charles the Great,‡ as Eudes earl of Paris and duke of France, Berenger duke of Friuli, and Guy duke of Spoleto in Italy. France chose Eudes for their king; this occasioned continual wars between him and Charles the Simple, till the death of Eudes, A. D. 898. But the differences between Berenger and Guy in Italy were much longer, and afflicted all Italy with great calamities, in which Rome itself could not avoid a considerable share. Hi summam sibi rerum haud malo consilio asciscere nixi, intestinis populorum discordiis Italiam perturbârunt, ac seipsos prorsùs unà cum ecclesiâ perdiderunt: ea tempora in rempublicam inferentes, quibus nulla alia tetriora ac fœdiora fuisse, vel principum nequitiâ, vel populorum insaniâ, in totâ antiquitate inveniuntur.§

It is to be observed, that as the popes had themselves a very great hand in exciting these troubles, so they had a great share in them too. Major pars, licèt Berengarii causa justior esset, pontificis credo auctoritate impulsa, ad Vidonem se contulit.‖

The quarrel soon spread itself into the Roman church. The parties of pope Formosus and Sergius raged against each other with uncommon furỳ; insomuch, that pope Stephen caused the dead body of Formosus to be dug out of its grave, and after condemnation to be thrown into the river Tiber; made all his acts null and void, and took care to make an emperor of his own party. Lambertum verò regem Italiæ, factionis suæ partes, exemplo patris, foventem, inunxit imperatorem.¶

It would be endless to mention all the calamities these civil contentions brought upon Italy, for near fourscore years, till pope John XII., A. D. 960, implored the assistance of Otho the Great, emperor of Germany, pro Christianæ religionis, atque Italiæ salutis amore. Who accordingly came, and put an end to the troubles of Italy; in acknowledgment of which service, he received the imperial crown from the pope, A. D. 962.

The forementioned calamities were great in themselves, and were also an occasion of many others: for these civil contentions had greatly weakened the western empire, so that the Normans were able to invade and ravage several parts of it; especially in France, where at last they forced a settlement, and erected a powerful dominion of Normandy, so called after their own name. The mischiefs these Norman invasions caused in France, are not to be mentioned, says Mezeray,†† without horror. Their desire of plunder brought them into the richest provinces, the false zeal for the religion (they were then heathens) made them cruel and bloody, especially to churchmen. From sea to sea there was not a monastery that did not feel their rage, nor a town that was not ransomed, pillaged, or burnt, twice or three times; which, says our historian, made it sufficiently evident, it was one of God's terrible plagues.

On the other hand, the Saracens ravaged Italy, fixed themselves at Tarento, made excursions to the very gates of Rome, and carried off the riches of the churches without the gates of the city. Saraceni prædæ libidine stimulati, ex Africâ classem Romanis littoribus intulerunt, et procursû ad urbem facto, opimas apostolorum Petri et Pauli suburbanas basilicas, nemine vim propulsante, diripuerunt, ac pretiosis omnibus earum ornamentis ablatis, ipsas etiam basilicæ Vaticanæ valvas argenteas asportârunt.*

About the same time the Hungarians, then a barbarous and brutal people, broke in upon the German dominions, and plundered Bavaria, Swabia, Franconia, and Saxony. They afterward marched into Italy, routed Berenger, cut his army to pieces,† and often renewed their incursions, to the great terror and ruin of the inhabitants of those countries which they invaded.

This was the calamitous state of the western empire for above a hundred years from the death of Lewis the Pious, A. D. 840, to the settlement of the German empire in Otho the Great, A. D. 962; and well agrees to the prophetic description, to the time and order of the prophecies, with respect to each other. By "the earth," in the prophetic style of these revelations, is meant the Roman empire, or the countries, with their inhabitants, subject to its dominion. The calamities of these times, as they are related in history, may very properly be called a noisome and grievous sore, ἕλκος κακὸν καὶ πονηρὸν, "a painful malignant ulcer." The order of the prophecies shows what state of the empire is meant, that state of it which falls in with the beginning of the reign of the beast, or of the third period of one thousand two hundred and sixty years. It may therefore sufficiently, I think, point out to us on what earth this first vial was to be poured, on whom this plague was to fall, what was the time, and what were the contents of this vial.

Second vial.—Let us follow our guide in the order and series of prophecy and history, and see whether there are not some very memorable events in the series of providence, which are very properly applicable to this prophetical description.

The pouring out of the first cup, foretelling the judgments of God on the successors of Charles the Great, and the new-founded dominion of the papacy, principally occasioned by the pope's ambition and intrigues, has brought us down to the latter end of the tenth century. Then the empire was fixed in Germany by Otho the Great, and the kingdom of France passed into the third race, the family of Capet, in which it still remains, about A. D. 987.

Let us observe what was the next memorable part of history, after these great revolutions in the western empire, and in the nations which owned the authority of the Roman popes; the order and series of the prophecies direct us to look there, as the proper time wherein to find the contents of the second vial.

From A. D. 1000 to 1100 the corruptions of true religion were greatly increased. A prodigious superstition spread every where during the eleventh century, not only among the lower sort and common people, but among persons of the first rank, even emperors and princes themselves; pretended miracles, apparitions of departed souls, dreadful tales of the pains of purgatory, improved the people's superstition, and enriched the church.‡

The wholè of religion was placed in penances, masses, legacies to redeem souls from purgatory, pilgrimages, especially to the holy sepulchre at Jerusalem, which ended at last in the holy war.§

This gave a fair occasion to the popes to carry on their ambitious designs, and enlarge their authority in things temporal as well as spiritual; the antichristian power began now to exalt iself above all that is called God, and to claim a power of choosing and deposing emperors, and to deprive princes of all civil rights by excommunication. Hildebrand was pope, by the name of Gregory VII., A. D. 1073; he expressly claimed the authority of sovereign judge over all, of deposing emperors, and absolving subjects from their allegiance. He actually used this power towards the emperor Henry IV. and other princes of Europe. In the year 1076, he held a council at Rome, of one hundred and ten bishops, who, after mature debate, concluded,* the pope had reason to deprive the emperor of his crown, and absolve the princes and members of the empire from their oaths. This resolution the pope put in execution, excommunicated the emperor and all his adherents.

Farther, in the year 1080, he renewed his excommunication against the emperor, declares he had forfeited the kingdoms of Germany and Italy, and all royal dignity, forbid all Christians to obey him, gives the kingdom of Germany to Rodolf, exhorting all the princes to take arms against him.†

What troubles, what unnatural rebellions, what bloody wars, this most extravagant claim of power occasioned, the historians of those times relate at large; they are such as in themselves might be esteemed justly a terrible judgment for this antichristian apostasy.

This pope Gregory had other differences with almost all the other Christian princes; he threatened to excommunicate Philip the First, king of France, and usurped a full authority over the bishops and ecclesiastical affairs of France, by his legates; and, in a word, he did all that he could to become the only sovereign monarch of the universe: Enfin, il fit son possible, pour se faire declarer le seul monarque souverain de tout l'univers.‡ Besides all these flames which the ambition of the popes kindled in the western empire itself, it was the occasion of another most remarkable judgment, which fell grievously on the zealous abettors of superstition and supporters of the papal authority.

Pope Urban II., the next but one to this Hildebrand, continued the quarrel with the emperor, who supported Clement, formerly called Guibert, as pope against him.§

Pope Urban went into France, A. D. 1096, and held a council at Clermont; he proposed, with great earnestness, to raise an army, which should march into the holy land, to recover Jerusalem and the sepulchre out of the hands of Mahometans. Sacram Hierosolymorum expeditionem, incredibili sententiarum gravitate, verborum copiâ, atque animi ardore suasit.¶

It is incredible what effect so romantic a project had on the minds of a superstitious people; they received it for the manifest will of God, and fell in with the pope's proposal with wonderful zeal. Postquam autem peroravit, universi qui aderant, divino quasi Spiritû concitati, bellum pro sepulcro Christi recuperando ingentibus studiis animorum jusserunt, atque in eo apertam se Dei voluntatem sequi velle, altissimis clamoribus responderunt.¶

The pope, to encourage their constancy in such a resolution, promises free indulgence for their sins, to take them into the church's protection, both for their persons and fortunes. Gratias ago Deo maximas, said the pope, quòd vos tantâ animorum consensione atque alacritate arma pro Christo redemptore vestro suscepturos esse ostenditis; neque tam repentina in tam diversis gentibus conspiratio, sine gravissimo ipsius esse impulsû potest. Nos autem ut studia vestra, quoad possumus, adjuvemus, misericordiâ Dei, et beatorum Petri et Pauli auctoritate confisi, omnibus qui ad hoc bellum prodierint, omnia pro delictis suis piacula relaxamus, eosque sub ecclesiæ tutelam, et beatorum Petri et Pauli clientelam, tanquam veræ obedientiæ filios, suscipimus, et ab omnibus vexationibus corporum fortunarumque tutos esse statuimus.

We here evidently see what hand the pope had in this enthusiastical expedition; but we should observe, there was something deeper than superstition or enthusiasm in this project of the popes, which caused so much effusion of Christian blood. "These crusades and voyages beyond sea," says a judicious historian of the Roman communion, "occasioned the ruin of many great men, and a multitude of common people; but the popes and kings had great advantages from it, to render them absolute. These (the popes) because they took the authority of commanding these expeditions, of which they were the head; they had the persons and estates of those who took the cross in their protection. It made the use of indulgences and dispensations more common than before; their legates had the management of the alms and legacies which were given for these wars; and it moreover gave the popes a pretence to raise the tenth on the clergy."* In effect, no policy could have so well served the pope's ambition, nor any means be better suited to render his authority supreme and absolute.

We have an immediate instance of the truth of these observations. Clement, who disputed the papacy with Urban, had possessed himself of Rome, but Urban, by the help of those who had listed themselves for this holy war, assaulted Rome, and took it, and forced Clement to retire. Eo ardore, says Sigonius, quo bellum contra Saracenos suaserat, arma paravit, ac propriis multorum, quos ad sacram expeditionem accenderat, auxiliis usus, urbem oppugnavit.†

An incredible number of persons soon prepared themselves for this holy war. Pope Urban travelled through Italy to raise money; the people listed themselves so fast in this spiritual militia, that the countries seemed to be deserted, and all the coasts and havens filled with people setting out on their voyage to Asia. Ex toto occidente, principes, populique adeò frequentes ierunt, ut crederes, vulgò urbes ab incolis deseri, agrosque incultos, solosque deseri; Urbanus Calabriam, Apuliam, et Siciliam, quas Normanni amici tum ecclesiæ obtinebant, lustravit, atque ingentem pecuniæ summam in commoda ecclesiæ, profundendam confecit: cruce signati, diversis itineribus, terrâ marique, ita ut omnes oras portusque complerent, trajecerunt.‡

This first expedition is computed to consist of more than three hundred thousand men.§ They met with some success at first. Godfrey of Bouillon, their general, had the honour of receiving the title of King of Jerusalem, having taken it A. D. 1099,‖ yet their victories were so bloody, that in a very short time there remained no more than five thousand horse and fifteen thousand foot of that numerous army.

Yet the fire of enthusiasm still spread through the west; another crusade was raised A. D. 1100. This again consisted of above three hundred thousand more. In this expedition my author¶ observes, that not only several great princes, but moreover many prelates, and even many great ladies, resolved to undertake the voyage. Et plusieurs prelats, et quantité des dames illustres voulurent faire ce voyage.

Thus, in about four years, six hundred thousand men were sent to perish, through the ambitious views of the popes. These expeditions continued for many years, with an incredible effusion of blood. According to some authors, there perished above two millions of these enthusiasts: others observe, there were hardly any men left in the west, and almost no persons seen, but either infants or widows.

In fine, about the year 1190, the emperor Frederic, our king Richard, Philip Augustus of France, and others, made another fruitless and inglorious expedition; and, after the loss of the greatest part of their armies, were forced to leave what had been so long contended for, with so much bloodshed, in the hands of the Mahometans.

This is a very remarkable part of history; it falls in exactly with the order and series of the prophecies, and is so memorable a judgment on the supporters of the papal apostasy, that I shall leave it to the reader's judgment, whether it does not give light to the time and contents of this second vial.

Third vial.—We have supposed the judgment of the foregoing vial, or cup, to have been the crusade or holy war, by which the ambition of the popes, and gross superstition of the people, had involved a great part of the church and empire in many grievous calamities, and many hundred thousand lives were sacrificed to a wild enthusiasm.

The judgments signified by this third vial, or cup, then, according to the order of the prophecies, will be the next remarkable judgment upon the followers of the beast, which, according to the order of time, must be about A. D. 1200, for a proportional number of the twelve hundred and sixty years of this period. The contents of this vial, or nature of the judgments signified by it, is shedding of blood, in recompense for the blood of the saints shed by authority of the beast. This judgment is chiefly to fall on those parts of the western empire, which were the original seat of the beast's residence and dominion.—Let us then inquire, whether we have not historical events in this period of time, which very properly answer to the prophetical descriptions, and sufficiently verify the truth of this prediction.

We may observe, that the persecuting power of popery was fully established, and raged with greatest fury, during this period of time. It was in this time they were most eminently distinguished for shedding the blood of saints and prophets.

The Albigenses became numerous and powerful;* they were spread through Languedoc, Provence, Dauphiné, and Arragon; they were protected by persons in power, in particular by Raymond count of Toulouse. Pope Innocent III. sent his legates to suppress them, about A. D. 1198. He gave them commission not only to preach against the Albigenses, but to excite princes and people to exterminate them by a crusade, in which he endeavoured to engage Philip Augustus, then king of France, and the great princes and lords of his kingdom.

Besides all former methods of proceedings against heretics, which one would have thought were severe enough, this pope Innocent III. found out, and established, the new method of the inquisition.† Father Dominic was made inquisitor about A. D. 1216. When he received his authority from the pope, he declared that he was resolved to defend the doctrines of the faith, meaning the corruptions of the Roman church, with the utmost vigour; and that if the spiritual and ecclesiastical arms were not sufficient for this end, it was his fixed purpose to call in princes to take arms against heretics, that the very memory of them might be destroyed.

Thus, all the severe and bloody methods of persecution were set on foot; a vast army of cross-bearers was raised: Mezeray‡ says, they were not less than five hundred thousand. They besieged Beziers, took it, and put about sixty thousand to the sword, and proceeded with great cruelty, till they had ruined the count of Toulouse, and given his estate to Montfort, general of the crusade, as a reward for his services.

The severest methods of persecution were established by the famous council of Lateran.§ The poor Albigenses were every where a sacrifice to the merciless rage of their enemies. The chief zeal of the church, in those times, consisted in putting those they called heretics to death in the most cruel manner they could invent. Thus they made themselves worthy of the judgment, that God should "give them blood to drink."

And we shall find this part of the prophecy as fully verified in the events of providence as the former.

There had been great contests between the emperors and popes for a long time about investitures, or the right of presenting to bishoprics and ecclesiastical preferments. The emperors claimed this right, as belonging to their regale, a royalty belonging to the crown; on the other hand, the popes claimed it, as an unquestionable part of the pontifical authority. This contention had occasioned great confusion and disturbance at various times; parties were formed on each side, distinguished by the names of Guelphs and Ghibellines: the Guelphs were the papal party, the Ghibellines the imperial.

The emperor Frederic II. was excommunicated A. D. 1227, for not going in person to the holy war.‖ This so angered the emperor, that he endeavoured every way to mortify the pope. He engaged several of the powerful noblemen of Rome against him; so that the pope was forced to leave Rome, and retire to Perugia. The Guelph and Ghibelline faction strove in every place to raise their own party,* and to ruin the other; so that almost all the cities in Italy were in civil wars, and the blood of the citizens, in almost every place, shed by their own hands.

However, the emperor embarked the next year for the holy land, but soon found the pope had sent him into Syria that he might make war against him the better in Italy. He therefore returned, recovered the places taken from him by the pope, ravaged all the pope's dominions even to the gates of Rome. In the year 1237 he beat the army of the league formed against him, after a furious and bloody battle, and put the general and other chief officers to death by the hands of the common hangman. The animosities of the two parties, the Guelphs and Ghibellines, were so outrageous, that not only the several cities of Italy were divided, but particular houses and families, so that they gave no quarter to each other.

The death of the emperor Frederic II., A. D. 1250, left the empire in great confusion. Many pretended to the imperial dignity. These contests were sensibly felt in Italy; such cities as held of the empire, either formed themselves into commonwealths, or were governed by princes of their own.† Pope Urban, jealous of the power of Manfred, who had possessed himself of the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, and to recover the power of the Guelph party, which was almost ruined, made an offer of the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily to Charles earl of Anjou, brother to Lewis king of France, on condition he would bring sufficient forces into Italy, to support the almost ruined party of the Guelphs.‡ Charles accepts the pope's offer, was crowned by Clement IV. on condition to hold those kingdoms of the holy see, by homage, fealty, and an annual rent. His army was joined by the Guelphs, defeated Manfred's army, and so got into possession of both the Sicilies. Upon this, Conradin duke of Suabia, son of the emperor Conrad, and last of the family, was encouraged to enter Italy by the Ghibellines, who were not able to endure the power of the Guelphs, so greatly strengthened by the protection of Charles. Both sides came to a battle, in which Conradin was beaten and taken prisoner, with Frederic of Austria who accompanied him, and both had their heads cut off; so that the two great families of Suabia and Austria became extinct, A. D. 1268. This dishonourable execution was by the pope's advice, who near his death gave it for a maxim, "The life of Conradin is the death of Charles;" Conradi vita, Caroli mors; Caroli vita, Conradi mors.§

Rodolf of Hapsburg, afterward emperor, who, by transferring these inheritances into his own family, raised the grandeur of the present house of Austria, could not be persuaded to meddle with the affairs of Italy; so that the government of most cities fell into several hands, just as the contending parties could prevail over each other.

The contest, upon the death of Rodolf, between his son Albert of Austria and Adolph of Nassau, kept the affairs of Italy in pretty much the same state. The feuds between the Guelphs and Ghibellines continued and increased: Jamais les deux partis des Guelphs et des Ghibellines ne fûrent si acharnés l'un contre l'autre, qu'ils etaient alors.‖

Pope Boniface VIII. persecuted the Ghibellines and the cardinals Colonna with great severity.¶ This more inflamed the parties against each other; so that the pope was taken prisoner by the Ghibellines, the grief of which is supposed to have hastened his end: Dolore animi confectus periit.

Pope Clement V., a little time after, consulted his own safety, and retired with the cardinals into France, where the court of Rome continued for above seventy years, in a sort of banishment from their own country and dominions; in all which time, the Guelphs and Ghibellines made war on each other, and Rome was in the greatest confusion.

The emperor Henry VII. resolved to assert the rights of the empire in Italy. Pope Gregory, on the other hand, by secret practices, raised a powerful league against him. He engaged the king of Naples, the cities of Florence, Sienna, Lucca, Cremona, Padua, and others, to oppose him. The city of Rome was in great distraction. The Colonnas, at the head of the Ghibellines, seized on the Lateran, the amphitheatre, and other principal places of the city.

John, brother of the king of Naples, at the head of the Guelphs,* possessed himself of the capitol, castle of St. Angelo, the mole of Adrian, and the Vatican. Platina has represented the disorders of these bloody civil wars, as if the Italians were in every place thirsting after each other's blood, without any bounds to their mutual rage and cruelty. Intestina mala quotidiè, cum magnâ hominum cæde, in unaquaque civitate, in quovis parvo etiam castello, committebantur; cædebantur cives, necabantur senes, allidebantur infantes, nec ullus crudelitatis modus inerat.

Benedict XII., in order to make as many friends as he could, and keep up an interest in Italy against the emperor, published an edict, whereby he confirmed to all persons, who had seized on the governments of Lombardy, that they should have a just title by that grant to what they had usurped. Fece un decreto, che tutti i tiranni di Lombardia possedessero le terre, che se havevano usurpate, con giusto titulo.†

Platina farther observes, he pretended a right to make such grants, because, during the vacancy of the empire, all the power of it resides in the pope, who is the only vicar on earth of Jesus Christ, the supreme King. Suo jure (ut ipse dicebat) tribuit, quòd vacante imperio, omnis ejus potestas in pontificem recidat, Jesu Christi, supremi regis, unicum in terris vicarium.‡

The emperor, on the other hand, not to be outdone by the pope in liberality, presented all who had seized on any part of the estate of the pope or church, with a title to possess them as their own, by virtue of the imperial authority.§

Thus were the parties spirited up against each other. The contest continued for above a hundred years, spread itself throughout all Italy; so that there was not a city, scarce a village or a family, in which they did not shed each other's blood in this furious contention. It would be endless to mention particulars; I shall only take notice of one, the massacre in Sicily, usually called, "the Sicilian Vespers," A. D. 1282. Pope Nicholas had the chief hand in the plot,‖ and managed the principal parts of it, though it did not break out till after his death, as Mezeray expressly declares. The French were murdered throughout the whole island; they massacred them at the very altars; they ripped up the women with child, and dashed out the children's brains against the stones: eight thousand were murdered in two hours, and they spared the life but of one single person.

When we see in history such bloody contentions, for so long a time, occasioned by the popes' ambition, to wrest the civil authority of the emperors out of their hands, and seize on it for themselves, we have evident proof of this righteous judgment of God, that he gave them blood to drink, as they had shed the blood of his saints.

We see their ambition proved as bloody and destructive to themselves, as to those whom they persecuted for their faithfulness in the cause of truth and righteousness. Here is a remarkable concurrence of persecution on the one hand, and of punishment, by civil contentions and bloodshed, on the other; which are the distinguishing marks of this vial or cup, as the time exactly answers to the series and order of the prophecies.

Fourth vial.—We may still observe a near resemblance between the prophecies of the vials and trumpets; on sounding the fourth trumpet, a third part of the sun was smitten; this fourth angel pours out his vial upon the sun; there is however this difference, that on sounding the fourth trumpet the sun was darkened, and the day shone not—on pouring out the fourth vial, the heat of the sun is so increased, as to become intolerable and painful.

The sun, says an illustrious interpreter,* is put, in sacred prophecy, for the whole species and race of kings, in the kingdom or kingdoms of the world politic, shining with regal power and glory. "Darkening, smiting, or setting of the sun, is put for the ceasing of a kingdom, or for the desolation thereof, proportional to the darkness: and the scorching heat of the sun, for vexatious wars, persecutions, and troubles, inflicted by the king."†

Great troubles are often expressed in scripture, by burning the inhabitants of the earth. "Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate; therefore are the inhabitants of the earth burned, and few men left" (Isa. xxiv. 6). The elegance and propriety of the expression, to "scorch men with the heat of the sun," was well understood by the inhabitants of the hot eastern countries, who well knew what great mischiefs hot and burning seasons often occasioned. Our Saviour, when he had used the same figure of a scorching sun in the parable of the sower, Matt. xiii. 6—21, interprets it himself of tribulation and persecution.

I think it is not material to inquire, what particular effects of a scorching sun are the precise meaning of this prophecy; whether, for instance, famine, on burning up the fruits of the earth, or pestilential distempers, the effects of unwholesome seasons; or, more generally, some great and painful affliction, as the prophet explains a like expression, "In the city is left desolation, and the gate is smitten with destruction" (Isa. xxiv. 12).

We may understand this "scorching men with fire, so that they were scorched with great heat," as a prediction, that the judgments of God should reach his enemies in every place; for the host of heaven and seasons of the year should fight against them, and smite them with destruction, so that they should find no room to escape.

Let us then see whether, in the times which fall in with this vial according to the order of the prophecies, we shall not meet with such historical facts as will fully verify this prediction.

The time answering to the foregoing vial brought us down to about the year 1371, when the factions were so well quieted in Italy, that the popes returned to Rome, from their banishment at Avignon in France. As, in the style of prophecy,‡ the sun is put for the whole species or race of kings, in the kingdom or kingdoms of the world politic, so the popes, as heads of this political state restored to the seat of their empire, will be most naturally meant by this figurative representation of the sun; so that the power given to the sun to scorch men with fire, will most probably mean some great and grievous evils brought upon the inhabitants of the earth, by their hot and burning passions of ambition, envy, and covetousness, the causes of many mischievous disorders.

Upon the death of pope Gregory XI., which happened soon after his return to Rome, there followed a great schism, which was the most memorable event, and of greatest consequence, in the history of those times, L'histoire du schisme des papes est le plus considerable évènement de ce siècle, says the learned Dupin.§

The citizens of Rome, in order to fix the residence of the popes among themselves for the future, warmly pressed the choice of a Roman, at least of an Italian; there were but four Italian cardinals among the sixteen then at Rome, the other twelve were Ultramontanes; so there was little expectation of a plurality of votes in favour of an Italian. However, the multitude continually cried out, they would have a Roman pope, and threatened the French cardinals to cut them in pieces, if they did not choose a Roman, at least an Italian.‖ At length the people broke into the conclave, and seized the cardinals, continually demanding a Roman pope. Some of the cardinals' domestics having said to them, "Have you not the cardinal of St. Peter?" immediately, as if he had been duly elected, they clothed him in the pontifical robes, placed him on the altar, and proceeded to adoration, notwithstanding his own declaration, that he was not pope: yet the next day he caused himself to be proclaimed pope, by the name of Urban VI. The cardinals then publicly owned him, yet privately writ to the king of France, and other Christian princes, that it was a void and null election, which they did not intend should be acknowledged.

Urban, trusting likely to his party at Rome, behaved with great pride and insolence, and very much disobliged the cardinals. They retired from Rome to Fundi; there they chose another pope. The better to reconcile the difference between the French and Italians, they chose a German, Robert, cardinal of Geneva, who took the name of Clement VII.

Thus a schism began, which continued many years, and divided the several kingdoms and states of Europe; some supporting the cause of Urban, others the interests of Clement, who left Italy, and placed his residence at Avignon.* Urban left his seat vacant by death, A. D. 1389. The Italian cardinals proceeded to a new election, and chose Boniface IX., a Neapolitan. In like manner, upon the death of pope Clement, A. D. 1394, at Avignon, the cardinals of that party proceeded to another election, and chose Peter Luna, of Arragon, who was named Benedict. Many attempts were made to heal this breach, but all to no purpose; a renunciation or cession of both the popes was proposed, but that suited the ambition of neither.

The Romans, after the death of Boniface IX., chose Innocent VII., and after him Gregory XII., his successors. The mischiefs of these contentions were at last thought to want the remedy of a general council. A general council was held at Pisa, A. D. 1409. The council deposed both popes, Gregory and Benedict, and chose a new pope, who took the name of Alexander V.

One would have thought this decision should have ended the dispute; here was the determination of a general council, in which there were twenty-two cardinals, twelve archbishops, sixty-seven bishops in person, eighty-five deputies, a great number of abbots, proctors of orders, and chapters, with sixty-seven ambassadors of kings or sovereign princes: and yet both the popes found means to support themselves, and keep up a party; the one chiefly in Italy, the other principally in Spain. Alexander V., chosen by the council of Pisa, was received as pope by the greater part of the nations. Upon his death, John XXIII. was chosen in his place.

There were now three successors to St. Peter, in three lines of succession, at the same time. John XXIII. appointed a general council to be held at Constance, A. D. 1414. This council pressed him to resign, and declared he ought to do so, as well as Gregory and Benedict.† John did all he could to avoid this ungrateful proposal, but finding he could not gain his point in the council, he retired from it. The council notwithstanding continued, and cited John to appear. Upon his refusal, they declared him suspended from all government spiritual and temporal; and, at last, by a decisive sentence, deposed him. Gregory renounced the papacy, and was confirmed a cardinal; but Benedict continuing to oppose the council, was declared contumacious, a schismatic, and deposed.

The next business was to choose a pope, to whom all would submit, now the former were deposed. The council unanimously chose Martin, anno 1417. This seemed to put an end to a long schism, and to restore the peace of the church. But it soon appeared, the ambition of the popes was restless, and a continual source of disorders and mischievous contentions.

Pope Eugene IV., who succeeded Martin V., was greatly displeased with the council of Basil, for maintaining the authority of councils to reform the church both in head and members. Therefore, A. D. 1432, he published an order to dissolve it. The council could not prevail upon the pope to revoke the decree, yet continued to sit notwithstanding.‡ They cited the pope to appear before them; he was forced at last to revoke the dissolution, to allow and approve the continuation, with all that had been done by the council in that time; and the decree of the council of Constance was renewed for the confirmation of the authority of general councils.

Yet still new differences arose: the pope translated the council from Basil to Ferrara, and opened a council there, Jan. 10, 1438. Yet many bishops continued still at Basil, and proceeded so far as to depose pope Eugene, and chose another pope, who was called Felix V.

Thus the schism was renewed by two popes, each at the head of a council*—Pope Eugene presiding in the council of Florence, to which place he had translated the council from Ferrara; and pope Felix presiding in the council of Basil; and at the same time Germany proposed to call a third general council, to examine the rights of the other two. This schism continued to the death of Eugene, anno 1447, Felix then resigning all his pretensions to Nicholas V., his successor.

From this time (though the schism was ended) the popes were more taken up with the wars of Italy,† enterprises against the Turks, aggrandizing their temporal power, and establishing their own families, than in any care of religion; which proved the occasion of great disorders.

Alexander VI. was one of the worst of men; he dishonoured his dignity, says Dupin, by ambition, avarice, cruelty, and debauchery. According to Mezeray, he was one of the most impious and vicious of men; and if there was any one who exceeded him in abominable crimes, it was his own bastard son, Cæsar Borgia.‡

The disorders and calamities occasioned by these contentions, which the ambition, tyranny and cruelty of the popes were the sole cause of, appear every where in the history of these times; neighbour princes and nations were divided by their quarrels, and they set the whole world about them in a flame, by the fire of their contentions: all the principal wars and quarrels of this age had their rise from the ambitious projects of the popes.

This was the chief spring of those long and bloody wars about the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily. Pope Urban, to revenge himself of Jane queen of Naples,§ offered the investiture of that kingdom to Charles of Durazzo, and persuaded him to attempt to dethrone her, though he was greatly obliged to her, and even designed by her for her successor. This ungrateful attempt, at the pope's solicitation, made the queen change her mind, and adopt Lewis duke of Anjou for her heir. Charles of Durazzo was crowned at Rome, anno 1380, took Naples without resistance, and put queen Jane to death, together with her husband Otho of Brunswick.

Upon this success of Charles, the duke of Anjou was somewhat in doubt, whether he should pursue his claim; but pope Clement, who had no other way to depose Urban, used all endeavours to press him to it, that it seemed, says Mezeray, he valued not the ruin of the church, both in temporals and spirituals, if he could but establish himself. Qu'il semblait qu'il ne lui importait pas de la ruine de l'église, au temporel et au spirituel, pourvu qu'il pût procurer son établissement.

As these wars began, so they were kept alive by the intrigues of the popes for above a hundred years, in which France, Spain, and Germany had their share as well as Italy.

But these evils, great as they were, were not the only mischiefs the ambition and contentions of the popes caused in these times.

The council of Constance persecuted John Huss and Jerome of Prague with great severity, and a dishonourable breach of faith; they were both burned by order of the council, notwithstanding the emperor's safe conduct. Such an unjust and perfidious declaration, "that faith was not to be kept with heretics," quite enraged the Bohemians. The emperor Sigismund, who succeeded his brother Wenceslaus in that kingdom, was fain to use the army he designed against the Turks to quiet the Bohemians.‖ The pope sent a legate to raise a crusade against them. There were many lesser skirmishes and battles with the Husite general Zisca. At length an army of forty thousand horse, and as many foot, was sent against them, anno 1431, with the pope's legate, and many princes of Germany, at the head of it. This great army was defeated by the Bohemians; and they were not at last subdued but with great difficulty, and by reason of differences among themselves, which were raised and managed by the pope's agents, to weaken and destroy them.

Nor were these all the fatal consequences of these ambitious contentions of the popes; they caused a schism between the Greek and Latin churches, and a war between the Christians of the eastern and western empires, which greatly weakened the Christian interest against their common enemies, the Mahometan Turks. They kept up continual quarrels among the Christian princes, which the Turks, who were watching all opportunities, knew how to improve. Mahomet made great advances in Europe; and, A. D. 1453, put an end to the eastern empire, by taking the city of Constantinople, which has continued to be the seat and capital of the Turkish empire ever since. He soon passed over into Italy, took Otranto, left a garrison in it; and nothing seems to have saved Italy from the greatest danger, but the death of Mahomet, and a dispute between his sons about the succession; for Mahomet was eagerly bent upon taking old Rome, as he had already taken new Rome, or Constantinople. But the providence of God cut off his power, and put an end to all his designs with his life.

If now we consider the events of providence in this period, not only in a few particular instances, but in the general history and state of the Christian world, in the mischievous effects which the ambition and contentions of the popes caused every where, do they not very fully and properly answer the prophetic description?

The many evils caused by the hot and furious zealots for the pope's ambitious views, were fitly represented by a hot and intemperate season, whereby men were scorched with great heat.

Some interpreters carry the meaning of these expressions yet farther, and conceive they are to be understood in a literal sense also, for intemperately hot and burning seasons, which should destroy the fruits of the earth, occasion famine and pestilential distempers; and it is certain, in the history of this period, that the prophecy is fully verified in this meaning too. Not to enter into a particular detail of the numerous instances the history of this period furnishes us with, there is one so remarkable above others, and which falls out at a time so proper to close this period, that I think it deserves particular notice.

A new kind of disease invaded Germany this year, A. D. 1529, says a very judicious historian: "Men being taken with a pestilential sweating, either died in twenty-four hours; or, if they sweated out the poison, they recovered by degrees their health again: but before any remedy could be found for it, many thousands perished. This distemper, in a very short time, spread itself from the ocean all over Germany; and with incredible celerity, like a fire, raged far and near. It is commonly called, the sweating sickness of England; for, in the first year of the reign of Henry VII. of England, which was in the year of our Lord 1486, the same plague infested that country: and, because there was no remedy known for such a new distemper, it swept away a vast number of people. At this time also there was a great scarcity of corn and wine; so that all the judgments wherewith God, in his anger, uses to punish an unthankful people, as the sword, pestilence, and famine, fell upon Germany at one and the same time."*

It appears this was a new distemper, and but lately known, yet it was not the first time this period or age was punished with it: "There was a sweating sickness about eleven years before (A. D. 1517), being of that malignity, that it killed in the space of three hours; many persons of quality died of it: it was so mortal among the vulgar sort, that in some towns it took away half the people, in others the third part."†

About thirty years before this, viz. the beginning of the reign of Henry VII., "there reigned in the city, and other parts of the kingdom, a disease," says the Lord Bacon, "then new, which, of the accidents and manner thereof, they called the sweating sickness; it was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, and infinite persons died suddenly of it, before the manner of the cure and attendance was known."*

Here we see a new pestilential distemper returning three times in the space of about forty years, and the last time not confined to a particular country, but spreading itself through most parts of Europe.

I cannot leave this part of history, without the account a French historian gives us of it in his own country; as, I think, it greatly illustrates the propriety and elegance of the prophetic description.

"From the end of the year 1528 to the beginning of the year 1534," says the historian, "heaven was so angry with France, that there was a continual disorder of the seasons, or rather summer alone had taken all their places; so that for five years there was not two days of frost together. This intemperate heat enervated nature, if I may so express it, and made it impotent; it brought nothing to maturity, the trees blossomed immediately after the fruit, corn did not increase in the ground for want of water; there was such a quantity of vermin, as eat up the young shoots; the harvest did not produce sufficient for the next year's seed. This scarcity caused a universal famine; after which there appeared a distemper called troussegaland, and then a furious pestilence; by which three plagues, above a quarter part of mankind was carried away."†

Thus literally, as well as in a figurative meaning, there was power given unto the sun to scorch men in this period.

What little effect these judgments of God had on the world for their reformation, to abate their enmity to the truth, or cruelty to the faithful professors of it, we may learn from the infamous conduct of the council of Constance, which, in open violation of the public faith, burned John Huss and Jerome of Prague; and gave a public sanction to that scandalous doctrine, "that faith is not to be kept with heretics:" and we shall have yet farther instances of it in the following periods of prophecy and history.

Fifth vial.—This vial or cup is poured out on "the throne of the beast; so the word is in the original." In the scripture language, throne, kingdom, government, authority, dominion, and power, are of like signification; to "translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and to set up the throne of David over Israel," is to take the authority and power of government from the one, and give it to the other (2 Sam. iii. 10); to "establish the throne" is to confirm the kingly power and authority, as God promised David, "And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever" (2 Sam. vii. 16). An enlargement of the throne, signifies an increase of dominion and power, as, when "Solomon was set on the throne of the kingdom," the court congratulated David, and wished prosperity to the new king, in these words, "God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne" (1 Kings i. 47).

The throne, then, of the beast, which our translation has rendered his "seat," seems plainly to mean, his authority and power, rather than the city or seat of his residence. For the prophetic language puts a throne to signify, not the seat of a kingdom, but its power and authority. And so this very prophecy explains it; this angel "poured out his vial on the seat of the beast, and his kingdom was full of darkness."

Darkness is an emblem of affliction; a kingdom full of darkness will then naturally signify a great diminution of power and decay of authority; so that the distinguishing punishment of the beast in this period, that his kingdom shall be full of darkness, will most properly mean some great and successful opposition to the papal power and authority, which shall much weaken and lessen it, and give such uneasiness to the supporters of it, as shall drive them into a rage, and make them bite their own tongues, as it were, for anger and vexation.

Let us see, then, how this prophetic description is answered by the events of providence, in the times which fall in with this period of prophecy.

The last vial brought us somewhat beyond the year 1500. We shall easily perceive the most memorable events of history which next followed in order of time, were those which prepared the way for the protestant Reformation, and at last fixed and settled it in many considerable kingdoms and states of Europe.

The power and authority of the popes were attacked with success; entire nations were cut off from the kingdom of the beast. A very considerable part of those who had been long subject to his authority renounced it, and have continued freed from it to this day: even the nations which still profess obedience to the pope, have greatly abridged and restrained his power. They have learned to oppose his extravagant claims, and have rendered impracticable any ambitious views of a supreme unlimited authority in temporals and spirituals, which the popes had often aimed at, and at some conjunctures had a fair prospect of establishing.

The care of a wise and good Providence did not permit the kingdom of the beast to rise to such a degree of power, or even by the most cruel exercise of the power it had attained, to suppress altogether the cause of truth and Christian liberty. The blood of the martyrs, instead of destroying their cause, helped to promote it; many were justly displeased with so cruel usage of good men, pitied them for their sufferings, and began to have more favourable thoughts of their opinions. The corruptions of popery grew daily more visible to the world; the scandalous use pope Leo X. made of indulgences, to raise money every where by them, provoked Martin Luther to preach against them. This so nearly touched the power and interest of the pope, that he resolved to put a stop to all such disputes, so dangerous to his authority. He solemnly condemns the doctrine of Luther, and engages the emperor Charles V. to see his bull put in execution. Luther, under the protection of the elector of Saxony, not only continued to maintain his first doctrines, but openly declared himself farther against other corruptions of the Roman church; in which he was followed by many princes and cities of the empire. The doctrines of the Reformation spread so fast, and were propagated in so many places, that it was judged necessary to call a general council, as the only effectual means to put an end to those differences. So a council was appointed to meet at Trent, A. D. 1542, which, after many suspensions and intermissions, ended at last, A. D. 1563.

This council was so artfully managed by the popes, and ended so much to their advantage, so fully confirmed their corruptions, and condemned all doctrines tending to a reformation, that it was unanimously rejected by all who maintained the necessity of a reformation. Instead of proving an effectual remedy to restore peace, it greatly exasperated men's tempers; for, by the decrees passed in the council of Trent, all hopes of reunion or accommodation were entirely cut off. The kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, the northern kingdoms of Sweden and Denmark, many states of the empire and cantons of Switzerland, and great numbers in France, Hungary, and Bohemia, firmly adhered to the Reformation, separated from the Roman communion, and absolutely renounced the papal authority.

The popes, who were accustomed to use other arms besides spiritual, engaged the house of Austria, and several princes, by all possible means, to suppress the northern heresy, as they styled the Reformation; and left no methods they could think of untried, by which they could hope to ruin it: so that wars, invasions, assassinations, massacres, are the principal parts of the history of these times, for above a hundred years. We need but just mention the many bloody wars in Germany, in which Charles V. was endeavouring to destroy the liberties of the empire, with the protestant Reformation, the many civil wars in France, the long wars between Spain and the United Provinces, the Spanish invasion of our own kingdom, the massacre of Paris, the powder-plot in England, the many attempts against the life of queen Elizabeth, the actual assassinations of Henry III. and Henry IV., kings of France, and of the prince of Orange, founder of the Dutch commonwealth; all which are recited at large in every history, and recorded as the most memorable events of those times.

Yet the same histories also show us, that all these attempts in aid of the pope's authority failed of success. Several kingdoms maintained the Reformation against all opposition, and, by full authority of the supreme civil powers, annulled and made void the usurped authority of the popes; in many countries where yet the government continued in obedience to the pope, as supreme head of the church, the free possession and exercise of the protestant religion was tolerated and indulged.

At length, after many and great struggles, the chief defenders of the popes's cause were brought to confirm and ratify the peace and liberty of the protestant states. The treaties of Westphalia, A. D. 1648, are well called "the basis of the religious liberty of the empire." The treaty of Osnabruck, between the emperor and Sweden (art. v.), and the treaty of Munster, between the emperor and France (art. xxxiii.), confirmed the protestant states in their religion, and quieted them in their possessions in the most solemn and authentic manner;* and, what deserves observation, notwithstanding the public and vigorous protestations of the pope to the contrary. Pope Innocent X. had vehemently opposed these treaties in their progress, and no sooner were they concluded and ratified, but he solemnly protested against them, as highly prejudicial to the catholic religion and holy see. He declared them null and void, and freed all persons from any obligations to keep them, though they had sworn to the observation of them. Nous, de nôtre propre mouvement, et de nôtre certaine science, et mûre deliberation, et de la plenitude de la puissance ecclesiastique, disons et declarons, par ces mêmes presentes, que les dits articles——ont été de droit, sont, et seront perpetuellement, nuls, vains, invalides, iniques, injustes, condamnés, reprouvés, frivoles, sans force et effet, et que personne n'est tenu de les observer, ou aucun d'eux, encore qu'ils soient fortifiés par un serment.†

The great opposition made by the pope to these treaties, while they were negociating, gave the contracting powers reason to apprehend some such protestation at the conclusion of them. It was therefore inserted in the treaty itself, that these articles should be observed, any declaration made or to be made to the contrary notwithstanding, Sans s'arrêter à la contradiction, ou protestation, fait par qui ce soit, ecclesiastique ou seculier, soit au dedans soit au dehors de l'empire, en quelque tems que ce puisse être, toutes les quelles oppositions sont declarées nulles, et de nul effet, en vertu des ces presentes.‡

It is well known, these treaties of Munster and Osnabruck have continued an essential part of the constitution of the empire ever since; they are generally made the basis of all subsequent treaties, and have very frequently been confirmed by them.

Thus the Reformation proved a great blow to the authority of the popes; many nations withdrew altogether from his obedience, and such as remained to own him head of the church, yet evidently showed much less regard to his authority than before; and, on some greater occasions, plainly appeared both to oppose it, and treat it with contempt. As this is a very remarkable event of providence in itself, it every way answers the prophetic description of this period, That the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat or throne of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness.

CHAPTER XVII.

SECTION XVI.

1 And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters:

(1.) After I had seen in vision the afflicted state of the church in this last period, and the punishment of its antichristian enemies, by many strokes of divine vengeance, one of the angels appointed to pour out the cups of God's wrath called me to him, to explain yet more particularly to me some things concerning these judgments, and the characters of the persons on whom they were to be inflicted, which should sufficiently mark them out to a careful observer, as an idolatrous power, ruling over many nations and people.

2 With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

(2.) With whose idolatrous doctrines and practices the princes and rulers of the world, together with all sorts of people of every rank, had been greatly corrupted: so that they had been prevailed upon by this prostitute to join in polluting the worship of the Christian church, by abominable superstition and idolatrous practices.[1]

3 So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

(3.) When the angel had thus informed me of the design of his message, the scene of the prophetic vision was changed to a wilderness, a place of retirement and secrecy; there I saw a new vision, a woman appeared riding on a beast, adorned with scarlet furniture; its form like that I saw rising out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, with many blasphemous inscriptions or titles, to show that this idolatrous persecuting power was the same antichristian Roman government, meant by the beast that I saw in a former vision rise out of the sea.[2]

4 And the woman wns arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication:

(4.) This lewd prostitute, who sat on the beast, was herself clothed in the imperial habit, wearing purple and scarlet robes; she was also very richly adorned with gold and jewels, to show her high quality and great riches; she had also a golden cup in her hand, wherewith she intoxicated persons, and enticed them to join with her in her superstitions and idolatry.[3]

5 And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

(5.) This character of an idolatrous persecuting government, represented by this woman sitting upon a scarlet-coloured beast, appeared manifest by an inscription on her forehead, to this purpose: This is a mystical or figurative personage, meaning, under the name and character of Baby-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVII.

Contents.—The former vision represented a very afflicted state of the church; the true worshippers of God, few in number, driven out from society, flying into a wilderness and desert places for safety from persecution, prophesying in sackcloth, in a state of oppression and mourning, often put to death for their testimony to the truth: yet the time of this afflicted state is limited to one thousand two hundred and sixty years, or prophetic days; at the end of which period, this oppressive persecuting power shall be destroyed,—purity, truth, and righteousness, which were oppressed and persecuted, shall flourish in a state of great safety, peace, and huppiness.

This is a much longer period of prophecy than either of the two foregoing. To make the true intention and meaning of it more clear and evident, one of the angels who poured out the cups of God's wrath, is sent to St. John as a nuntius, more fully to explain it.

A nuntius, angel, or interpreter, was a known part in the ancient drama. Here an angel is sent to interpret this part of the prophecy to us; and we may justly look upon the angel's interpretation as a sure key, which will warrant an application of the several representations; and so far as an angel from heaven explains it, we may be satisfied we have the true meaning of it: so that by the help of this explication in the prophecy itself, we have a sure interpretation of some of the more important parts of the vision, and of such as will make the interpretation of the rest very likely and probable.

[1] Ver. 2.] Idolatry, in the ancient prophecies, is frequently called whoredom and fornication; the prophet Ezekiel interprets, being "polluted, after the manner of their fathers, and committing whoredom after their abominations," by "making their sons to pass through the fire, and polluting themselves with their idols" (xx. 30, 31). The prophet Isaiah, in like manner, describes the propagation of idolatry by Tyre, which was spread every where with their great trade and commerce, by these remarkable words, "She shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world upon the face of the earth" (xxiii. 17). As it is agreeable to the prophetic style to represent cities in the figure of women, so it is to represent idolatrous and superstitious cities by prostitutes and harlots; "Seeing thou dost all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman," says the prophet Ezekiel to Jerusalem (xvi. 30). A fit expression to show the evil of idolatry and superstition, and how hateful in the sight of God. This was one distinguishing character of this antichristian power, which ruled over and corrupted so many nations and people.

[2] Ver. 3.] We have already seen, in the notes on xiii. 1, that the monstrous wild creature there described, having seven heads and ten horns, with titles of blasphemy, and in which the forms of a leopard, a bear, and a lion were mixed together, signified the last form of Roman government, contemporary with the several new kingdoms erected on the fall of the Roman empire, after the form of government at the time of the vision, which was the imperial, should be passed away. The present representation of the great whore or prostitute, sitting upon this beast, signifies that the same state of Roman government is intended, which can be no other than the idolatrous persecuting power supported by the papal authority. This the angel-interpreter will show, I think, with full evidence, in explaining the principal parts of this figurative representation.

The beast seems to be called scarlet-coloured, because a scarlet covering, or rich cloth, was thrown over it: might not that rich horsecloth be embroidered with gold, and have heads and horns worked upon it, as emblems of power and authority, with proud mottoes, or titles, amounting to blasphemy?

[3] Ver. 4.] Purple and scarlet were the colours of the imperial habit: the purple in times of peace, and the scarlet in times of war. It is well known these are the colours used by the pope and cardinals; so that to be raised to the purple, or to the scarlet hat, is used to express being made a cardinal. The use of jewels, for state and magnificence, is too well known to be insisted on. The golden cup in her hand, full of abomination and filthiness of her fornication, may be an allusion to those philtres, or love-potions, which prostitutes and lewd women were used to prepare, to inflame the love of their gallants, but by which they often disturbed their senses, and made them run mad; or it may refer more simply to the common effects of drunkenness and debauchery. Babylon is represented as "a golden cup, that made all the lon, a power like that of ancient Babylon, a chief promoter of idolatry, by whose authority it was propagated among many nations. [4]

6 And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

(6.) When I perceived how cruel and outrageous this government was represented, so as to persecute the most faithful Christians to death, and shed their blood, as if drunk and mad with rage, it struck me with great wonder and astonishment, that a power, professedly Christian, should be so intoxicated with pride and cruelty. [5]

7 And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.

(7.) Then the angel-interpreter, who was sent to explain this vision to me, more distinctly informed me, that when I should more fully understand what this persecuting power was, how it came by its authority, how it abused it, how severely it should be punished for it in the end, my wonder would be much lessened: I will therefore, says he, give you a more distinct account of the original wickedness and punishment of this mystical Babylon.

8 The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.

(8.) Know then, and understand, this persecuting power will be a revived authority in the same city of Rome, which was once before destroyed by the righteous judgment of God for persecuting the truth; another persecuting power shall arise after it, which, by means of false doctrines, and those hellish principles by which Satan corrupts the world, and maintains a power over wicked men, shall greatly prevail; a corrupt part of the church, who by their antichristian temper and actions show they are not true Christians, shall be surprised and pleased with it, and the greater part shall rejoice in the revival of a power to promote their corruptions, and to persecute all who have conscience and integrity not to comply with them. [6]

9 And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.

(9.) Let them who have a mind to understand this prophecy, particularly attend to this key of explaining it, and it will give them a good degree of knowledge in the meaning of it; let them lay it down for a maxim, that this persecuting power is the city of Rome, so well known by its situation on seven hills. [7]

10 And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.

(10.) But, said the angel, observe farther, that seven kings are also signified, to express more distinctly under what state or form of government this persecuting power should arise in Rome. Observe then, that out of seven forms of government, five are already passed; the present that now is, at the vision, is the sixth; after this there shall be another, which is not yet come, and when it comes, is to continue but for a short time. All these are to be passed in their succession, before that form of Roman government shall arise which is meant by the beast in this prophecy.

11 And the beast that was, and is not, even he earth drunken; the nations have drunken of her wine, therefore the nations are mad" (Jer. li. 7). The disordered senses and understanding of a drunken man, the natural effects of a debauch, are a proper figurative representation of a disordered understanding and judgment of men, misled by any methods of infatuating deceit into idolatry and gross superstition.

[4] Ver. 5.] It has been observed by interpreters, that lewd women were used to have their names written over their doors, and sometimes on their foreheads; and that criminals among the Romans had an inscription of their crimes carried before them. In the first sense, as Mr. Daubuz observes, "this inscription will denote a public profession of what is signified by it, or a public patronage of idolatrous doctrines and worship." In the second sense, it will denote the crimes for which she is condemned, and was punished by the foregoing plagues. Mr. Waple thinks "this inscription is rather an allusion to the known inscription on the forehead of the high-priest, Holiness to the Lord; whereby is intimated, that this idolatrous persecuting government was an antichristian church, of a temper and spirit quite contrary to the true worship of the one true God."

The paraphrase of the Bishop of Meaux on these words deserves observation. "Babylon is meant by the name of the whore, and Rome by Babylon. This is the most natural sense.—We see then why St. John represents Rome in the name of Babylon, as she had all the characters of Babylon, an empire full of idols and divinations, and a persecutor of the saints, as she was." Sous le nom de la prostituée c'est Babylon, et sous le nom de Babylon, c'est Rome, c'est le sens le plus naturel——on voit donc pourquoi Saint Jean represente Rome sous le nom de Babylon, dont elle avait tous les caractères, dominante comme elle, comme elle pleine d'idoles et de divinations, et persecutrice des saints, qu'elle tenait captifs.

[5] Ver. 6.] It has been observed, I think justly, that the persecution of Christians, at the time of the vision, was not likely to have occasioned such astonishment in the apostle; but he might well greatly wonder, that Rome Christian, once so famous for purity of faith and patient suffering for the profession of truth, should become another Babylon for idolatry and persecution. From hence, protestant interpreters may with reason infer, that this vision does not represent the persecution of Rome heathen, but of Rome antichristian.

[6] Ver. 8.] This description of the beast, that it was, and is not, and yet is, means, in a plain and easy sense, that this persecuting power once was, then ceased to be, but afterward recovered itself again. Mr. Mede, following good authority, reads παρέσται, and renders it, "The beast that was, and is not, and yet is to come, which at length shall ascend out of the bottomless pit." The bottomless pit, gulf, or abyss, is mentioned as the prison of Satan, and his evil angels; opening the bottomless pit, signifies a permission of those powers of darkness to deceive and corrupt the minds of evil-disposed and wicked men with false doctrines and principles of persecution, through their lusts of ambition and covetousness (vid. ix. 1).

The expression, "Whose names were not written in the book of life," is intended to show, that this revival of a persecuting power should be greatly owing to some members of the church itself, but such who had lost the spirit and temper of true Christianity, who were led by ambition and worldly interests, and were ready to fall in with any thing that seemed best to fall in with their inclinations and views. "The book of life" is an allusion to the registers in which the names of persons were enrolled to remain upon record, as members of a corporation, or freemen of a city; to be registered in the book of life, is to be registered as true Christians, who have a right to the promise of eternal life (vid. iii. 5).

Now this description most exactly agrees with the temporal power of the papacy, which arose by the means of false doctrine, persecution, and assistance of a corrupt part of the church itself. Thus Rome, after it had lost all authority, ceased to be a seat of empire, was itself a small duchy, subject to the exarchate of Ravenna for many years; yet it revived again, recovered great power and authority, and has long continued the seat of the most extraordinary government the world ever saw.

[7] Ver. 9.] This interpretation of the angel leaves no room to doubt, but that the persecuting power here prophesied of was to be some empire of which the city of Rome was to be the capital, or seat. Rome was as well known by its is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.

(11.) For the form of government here prophesied of may on some accounts be reckoned as an eighth, though yet, for other reasons, it may be accounted as a seventh, and shall in its due time be as surely destroyed, as the several forms of government in succession before it were. [8]

12 And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.

(12.) More distinctly to show you the time of the beas in this prophecy, observe the ten horns, as designed to signify several distinct kingdoms and governments, none of which are yet in being at this time of the vision, but which are to arise in or about the same time with this last form of Roman government; therefore you are to consider the time of this persecuting power contemporary with ten other kingdoms, or governments, to be formed hereafter in the dominions of the Roman empire. [9]

13 These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

situation on seven hills, or montes, as by the name of Rome itself; urbs septicollis was never mistaken for any other city, Roman authors have so fully determined the sense of it.

Quæ de septem totum circumspicit orbem
Montibus, imperii Roma deûmque locus.*

[8] Ver. 11.] This part of the angel's interpretation deserves particular attention. It has appeared difficult to most interpreters; so that there is great difference between them as to the precise meaning of the several expressions.

The whole scheme and order of these prophecies will by no means admit, that the seven kings should mean seven emperors, in immediate succession to each other; for then the text would make the then reigning emperor the sixth, his immediate successor must be the seventh, the whole twelve hundred and sixty years of this period, with all the time of the two foregoing periods, would be comprised in the single reign of one man, and the whole prophecy would reach no farther than a very few years after the vision.

It is to be observed, that, in the style of prophecy, kings means kingdoms, or states of government. Daniel interprets the beast in his prophecy to mean kings, that is, kingdoms, empires, and distinct governments. "These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth" (Dan. vii. 17). One of these kings the prophet explains by a kingdom and distinct government, "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms" (ver. 23.) The prophecy before us points out the same interpretation, "The ten kings who have received no kingdom as yet" (xvii. 12), seem plainly to mean, not so many particular persons, who reigned in succession one after another, in the same kingdom or empire, but so many kingdoms, or distinct states of government, contemporary with each other, and all of them contemporary with the empire of the beast.

The angel-interpreter only observes concerning the first five, that they were fallen or passed away at the time of the vision, and, as Mr. Waple justly observes, without any distinct account of them, their time, names, difference, or the order of their succession among themselves; for which he gives this good reason, because they were of no farther use to this prophecy, than to show that the one head then in being was the sixth of the seven, after five already past. We have no need, then, to inquire, with great exactness, what these five forms of government were we may content ourselves with a short account of a very eminent Roman historian, very near the time of this vision. "Rome," he says, "was first governed by kings, then by consuls, by dictators, by decemvirs, by military tribunes with consular authority."†

The triumvirates were states of confusion, rather than forms of government; and Augustus settled the imperial government, which was the sixth, the form of government at the time of the vision, and which long continued under his successors, to the time of the destruction of the Roman empire by the northern invasions.

There appears no reason why the imperial government under Christian emperors should, or even can, be called a new form of Roman government: for all the powers of government were the very same under heathen and Christian emperors. I cannot therefore apprehend, that Constantine and his successors, when the empire became Christian, can be meant by the seventh king, or the kingdom which was not yet come. It seems to me, that the angel-interpreter intimates plainly enough, that the seventh form of government was not to begin till the imperial power of Rome should be destroyed, in whose soever hands it should be. After the imperial power was destroyed, Rome was long subject to the kingdom of the Goths in Italy. It was recovered out of their hands, and continued for some time, during the exarchate of Ravenna, under the eastern empire, governed by a lieutenant, and a duke subject to the exarch, as we have observed more largely before, on ch. xiii.

This state of Rome and its government answers well to the description of the beast, that was, and is not; and shows how this last government of the beast may, on some accounts, be called the seventh, and, for other reasons, the eighth head of government, as the exarchate of Ravenna was in some sense a new form of government, and yet hardly so distinct and proper a form of government, as to be reckoned a different head.

[9] Ver. 12.] What we translate "one hour," μίαν ὥραν, ought to have been translated "the same hour" or point of time, as several learned interpreters have justly observed. We have the same expression in the next verse, μίαν γνώμην, wnich we have rendered "one mind," meaning plainly the same mind. The beast, then, and the ten kings or kingdoms, are to be contemporary powers, or to reign at the same time.

Horns are a usual symbol of strength, as the strength of some of the fiercest beasts lies in their horns. This symbol of strength and power has been anciently used in the prophets, to signify the power of empire and government. Thus the prophet Jeremiah, concerning Moab, "The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord" (xlviii. 25). The prophet Zechariah saw the kingdoms that oppressed Judah under the representation of horns: "Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and beheld four horns. And I said unto the angel that talked with me, What be these? and he answered me, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem" (i. 18, 19). In the prophecy of Daniel, horns are most expressly designed to signify the empires of Media, Persia, and Greece; "The ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kingdoms of Media and Persia. And the rough goat is the king of Greece; and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king," the founder of that empire (viii. 20, 21).

There were ten horns in the representation, to denote ten distinct kingdoms, which should arise in several parts of the Roman empire, which the northern nations should canton out among themselves, and erect into new and distinct kingdoms.

I have before observed, that ten in prophetic language does not always mean a precise number, but is used as a certain number for an uncertain, to express in general several or many; "ten times" is the same as many times, "ten women" the same as many women, "ten men" mean several men, "ten sons" several sons, as we have observed in the annotations on Rev. ii. 10.

So that there seems to be no necessity of finding a precise number of ten different kingdoms, or just so many different governments, neither more nor less, erected on the ruins of the Roman empire: in fact, in those times of disorder and confusion, they were shifting and variable; but that

(13.) When these kingdoms shall be erected, as all had the same intention of cantoning out some part of the Roman empire a settlement for themselves, so they shall all join their authority and power (however they may be divided in their respective interests and ambition) to support this antichristian persecution of the faithful servants of Christ.

14 They shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

(14.) They shall themselves join in this war with Christ and his church, in persecuting all who should adhere to the purity of the Christian faith and worship; but though the faithful shall suffer much from them, they have this consolation in the same prophecy, that Christ, the King of saints, shall in due time overcome these powerful conquerors of the Roman empire: for God has constituted him Lord of lords, and King of kings; and God will assuredly defend and protect those whom he has chosen and called to the privileges of his church, and who are faithful to the cause of God and religion, against the opposition of the world, how powerful soever it may be.

15 And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

(15.) The angel-interpreter farther informed me, that I was to understand by that part of the vision in which I saw the whore sitting on many waters, the great extent of that persecuting power over many nations and people, being supported by the united force of the several nations that had settled themselves in the Roman empire. [10]

16 And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

(16.) Yet, for the comfort of the faithful, it is revealed, that these very nations who will thus support the idolatry and persecution of the beast for a time, shall at length grow sensible of her extravagant claims and grievous oppressions, shall be highly displeased with them and resent them; they shall not only withdraw their protection from her, but shall use their power against her; shall strip her of her ornaments and riches, expose her to shame, and bring her to destruction by fire and sword, and all the calamities of war. [11]

17 For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

(17.) For God, the supreme governor of the world, in whose hands the hearts of kings are, as well as the hearts of meaner persons, though he permits the kings of the earth to support the idolatry and persecution of the beast for a time, yet it is only for a limited time, during the period of this prophecy; when this word of prophecy shall be finished, then he will put it into their hearts to fulfil his farther will, in the destruction of that power which they before supported.

18 And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

(18.) And finally, to understand this vision, observe that the kingdom of the beast is a kingdom in the same great city which you now see the empress of the world, which has subdued the other empires, and subjected so many kingdoms of the earth to its dominion. [12]

several new kingdoms were erected, when the northern nations divided the empire among themselves, is well known in history, and evident in the several distinct governments of Europe at this day.

Several interpreters have reckoned up the number of ten precisely with the time when, and the place where, they were erected, from whom every one who pleases may satisfy his farther curiosity. It may be sufficient here to mention the account given of them by the illustrious Sir Isaac Newton.*

9. The kingdom of the Lombards.
10. The kingdom of Ravenna.

Whether we reckon after this manner with our illustrious author, or in a somewhat different manner with others, yet in general, this division of the Roman empire into several distinct kingdoms, was a memorable event of providence, and distinguishing mark of this period of prophecy: so that we may observe with the Bishop of Meaux,—here, without the necessity of being more particular, is a character very remarkable, that so many distinct kingdoms should be raised out of one and the same empire, in Spain, Gaul, Great Britain, Italy, Pannonia, and elsewhere. This is a character sufficient to distinguish this period, especially if we join to it the other parts of the description.

[10] Ver. 15.] This observation of the extensive authority or jurisdiction of the beast, or last government of Rome, over so many other nations and people, as well as the immediate subjects of its own government, is another very considerable mark of that persecuting power which the Spirit of prophecy here describes. It strongly points out one circumstance peculiar to the papal government of Rome, and wherein it differs from all other governments in the world, whose jurisdiction and authority are confined within the bounds of their own dominions; whereas the authority of this government reaches all the nations settled in the Roman empire, and all the kingdoms erected by them.

[11] Ver. 16.] The description of this judgment may receive light from a passage in the ancient books of Moses. "If," says God, "I whet my glittering sword, and mine hand take hold on judgment, I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh; and that with the blood of the slain and of the captives, from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. My sword shall devour flesh" (Deut. xxxii. 41, 42). The original אכל properly signifies to eat, and figuratively to devour. In like manner, the expression of the prophet Jeremiah, xxx. 16, "All that devour thee shall be devoured," is literally, "All that eat thee shall be eaten."

The nations of the earth, supporters of this tyrannical power, may resent any attempts made by it against their own authority, as the empire, France, Spain, and Portugal have often shown; and yet they may bewail her, and lament for her, as it is represented they will do, xviii. 9, when her utter destruction shall take away a main support of their own superstition and tyranny.

[12] Ver. 18.] This is so plain a description of Rome, as must necessarily determine the meaning of this prophecy to some state or form of government in that city. What state or form of government it is, the other parts of the description do, I think, sufficiently determine, to the reasonable satisfaction of all who are willing fairly to inquire into the true meaning of it: so wonderful agreement in the events of providence, to the prediction, in which so many things were to concur, and for so long a time, is a great evidence of the truth of the prophecy, and a great encouragement to faith, patience, and hope in God, the great and useful design of it.

* On Dan. vii.

CHAPTER XVIII.

SECTION XVII.

1 And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory.

(1.) Now after the angel interpreter had so far explained the meaning of the vision and mystery of the woman, and of the beast with seven heads and ten horns which carried her, another angel was sent from heaven, to show the sure downfall of this antichristian power: to give weight to this message, it pleased God to send an angel from heaven, as from his court, to declare his decree, and an angel of high and superior rank, to show the importance of his commission. [1]

2 And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

(2.) As the angel drew nearer, he proclaimed the decree of heaven with an audible voice, saying, Babylon is fallen; this mystical Babylon shall as surely perish as ancient Babylon formerly did, and become an equal example of ruin. As a city quite destroyed, where there is no more concourse of men, and which is utterly desolate, it shall be a place of resort for hateful birds and beasts of prey. [2]

3 For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

(3.) The angel declaring the judgment of Rome, shows at the same time the reason of so heavy and severe punishment, because she had not only been guilt of idolatry herself, and with great wrath persecuted the true Christian faith and worship, but had also corrupted the princes and nations of the earth, as if she had given them a cup of poisonous composition, to disturb their understanding, and heat them into rage and fury; she had prevailed upon them to commit the same sins of which she was guilty, and to propagate her corruptions by ambitious views, incitements of luxury, and prospect of gain. [3]

4 And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

(4.) When this angel had declared the punishment of Rome, a voice from heaven declared what use and improvement good Christians were to make of such a revelation; that they should most carefully keep themselves from falling in with these general corruptions, and no ways assist to support and propagate them. They are warned, on the contrary, with faithfulness, constancy, and zeal, to attempt a reformation of them, at least among themselves, by an open and resolute separation. This is their duty and concern; lest, by aiding or abetting these corruptions, they partake in that guilt, which will make them liable to all the plagues and judgments with which they shall be punished.

5 For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

(5.) For they may be assured, the time is coming when such sins as these, like the notorious sins of wicked nations, shall be found ripe for judgment; a decree shall be pronounced against them in heaven, and the execution of it shall visibly show, that God does not forget, as the workers of iniquity vainly imagine; but will surely remember, in a

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XVIII.

Contents.—In the former chapter, the angel interpreter, or nuntius, has given us a key to the meaning of the prophecy, which describes this third and most lasting period, in which the saints were to suffer for their faith and constancy; that they might expect a time of temptation and suffering; that they might be more careful to confirm their faith and patience, and encourage their perseverance.

This chapter represents another angel sent from heaven, to reveal the sure judgments of God on these enemies of the pure Christian religion, to foretell their sure destruction, and in as eminent a manner as God ever appeared to punish Babylon or Tyre, the ancient enemies of true religion. This part of the prophecy is very fit and proper for the general design of it, to warn and caution good Christians against the corruption of the time and age in which they live; to give them consolation in all their sufferings, through hope in the protection of God, of deliverance in a proper time, and of a glorious reward in the end.

[1] Ver. 1.] The description of this angel, as an angel of great power, "and the earth was lightened with his glory," seems to allude to the vision of Ezekiel, xliii. 2, when he beheld the glory of the God of Israel; "the earth shined with his glory," a bright and shining light usually attended the appearance of angels; and likely the splendour of the appearance was greater, as the angel appearing was more honourable. Sending an angel of superior rank, alludes to the custom of courts in employing persons of dignity, according to the weight and importance of the commission they were to execute.

[2] Ver. 2.) These expressions seem to be taken from the prophet Isaiah, in his prophecy against Babylon, xiii. 19, &c., "And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in her pleasant places." What we render, "and satyrs shall dance there," the Seventy render, δαιμόνια demons or devils; the Hebrew שעירים signifies some hairy creature, as a goat. It was a vulgar opinion, as Bochart has shown, that demons, or evil spirits, were used of old time, to appear in the shape of goats, or in the form of some hairy creature, and that they were used to have their haunts in forlorn and desolate places;* on which account, this word is sometimes translated "demons," or devils. The whole is a strong figurative description of utter destruction.

[3] Ver. 3.] "The Romish clergy," says Mr. Daubuz, "by trading in spiritual matters, have gotten vast wealth; these are the merchants of the earth, who, by their popish tricks and trinkets, have gotten a good part of the wealth of the world into their hands. In short, Rome is a great mart," adds our author; "the Romish clergy are the merchants and factors, the secular inferior clergy, the monks and friars, are the pedlars and hawkers, which retail the merchandise. As for the luxury of Rome, procured by this trade, it needs no proof."

As the destruction of Rome is here compared to the destruction of Tyre, we easily see how proper it was to describe the sins of Rome, by figures taken from the sins of Tyre. The profit of the trade created a commerce between that city, then the chief mart of the world, and all nations: so that Tyre spread her luxury and superstition far and wide, through all parts of the world, with her trade. Rome, in like manner, corrupted distant and remote nations, by rewarding proper time, to execute justice and judgment, when none shall be able to escape.[4]

6 Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double.

(6.) Her punishment shall then be equal to her crimes; she shall not only be punished with a full retaliation for all the injuries and evils with which she has oppressed the faithful servants of God, but she shall be condemned to double damages, and suffer whatever the laws of justice have made the punishment of so great offences.[5]

7 How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.

(7.) When God shall thus arise to punish her, she shall receive sorrow and torment, in full proportion to her former pride and luxury, though she greatly rejoice for the present in her prosperity and glory, as securely settled in her power and authority, without any prospect of danger, or fear of losing it.

8 Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

(8.) Yet her pride and security shall hasten her downfall; it shall be one part of her punishment, and which shall greatly aggravate her sorrow, that her plagues shall come upon her at once, in full extremity: all the calamities of famine, death, and utter destruction, shall at once come suddenly upon her; all her pride and power shall not be able to secure her from the justice of God. God, the supreme Lord of the whole world, who judgeth her, is mighty to execute the vengeance he has decreed, with irresistible power.

9 And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning,

(9.) So that even the kings of the earth, and great powers of the world, who were formerly in league with her, supported her in her corruptions, and shared with her in the pomp and luxury of her prosperous state, shall be able to afford her no support, no defence, in this day of God's vengeance; they shall be able to do no more than fruitlessly condole with her, and lament her sad condition, when they shall behold all these calamities come suddenly upon her.

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.

(10.) Instead of being able to help her, they shall themselves be astonished and confounded; like persons thoroughly affrighted, they shall seek to get as far as they can out of the reach of danger, and only express their astonishment at so great and wonderful a revolution, so little thought of, so little expected; they shall only say with themselves, Alas, alas! what a dreadful judgment is come upon the world, that so mighty a city should be so suddenly, so utterly destroyed!

11 And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more:

(11.) Her men of business, and skilled in the affairs of life, who gained so much by her preferments, and by employments under her, the men of riches and credit in the several nations which she had corrupted, who were supported in their pride and luxury by her means, shall not be able to help in this hour of her distress, any more than the kings of the earth; they can only weep and mourn for her misery, and for their own loss in her destruction, now all commerce with her shall be utterly cut off, and no man, by her means, shall attain wealth, credit, or power, any more.

12 The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble,

(12.) The destruction of Rome shall much resemble the destruction of ancient Tyre, when her great and extensive trade, the foundation of her riches, power, and pride, were totally stopped at once; when she lost all her merchandise, which consisted in all sorts of valuable commodities, such as gold, silver, precious stones, pearls, fine linen, scarlet, and thyine-wood, all curious manufactures in ivory, precious wood, brass, iron, and marble.

13 And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men.

(13.) She shall trade no more in those things which pride and luxury have set such a value upon, as spices and perfumes, wine and oil, the finest flour and corn, nor shall she trade in beasts and sheep, in horses and chariots, in slaves and the souls of men.[6] her votaries with considerable wealth, encouraging their ambition and luxury; and thus, like Tyre of old, made her corruptions general, and almost universal.

[4] Ver. 5.] When sins are ripe for judgment, they are said to reach unto heaven, or to come up before the face of Jehovah. So the angel sent to punish the sins of Sodom, "We will destroy this place, because the cry of them is waxen great before the face of the Lord (Jehovah), and the Lord (Jehovah) has sent us to destroy it" (Gen. xix. 13). Thus the prophet Jonah was sent to cry against Nineveh, "for their wickedness is come up before me" (Jonah i. 2). James uses a like expression, "The cries of them which have reaped, have entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth." It seems an elegant allusion to the methods of justice in human courts, when criminals are actually prosecuted, and their crimes are brought before the court for judgment.

[5] Ver. 6.] By the laws of the Jewish government, some offences were punished by retaliation, or inflicting on the offender, as a punishment, that evil which he had injuriously done to his neighbour, to his hurt and damage. It was therefore enacted by the Jewish law, "If men strive, and any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot" (Exod. xxi. 23, 24). In other cases of damage, it was enacted, that the offender should pay double damages.

Thus, in the case of theft, the law requires "the thief shall pay double" (Exod. xxii. 4); it being just the thief should suffer for his offence, as well as make restitution for the damage he had done. In allusion to these laws of the Jewish government, the punishment of Rome for her idolatry and persecution, is represented as inflicting pains and penalties upon her as an offender, as the laws of justice direct, where injuries are so highly criminal.

[6] Ver. 13.] The several branches of trade here enumerated, are taken from the prophecies of Ezekiel, ch. xxvii., who thus describes the downfall of Tyre, by the loss of all the branches of her trade. Tyre was the great mart of the world, where all things most valued and in highest price were to be bought and sold, to the great profit of that city, as well as of the merchants of the several nations who traded with it. Almost all the expressions in this prophecy are used by Ezekiel, and seem to be copied from his description; even that expression, that "she traded in the souls of men;" ver. 13, "Javan, Tubal, and Meshech, they were thy merchants, they traded in the persons of men." In the original, "thy merchants in the souls of men," רכליך בנפש אדם, οὗτοι ἐνεπορεύοντό σοι ἐν ψυχαῖς ἀνθρώπων, Septuagint. The Vulgar Latin renders it mancipia, or "slaves." The Bishop of Meaux supposes, that by slaves are meant persons of servile condition; by souls of men, or men in general, are meant free persons: to show, that Rome reduced persons of all conditions, not only bond but free, into some sort of slavery, by subjection to their dominion. I think the persons, or souls of men, in Ezekiel, do naturally mean the merchandise

14 And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.

(14.) So great shall the misery of Rome appear in this day of vengeance, that nothing shall be left her in which she was used to have pleasure and delight; she shall be spoiled of all things that served her former greatness or luxury, nor shall she ever be able to recover them, or make up the loss of them.

15 The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing, (15.) Her agents, by whose means she obtained her wealth, and was able to live in such pomp and luxury, and who served her with great zeal, as they shared in her riches and luxury, shall themselves be seized with fear, when they see her torments; they shall then forsake her, and fly as far as they can from her, lest they partake of her punishment, as they were partakers of her guilt; their joy shall be turned into weeping and wailing.

16 And saying, Alas, alas that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!

(16.) They shall utter their sorrow in bitter complaints, saying, Alas, alas! what dreadful calamities have befallen this mighty city, once so admired and adored, which shone in all the pride, and with all the pomp, of riches and grandeur!

17 For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off, (17.) But now is suddenly and unexpectedly spoiled of all its great riches, and fallen into the utmost distress of poverty; so that even the lower people, who used to express great reverence and zeal for her, who profited themselves in some inferior offices under her, shall be as useless to her as her greater and more powerful friends; they shall also forsake her, and for their own safety shall get as far from her as they can.

18 And cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city!

(18.) When they see her as a city burnt down to the ground, and her smoke ascending, as it were, from every part of her ruins; they shall cry out with astonishment, Was ever the condition of any city like this, formerly in greatness and glory, now in sudden ruin and misery![7]

19 And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.

(19.) They shall, as is usual in cases of the deepest mourning and sorrow, put ashes on their heads, and cry out with great bitterness of heart, Oh the inexpressible misery of this great city! she who was used to enrich all who had dealings with her, wherever they were employed in her service; such was her interest, power, and wealth, they were sure to make their fortune by her countenance and favour: yet is she herself suddenly and unexpectedly made desolate, unable to help either herself or her friends.

20 Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her.

(20.) But, added the angel, though this great event of divine justice will fill the hearts of many with concern and grief, it will be to the comfort and joy of sincere faithful Christians, for whose consolation these revelations are made. The apostles, prophets, and saints of God, will have reason to rejoice in so wonderful an instance of God's protection and favour; for it is to avenge the cause of his church and faithful servants, God does so severely punish this persecuting city.

21 And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all.

(21.) Farther, to confirm the irrecoverable ruin of this persecuting city, another mighty angel appeared in my vision, who plunged a great stone, like a millstone, into the sea, and he explained the meaning of his action by these words: Babylon shall fall, this mystical Babylon shall sink never to rise again; as a stone thrown with violence into the sea sinks to the bottom, and never rises more.

22 And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee;

(22.) So great and lasting will the ruin of this persecuting city be, that there shall be no more any entertainments of diversion or pleasure for the rich; no more employment for persons skilled in any trade or business; no, not even for the lowest sort of people, such as were used in the meanest services, in preparing corn for the daily food of the inhabitants, and providing the very necessaries of life for them.

23 And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.

(23.) Nor shall the inhabitants of that ruined city be continued by new marriages, and a succession of families; no bridal lamp, or songs, no ceremonies of nuptial joy, shall ever more be seen or heard in it; but it shall be quite desolate, and without inhabitants, because it has been guilty of

of slaves; but when slaves and souls of men are mentioned both together in this prophecy, may it not point out the nature of that slavery Rome should require of her servants, that they should become her slaves in soul as well as body? At least, it is true in fact, that her slaves lose all religious as well as civil liberty.

It is plain, in general, this is designed to be a figurative, and not a literal description; therefore readers are, I think, at liberty to apply the figurative expressions to such literal meanings as will agree to the general certain intention of them. But whether each of these wares is designed to point out some particular gainful corruption of popery, may very well be questioned. It is sufficient to answer the general intention of the prophecy, to observe, that Rome shall be deprived of all her wealth, which she procured by her management and intrigues, in the several places where her agents resided, who continually made her returns of great riches, and plentifully supplied her excessive pride and luxury.

It is a pretty observation of Mr. Daubuz, "Rome receives all the luxurious wares mentioned, but she has so infatuated the world, that she pays nothing for them but trumpery her money are her enchantments and sorceries; her merchants—her superior clergy, engross the real wealth of the world to bring it to her; and her returns and exportations are paper and bills, drawn upon heaven and hell, never to be accepted; however, they pass among the common people for payment, as if they were of real value. The merchant, who finds means to get shut of them, takes no care about their intrinsic value, finding gulls who take them off his hands for real wealth."

Whether these wares were designed to signify pardons, indulgences, dispensations, and the like trifles, with which Rome purchases gold, silver, and whatever ministers to pride and luxury, this is a plain and manifest meaning, that she shall be deprived of all her wealth and luxury at once, and of all the means by which she was used to procure them.

[7] Ver. 18.] This wailing of the sailors, by whom, in the allegory of trade, are meant persons inferior to merchants, so much pride, idolatry, and cruelty: sins, that God is used to punish with exemplary severity, especially when persons abuse their riches and power, not only to corrupt themselves, but spread their corruptions every where, by their bad example and influence.

24 And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.

(24.) So great has been her superstition and cruelty, that she has outdone the severest persecutions; she has wantonly spilt the blood of thousands, for being faithful to the truth and purity of the Christian faith and worship; by approving the cruelty of former persecutors, she has involved herself in their guilt, as she is herself guilty of the innocent blood shed throughout the earth, subject to her authority, and in virtue of her canons and decrees: and now having filled up the measure of her own sins, it is righteous in God, so heavy a punishment should fall upon her. [8]

seems to be taken from the prophecy of Ezekiel, xxvii. 32, "And in their wailing they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and lament over thee, saying, What city is like Tyrus, like the destroyed in the midst of the sea?"

[8] Ver. 24.] This description of the desolate state of Rome seems to be an imitation of some passages in the prophet Jeremiah, concerning the ruin of ancient Babylon. "And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates: and thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise, from the evil that I will bring upon her" (li. 63, 64). This was strictly true of ancient Babylon, which remains a heap of ruins to this day; the city now called Babylon being built in a different place. This part of the prophecy seems strongly to intimate, that Rome shall in like manner be irrecoverably destroyed; a judgment which as yet has not been inflicted upon it. There seems also, in these expressions, an allusion to another passage of the same prophet: "Moreover I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle. And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment" (xxv. 10, 11). Music was the entertainment of the rich and great; trade, the business of men of middle rank; preparing bread, and the necessaries of life, the employment of the lowest people; marriages, in which lamps and songs were known ceremonies, are the usual methods of peopling cities, as new births supply the place of those that die. Now, the desolation of Rome is described in such manner, as to show, that neither rich nor poor, neither persons of middle rank nor of the lowest condition and employments, should be able to live there any more; it shall not be repeopled by new marriages, but for ever remain desolate and uninhabited, either by persons born in it, or resorting to it, on account of any business or employment whatsoever.

CHAPTER XIX.

SECTION XVIII.

1 And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

(1.) When I was thus distinctly informed by an angel, of the total destruction of that persecuting power, which was to arise in this third period, and continue for so long a time, it was represented farther, as if the whole church was assembled together; which I heard, as a chorus, with united voices, begin a hymn of praise to God, saying, Alleluia, let us ascribe salvation, glory, honour, and power unto Jehovah, the only true God, who is our God.

2 For true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the great whore which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.

(2.) For his judgments show him to be just and righteous, faithful and true; his punishment of Rome, in so exemplary a manner, for her pride, superstition, idolatry, and persecution, declares his righteousness; he has illustriously manifested the truth and faithfulness of his promises, in avenging the blood of his servants, on her who so cruelly put them to death for their faith in God, and constancy in his true religion.

3 And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever.

(3.) And they ended their hymn, saying, Alleluia, let God, our God, be praised, who in this last judgment has put an end to the power of persecution for ever. It shall not henceforth, as formerly, rise up again, to persecute the saints; this persecuting city shall lie waste, from generation to generation, never to be restored. [1]

4 And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.

(4.) After the chorus of the general assembly had ended their hymn, the twenty-four elders, representatives of the united church, the patriarchs and apostles, and the four living creatures, the cherubim, who were nearest the throne of God, prostrated themselves before Jehovah, and concluded the praises of the heavenly church, saying, Amen, Alleluia, so let Jehovah, our God, be praised.

5 And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great.

(5.) When this hymn was finished, there came a voice from the throne itself; the oracle pronounced an order to all persons truly religious, to all the faithful servants of God, of whatever state or condition they might be, that they

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XIX.

CONTENTS.—The prophecies relating to this third period concluded with a severe punishment of Rome for her pride, luxury, superstition, and idolatry, and especially for her cruel persecution of all who were found faithful to their duty, in preserving the purity of the Christian doctrines and worship. When Rome thus fell, as ancient Babylon, to rise no more, the heavenly church is introduced as a chorus, or choir, to praise God for his righteous judgments and faithfulness. This excellent hymn of praise, sung by the united voices of angels and saints, the whole assembly of heaven, strongly represents to all Christians, and every church on earth, what grateful sense they ought to have of God's faithfulness in their protection, and of his righteous judgments in punishing the persecutors of truth and religion.

Though, for wise reasons, and for a limited time, God may permit the righteous and faithful to suffer many things from the enemies of truth and righteousness; yet the end, and final event of things, shall surely show God's faithfulness in the blessing of his people, and justice in the punishment of his enemies. A just reason for consolation, gratitude, and praise.

[1] Ver. 3. The expression, "Her smoke rose up for ever and ever," seems to be taken from the prophet Isaiah, where it is explained by the prophet to mean perpetual destruction. "It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever" (Isa. xxxiv. 10).

Mr. Daubuz observes, the two alleluias in this part of the hymn correspond to the messages of the two angels, one of should heartily join in the praise of God, and exalt his name, so glorious in righteous judgment, and faithfulness to his promises. [2]

6 And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

(6.) Upon this voice of the oracle, the whole church, in obedience to it, began to celebrate the praises of God in another hymn; their united voices were strong, as the sound of innumerable people singing together, that it might be compared to the noise of the sea, or of thunder. They began the praise of God, saying, Alleluia, for Jehovah, the one true God, whose almighty power and supreme dominion reach all creatures, appears to establish his own kingdom of truth and righteousness in the world.

7 Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

(7.) Let it fill the hearts of all who truly fear God, with gladness and joy, and dispose them to give all honour unto him, now he has so fully and so gloriously accomplished his promises; for now the true church of Christ, his faithful disciples, as his spouse, are appointed and prepared to receive public and eminent marks of his affection, in a state of happiness and dignity, suitable to their relation to him. [3]

8 And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

(8.) As it is usual for bridegrooms at their marriage to make presents to their brides, of rich ornaments and apparel, so, at this time, the church of Christ shall be presented with suitable ornaments; it shall be adorned with real righteousness and holiness, with a divine nature and godlike temper, in conformity to God's own perfections: ornaments more valuable, and more honourable, than the most costly or honourable habits of the eastern princes, or of the ancient priests.

9 And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God.

(9.) The angel then directing his speech in particular to me, bid me take notice of this part of the prophecy, and write it down as a maxim of great use to the patience and consolation of the saints, as they may rest satisfied in full assurance of hope, that all the promises in this prophecy shall be surely accomplished; for they are the faithful, the never-failing word of God.

10 And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

(10.) Upon this kindness and condescension of an angel conversing with me, I was going to express my thankfulness and respect, by prostrating myself at his feet; but he immediately stopped me, and informed me, that in this revelation he was employed as a servant of God, together with myself; that I was now to consider him, though an angel, as one of my brethren, whom God employs in revealing things relating to Christ and his church. The visions which revealed to me so many things concerning the future state of the church, proceed from the same Spirit of prophecy as all true revelation does. Worship not me, then, says the angel, but God, whose servants we both are in this revelation, and from whom we have both received the same Spirit of prophecy. [4] which proclaims the fall, and the other shows its perpetuity. This repetition may however be accounted for, as corresponding with the hymns of the ancient church, in which we may observe, that repeating the word alleluia, is used by the authors as an elegance in the composition.

11 And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.

[2] Ver. 5.] A voice "from the throne," is from the glory, or the oracle; thisshows the great authority and solemnity with which this order was published. The praise of God, to which this oracle directs, seems somewhat different from that of the foregoing hymn; that hymn was to celebrate the praise of God, principally on account of his faithfulness and justice, in the punishment of a persecuting power, which had long oppressed the faithful servants of Christ. But this, as appears by the following hymn, in obedience to the direction of the oracle, is principally to praise God for the happy and glorious state of the church, consequent upon this punishment of their enemies; that happy and glorious state of the church, suppose, wherein it is said to live and reign with Christ a thousand years, and which is more largely described in the following chapter. For which great goodness of God, all good men are prepared, by this solemn thanksgiving, to express their hearty and grateful acknowledgments.

[3] Ver. 7.] The ancient prophets describe the favour of God to his people, by the affection of a bridegroom: "For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as a bridegroom rejoices over a bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee" (Isa. lxii. 5). The church is represented in the New Testament, in the same similitude of a bride: "For I have espoused you to one husband, that I many present you as a chaste virgin to Christ" (2 Cor. ii. 2). As marriages were used to be celebrated with great joy, the marriage of the Lamb with his church is a fit emblem to show the state of prosperity aud happiness to which God will raise it, after all its sufferings for the sake of truth and righteousness.

[4] Ver. 10.] It has been often questioned, how the apostle should ever think of worshipping an angel, as proper worship and religious honour are expressly forbid to any creature, and as idolatry is so great a sin, in account both of the Jewish and Christian religion; and as this answer of the angel did not so fully satisfy John himself, that what he offered was sinful, and of itself unlawful, for he offers to do the same thing again afterward (xxii. 8). Before we answer this question, we ought, I think, to answer a previous question: Whether the apostle did intend any proper religious honour or worship to the angel at all? The word which we render "to worship" (προσκυνῆσαι), is used for civil respects, as well as for religious honour; it properly means a known custom of the eastern people, of bowing down to the ground, and kissing the feet of persons of very superior rank. Thus Ruth complimented Boaz: "Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground" (Ruth ii. 10). Thus Abigail also complimented David: "She fell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and fell at his feet" (1 Sam. xxv. 23, 24). The apostle then, notwithstanding any thing in the expression, might mean no more than the most humble act of civil respect; the original word, meaning in general both civil respect and religious worship, must be determined to either, by the circumstances of the discourse in which it is used. It will be sufficiently distinguished, I think, by being referred either to the true God, or to a creature.

The reason for which the angel forbids this high act of respect, seems to intimate, that he did not understand it as an act of religious honour; he mentions nothing of the sin or danger of idolatry in it; he only shows it was improper the apostle should give such respect to him; not by showing it was unlawful to give such respect to any being whatsoever, but because he was fellow-servant with the apostle, and of his brethren the prophets, as it is more clearly expressed, xxii. 9. As if the angel had said,—I have but received the same Spirit of revelation from God, which you also have. The testimony of Jesus is the true Spirit of prophecy; in him the prophecies of the ancient prophets had their accomplishment; it is still the true spirit and proper intention of prophecy, to reveal things relating to Christ and his church. This is the spirit of prophecy in the vision you have seen; and if I have now explained any of those revelations to you, the honour is not due to myself, but to God, from whom I received it; let your acknowledgment and thanks

(11.) The prophetic visions were continued; a new scene was presented before me: the gates of heaven were set wide open for an army to march out in order. This army was led by a person riding on a white horse, such as generals were used to ride on solemn processions. He appeared to be the person to whom God had given all power, and committed all judgment, who was to accomplish all the promises of God in faithfulness, and to execute all his threatenings in righteousness, for the protection of God's people, and for the punishment of their enemies.

12 His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself.

(12.) He appeared with a noble aspect; his eyes were gloriously bright and piercing; his head, to show his numerous conquests and large empire, was adorned with many crowns: so great was the dignity and authority conferred upon him, that no person besides himself could fully comprehend it. [5]

13 And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called The Word of God.

(13.) He was dressed in a robe of deep red, as if it had been dipped in blood; to express, that Jesus, who, for his voluntary obedience unto death, when he shed his own blood, was highly exalted, and had a name given him which is above every name, should fulfil this prophecy, in the utter destruction of the enemies of his government: their slaughter should be then so great, that their blood should, as it were, be sprinkled on his garments; then he should be celebrated under the glorious title of "the Word of God." [6]

14 And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

(14.) The prophetic vision farther represented the general followed by the armies of heaven, which marched after their prince and chief commander in great state; themselves richly clothed in splendid habits, wearing the finest linen: to signify, that now the church should attain a state of peace and triumph: their faith and patience should be highly rewarded; their happiness and joy should be far above what Rome ever saw in the glory of a triumph. [7]

15 And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

(15.) The vision farther represented a sharp sword, coming out, as it were, of the mouth of Christ, to signify, that he had the full power of the sword; and that now he was about to use it, in a strict execution of justice on the enemies of truth and righteousness; that he would chastise them as with an iron rod, and punish them with the most be therefore given unto him. This I take to be the plainest account; though the reader should be informed, some learned interpreters understand this action as symbolical or figurative. "To teach and represent unto us, under the person of the apostle himself," says Mr. Waple, "that the best men are very apt to be surprised and drawn by the example of others and by false pretences, into creature-worship; and that such worship is unlawful, let the pretences be ever so plausible; and that the only way to prevent all manner of idolatry, is to keep to the precept here given, of worshipping God alone."*

[5] Ver. 12.] This expression seems to refer to the many characters given to Christ in prophecy, which are so great, that we cannot fully comprehend all that they mean. It has been probably thought by some interpreters, that this part of the description refers to the prophecy of Isaiah: "The government shall be on his shoulders: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever" (Isa. ix. 6, 7). His person and government are represented wonderful and incomprehensible.

[6] Ver. 13.] This title, "The Word of God," makes it evident, that the person designed in the vision is the same person whom John, in his gospel, calls by the same name; so that Jesus Christ himself is represented as riding at the head of an army, to take vengeance of the enemies of his religion, and faithful servants.

Mr. Daubuz† observes, "That λόγος, or word, has three several significations; it may signify words, actions, and commands. Christ is the Word of God in all these respects:

"I. He is his Word, because, before his incarnation, and much more since, he has been the great angel of God, to bring messages, or the words of God, to men.

"II. He is the Word of God, because he is the great minister of God, to perform all his works of creation, preservation, and redemption.

"III. As to the word signifying command, Christ is, in respect of that, two ways the word of God.

"1. As he is the executor of all God's commands.

"2. As he is himself the chief commander, and even now joined with God sitting upon his throne at his right hand; the Prince ἀρχὴ and ἄρχων of the creation, King of kings, and Lord of lords. This account not only shows," our author adds, "why Christ is called the Word of God in general, but why he is so called in this place.

"I. Being the Word, as he brings messages, and is the great angel of the covenant, he brings now the greatest errand, the perfection of the covenant in the resurrection, first of the saints, and then of all the dead.

"II. Being the word of God, as he is the great minister, he now comes to perform the most magnificent of God's works.

"III. As he is the executor of God's commands, and is to command and rule under the Father, he comes now to be King of kings, and Lord of lords."

It is observable, that in the temple, the Shechinah, or glory, the presence of God in the most holy place, was the oracle, and the kebla, whence God gave forth his word and command, and towards which presence all the worship of the church was addressed. The oracle was called דביר from דבר, which is often translated λόγος, and "word." Another Hebrew word אמר, which is rendered λόγος and "word," will properly also signify authority and command, and one vested with supreme authority and command. Thus amir, or emir, is a known title of magistracy in the east; and emir al mumunin, is the prince or lord of the true believers, a well-known title of the successors of Mohammed.* Not only the title of emir in the east, but of dictator among the Romans, seems to have come from the same original, as persons whose word and command had sovereign authority.

As in the temple, the Shechinah, or glory, was the oracle and mercy-seat, from which oracle God gave his commands with supreme authority, and at which presence he graciously received the addresses of his church, may not an allusion to this very significant and principal part of the Mosaical institution be one probable reason, why Christ is styled here "the Word of God?"

[7] Ver. 14.] "The armies of heaven," in the language of scripture, often means the angels of God; which, as ministering spirits, who continually attend on his service, may be called the armies of heaven, probably in allusion to the custom of princes, who keep the chief and best of their troops about their persons, as their guard, and in their capital city, the place of their residence; and have their principal and chief officers attending their courts.

In this vision the faithful Christians, who persevered with constancy in the day of temptation, seem represented as received into heaven, and associated with the angels, into the hosts or armies of heaven, as well as in the praises of the heavenly church; so that these armies of heaven may be understood not only of the angels of God attending Christ, but also of such faithful Christians who had received their crown and reward: they are said to be clothed in fine linen, severe vengeance of God's wrath, which is, as his power, almighty, and able to punish his enemies with utter and everlasting destruction. [8]

16 And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

(16.) Finally, I observed a motto, or inscription, on one part of his garment which covered his thigh, the place where the sword was usually worn; in which inscription he was styled "King of kings, and Lord of lords:" to signify, that he was really possessed of a just dominion over all the princes and kingdoms of the earth; a dominion which the eastern monarchs, and after them the Roman empire, unjustly attempted, a title which with great vanity they assumed themselves.

17 And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God;

(17.) As I beheld this general marching with his army in order, on this great expedition, the event of it, in the total overthrow and destruction of his enemies, was declared by the voice of an angel, who seemed to stand in the sun; who, with a very audible voice, invited the birds of prey to the carcases of the slain, as to a great feast, which the vengeance of God on his enemies would soon provide for them.

18 That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

(18.) In which feast, they should prey upon the dead bodies of a numerous army; many persons of the highest rank and character should remain dead and unburied on the field of battle; so that the birds of prey should feast themselves on the flesh of kings, great captains, and of mighty men, as well as on the flesh of common soldiers, and their horses. [9]

19 And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.

(19.) I beheld also in my vision, another army appear to oppose Christ, and the army of heaven, which he led: the beast, which represented the persecuting power of Rome, in conjunction with the kings of the earth, who aided and supported that persecuting power, gathered all his force together, and headed a numerous army: all the enemies of truth and righteousness combined to oppose a thorough reformation of their errors, superstition, idolatry, and persecution.

20 And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

(20.) But Christ and his saints obtained a full and entire victory over them; a victory so complete, as when the generals and all the chief officers are made prisoners of war, and the rest of the army is cut to pieces in the field of battle. For the persecuting powers, represented by the beast and false prophets, the principal persons who had supported the apostasy by false doctrines, and imposed on the credulous by pretences to wonders and miracles, were made prisoners, to suffer a more exemplary punishment by the hands of justice; for these were afterward condemned to be burned alive, and had their sentence executed upon them, being thrown into a pit of burning brimstone.

21 And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

(21.) As to the rest, the persons of lower and inferior rank, who had abetted the apostasy, and concurred in opposing a reformation, they, like the common soldiers of an army, fell in the field of battle, and were left there unburied, as a prey for the fowls of the air to feed on: a very strong figurative expression of their full and complete destruction. [10] white and clean; which is just before interpreted to mean "the righteousness of the saints."

They seem to be the same persons described before, xvii. 14, "And they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful." So that these armies in heaven, which followed their victorious general, seem to include, if not to mean principally, those Christians who had kept the faith against all opposition; to express the high honour and happiness to which they are now advanced.

[8] Ver. 15.] Christ, in the first vision, is represented with a sharp two-edged sword (Rev. i. 16), to express one of the principal parts of government, the power of the sword; the jus gladii including the right of making war and inflicting punishments.

To "rule with a rod of iron," is an allusion to an expression in Ps. ii. 9, in which it was prophesied, concerning the king whom Jehovah had set "upon his holy hill of Zion," that he should as easily break his enemies, and all their opposition, as a rod of iron could break in pieces an earthen vessel.

To "tread the wine-press of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God," is an allusion to a passage in the prophet Isaiah, lxiii. 3, 4, usually understood of the Messiah: "I have trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled on my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come."

[9] Ver. 18.] This passage is imitated from the prophet Ezekiel, xxxix. 17, 18, "And thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God; Speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field. Assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice (or slaugher) that I do sacrifice for you upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh and drink blood. Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth. ——Thus shall ye be filled at my table." This is a strong description of a great slaughter and heavy judgment of God, when he shall come to punish his enemies. So it is explained by the prophet, ver. 21, "I will set my glory (saith the Lord God) among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them."

[10] Ver. 21.] The general meaning of this strong and beautiful figure is sufficiently plain and intelligible, and sufficient to answer the design of the prophecy, to encourage constancy, faith, and patience; to give consolation and hope, under present oppression and persecution, for the sake of our religion and a good conscience. That the several particulars of this figurative description have themselves a farther particular meaning, is not so plain and certain. It is, I think, a mark of right understanding, in the language of prophecy, and in the design of prophecy too, to keep to what appears the design and meaning of the prophecy in general, and what the whole of it, laid together, points out to us: and not to suffer a warm imagination to mislead us from the real intention of the Spirit of prophecy, by following uncertain applications of particular parts of it. Who can say, for instance, with any certainty, that the flesh to be eaten, and the birds invited to the feast, have each a particular mystical sense, or that they really mean any thing more than to describe a great battle, defeat, and slaughter?

However, there are, in most figurative descriptions, some particular parts of the representation, that seem, with great probability, designed to point out some chief circumstances to particular observation.

Thus, in this description, the punishment of the beast and false prophet, who were taken prisoners, and condemned to be burned alive, being different from the punishment of the remnant which were slain by the sword, seems to intimate, that the chief and principal maintainers of the apostasy, they who used all their power, and all the wicked arts of deceit, in opposition to true religion, shall be punished in proportion to their guilt, and shall suffer in a manner more terrible and exemplary than others. Burning alive is one of the most terrible executions; being cast into a lake or pit of fire, "burning with brimstone," images in the mind the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, who are recorded as examples of perpetual destruction, from which they can never possibly recover themselves.

Thus also, as the beast and false prophet do not mean private persons, according to this description, but the powers of bodies politic, in perpetual succession, this very naturally teaches us to consider their punishment in a double capacity; or, to use the words of Mr. Daubuz,* "The design here is to show us, that Christ will not only destroy at last the persons who at that time shall be in possession of what is signified by the beast and false prophet, but also utterly extirpate the succession of the tyranny and false prophecy for ever: so that the beast and the false prophet are persons in a double capacity, that is, persons in general, enemies to Christ, and also in possession of a power which is to be extinguished with them."

However, this I think we may take as the undoubted meaning of the prophecy in general, that now all the powers of the apostasy shall be destroyed; no opposition shall remain to hinder that happy state of the church, which is to follow in the next period, and which the Spirit of prophecy describes in the following chapter.

CHAPTER XX. 1—6.

SECTION XIX.

THE FOURTH PERIOD.

1 And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand.

(1.) After I had seen, in the former prophetic visions, the downfall and punishment of the last persecuting power of Rome, the state of the church which was to follow upon it was represented in a new vision; for I beheld an angel as descending from heaven, like one sent on a message from the throne of God: his commission was expressed by a double symbol: he had a key in his hands, which was the key of the great abyss, or bottomless pit; and he brought also with him a great chain, such as prisoners were used to be bound with to prevent an escape.

2 And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years,

(2.) I soon perceived, in my vision, on what errand this angel was sent; for he seized on the dragon, the old serpent, by which the devil was signified, the great adversary of mankind, and enemy of truth and righteousness, the great seducer of the world into error and wickedness; the angel arrested him, bound him, and committed him to close custody for a thousand years.

3 And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season.

(3.) The angel committed him to close custody in a strong prison, he locked him fast up in the bottomless pit, and put a firm seal upon it, that he might not escape, or go about as before, to deceive the nations. Thus was the devil to be confined for a thousand years, though, after that time should be expired, the wise and holy providence of God should take off this restraint, though it should be but for a very short space of time. [1]

4 And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

(4.) When the church was thus delivered from the power of Satan, by his confinement, either to seduce or persecute it, the happy state of the church was thus farther represented: I saw thrones erected, and persons sat on them, to whom the authority of government and administration of justice were committed, and such persons were entrusted with it, who had the constancy of martyrs, whom no fears of death could force into any compliance with the antichristian apostasy, but who persevered in the profession of the Christian faith, against all opposition, neither yielding to the general prevailing corruptions, nor making any ac-

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX. 1—6.

CONTENTS.—This chapter represents a new state of the church, upon its deliverance from the persecution and corruption of the third period, or during the reign of the two beasts, for twelve hundred and sixty prophetic days, or years. That long state of opposition is to be followed by a long continuance of peace and prosperity; a fourth period is described, which, among other characters, is to last for a thousand years. The two first periods ended in a deliverance of the church, but those deliverances were of short continuance, and attended with considerable defects; but now, after the church shall have passed through this third trial of faith and patience, it is to attain a state of very great prosperity, and to remain in it for a very considerable length of time. This is that happy state of the church, which, from the continuation of it for a thousand years, is usually called the millennium.

The description we have of it in this chapter is very short, contained within the first six verses; interpreters have, however, abundantly supplied what they thought wanting in the account of prophecy, out of their own invention, it is to be feared, rather than from sure or well-grounded principles of judgment. No wonder, then, they differ so much about the true meaning of a prophecy, in which they have mixed so many of their own imaginations; so that the disputes seem not so much what is the intention of the Spirit of prophecy, as which of the interpreters has the finest or the warmest imagination.

Let us then carefully endeavour to distinguish what the Spirit of prophecy plainly intends, from what uncertain conjectures or doubtful reasonings may suggest to our minds, as a more distinct and particular account of it.

[1] Ver. 3.] The abyss or bottomless pit in which Satan is to be confined for a thousand years, during this happy state of the church, is explained on the first and second verses of the ninth chapter, where an angel is sent to open it, as here to shut up Satan a close prisoner in it. The shutting up of Satan in so close a prison as a pit or dungeon underground, so sure a confinement by locking it fast, and putting a seal upon it, may well be understood to mean, that for this space of time the devil, who is represented the first in the apostasy, and principal agent in the opposition to truth, righteousness, and religion, shall be fully restrained from the exercise of all influence and power, either to seduce men into error and wickedness, or to persecute men of conscience, constancy, and faithfulness.

As the devil is represented the head or ruler of the evil spirits or angels, a restraint of their power seems also to be knowledgment of subjection to the authority and dominion of the antichristian power of the beast: such as these the Spirit of prophecy declared were the persons to reign with Christ for these thousand years.[2]

5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

(5.) While this happy state of the church shall continue, the party of the beast, they who were united in opposition to pure Christianity, and in persecuting Christ's faithful servants, the remnant who were slain with the sword of him that sat on the horse (xix. 21) shall not revive, or recover any part of their former power, but remain altogether unable to disturb the peace or prosperity of the church, till the thousand years shall be accomplished. This happy state of intended, in the imprisonment of their chief or head; so that in the general, this seems to be the meaning of the Spirit of prophecy, in this figurative description, that during all the time of this period, that is, for a thousand years, "the church of Christ shall enjoy purity of religion in peace, without any disturbance from those old enemies of mankind, working in the children of disobedience."*

"And this seems to imply," adds our author, "that all shall be converted:——however, if there be any that remain unconverted, they will, during the imprisonment of Satan, be in so small a number,——and so feeble in comparison of the true Christians, that they shall neither dare, nor be able, to disturb the peace of Christ's kingdom."†

It is not improbable, that shutting up Satan in the bottomless pit or abyss may have a particular regard to a restraint on the power of Mohammedism, and effectually stop the prevalency of that imposture, as before opening the bottomless pit had a principal regard to the rise and surprising progress of it (ch. ix.).

[2] Ver. 4.] This description of the thrones, and of them that sat on them, is not, I conceive, to be understood, as if all who are afterward said to live and reign with Christ a thousand years, were set on these thrones. The expression, "I saw thrones, and they that sat upon them," may mean no more than that some sat on them, how few or how many soever they might be. Though all are said to "live and reign with Christ," that may well be understood of a free and full enjoyment of the glorious blessings and happiness of this kingdom of Christ.

The figurative description seems to intimate order and government in this kingdom of Christ, that some were to have judgment given unto them, or to be raised to the authority of magistrates in it. This, as all other governments, was to be made up of governors and governed; and this authority of magistracy was given to them that sat on the thrones, whoever they were, who were judged worthy of such honour and authority in this kingdom of Christ. The expressions seem to be an allusion to the principal court of Israel, in which the members of the sanhedrin sat on raised seats, or thrones, on each hand of the prince, or president of the assembly. Nor would this representation be improper, though Christ himself should be supposed sitting on the principal seat or throne: for Christ himself, speaking to his apostles, says, "In the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. xix. 28). In like manner, this prophecy, "And round about the throne were four-and-twenty seats, and upon the seats I saw four-and-twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment, and they had on their heads crowns of gold." These four-and-twenty seats are expressly four-and-twenty thrones, καὶ κυκλόθεν τοῦ θρόνου, θρόνοι εἴκοσι καὶ τέσσαρες.

Thrones, then, as seats of dignity, are to distinguish those who have the administration of government committed unto them from the rest of the people, who are to be governed by them, and can in no propriety be applied to every member of the kingdom who lives under the protection, and enjoys the blessings, of a government.

It is a question of consequence to the true meaning and right understanding of this prophecy, how we are to understand "the souls of them who were beheaded for the witness of Jesus," and who are the persons who "had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands;" or, which is the same, who are the persons whom the prophecy intends to represent as enjoying the blessings of that happy state of the church.

Here interpreters differ widely in their opinion: some understand this description literally, to mean a real and proper resurrection of such persons who, in the former states of persecution, were put to death for their constancy in the profession of pure Christianity; that is, the martyrs under the heathen empire, and those who were slain under the reign of the beast. It is supposed that all these saints and martyrs shall at this time be really raised from the dead, for a thousand years before the general resurrection; or, as a very ingenious author* represents it, "Those who have suffered for the sake of Christ and a good conscience, shall be raised from the dead a thousand years before the general resurrection, and reign with Christ in a happy state."

But there are others, who understand this description in a figurative sense; they suppose the prophecy intends such persons as have the true spirit and temper of martyrs, who have like faith, constancy, and zeal, with those whom no persecutions could prevail upon to deny the truth, "make shipwreck of a good conscience," or criminally comply with any of the corruptions of their times.

They who are for a literal resurrection of the martyrs, in order to live and reign with Christ for these thousand years, principally insist on the direct meaning of the expressions, "The souls of them that were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus;"† which they think must mean the martyrs under the heathen Roman emperors, as beheading was a Roman punishment, and as the very souls that were beheaded, or dead, live again in the millennial state. They farther observe, This is the reward promised to the martyrs, to the souls who "cry for vengeance under the altar," and who "overcome" by death, or by resisting the enemies of Christ and his religion unto death. They observe, This is agreeable to the doctrine of Paul, 1 Thess. iv. 16, that "the dead in Christ shall rise first;" that is, they who died for Christ's sake. This interpretation is confirmed, they think, by the following observation,—that the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished, and therefore this is properly a first resurrection. This shows, they add, that the persons mentioned as dead and living, were once really dead. If they were not, what occasion was there to compare them with the rest of the dead? by which are to be understood, all such Christians who are dead, or shall die, having no title to the first resurrection, as they were neither actually martyrs nor confessors.

These arguments are farther supported by several conjectures, and by an application of some passages of scripture that are supposed to favour them.

But they who, on the other hand, understand this description in a figurative sense, observe, that all the expressions will very well bear such an interpretation; that it will be more agreeable to the style of prophecy, in particular to the style of this book, which every where abounds in figurative descriptions; that all these expressions are used in the ancient prophets in a figurative meaning, and that there are unanswerable difficulties attending a literal interpretation of them.

Dr. Whitby, in a learned and judicious treatise of the millennium, has considered the whole argument at large, where the reader may find full satisfaction; I shall only set before him the sum of those arguments which seem greatly to confirm the figurative interpretation.

It is observed, in the first place, that all these expressions may very well be understood in a figurative sense. "The souls of them which were beheaded for the witness of Jesus," and which "had not worshipped the beast," may easily, according to the manner of prophetic language, signify persons of like spirit and temper with them, of like faith, patience, constancy, and zeal. John the Baptist was Elias, because he came "in the spirit of Elias." "This is Elias," says our Saviour, "which was for to come," Matt. xi. 14. And Luke, speaking of John preparing the way for the appearance of the Messiah, thus explains it: "And he shall go before him, in the spirit and power of Elias," Luke i. 17. Thus a state of the church in which the spirit of the ancient martyrs and confessors, and the purity of those times, shall return, may be described as a church of martyrs, a church so nearly resembling them in temper, constancy, and zeal.

It is a very easy and natural figure, as well as very common in this book of prophecy, to describe persons by the names of such whose tempers and characters they imitate and follow. Thus the names of Sodom, Egypt, and Babylon are so often ascribed to Rome, on account she nearly resembled them in corruption, pride, and cruelty.

The other expressions, of a "resurrection," of "living and reigning," were used before in ancient prophecy, to signify the restoration of the church from a low and afflicted state. Thus the prophet Hosea, exhorting to "return unto the Lord for he hath torn and he will heal; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up;" he adds, "After two days will he revive us," or make us live again, "on the third day will he raise us up, as from the dead, and we shall live in his sight" (vi. 1, 2).

In this prophecy, when the two witnesses were slain, and "their dead bodies lay in the streets of the great city" (Rev. xi. 7, 8), "the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood on their feet" (ver. 11); or they are represented under the figure of being raised from the dead.

It is moreover observable, that as all these expressions may well be understood in a figurative sense, agreeable to the language of prophecy, so it is more agreeable to understand them so in a book of revelations, delivered throughout in such a style. Every part of these prophecies is so to be understood, the book, the seals, the trumpets, the beasts, the witnesses, the dragon, and old serpent; and why not the resurrection of the martyrs and confessors!

It is also very material, that these very expressions seem to be taken from some passages of scripture, in which they are plainly used in a figurative sense, and must be so interpreted. There is a remarkable prophecy of Ezekiel, xxxvii. 3, concerning the restoration of Judah, and her return out of the captivity: "And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? and I answered, O Lord God, thou knowest." It follows, ver. 5, "Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you," that is, a spirit of life, or living spirit, "and ye shall live. And so I prophesied, as he commanded me," says Ezekiel, ver. 10, "and the breath," or spirit of life, "came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet." The meaning of these figurative expressions is thus explained, ver. 11, 12, "Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are (or signify) the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts. Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel." Or, I will bring you out of your captivity, and into the enjoyment of your own country, liberties, laws, and religion.

It is farther to be observed, "how fully the description of the conversion of the Jews answers to the millennium of St. John, who useth the very words by which their prophets had foretold their glorious conversion," as Dr. Whitby has shown at large.*

Now, as this happy state of the church may well be understood of the fullest accomplishment of the prophecies, which speak of the conversion of the Jews, and receiving them again into the church, which Paul calls "life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15, this interpretation will be the most easy and proper, as most agreeable to the sense in which they were used by the ancient prophecies, upon the like occasion.

Yet farther, a literal and proper resurrection of the martyrs and confessors, who suffered in the heathen Roman empire and reign of the beast, is attended with many difficulties, so great as render that interpretation very doubtful and improbable.

Dr. Whitby* has remarked, that a proper and literal resurrection is never, in the whole New Testament, expressed or represented to us by the living of the soul, but by the living, raising, and resuscitation of the dead, the raising of the bodies of the saints, of them that slept in the dust, or in their graves, or sepulchres.

The same learned author† farther observes, this doctrine seems not well consistent with the happy state of souls departed——or with the high prerogatives supposed to belong to the souls of martyrs——that this doctrine does not well agree with the accurate description of the resurrection in the holy scriptures; for in all those descriptions there is no mention of a first and second resurrection, or that one of them is to be a thousand years after the other. They describe the bodies at the resurrection fit to live in heaven, and not on this earth; they represent the resurrection to be performed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" (1 Cor. xv. 52). They represent, at that time, "The dead in Christ shall rise first;" but then also, "we which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so we shall be ever with the Lord" (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17). The scriptures speak constantly of the resurrection of all saints, as of a resurrection not to a temporal life on earth, but to an eternal life in heaven. Nor, finally, does the doctrine of a literal resurrection well agree, our author observes, with the genius of Christian faith, or with the nature of Christian hope, or with that freedom and temper of spirit it requires from the professors of Christianity, who are taught not to "set their hearts and affections on things on earth, but on things above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God" (Col. iii. 1—3).

To these observations of Dr. Whitby, let me add one or two observations which the prophecy itself seems naturally to point out to us.

And, first, this prophecy seems to suppose such inhabitants of the earth, during the millennium, as were the inhabitants of the earth when the beast was destroyed, or men in the usual state of natural succession; not persons raised out of the grave, or fetched from the separate state of departed souls.

Here is no intimation that all good and faithful Christians are to be slain at this time, together with the beast and his followers, to make room for martyrs, and persons who died some hundred of years before, to inhabit the earth in their room. Besides, they are represented in this state of the millennium, as liable to be misled by the deceitful arts of Satan, and the terrors of persecution; for which reason, the safety and security of the church in this period is represented by laying a restraint upon Satan, that he should not deceive the nations, or shutting him up in the bottomless pit, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled. The inhabitants of the earth, then, are supposed in the prophecy capable of being deceived, and in danger of it, if the power of Satan had not been so fully restrained. The order of the prophecy seems farther to confirm this observation; for when the thousand years shall be expired, Satan must after that be loosed for a little season, and he shall make so bad use of that little time, as to deceive many; so far deceive them, as to gather a very great number of them together, to attack the saints and the beloved city. Must these new enemies of Christ and his religion be some of the old persecutors raised from the dead, or some of the martyrs after their resurrection, seduced by Satan into his party? or must they be, as the prophecy seems plainly enough to suppose, such a succession of men as now inhabit the earth?

The prophecy itself gives us occasion to make this farther observation,—that this prophecy places the general resurrection after these thousand years are expired, after Satan shall have made a new attempt against truth and righteousness, and with very great numbers, as the sand of the sea; and after they shall be utterly destroyed by fire coming down from God out of heaven. Now the prophecy describes this resurrection, which is to follow the millennium

* Whitby, Treatise of the true Millennium, ch. ii. §. 3.

* Ibid. ch. iii. §. 1. † Ibid. ch. iv. §. 1.

the church may well be called "life from the dead," or a "first resurrection." [3]

6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

(6.) In this eminently glorious state of the church, happiness and holiness shall not be separate, as they now often are; then they shall be joined inseparably together; they shall be free from all affliction, and from all fears of trouble; when the wicked shall be condemned to the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, the second death shall not hurt them; they continuing faithful in the service of God, to which they are consecrated by the Christian profession, shall live as priests to God and Christ, and shall reign in a pure, peaceful, and glorious church-state, under Christ's protection and favour. [4] and defeat of the last attempt of the enemies of truth, as a general resurrection of all persons, without any exception, without the least intimation of so considerable a resurrection, above a thousand years before, as this resurrection of the martyrs must have been, if meant literally. "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God—and the dead were judged out of those things that were written in the books, according to their works" (xx. 12). They who were judged, were the dead then raised to life: then the dead were all raised, small and great.

It should seem, then, that a literal and proper resurrection of martyrs, to live on earth a thousand years before the general resurrection and judgment, is not a necessary sense of this prophecy, nor so natural and probable a sense, as the figurative. It should seem, that the literal sense is liable to many difficulties, and hardly reconcileable to the other descriptions of the same prophecy, and to other passages of the scriptures.

But the figurative interpretation, viz. that this prophecy should mean a happy state of the church on earth, well answers the whole design of the prophecy, and appears the easier and more probable meaning of the words.

The church in peace, free from persecution, and all deceitful arts of Satan and wicked men, enlarged with the conversion of the Jews and "fulness of the gentiles," serving God as a kingdom of priests, in the purity of Christian worship, and enjoying all the blessings of divine protection and grace, may well be expressed by "living and reigning with Christ."

This short description will, then, allow a liberty to every one of applying to this happy state of the church whatever other prophecies he shall find relating to the peaceful and prosperous state of the church in the last times. If we take care to apply them in an easy and natural sense, agreeable to the true meaning of this prophecy, and true nature of the peace, purity, and happiness of the church, designed by it, we shall rectify the mistakes, and prevent the dangerous errors, that some have fallen into, by indulging too far an unreasonable fancy and ungrounded imagination; and the true millennium will be very far from an unreasonable doctrine, or a dangerous enthusiasm.

[3] Ver. 5.] There is mention in this prophecy of two sorts of dead persons; those who were slain "by the witness of Jesus," and those who were slain "by the sword of him that sat on the horse." As here is an account of the death of faithful Christians by their persecutors, and of their persecutors themselves by Christ, these persecutors are called "the remnant," the rest, οἱ λοιποί.

It is very agreeable to the design and connexion of this prophecy, to understand "the rest of the dead," who "lived not again till the thousand years were finishsd," of the rest or remnant, viz. of those that were slain with the sword of him that sat on the horse. Thus, the dead church raised to life, and living and reigning for a thousand years, and the enemies of the church remaining dead, and not living again till the thousand years were finished, will exactly agree in the same figurative meaning. This will be a sense consistent with the resurrection of the antichristian party again, for a little season, after the thousand years shall be finished.

Dr. Hammond, though he refers this prophecy to a very different period, yet, from the connexion of the words, perceived this was the true meaning of "the rest of the dead." Who "the rest of the dead" are is manifest, not all besides the martyrs, but those formerly named, ver. 4, that is, they who "worshipped the beast or his image, or received his mark in their foreheads or hands."—And therefore these may well be the rest of the dead here, it being punctually said of them, xix. 21, οἱ λοιποὶ, "The rest were slain;" and then, that they "lived not again till the thousand years were finished," must needs signify, that the church was now, for that space, free from such heathen persecutors, and purified from such avowed mixtures of those vile unchristian practices, which is but the negative part annexed to the positive preceding: so that, to use the words of Mr. Baxter, "the rest of the dead, even the subdued pagans (or papists, say others), were kept as in a state of death, out of power, till the dragon revived their power again, a thousand years after."

[4] Ver. 6.] To "reign with Christ" may well be understood in a figurative sense, as we are said to be "crucified with Christ," and to "live with him;" or, as Christ himself is said to "live in us," Gal. ii. 20. "Happy days of peace and righteousness, of joy and triumph, of external prosperity and internal sanctity, when virtue and innocency shall be in the throne, vice and vicious men out of power and credit, are prophesied of in scripture, and promised to the church of God."* Such a kingdom, which shall be a kingdom of righteousness as well as peace, under a peculiar divine presence and conduct, may well be called "the kingdom of God, and of his Christ," and they may be said to "reign with him," who through his favour shall enjoy all the blessings of that happy state.

THE FIFTH PERIOD.

7 And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison,

(7.) I was farther informed in my prophetic visions, that this happy state of the church was not to be perpetual, like the happiness of the heavenly state: for at the end of the thousand years, the extraordinary restraint laid upon the enemies of truth and righteousness should be taken off, as if Satan was let loose out of his prison, to deceive the world into error and enmity against the professors of true religion.

8 And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

(8.) No sooner shall this restraint be taken off, but Satan

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX. 7—10.

CONTENTS.—The following verses of this chapter inform us, that the happy days of the church, prophesied of in the foregoing vision, will at length have their period, though they are to continue for a long time, and are not to expire till after a thousand years: yet, then, there shall be one attempt more against the purity of religion, and against the peace and prosperity of the Christian church. Satan is to be released for a little time, or season; but, in shall again attempt to form and head a party, by seducing men of weak and evil-disposed minds; and he shall find such persons in the several parts of the earth, who, like the descendants of Gog and Magog, the Scythians and Tartars, shall gather together in great numbers, in order to invade and ravage their neighbours, and disturb the peace and happiness of the church.

9 And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

(9.) They shall come, like the barbarous northern nations, described in foregoing prophecies; they shall make their invasion so suddenly, and with such numbers, that they shall spread far and wide over the peaceful habitations of the saints, and besiege them even in their camps, and capital cities, and threaten to spoil and subdue them. But this attempt shall not be like former invasions of the barbarous nations, who possessed themselves of the countries they invaded, in right of conquest over the former inhabitants; for God shall protect his faithful servants, and destroy their enemies in a very extraordinary manner: God shall send fire out of heaven to destroy them, as he did the wicked inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. xix. 24), and as he threatened Gog and Magog in the ancient prophets (Ezek. xxxix. 1, &c.).

10 And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

(10.) And the devil, the principal and chief leader of this new apostasy and rebellion against God and the kingdom of his Son, shall then be punished suitably to the greatness of his crime. He shall not only be shut up, and put under restraint as before; but now he shall be cast into a lake of fire and brimstone, where he is to be punished with the beast and false prophet for ever; his power shall never more revive; his anguish and torment shall be endless, without any hope of relief, to all eternity.

that little season, he shall deceive many, and so far seduce them, as to prevail upon them to join with him in his apostasy.

This new attempt against truth and righteousness, shall end in the utter ruin of the enemies of Christ and his religion; they shall be totally defeated, and their obstinate wickedness punished with everlasting destruction.

This state of the church and world, so different from the preceding, deserves to be considered as a new period, which will therefore be the fifth in order.

This period, though it is represented very short, yet deserves particular attention, on account of the circumstance of the time in which it is placed, between the end of the thousand years and the final judgment; and also, as it represents the state and condition of the earth to be much the same as at present, except an extraordinary restraint laid on Satan, and the extraordinary purity, peace, and happiness of the church, arising from a peculiar protection and blessing of Christ. For we see, no sooner is Satan loosed, and his restraint taken off, but he finds great numbers of persons ready to be deceived, and to join in disturbing the peace, and corrupting the purity of the church.

The theory of a very learned and ingenious author,* which supposes the happy state of the church for a thousand years, cannot be in this present earth, but must be after a conflagration, when it shall be first destroyed, and then restored to a paradisaical state, is attended with a very great, and, as I think, an unanswerable difficulty, from this state of the world, after the thousand years shall be finished.

The ingenious author† is fain to suppose some persons, sons of the earth, generated from the slime of the ground and the heat of the sun, as brute creatures, he says, were at first.

But as such an original of mankind is, I think, unaccountable; so, I hope, the prophecy has no difficulty in it that stands in need of so strange a solution. For notwithstanding the general peace and purity of the church, the many converts to true religion, and the great number of persons truly religious, and who live up to the principles and in the practice of pure Christianity, there may be also some persons of evil-disposed minds, uneasy with the purity of true religion, easily moved by the passions of envy, covetousness, and ambition, whenever an opportunity shall offer to gratify them. The prophecy says nothing to make this impossible, or improbable; this circumstance rather makes it a likely supposition, and certainly much more natural, than to raise a great number of wicked persons from the dead, or cause them to spring out of the slime of the earth, to revive a new persecution of the Christian faith and religion.

The expressions of this prophecy seem to be taken from the prophet Ezekiel, in the thirty-eighth and thirty-ninth chapters. The word of the Lord orders Ezekiel to "set his face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him" (xxxviii. 2).

Magog was a son of Japheth (Gen. x. 2), from whom the Scythians are generally supposed to be derived; the Mogul Tartars, a people of the Scythian race, are still so called by the Arabian writers, a people who, above all others, have best preserved the most ancient names, as well as the most ancient customs. The prophet Ezekiel* joins to Gog and Magog, "Gomer and all his bands, the house of Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands" (ver. 6). And (ver. 15), "Thou shalt come from thy place, out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee." This seems sufficiently to show, that Gog and Magog, with Gomer and Togarmah of the north quarters, were a northern people, some of the many nations who were comprehended under the general name of Scythians. These were people used to invade their neighbours in great numbers, to spoil their country, and rob them of whatever they could lay their hands on. So the prophet describes them, ver. 13, "Art thou come to take a spoil? Hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?"

I shall only add, that the very learned Bochart thinks it credible, that the names of Russians and Muscovites are derived from Rhos and Meshech, mentioned in this prophecy of Ezekiel. Credibile est ex ראש, Rhos et משך, Mesech, id est, Rhossis et Moschis, vicinis populis circa Araxim (de quibus Ezekiel) descendisse Russos et Muscovitas, gentes in Europæâ Scythiâ celeberrimas, quæque latissimè patent.†

The punishment of these spoilers, viz. Gog and Magog and the bands joined to them, is thus described by the prophet, Ezek. xxxviii. 22, 23, "And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord."

The nations then of Gog and Magog, were a very fit and proper figurative description of the enemies of true religion, and of the faithful professors of it, of their neighbours' peace and prosperity.

It may likewise be here, as Mr. Daubuz observes it is in many other places, that this event shall agree with the letter, as well as with the figurative expressions. "There may remain, according to Mr. Pyle, in the farther and more distant parts of the world, much people still persisting in ignorance and gross superstitions.——These rude nations, prompted by envy at the plenty and happiness of the Christian kingdom, and out of desire of riches, spoil, and plunder (which is the true spirit of Satan, the father of mischief), will be permitted to invade the Christian territories in vast bodies and armies."

However it be, whether these expressions be only figurative, or whether they contain also something literal, the substance of the prophecy will be to this purpose: That after the thousand years of peace and purity, the church shall once more be disturbed by persons like the barbarous northern nations, who have often disturbed the peace of the world by their invasions. But it shall prove a fruitless attempt, and end in their complete and final destruction; a day of righteous judgment will come, when true religion, peace, and happiness, shall be united inseparably, without any future molestation, or disturbance, for ever.

CHAPTER XX. 11—15.

SECTION XXI.

THE SIXTH PERIOD.

11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.

(11.) I farther beheld in another vision, what was to follow upon this full and complete destruction of the enemies of Christ and his religion. The general judgment was represented to me after this manner: I saw in my vision a glorious shining throne erected; I then beheld a person sitting on it; at his appearance, the whole frame and constitution of the world altered and changed, and quite passed away; so that the present heavens and earth were found no more.[1]

12 And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

(12.) Hereupon I beheld in my vision, a general resurrection of all the dead; all ranks and orders of men, the lowest as well as the greatest, appeared before this judgment-seat of God, and they were all judged according to the most impartial rules of justice and equity, as it should appear by their works, whether they were under the condemnation of sinners, or entitled to the mercies of God and promises of eternal life, that they were true and faithful Christians, to whom the salvation of God is promised according to the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.[2]

13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

(13.) This judgment was so general, that all the dead, without exception, were raised again to life, to be judged according to their works, whether they died in the sea, and were buried in the waters, or by land, and were buried in graves; all in the invisible state of the dead were brought forth to this universal judgment.

14 And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

(14.) After this resurrection to judgment, there shall be no more natural death: they who are judged shall not return to their graves again; for death and hades shall be destroyed. But there is a second death, the portion of all who shall be found guilty, and condemned in this day of righteous judgment.

15 And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

(15.) For as many as shall not then appear, before this impartial judge, to be true and faithful Christians, and as such registered in the rolls of the true church of Christ, shall be punished as the enemies of God's government, and of true religion; they shall be cast into a lake of fire, and shall suffer a second death, in a state of everlasting destruction.[3]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XX. 11—15.

CONTENTS.—The course of these prophecies, after many important visions describing the state of the church and world in this present life, brings us at last to the great and final judgment, when the whole scene and mystery of providence shall be finished. Then the great doctrine, which runs through the whole of these prophecies, will be fully verified, That truth and righteousness shall surely prevail in the end against error and all iniquity; eternal happiness shall be the reward of the faithful, and everlasting destruction the punishment of the wicked. Then all shall be judged, "every man according to his works." This is represented as a sixth period of providence: after which there will be in the seventh period an everlasting sabbath, a state of eternal rest and happiness for all the righteous, and of the most perfect worship of God, in the praises and devotion of the heavenly church.

[1] Ver. 11.] This expression, "The earth and the heavens fled away, and there was found no place for them," seems plainly to intimate such a change and alteration, as will well agree with Peter's description, that then "all these things shall be dissolved," 2 Pet. iii. 11. This dissolution the same apostle describes more particularly, as to the manner of it: "The heaven shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (ver. 10). At this "coming of the day of God, the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat" (ver. 12). This great change of the present state of the world, is to make way for "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (ver. 13). Thus, "the heavens and earth shall pass away, and there shall be found no place for them."

[2] Ver. 12.] This description of "opening the books, and judging out of the things which were written in the books, according to their works," seems an allusion to the methods of human courts of justice. There are stated laws, or rules of justice, by which all accused as criminals were to be tried, and according to which they were to be found guilty or acquitted. These laws, collected into a body, were called the codex, or book of laws; and when any persons were accused, and found guilty, their actions must appear to be criminal, as against some of the laws in that book. Now the plain evidence of the laws of righteousness, the perfect knowledge God has of all men's actions, the full conviction of every man's own conscience, wherein he has transgressed those laws of righteousness, may sufficiently answer a legal accusation and proof. The sinner will be convicted by his works to have transgressed the laws of righteousness, whether promulgated by the light of reason, or by the authority of particular revelation.

In human courts of justice, it is allowed to every person to make his defence, and urge what he has to offer, either to prove himself innocent, or that he is entitled to favour or pardon.

The book of life seems to allude more particularly to this plea of the person accused. The book of the Revelation of Jesus Christ has promised the pardon and forgiveness of sins, and the gift of eternal life, to all true and faithful Christians. The faith, the patience, the perseverance of true Christians will be proved by their works; these show them to be true Christians, and therefore that they are entitled to the mercies of God, and the promise of eternal life, according to what is written in the book of life, the book of the Revelation of Jesus Christ, which has "brought life and immortality to light."

[3] Ver. 15.] Paul's description may give some light to this vision of John, 2 Thess. i. 7, &c. "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe, in that day."

CHAPTER XXI.

SECTION XXII.

THE SEVENTH PERIOD.

1 And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

(1.) After the foregoing visions, in which I beheld a representation of the state of the church and world, to the consummation of all things, I had the final happiness of the true worshippers of God represented to me in a new vision; in which I beheld a perfectly new state of things: the heaven and earth in which we now live, being quite passed away, melted with fervent heat, and dissolved in fire; there was a new heaven and a new earth, in which I perceived one thing very remarkable, that there was no sea. To signify, there should be no turbulent, unquiet spirits, to disturb the peace of that happy state, nor should a tyrannical or persecuting power ever arise in it.[1]

2 And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

(2.) The blessedness of this state was farther represented to me, by the model of a noble city, as a new Jerusalem, which model seemed to descend leisurely out of heaven, as

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXI.

Contents.—We are now come, in the course of these prophecies, to the end, the consummation of all things.

This vision stands in the prophecy after the last attempt of the enemies of religion had been defeated; after the dead, small and great, had appeared before God's judgment-seat, and were judged according to their works; after all the wicked were doomed to everlasting punishment, and all who were not found written in the book of life were cast into the lake of fire.

This order of the prophecies seems to point out to us, that the new heavens and new earth, represented in this vision, signify that state of unchangeable perfection and heavenly happiness to which the true and faithful servants of the living God shall be advanced, when all their trials and sufferings in this life shall be ended.

Nothing could be more proper to the useful design of these revelations, than such a conclusion of them, with so affecting a representation of the final, complete, and everlasting happiness of the true worshippers of God, and faithful servants of Jesus. This is a powerful motive to present patience, a firm foundation of present hope, a strong encouragement to zeal in the cause of true religion, and constancy in the uncorrupt faith of Jesus, when such a reward is set before us, and promised to all who shall be faithful to the end.

It is a very ancient observation, which men of closer thought and better sense have long since made, that happiness is the reward of virtue in the end. It is a memorable moral of Euripides,*

Εἰς τέλος γὰρ οἱ μὲν ἐσθλοὶ τυγχάνουσιν ἄξιον

But here is a sure word of prophecy, which beforehand acquaints us what will be the last period and state of things. The present world, for a few years, a very few in comparison of eternity, will be a state of various sorts of trials and troubles, of evils caused by wicked men, of evils wherewith the righteous Governor of the world punishes their wickedness; but the unchangeable purpose of God has appointed another state of things, when the dead shall be raised, and judged according to their works; all the faithful servants of God and Christ will enjoy a state of eternal life, in perfect peace and security, in complete prosperity and happiness.

It is with great advantage this encouragement is given the church in such a prophecy. An observation of the faithful and punctual accomplishment of the former parts of this prophecy, in times past, for several hundreds of years, serves much to confirm our faith and hope, in as faithful and punctual performance of what remains.

We may be well assured, that God will reward all the faithful with a state of perfect and endless happiness at the last, however he may permit error and persecution to prevail for a time, in this present state of life.

It must be owned, several interpreters of good reputation* understand the following vision, a description of the happy state of the church during the thousand years in which it shall reign with Christ; or to describe the full and complete reformation of the Christian church, during the last period upon earth.

As I can see nothing in the prophetic description to confine it to this meaning, so I apprehend the order of the prophecies, the chief and principal design of them, and the description itself, greatly favour the judgment of those learned writers, who understand these last visions of the future state of happiness in heaven, after the general resurrection and last judgment.

Thus the seventh and last period concludes the whole plan of providence, and finishes it in an endless sabbatism.

* Ion. ad finem.

[1] Ver. 1.] It is not very probable, the Spirit of prophecy should have a regard to the Theory of a late ingenious author, who has contrived, that there shall literally be no more sea in his new earth, after the conflagration: for however true we may suppose such a circumstance in theory, it could hardly be intelligible to any who should read this prophecy, at least till the theory had discovered it.

We perceive all the other parts of this description are figurative. It is remarkable, that "the beast with seven heads and ten horns," the author of all the calamities of the third long period, "rose out of the sea," Rev. xiii. 1, and the same tyrannical oppressive power, under the figure of the great whore, is described as "sitting on many waters," Rev. xvii. 1, and in scripture, any great collection of waters is called a "sea;" and these waters are interpreted to signify "people, multitudes, and nations, and tongues," who were seduced to oppose the truth, and persecute the faithful servants of Christ.

The sea, moreover, when raised into a storm, is a proper figure to express the rage, passion, and tumult, of unquiet, evil, and seditious minds. Thus Daniel describes the rise of the four tyrannical empires: "I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove on the great sea: and four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another" (vii. 2, 3); to denote the commotions of the world, the unquiet troublesome state of affairs, out of which new tyrannies and oppressive powers usually have their rise.

This circumstance, then, in the new heaven and new earth, that there was "no sea," is very proper to express in prophetic language, that in this happy state there will be no turbulent, unquiet spirits, to be managed by the ambitious; and therefore no fear any beast should again rise out of the sea. The most judicious Jewish writers under-it were, and come nearer to me in the air, that I might observe it more distinctly: I perceived it was set out with all the splendour used at high festivals, or marriage-solemnities.[2]

3 And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

(3.) Moreover, a voice from heaven attended my vision and explained the meaning of it more particularly; for the voice from heaven declared, that God would fully accomplish all that good to his faithful servants which his tabernacle signified to them, as the seat of his presence, and testimony of his favour; he would bless them as his favoured people, and as their God he would be their shield and their reward, and bless them with all protection and happiness.

4 And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

(4.) For such shall be the blessed effects of God's presence with his people, and of his grace and favour to them, that they shall meet with no more troubles and afflictions, to draw tears from their eyes, as, in this present life, all do more or less. They shall no more be subject to death, as all, without exception, are in this mortal state. Every thing that can cause pain, or occasion sorrow, shall be far removed from this happy state. These were the afflictions of mortal life, but now death and the invisible state are no more; all former afflictions are passed away, and shall remain no longer.[3]

5 And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful.

(5.) The happiness of this state was not only declared by a voice from heaven; it was solemnly confirmed by the oracle from the throne: Take notice, God will make a full change of all things, in the form and state of the world; nor shall any of its former afflictions remain. Record this declaration and promise: they contain nothing but what is most certainly true, and what in its due time shall be faithfully and fully accomplished.

6 And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

(6.) And now shall be the consummation of all things; all God's promises shall be accomplished in the full happiness of his servants and saints. God, who will execute all his purposes from the beginning to the end, will perfect the happiness of those who have been faithful to his cause. He will abundantly satisfy their hopes and desires of eternal life; happiness shall ever flow in upon them, as water ever runs from a quick spring, or overflowing fountain.

7 He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

(7.) Let this be an encouragement to faithfulness, constancy, and perseverance; they who shall resist and overcome the temptations of a corrupt world shall not lose their reward, God himself will be their God, their portion, and their happiness. He will receive them as his children, confirm their right, as the sons of God, to inherit all the blessings and happiness of eternal life.[4]

8 But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

(8.) But the case shall be quite otherwise with all the enemies of true religion, who have either deserted it, or apostatized from it, or opposed it. The cowardly and distrustful, who either had not faith in God's promises, or courage to persevere, on the encouragement of his promises; all who indulged themselves in abominable vices, who, to gratify their lusts, were guilty of murders, whoredoms, deceit, idolatry, and lying; all these shall have their portion with the devil, to whose party they joined themselves, and shall with him undergo the punishment of the second death, in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone.

9 And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.

(9.) Besides this more general account of the final happiness of the faithful, an angel, as a nuntius, or interpreter, was sent to give me a more particular description of the glory of that blessed state. It was one of the seven angels who had the seven cups full of the last plagues, in the foregoing vision. He called upon me to come to him, and he would show me more distinctly the model of the holy city, the new Jerusalem, adorned as the bride of the Lamb, on her marriage-festival.

10 And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God,

(10.) Then the Spirit of prophecy changed the scene of my vision: I seemed to stand on a high eminence, from whence I could distinctly survey the whole model of this stand "new heavens and new earth" to mean a new state of happiness, in which former sorrows and troubles shall be remembered no more. So Maimonides,* Quòd dixi, Creabo novos cœlos, &c. id ita intelligo, quòd vos posituras sum in lætitiam perpetuam, loco luctûs, et anxietatis prioris, neque illius luctûs prioris memoria sit mansura.

[2] Ver. 2.] What John saw coming down from heaven, seems to have been the plan or model of the new Jerusalem, which proves nothing where this happy state of the church is to be enjoyed, much less will it determine it to be on earth, as some have argued, because it is said to come down from heaven; for the model in the vision might well do so, wherever it was that the church should enjoy the happiness represented by it.

Besides, to "come down from heaven," or from God, in scripture language, means the divine original of a thing, or that God is the author of it. The baptism of John was "from heaven" (Mark xi. 30), because his authority was from God, and not from men. When the apostle mentions "the Jerusalem which is above" (Gal. iv. 26), or the supernal Jerusalem, he seems to mean a state of heavenly original and constitution.

[3] Ver. 4.] Such a state as is here described, free from all pain, sorrow, and death, seems a description of some better state than what this present life and world can afford.

[4] Ver. 7.] The expression, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things," seems to refer to the promises made to them who overcome, in the epistles to the seven churches, and very strongly enforces them as motives and encouragement to patience and perseverance. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God. He that overcometh, shall not be hurt of the second death. To him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the hidden manna. To him that overcometh, and keepeth my words to the end, to him will I give power over the nations:" the same shall be "clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels: I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out." Finally, "To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I overcame, and am sat down with my heavenly city, which was let down from heaven, a model of a divine plan and workmanship. [5]

11 Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal;

(11.) The first thing I observed in the model of this holy city was a most glorious brightness, like the shining light of the Shechinah, formerly the glory of God in the temple, and symbol of his gracious presence with men; so that the model shone as with the lustre of a diamond, to express a surprising beauty and splendour.

12 And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel:

13 On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates.

(12, 13.) I perceived also, that this city was walled about with a very thick and high wall, to express the great safety and security of the inhabitants, free from all danger or fear of any attempt or surprise by their enemies. It had twelve gates, three in each side of the wall, which stood towards the four points of the heaven, east, west, north, and south; and at each of the twelve gates stood an angel, as a sentinel or guard: each of the gates was named after the names of the twelve tribes, as appeared by an inscription over them, figuratively showing, who had a right to be admitted by the guard of angels, through the gates into the city, such as had been faithful members of the true church: and expressing also the great honour of that city, where angels were appointed to do duty as a guard; an honour properly due to the majesty of God's presence, and to the seat of it.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

(14.) The foundations of the city wall were also adorned with inscriptions of the names of the twelve apostles of Christ, who had this honour as the founders of the Christian church, by Christ's immediate commission and authority; figuratively showing, that they who shall build their faith on the foundation of apostolical doctrine and institutions, have a right to the blessings of this holy and happy state.

15 And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

(15.) And I perceived that the angel interpreter, who was sent to instruct me more fully in these things, appeared to have a golden measuring rod, with which he measured the several parts of this holy city; by which measure was understood, the greatness and extent of the city, the exact order and just proportion of every part of it: to show figuratively, that this city was prepared for a great number of inhabitants, how small soever the number of faithful Christians may at any time appear; and that every thing relating to the happiness of that state was prepared with the greatest order, beauty, and exactness.

16 And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal.

(16.) Upon measuring, it appeared that the city was an exact square, of equal length and breadth, and of a very great extent; for it appeared, upon measure, to be fifteen hundred miles in compass, each side three hundred seventy-five miles long. It was so regularly built, that all the buildings were every where of the same proportions, of a very exact and uniform architecture. [6]

17 And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.

(17.) Upon measuring the height of the wall, I perceived it was one hundred forty-four cubits, of the common measure among men; for it was such a measuring rod, that the angel made use of in measuring the height of the wall. [7]

18 And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

(18.) The walls appeared to be built with unparalleled strength and magnificence, not of brick or squared stones, but of some precious stone, as solid, firm, and beautiful as a jasper; the city was every where adorned with pure gold, and shone with the brightness of crystal. [8]

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

20 The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.

(19, 20.) The lower parts of the wall of the city were inlaid quite round, and beautified with a great variety of precious stones, such as were directed to be set in the high-priest's breastplate of judgment, where was the urim and thummim, which are interpreted light and perfection; and were a pro-

Father on his throne." All these promises seem to be summed up and fulfilled in the inheritance of all things, or the complete happiness of eternal life.

[5] Ver. 10.] The paraphrase expresses the sense of "coming down from heaven," as it is explained, ver. 2.

[6] Ver. 16.] They seem to have mistaken the proper meaning of these expressions, who understand the height of the city, whether of walls or buildings, to be equal to the length or breadth of it; according to which account, the houses and walls of a city would be out of all proportion. How large soever men may conceive the extent of a city, and of contiguous buildings, houses three hundred seventy-five miles high are beyond all propriety in the boldest figures. Some interpreters, to avoid this difficulty, have taken in the height of the mountain on which the city is supposed to stand: I say, supposed to stand; for the prophecy nowhere mentions it. John indeed was called up to a mountain, to view the model of the city; but it is not said, that the city itself was situated on a mountain: nor do I conceive what this supposition serves for, except to make the city a perfect cube, for which I see no reason, a perfect square answering all figurative meaning full out as well.

Grotius* justly observes, this equality belongs to the walls and buildings, compared with each other, not with the length and breadth of the city. Non idem dicit quod modò, cùm quadratam formam explicaret, sed aliud, nempè, quaquâ iret, altitudinem et murorum et ædificiorum fuisse æqualem.

The numbers themselves are evidently typical: they are taken from twelve, the number of the apostles, multiplied by a thousand. As before, the number of the members of the Christian church was represented by one hundred forty-four thousand, being one hundred forty-four, the square number of twelve, multiplied by a thousand. So that this manner of numbering will very properly signify a city, of which faithful Christians are to be the happy citizens, and settled inhabitants; a city which shall have incomparably greater extent, more strength and beauty, than ancient Babylon, Rome, or any other seat of empire ever known in this world.

[7] Ver. 17.] This seems to be the measure of the height of the wall, in which we observe the prophecy still keeps to the mystical number of twelve, multiplied into itself. The height of the wall is represented about seventy-two yards high, according to the lesser cubit, or about eighty-six yards, according to the greater, sufficient to express great security against all attempts, and any surprise by an enemy.

[8] Ver. 18.] I conceive it is the city, and not the gold, per emblem to express the happiness of God's church in his presence, in the blessing of his oracle and protection. The like ornaments on the foundation of the walls of this city may well express the perfect glory and happiness of all the inhabitants of it, from the most glorious presence and protection of God.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

(21.) Never was any city on earth so richly and so gloriously adorned; for every gate of the city was made of one large entire pearl; and the public place of assembly in the city was paved with a rich stone, shining as crystal, and set in pure gold. [9]

22 And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

(22.) There was one thing I observed in this new city very remarkable; there was no temple in it, but the want of a temple was abundantly made up: for Jehovah, the Almighty God himself, and Jesus Christ the Lamb, were instead of a temple. They were present in this city in a much more glorious and perfect manner, than God was ever present in the temple of the earthly Jerusalem. [10]

23 And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

(23.) Nor had this new Jerusalem any need of the sun to shine by day, or of the moon by night, to give it light, as in the present state of this world; the presence of God himself and the Lamb did enlighten it always without interruption, as the glory of God did the holy of holies in the temple. [11]

24 And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it.

(24.) This glorious city shall be the residence of all who have believed with the heart unto righteousness, and made confession with the mouth unto salvation. All true Christians, out of every nation and people, shall have their portion in this glory, which shall be much greater than the richest and most powerful princes ever enjoyed; greater than if we were to imagine all the princes of the earth collecting all the riches of the world together, to beautify and adorn one city. [12]

25 And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.

(25.) There will be no occasion to shut the gates of this city at any time; not by night, for there will be no night; the perpetual light of God's glory will make perpetual day; there will be no danger or fear of any enemy; the inhabitants shall ever live in full safety and security, in an undisturbed possession of all peace, joy, and happiness.

26 And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.

(26.) All that can contribute to make this new Jerusalem honourable and glorious, shall be found in it, as if all that was rich and precious throughout the world, was brought into one city, and all centred there.

27 And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

(27.) Yet let it be carefully observed, though the gates of this city are always open, they are not open for every one to enter in; all who are unworthy of this happiness, and unmeet for it, will be refused entrance; all impure and vicious, all idolaters, hypocrites, and liars, all men of falsehood and deceit, shall find no place in this holy city, and shall have no portion in this happiness; it is a blessedness peculiar to the saints, and appropriated to them only who have appeared true and faithful servants of God and Christ, and as such are registered among the true Christians, who are to inherit eternal life.

which is represented shining as clear glass, or crystal. Our copies which read ὁμοία, which agrees with πόλις, seems a truer reading than ὅμοιον. It is not so intelligible, how pure gold should be like crystal, but easy to conceive the city adorned with crystal set in gold.

[9] Ver. 21.] Grotius supposes, that the gates of the city were made of a fine marble, bright and shining as a pearl; but may not the prophecy design a very strong figure, and suppose pearls in all their beauty, large and firm enough to make the frontispiece of a gate? The "street of the city" seems well understood by Grotius of the forum, or place of public assembly, which is described as paved either with squares of gold, and crystals, or with crystal squares set in gold borders; than which, imagination can conceive nothing more rich and magnificent.

[10] Ver. 22.] These expressions of this prophecy seem to point out to us, that all that was figuratively or spiritually meant by the temple of God, and his presence with his people, which was the great blessing and glory of Jerusalem of old, shall be fully accomplished, and perfectly answered, in this new Jerusalem; there shall be a fulness of joy and happiness, in this glorious state of the church, from the presence of the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb. Do not these characters describe something more than can be well expected from the best-reformed state of the church in this world?

[11] Ver. 23.] This part of the prophetic description seems to be taken from the Shechinah, or glory of God, in the several divine appearances. This is represented as a bright and glorious light; the holy of holies, the seat of God's presence in the temple, had no other light than that of the Shechinah, or the glory, that shone over the mercy-seat, between the cherubim. How strong is this figurative representation, to show, that this happy state of the church shall be, without comparison, more glorious than any former state had been? The Shechinah, or glory of God's presence, shall not be shut up or concealed in one part of a temple, but shall be spread through the whole extent of this spacious city, and every inhabitant shall enjoy the full felicity represented by it.

[12] Ver. 24.] This part of the description seems to be an allusion to the passage of the prophet Isaiah, "And the gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising" (lx. 3). This prophecy raises the idea yet higher, to show the perfect satisfaction and joy of all persons of every rank and quality, in this happy state, where every thing that can contribute to it shall be collected together, and severally contribute to complete the public happiness.

CHAPTER XXII. 1—5.

1 And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

(1.) The angel directed me to observe farther in this plan of the new Jerusalem, which I saw in my vision, that a pure river of water, perfectly fine and clear, perpetually issued out from the throne of God and the Lamb; to represent a constant provision for the comfortable and happy life of all the inhabitants of this city of God. [1]

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII. 1—5.

CONTENTS.—The first five verses of this chapter are but a continuation of this prophetic description of the new Jerusalem, and should have been part of the twenty-first chapter.

[1] Ver. 1.] It is observed of the city of Babylon, that the

2 In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

(2.) As this river of water of life ran through the chief street in the midst of the city, so there was planted on each side of the river a beautiful row of trees, not only to serve for ornament and refreshment, but which, like the tree of life in paradise, should make the inhabitants immortal. They yielded a great variety of pleasant fruits, and in such plenty, that they had ripe fruit every month, and so all the year round. Even the leaves of these trees had such healing virtues, that they were a sure remedy against all sorts of weakness and indisposition.[2]

3 And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him:

(3.) So great will be the happiness of the saints, the faithful in Christ Jesus, that nothing shall break in upon it, or any ways interrupt it; nothing shall be done in this holy city to deserve the displeasure of God: nor therefore shall they be liable to any afflictions, either as punishments, or a useful discipline. They shall continually enjoy the favour and grace of God and Christ, with the blessing and happiness of their presence; they shall serve God with all the gratitude, constancy, and affection, so great obligations require of them.[3]

4 And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads.

(4.) For in that happy state they shall have so full communications of all grace, holiness, and happiness, from God's immediate presence, that they shall be made like unto him, partakers of his perfections and glory; like the high-priest of old, they shall have "Holiness to the Lord" on their foreheads, expressive of their entire devotion to God, and an indelible mark of God's favour.[4]

5 And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.

(5.) In this blessed state, there shall be no interruption of their happiness and joy; there shall be no night, no state of darkness, between the end of one day and the beginning of another; their happiness proceeds immediately from God himself, from his constant and everlasting presence with them, and favour to them; so that they shall enjoy the same unspeakable happiness, without any interruption or diminution, to all eternity. Thus all the faithful servants of Christ Jesus shall reign with their God and Saviour for ever and ever.[5] river Euphrates was let into it, and ran through it. The first paradise is represented as watered by a river; a river that went out of Eden, or had its course in that country, ran through the garden to water it (Gen. ii. 10). Ezekiel, in his prophetic vision of the new city and temple, has a like representation of waters in great plenty, flowing from the house or temple: "Behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward.——And the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar" (Ezek. xlvii. 1). These waters were in such plenty, that they were deep enough to swim in; "a river that could not be passed over" (ver. 5). These waters were of such excellent virtues, that they gave life to all who drank of them: "Every thing shall live whither the river cometh" (ver. 9).

Water, as necessary to the support of life, and as it contributes in great cities, especially in the hot eastern countries, to the ornament of the place, and delight of the inhabitants, is a very proper representation of the government of all things, both for the support and pleasure of life. "With God," says the psalmist, "is the fountain of life; thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures." The figure of a "river of water of life, clear as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and the Lamb" (Ps. xxxvi. 8, 9), elegantly expresses the glorious and happy immortality which all faithful Christians shall enjoy in this state of perfect and endless happiness.

[2] Ver. 2.] Both "the waters of life," and "the tree of life," are emblems of immortality: "They that eat of the tree of life shall live for ever" (Gen. iii. 22). The trees of life are so planted, in this description, that all the inhabitants may come at the fruit of them freely, and without hinderance. They yield their fruits so plentifully, and so constantly, that there can be no want in so large and populous a city; and even the leaves have a sovereign virtue against all sorts of indisposition. How elegantly does this represent a most happy state of immortal life!

[3] Ver. 3.] This part of the description of the new Jerusalem seems to point out to us, how much greater the happiness of this state will be, than the happiness of the first paradise was. In this state, the faithful servants of Christ shall be in no danger of forfeiting their happiness, and losing paradise, as our first parents did. In their paradisaical state, they shall be a kingdom of priests unto God for ever. This seems to describe a state of happiness above the condition of this world, and only to be enjoyed in the heavenly state.

[4] Ver. 4.] To "see the face of God," and to "stand in his presence," says Mr. Daubuz, implies the most perfect happiness, and is a blessing that only comes to the saints at the resurrection. It is the highest expression in the language of scripture, to describe the most perfect happiness of the heavenly state; by most divines, the beatific vision is appropriated to that meaning.

[5] Ver. 5.] Night and darkness, in the style of prophecy, signify often trouble and affliction; light, on the contrary, expresses prosperity and joy. "In thy light," says the psalmist, "shall we see light" (xxxvi. 9); or, in the lovingkindness of God we shall find prosperity and happiness. In this state of perfect happiness, no trouble, no affliction, shall be intermixed with their peace and joy; God shall then be the everlasting happiness of all his saints. How fully, how gloriously, are all their afflictions, for his sake, rewarded! What encouragement is this to the faithfulness and patience of the saints, when, whatever their sufferings may be, they shall work out for them a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory!" Thus ends the doctrine of these revelations, in the everlasting happiness of all the faithful; the mysterious ways of Providence are cleared up; all things finally end in an eternal sabbath, in an everlasting state of peace and perfect happiness, reserved in heaven for all who shall persevere, against the temptations of the world, in the love of truth and righteousness.

ANNOTATIONS ON CHAP. XXII. 6, &c.

CONTENTS.—The prophetic part of this book ends in a perfect happiness of the faithful, great above all imagination, certain as the word of prophecy, and lasting without end.

A powerful encouragement and persuasive to constancy in the profession and practice of pure Christianity, whatever difficulties or dangers might attend it.

What follows, to the end, is the conclusion of the whole book, or a sort of epilogue, which confirms the truth of firmed to me the truth of these prophecies, and the faithful performance of all that had been represented to me in my visions. He assured me, they were not a groundless encouragement to Christian constancy and faithfulness; these promises are not like the deceitful promises of false prophets, or credulous enthusiasts; the same true God who inspired the prophets of the ancient church, so punctually to foretell the circumstances of Christ's first appearance, has sent his angel to support the faith and patience of the Christian church by these revelations, which shall soon begin to be accomplished, and continue to be fulfilled, in a series of events, to the end of time.

7 Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.

(7.) Christ himself testifies to the truth of these promises; he himself solemnly declares, he will come to accomplish all these things, which will be soon seen, as the events foretold will fall out in their order, and in the periods marked out for them. Blessed then will they be, who shall so attend to the prophecies of these revelations, as faithfully to follow their directions, who shall be excited to constancy in pure and undefiled religion, by the great encouragements and glorious rewards they set before them. [1]

8 And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things.

(8.) And I John, who have committed these revelations to writing, for the constant use of the churches, do solemnly declare, they are no private fancy or invention of my own, but what I was an eye and ear-witness to, having really seen and heard these things in the visions of prophecy, as I have faithfully related them. And now, my visions appearing to be at an end, I bowed myself to the ground before the angel who had shown me these things, to express the great respect and gratitude I had for the person who had laid me under so great obligations.

9 Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God.

(9.) But the angel hindered me again, as he had done once before, informing me, that I should not consider him as the author of these prophetic visions, but as a fellow-servant of the prophets, and as such employed in the service of God with them; all the praise of the church should therefore be given to God alone, who only is to be acknowledged the author of these revelations, who only gives the Spirit of prophecy for the encouragement and consolation of the faithful. [2]

10 And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand.

(10.) The angel then gave me a charge not to keep these revelations private to myself, and concealed from the church: for the things revealed in them would soon begin to be accomplished, and the cautions, directions, exhortations, and encouragements, contained in them, would be of great use to give the faithful comfort, hope, and constancy, in the successive times of temptation and trial, that they might learn both to expect them, and to be prepared for them.

11 He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

(11.) The providence of God will indeed permit things to continue in this world, just as these prophecies represent the state of them. Men of evil principles and corrupt hearts will continue in acts of injustice and oppression, and to promote false religion and wickedness, notwithstanding all the cautions of religion or judgments of Providence. Yet the cautions, directions, encouragements, of these prophecies, and the judgments of Providence foretold in them, will have a better effect on good minds, to their perseverance in truth, righteousness, and holiness. [3]

12 And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.

(12.) And let all consider, how these prophecies represent the promise and faithfulness of Christ, as well as how they represent the present state of the church and world; though the wicked will not be reformed, and the righteous shall suffer much from the unjust, yet they may depend upon it, that Christ Jesus will come according to the promise, as soon, and in such a manner, as these prophecies declare. Then he shall bring a glorious reward with him, for all his faithful servants who have endured unto the end; then he shall inflict a just punishment on the unjust and filthy, according to the guilt of their idolatry and persecution.

13 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.

(13.) For whatever the present appearances of things may be, how much soever error and wickedness may prosper in this world, and truth and goodness be oppressed, yet such are the characters of Christ, as assure the final events of things shall be as he has revealed them in these prophecies. He is the Lord of the whole creation, by whom all things began, and by whom all things are to be finished; so that he will do all his pleasure through all ages of time, to the consummation of all things, and nothing can prevent or hinder the sure and full accomplishment of his word.

14 Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

(14.) How unspeakably great then is the happiness of all the prophecies contained in these revelations, shows the importance and use of them, and is well fitted to leave them with strong impressions on the hearts of the readers, to preserve them from compliance with any corruptions of the Christian faith and worship, and encourage their constancy in the ways of truth and righteousness.

[1] Ver. 7.] Here Christ himself speaks, says Mr. Waple, this being a sacred drama, in which, according to the nature of such representations, several persons are introduced.—The angel, sent to show these things, declares, in the person of Christ, says Mr. Daubuz, "Behold, I come quickly."—And I (said Christ from the throne) will see them all accomplished, according to Mr. Pyle. The general meaning is determinate enough, that these revelations were really from Christ himself, and that he had undertaken to see them fulfilled.

It is not improbable, this vision being in heaven, that the voice of the oracle from the throne might confirm the testimony of the angel. This sense is agreeable to a following expression (ver. 20), "He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

[2] Ver. 9.] The prostration of the apostle, or bowing himself to the ground before the angel, has been considered before (xix. 10), where we have more largely observed, that it may be understood of a high civil respect, short of proper religious adoration.

[3] Ver. 11.] Mr. Daubuz justly observes, that in the prophetical style, whether the thing be uttered in the past or future, or in the imperative, it is equal. So that to say, "He who is unjust, let him be unjust still," is equal to saying, He that is unjust, will still be so, and will not be reclaimed, what persuasive reasons soever may be used for his recovery.

Mr. Daubuz farther observes, He that wrongeth (or the unjust) denotes, in a peculiar manner, throughout this prophecy, the persecutor and murderer of the saints; as the saint that suffers is called δίκαιος, "the just," because he is innocent, and will be justified in judgment, by the punishment inflicted on the unjust. "He which is filthy," seems principally to denote those who shall be guilty of idolatrous worship. So that, on the one side, here are the persecutors and corrupters of pure religion, by idolatrous doctrines and practices; and, on the other side, the righteous, who keep their integrity, notwithstanding all they suffer for the sake of a good conscience; they remain holy, still will continue separate from the prevailing corruptions of the world, and undefiled by them.

who shall believe the truth of these revelations, as to trust in the faithful performance of them, who shall be so directed by them as to persevere in the purity of Christian faith, and in the practice of undefiled religion, for such have a full assurance of hope, that they shall inherit eternal life, and be received into the blessed state of heavenly perfection and happiness. [4]

15 For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

(15.) The blessedness of these faithful Christians will appear yet the greater, because this hope and happiness are peculiar to them. The wicked have no right to it, no portion or share in it; all shall be for ever excluded, who, like dogs, bite and devour the innocent and righteous, or who indulge themselves in sins of uncleanness or deceit, who attempt to maintain corruptions of religion by falsehood or forgery. All these "shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone," xxi. 8. [5]

16 I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star.

(16.) The Lord Jesus Christ himself finally confirmed the truth and importance of these revelations, by affirming, it was he himself who sent his angel, and who caused me to see the prophetic visions, in which the future state of the church and world was represented to me. The same person who was described in the ancient prophets, as the promised seed of David, the bright Star out of Jacob, and the Dayspring from on high, the true Messiah, or God's anointed, confirmed the truth of all these revelations by his own testimony, therefore all Christians may safely rely upon the truth of them, and comfortably wait in hope of their faithful accomplishment.

17 And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

(17.) And now the prophecies of this book reveal truths of so much use and consequence to sincere Christians, and true lovers of pure religion; now these promises are so fully confirmed by the Spirit of prophecy, and the testimony of Jesus Christ—the true church of Christ, his spiritual bride, should greatly rejoice in them, and endeavour to confirm their faith and constancy by them. For every one who sincerely desires a portion in these blessings, and will seek for them, as the pure Christian religion directs, shall be sure to receive them, and freely, through the riches of God's grace, as he has promised them. [6]

18 For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book:

(18.) And now I have faithfully and exactly related what I saw and heard in these visions of God, let me solemnly conjure every person into whose hands these revelations shall come, that they treat them with the reverence due to revelations from God; that they venture not to add any thing of their own imagination or invention to them; let them keep close, as far as they can, to the true meaning and intention of the prophetic Spirit; for let them be assured, God will severely punish such impious rashness by inflicting on them the curses denounced in these prophecies against deceivers, and false pretenders to prophecy.

19 And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

(19.) On the other hand, let no man dare to strike any prophecy out of this book; let no man set aside or discredit the authority of any of these revelations, as useless, dangerous, or unworthy the Spirit of God; let no man endeavour to pervert their true meaning and intention, to serve any evil views of his own, to the ease, pleasures, or ambition of life. Such unworthy treatment of the word of prophecy will justly forfeit the blessings and happiness with which these prophecies encourage the faithfulness and constancy of sincere Christians. [7]

20 He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

(20.) As then Jesus, the author of these prophecies, assures a certain accomplishment of them in their times and seasons, let the whole church join with me in saying, Amen. Let all faithful Christians, with joyful hope and hearty desire, continually say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, accomplish thy promises in their order; and finally crown the faith, patience, and constancy of thy servants with eternal life. [8]

21 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

(21.) In the meantime, may the favour and blessing of Jesus Christ our Saviour be with all true Christians; may his grace support and comfort all who suffer for his name, and keep them to the glory of his heavenly kingdom. Amen.

These prophecies then will be of great use, as they shall contribute to the constancy of the righteous and the holy, though they should not effect a general reformation in the world, though men of evil principles and wicked hearts should still remain persecutors and idolaters.

[4] Ver. 14.] Some copies read,* "Blessed are they who wash their garments;" to which some add, "in the blood of the Lamb." But the meaning of both expressions returning at last to much the same thing, the paraphrase will, I think, sufficiently take in both.

[5] Ver. 15.] The several works of iniquity here mentioned, may be understood more generally of all cruelty, uncleanness, falsehood, and deceit; yet they seem more particularly designed to point out idolatry and persecution: as an idolatrous corruption of the Christian doctrines and worship, and a support of those corruptions by fraud and persecution, are the principal evils these prophecies warn us of, and are designed to guard us against.

[6] Ver. 17.] Mr. Pyle has well observed, that, according to the Hebrew style, which commonly uses a substantive for an adjective, "the Spirit and the bride," mean "the spiritual bride," or the true church of Christ, as glory and virtue is "glorious virtue," kingdom and glory, "a glorious kingdom." Yet, as this has not been observed by many interpreters, the reader ought to be informed, that some, by "the Spirit and bride," mean persons endowed with spiritual gifts; others,* by "the Spirit," mean the Holy Ghost making intercession for the saints. But Mr. Pyle's interpretation seems the most natural, that it expresses the desire and care of the church, which is the spiritual bride of Christ.

[7] Ver. 19. Some interpreters understand these warnings as principally designed against all such persons who should venture at forging revelations in imitation of these, as there were many such false revelations given out in the first ages of the church; but others understand it as a direction to the church, to consider these revelations as the last authoritative prophecy from heaven, and to warn them of the great danger of infusing into men's minds any other expectations than are agreeable to these visions, or of persuading men to any behaviour unsuitable to the directions of these revelations, by any wilful false interpretation of them.

[8] Ver. 20.] We may here observe, how John uses the expression, the "coming of Christ." It seems to have a more general meaning, to denote any eminent instance of Christ's power, in the blessings of the church, or punishment of its enemies, and that the style of scripture does not confine it to any one particular instance—as, his coming to judgment.

PREFACE.

Scaliger was pleased to say, Calvinus sapuit, quia non scripsit in Apocalypsin; "Calvin was wise, because he did not write upon the Revelation." I confess, I do it not for want of wisdom; that is, because I neither have sufficient reason nor judgment to discern the intendment of the prophecies contained in that book. But yet, conceiving that I have either found out the true sense of those words, xx. 4, which usually are alleged as the foundation of the supposed millennium, or resurrection of the martyrs to reign with Christ on earth a thousand years; or, at the least, have said what is sufficient to show, it is not necessary to understand them in a proper sense; I have comprised my sentiments of that controversy in the ensuing treatise, which I submit to the judgment of the reader.

INTRODUCTION.

Having employed some thoughts upon the mystery of the conversion of the Jewish nation, mentioned by St. Paul, Rom. ix., and comparing the glorious things he there says of it, with what the prophets had foretold of the same thing in very high expressions; I began to compare them with what was written in the Revelation, concerning the new Jerusalem, the new heavens and new earth, and the bride of the Lamb made ready for a marriage with him; and finding that this bride was thought, by the best commentators, to be the Jewish church and nation, represented formerly by our Saviour, as "not having on her wedding-garment," Matt. xxii. 12; that the new heavens and the new earth were the things promised to the Jews; that the new Jerusalem was described in the very words of the prophet and Jewish writers, speaking of that glorious state they expected towards the end of the world; I was strongly inclined to conceive this glorious conversion, which St. Paul saith shall be, even to the gentile, ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, "life from the dead" (Rom. xi. 15), and which is by the prophets frequently represented as the ζωοποίησις, ἀνάστασις, i. e. the new birth, reviviscence, resurrection of their dead church and nation, by the Messiah, so that ὁ θάνατος οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι, "death shall be no more" (Rev. xxi. 4), might be the very resurrection intended by St. John; and the flourishing condition and union both of the Jewish and the gentile church thus raised from the dead, and so continuing in peace and plenty, and a great increase of knowledge and of righteousness, and a return of the primitive purity of doctrine and of manners, might be the reign of the saints on earth a thousand years, which the apostle mentions: this naturally led me to a discourse of the millennium; which being framed according to this new hypothesis, I shall now offer it to the consideration of the learned, in the following method.

1. I shall state the true millennium of the ancients; showing how far it was received, and by whom opposed, in the first four centuries, and what were the particular opinions, which then obtained, concerning the millennium; and how far the modern patrons of the millenary state have discarded the received opinion of the ancients who embraced that doctrine.

2. I shall show what reason I have to conceive that this millennium is to begin with the conversion of the Jewish nation; and doth indeed relate to the most happy state and flourishing condition the church of Christ shall at that time enjoy.

3. I shall attempt to answer all that has been offered to prove a proper and literal resurrection of the martyrs, and other Christian sufferers, and saints, to reign on earth a thousand years; consider the pretences of them who placed this reign before the conflagration of the world, as most of the assertors of this doctrine do; and of the Rev. Dr. Burnet, who makes it to begin after the conflagration of the world. And,

4. I shall offer some arguments against this doctrine of the millennium, or of the literal resurrection of the saints and martyrs, to reign on earth a thousand years.

CHAPTER I.

§. I. That the doctrine of the millennium was never generally received in the church of Christ, is proved, 1. From the testimony of Justin Martyr and Irenæus. §. II. 2. Of Eusebius, Origen, and Stephanus Gobarus, and the distinction which then obtained betwixt the allegorists and the disciples of the latter. §. III. An answer to the pretended tradition of Papias, mentioned by Irenæus. §. IV. The millennium of the ancients differed from that which is now asserted by the most judicious of the modern millenaries, in five particulars: (1.) The ancients generally held, that the temple or city of Jerusalem should be newbuilt. (2.) That all the just were then to rise, and not martyrs only. (3.) That Jesus Christ should then reign on earth. (4.) That they should fare deliciously, and enjoy corporal delights. (5.) That they should beget children: all which things are denied by the modern millenaries. §. V. The necessity of these doctrines, according to the letter of the scriptures, cited for the millennium, by those ancients who espoused that doctrine. §. VI. This error of some of the fathers, as to the millennium, will not invalidate their authority as to any thing delivered by them as eye-witnesses, or which they deliver as the practice of the church of Christ in their days.

The patrons of the millennium do usually say, their doctrine was both generally received in the first three centuries, and was derived by tradition from the apostles; and that the first man who opposed it was Dionysius, of Alexandria. In opposition to this pretence, I shall endeavour to make it appear;

I. That this opinion was never generally received in the church of Christ.

II. That there is no just ground to think it was derived from the apostles, but rather from a mistake of the words of the author of the Apocalypse; or from the notions of the Jews, and of the Sibylline author (see lib. ii.—iv.).

III. That the new patrons of the millennium differ in many things of moment from the ancient assertors of it, and have indeed scarce any suffrage of antiquity for that millennium which they do so stiffly maintain. And,

§. 1. That this opinion was never generally received in the church of Christ, appears sufficiently from the confessions and very words of the two first assertors of it, whose writings are still extant, viz. Justin Martyr and Irenæus. I begin with Irenæus, because his words will justify the ancient reading of the words of Justin Martyr, against the criticism upon them, or rather the corruption of them, by Mr. Mede,* and Mr. Daillé.† Irenæus therefore speaks thus;‡ "I am not ignorant, that some among us, who believe, in divers nations, and by various works, and who, believing, do consent with the just, do yet endeavour, transferre hæc, (Gr. μεταφέρειν) to turn these things into metaphors," or to carry them from their proper to an improper sense, as metaphors are wont to do: that this is the meaning, is evident from these words following, "But if some have attempted to allegorize these things, they have not been found in all things consistent with themselves, and may be convinced from the words themselves." Again, he complains, that§ "the sentiments of some were carried away by the discourses of the heretics; so that they were ignorant of the appointment of God, and the mystery of the resurrection of the just, and the kingdom." Here then we may evidently discern three sorts of men: 1. The heretics denying the resurrection of the flesh, and the millennium. 2. The exactly orthodox, asserting both the resurrection and the kingdom of Christ upon earth. 3. The believers who consented with the just, and yet endeavoured to allegorize and turn into metaphor all those scriptures he had produced for a proper reign of Christ, and who had sentiments rather agreeing with those heretics who denied, than those exactly orthodox who maintained this reign of Christ on earth. Now these being almost a translation of the words of Justin Martyr,‖ they vindicate the reading of all the manuscript copies of that writer, and exclude the bold criticism of Daillé and Mr. Mede. "Tell me truly," says Trypho,¶

¶ Εἶπε δέ μοι ἀληθῶς, ὑμεῖς ἀνοικοδομηθῆναι τὸν τόπον Ἱερουσαλὴμ τοῦτον ὁμολογεῖτε, καὶ συναχθήσεσθαι τὸν λαὸν ὑμῶν, καὶ εὐφρανθῆναι σὺν τῷ Χριστῷ, ἅμα τοῖς πατριάρχαις, καὶ τοῖς προφήταις, καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ ἡμετέρου γένους, ἢ καὶ τῶν προσηλύτων

"do you [Christians] indeed confess, that Jerusalem shall be built again, and that your people shall be gathered together (there), and rejoice with Christ, together with the patriarchs, and prophets, and those of our nation, or those who are made proselytes before the coming of your Christ, or before you expect your Christ shall come (to judgment)? Or do you only confess this, that thou mayest seem to overcome us in questions?"

Here you see that Justin Martyr did before, ταῦτα ὁμολογεῖν, confess these things, as he doth plainly, p. 213, where Trypho having put the question thus: "What! do you say, that none of us shall have any inheritance in the holy mount of God?" Justin Martyr replies; "I say not so, but that the gentiles who repent, and believe in Christ, shall inherit (it), with all the patriarchs, and prophets, and the just which proceed from Jacob:" and therefore he here answers thus;* "I have before confessed, that I and many others are of this mind, that these things shall happen. But then again, I have intimated to you, that many Christians of a pure and pious judgment do not own this (I speak of Christians of a pure and pious judgment); for as for those who are called Christians, but indeed are atheists, and ungodly, and heretics, I have told you already, that they teach things wholly blasphemous, atheistical, and absurd (and therefore are not to come into the account of Christians). If therefore you have met with some of them who blaspheme the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and deny the resurrection of the dead, that confess not this, you are not to esteem them Christians (or to take an estimate of the doctrines of the Christians from them). They indeed deny the resurrection of the flesh, and the millennium;† but I, and all Christians, who are exactly and in all things orthodox, know there will be a resurrection of the flesh, and a millennium in Jerusalem, built, adorned, and enlarged." Here then, as in Irenæus, is a plain distinction of three sorts of men: 1. Of heretics, that were κατὰ πάντα βλάσφημοι, entirely blasphemers of the God of Israel, and deniers of the resurrection of the flesh, and consequently of the millennium, which supposed this resurrection. 2. Of Christians who were κατα πάντα ὀρθογνώμονες, "in all things orthodox," who owned both the resurrection of the flesh, and the millennium: and Justin Martyr being of this opinion, and declaring here, that he thought it a doctrine delivered by God: it could not be expected that he should affirm of them, that held it not, that they were of a right opinion in all things. 3. Of many Christians of a pure and pious judgment, who did not own this millennium.

Obj. But "where," saith Mr. Daillé, "had he made mention before of any such?" I answer with another question, Where had he made mention before of the many who confessed the millennium, as he here saith he had? Mr. Daillé should have considered, that Justin's memory could not serve him to write down all he had discoursed with Trypho, or that he might not think that part of his discourse necessary to be afterward committed unto writing; and then this objection would not have seemed of force sufficient to have authorized him to change Justin's words without any consent of copies, into the direct contradictory words, and for Christians τῆς καθαρᾶς γνώμης, "of a pure judgment," to read, Christians μὴ τῆς καθαρᾶς γνώμης, "of an impure judgment;" since such bold criticisms will evacuate both the sense and force of any testimony.

§. II. 2. This is still farther evident from the ancient writers of the church, who plainly tell us, that this was a particular opinion of some doctors of the church, and never was received by all. "It had its rise," saith Eusebius, "from Papias, a man of slender judgment;* but the antiquity of the man prevailed with many of the ecclesiastics to be of that opinion, particularly with Irenæus, and if there were any other of the same judgment with him." Now he that confesseth that most of the ecclesiastics were of that opinion, plainly denies that all were of it. He that particularly speaks of Irenæus, adding, "if there were any other of the same judgment," seems to intimate, they were not many. Origen, in his Philocalia (cap. 26, p. 99), saith, they were only τινὲς, "some," that held this doctrine, and that so clancularly, that it had not yet come to the ears of the heathens: and in his prolegomena to the Canticles (f. 69, B), that they were only simpliciores quidam, "some of the simpler sort" of Christians. Besides, of all the fathers of the Christian church, none have spoken more severely and more contemptibly of that doctrine, than Origen, who represents it as a wicked doctrine, a reproach to Christianity; the heathen, saith he, having better sentiments than these. He therefore being then the great doctor of the church, and continuing in great authority amongst all churchmen for above a hundred years; his scholars being also the most celebrated doctors of that age, and one of them, viz. Dionysius Alexandrinus, undertaking to confute this doctrine; and his Philocalia, where we find these severe sayings, being a collection of the two great lights of the fourth century, St. Basil and Gregory the divine; it cannot be doubted but this opinion then lost ground daily, and was generally decried by the learned of those centuries. In a word, Stephanus Gobarus,‡ in his account of opinions in which the fathers differed from each other, reckons this as the tenth, "That the just shall rise first, and live deliciously a thousand years, eating, drinking, and begetting children: and that there should be no precedence in the resurrection, no millenary delight, no marriage then."

3. This will be more evident, if it be considered, that as the doctors of the church were then of different opinions, so were they then distinguished by different names; as they who denied the millennium, saith Irenæus, attempted to allegorize the places produced by others for it, so had they upon that account the name of Allegorists; and therefore Nepos, a man, saith Eusebius, from Dionysius of Alexandria, otherwise orthodox, but a writer for the millennium, styled his book Ἔλεγχον τῶν Ἀλληγοριστῶν, or "A Refutation of the Allegorists" (H. Eccl. lib. vii. cap. 24).

Accordingly, in Origen,‡ they who deny the millennium, are οἱ τροπολογοῦντες τὰ προφητικά, "they who interpret the sayings of the prophets by a trope;" and they who assert it are styled, solius literæ discipuli, "disciples of the letter of the scripture only;" the first, saith he, assert, horum vim figuraliter intelligi debere, the passages which they produce from scripture "ought to be figuratively understood;" the other, saith he, understand the scripture, Judaico sensû, "after the manner of the Jews." Epiphanius,§ speaking of the millennium asserted by Apollinarius, saith, "There is indeed a millennium mentioned by St. John; but the most, and those pious men, look upon those words as true indeed, but to be taken in a spiritual sense."

And here it may deserve to be observed, by the by, That the primitive fathers derived almost all their considerable errors from the Jews: viz. that angels had to do with women, and begat giants of them; that the world was to end soon after the coming of the Messiah; that Elias was in person to usher in his second advent, &c.

§. III. 2. As for the pretended tradition from the apostle John, touching this doctrine, it is only mentioned by Irenæus, as received from Papias; and the words in which it is delivered are sufficient to demonstrate the incredibility and the apparent folly of it: for these elders pretend to have heard from St. John these romantic words;* "The days shall come, in which there shall be vines which shall severally have ten thousand branches, and every of these branches shall have ten thousand lesser branches, and every of these branches shall have ten thousand twigs, and every one of these twigs shall have ten thousand clusters of grapes, and in every one of these clusters shall be ten thousand grapes, and every one of these grapes, being pressed, shall give twenty-five metretas (that is, according to the mildest computation, two hunded and seventy-five gallons) of wine; and when one shall take hold of one of these sacred bunches, another shall cry out, I am a better bunch, take me, and by me bless the Lord:" to omit what he says, from the same tradition, of every grain of wheat, and of apples, seeds, and herbs. Now can any man be so wholly bereft of sense, as to imagine this stuff could ever come out of the mouth of an apostle? No, certainly, he had it only from the converted Jews, in whose writings, some learned persons have informed me, the words cited by Irenæus from Papias are yet to be found. As for Papias, the only voucher of this tradition, Eusebius informs us, he was a man of a very slender judgment, as the story cited by Irenæus, from the fourth book of his discourse, may abundantly convince us, there being scarcely any things in the most infamous of Romish legends more fabulous, than, as Eusebius truly saith, his traditional relations were.

§. IV. 3. That the new patrons of the millennium differ in many things of moment from the ancients, and have indeed scarce any suffrage of antiquity for that millennium they maintain, will be apparent, from a just representation of the millennium of the ancients: for,

1. The ancient millenaries generally held, that the temple or the city of Jerusalem should be rebuilt, and that the land of Judea should be the habitation of those who were to reign on earth a thousand years: so Justin Martyr (Dial. cum Tryph. p. 243, C) tells the Jews, that the believing gentiles should then dwell, ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῷ ἁγίῳ, "in the holy mount," and that they should then acknowledge him (p. 259, E), ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τόπῳ τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων, "in the same place of Jerusalem," where they crucified him: he confesses also to Trypho (p. 336, B. 307, B), ἀνοικοδομηθῆναι τὸν τόπον Ἱερουσαλὴμ, "that the place of Jerusalem should be built, and that the saints should spend a thousand years in Jerusalem, built, adorned, and augmented," and that "all Christians entirely orthodox knew this would be so; and therefore they all," (saith he, p. 312, B) "expected τὸν Χριστὸν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ φανήσεσθαι, Christ to appear in Jerusalem." "In the times of that kingdom Jerusalem shall be built," saith Irenæus,† "and the Jews shall be restored to the land he gave to their fathers." "He (i. e. Christ) shall build the holy city," saith Lactantius,‡ "and there shall be the reign of the just for a thousand years." St. Barnaby is very positive,§ that "the very temple which was destroyed by their enemies should be rebuilt gloriously." "They feign to themselves," saith Origen,‖ "that the terrestrial Jerusalem should be rebuilt with precious stones, and that the aliens shall be their servants to rebuild it." Hence Dionysius§ of Alexandria, in his book writ against them, derides their golden Jerusalem upon earth, adorned with jewels, and the restoration of the temple. Whereas, scarce any of our new millenaries dare assert, that this shall be the place of the habitation of the raised saints, and one of them makes the whole earth to become a paradise for the reception of them.

2. They held this resurrection was not to be confined to the martyrs only, but that all the just were then to rise, and reign with Christ: this Justin Martyr confesses touching all Christian people, all the believing gentiles, and the just progeny of Jacob, in the forecited places. Irenæus frequently declares of the just in general, that they shall arise to inherit the promises. Tertullian affirms,* that some shall rise sooner, and some later, but that all the just shall rise within the time of the millennium. "This millennium," saith Lactantius,† "belongs to all the just which ever were from the beginning of the world:" whereas the millenaries of this age do generally, with Dr. Burnet,‡ say, "The first resurrection, and the reign of Christ, seem to be appropriated to the martyrs" (Rev. xx. 4).

Moreover, the ancients extended this reign, on earth, not only to the dead, but to the just also, who shall be then alive at this first resurrection; this being a necessary consequent of the former doctrine, that this millennium belongs to all the just. Thus Irenæus,§ amongst those who are to enjoy the millennium, reckons "those whom the Lord shall find in the flesh, expecting him from heaven, who, having suffered tribulation, did nevertheless escape the hands of the wicked." Then "they that are found living shall not die," saith Lactantius:‖ whereas it is inconsistent with the hypothesis of Dr. Burnet, that any of the just should be then living, since this millennium only begins after the conflagration of the world, and the burning of all things that are in it.

3. The ancients generally consent in this, that Jesus Christ shall then come down from heaven, and be seen on earth, and reign there with his servants. Papias, the first assertor of this doctrine, declares, that "it shall be a reign of Christ bodily upon earth."¶ Justin Martyr tells the Jews, that they should then see him whom they had pierced, and this in that very place of Jerusalem where they had crucified him, that both they and Christians should then be gathered together, and rejoice with him. Victorinus saith, "This is that true sabbath, in quo Christus cum electis suis regnaturus est, in which Christ is to reign with his elect;" and Lactantius saith expressly, that mille annos inter homines versabitur, "he shall be conversant with men a thousand years." Irenæus†† seems not so clear as to this matter; yet he declares, the just shall reign on earth, increasing by the vision of Christ; for, saith he, "Christ will be every where seen, as men are worthy to see him:" that which seems most expressly in him to relate to this affair is this; that discoursing of our Lord's promise, to drink new wine with his disciples in the kingdom of heaven, he declares,‡‡ this "cannot be done by him whilst he remains in those celestial regions." But Nepos was express in this, that, * "after this resurrection, the kingdom of Christ was to be upon earth a thousand years; and the saints were to reign with him in pleasures, or faring deliciously there:" and therefore Dionysius saith of him, and the brethren that magnified his book, that †"they had no sublime or magnificent thoughts of the glorious and divine advent of our Lord, or of our resurrection, and our gathering together, and assimilation to Christ; but hoped then for little and mortal things, and such as men now hope for, in the kingdom of God."

4. They all declare, they shall then fare deliciously, and shall enjoy the richest wines and most delicious fruits, build houses, plant vineyards, and eat the fruits of them: thus Justin Martyr‡ understands those words of Isaiah, lxv. 21, of the millennium, viz. "They shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them." And Irenæus saith,§ "They shall have a table prepared for them by God, who shall feed them with dainties;" adding, that "the promises he had cited, creaturæ epulationem significant, do signify the banquets they should have upon the creature:" hence doth he tell us of the prodigious clusters of grapes and ears of corn, the vines and the earth shall then bring forth. "The earth," saith Lactantius,‖ "shall open its fertility, and of its own accord produce fruits plentifully, the rocks of the mountains shall sweat with honey, wines shall run down with streams, and the rivers flow with milk." Of this opinion, doubtless, was Tertullian, in his book De Spe Fidelium; and Nepos, who promised, saith Dionysius of Alexandria, "a thousand years of corporeal delights on earth." Accordingly Gennadius saith,¶ "In the divine promises, we believe nothing concerning meat and drink, as Irenæus, Tertullian, and Lactantius teach from their author Papias, nor of the reign of a thousand years with Christ on earth after the resurrection, and the saints reigning deliciously with him, as Nepos taught." St. Austin therefore saith of this opinion, that "it might be tolerable, if they mentioned any spiritual delights which the saints might enjoy by Christ's presence; but since they affirm, that they who then rise, shall enjoy carnal and immoderate banquets of meat and drink without modesty, these things can only be believed by carnal men. And because all this plenty could not be procured and enjoyed, these houses could not be built, nor these vineyards planted, nor this wine brought into the fat, nor this corn into the barn, threshed, ground, and made fit for these new-raised inhabitants, without hands; the ancients have made provision for this also, telling us, "that they shall be κυριεύοντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς," such as lord it upon earth;" and therefore Irenæus saith,† that which was spoken to Jacob, "The nations shall serve, and princes shall bow down to thee" (Gen. xxvii. 27, 28), ad tempora regni sine contradictione pertinet, quandò regnabunt justi surgentes à mortuis, without all contradiction belongs to this millenary kingdom. "The nations shall not utterly be destroyed," saith Lactantius,‡ "but some of them shall be left to be triumphed over by the just, and subjected to perpetual slavery." "They think," saith Origen,§ "that aliens shall be given them to be ministers of their delights, who shall either serve at the plough, or be their masons and carpenters to build up their fallen city, and they suppose they shall have of their provisions to eat, and have dominion over their riches, so that they shall come and offer to them gold, and frankincense, and precious stones." Dr. Burnet must either produce these servile nations, as he hath done Gog or Magog, out of the mud, or his opinion must fall into it, unless he hopes to avoid this, by saying, that "in this state it will be part of their diversion and entertainment, to learn mechanics," p. 213.

And because men can hardly do this whole business without beasts, the ancients have made provisions of them also, subjecting to them not only sheep, and goats, and oxen, or bulls; but wolves, and bears, and leopards, and lions, "which with all other animals,"‖ saith Irenæus, "shall be then subject to man." And that the doctor may not be at a loss for production of these beasts, Stephanus Gobarus¶ informs him, the doctrine of the ancients was this, "That the just should rise first, καὶ σὺν αὐτοῖς πάντα τὰ ζῶα, and all those living creatures with them." Now the new millenaries, as they say little of these slaves, and these brute beasts, who are so necessary for the enjoyment of the universal plenty, and the goods of fortune prepared in this state; so are they shy of owning futuras corporis voluptates et luxurias, such luxuries and bodily pleasures, as Origen saith the millenaries of his time did expect.

For, 5, in their millennium, they were not only to feast and junket it, but also to beget children. "The virgins," saith Irenæus,†† "shall rejoice in the assemblies of the young men; and they that are left shall be multiplied upon earth:" accordingly he speaks of some believers, whom God had prepared to multiply those who were left upon the earth, to be under the dominion of the saints, and minister to this Jerusalem. "They shall beget an infinite multitude," saith Lactantius,‡‡ "and their seed shall be holy." "To their other luxuries," saith Origen,§§ "they add, nuptiarum conventiones, et filiorum procreationes etiam post resurrectionem futuras; the solemnities of marriage, and the procreation of children, even after the resurrection:" and again, "They think," saith he,‖‖ "that after the resurrection we shall eat and drink corporeal meats, and shall use those conjugal duties by which our prayers are hindered, and which cannot be performed without some impurity:" and a third time, they believe,* "that after the resurrection, we shall, according to the promises of the gospel, eat and drink, and, as some of them say, beget children; these things," saith he, "should they come to the ears of heathens, would lay a great imputation of folly upon Christianity, since many heathens have better opinions than these are:" so much are they mistaken who reckon Origen among the patrons of the millennium. Stephanus Gobarus gives us the opinion of the millenaries in these words,† "The just shall rise first, and for a thousand years shall fare deliciously, eating, and drinking, and getting children; and after this shall be the general resurrection." Methodius‡ is the only person who denies they shall be thus employed after the resurrection; and with him doubtless all our modern millenaries do agree, as knowing this unworthy to be the matter of the gospel promise.

§. V. Moreover, if we consider the scriptures on which the ancients grounded this millennium, we shall perceive it necessary that all these doctrines should be maintained by them. For,

1. That the temple or city of Jerusalem should be new-built, and that the land of Judea should be the habitation of those who are to enjoy this new heaven and earth, can never be reasonably denied by those who interpret the sayings of the prophets literally, since they so plainly and so fully speak of a "mount Sion, to be established upon the top of the mountains," Isa. ii. 2, xxvii. 13, lvi. 7, and of God's promises "to beautify the place of his sanctuary, the house of his glory, and to make the place of his feet glorious," lx. 7. 13, and of "all nations flowing in to her," and being gathered to her, and of all "nations and tongues coming to see her glory," lx. 5, and lxvi. 18, when God had brought them again into their own land.

2. That this resurrection must belong to all faithful Christians, and that they must all reign with Christ on earth, will follow from the literal interpretation of those words of St. John,§ "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us to be kings and priests to God, and we shall reign on earth" (Rev. v. 9, 10), for, according to the import of these words, if, as Dr. Burnet saith, they belong to the first resurrection, all that have been redeemed by the blood of Christ must reign on earth. This follows also from those words, "I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and (of them) which had not worshipped the beast, nor his image, and which had not received his mark upon their foreheads, nor upon their hands, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years" (Rev. xx. 4): for, "they who worshipped not the beast," are all they "whose names were written in the book of life" (Rev. xiii. 8, xvii. 8). This follows from St. Peter's new heaven and new earth, if truly interpreted by Dr. Burnet of this resurrection; "for these," saith he, "we Christians do expect, and therefore are concerned to be found of him without spot, and blameless" (2 Pet. iii. 13, 14). This follows from the words of St. Paul, if they belong to the millennium, as he saith they do; for they introduce "the whole creation groaning to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, and all that had the first-fruits of the Spirit, groaning for the adoption," i. e. for the redemption of their bodies from corruption (Rom. viii. 16. 23).

3. They must bring Christ from heaven to reign on earth, who contend that this reign is the very time of the "restitution of all things" (Acts iii. 21): for the heavens are only to contain him till that time; and who infer this reign of Christ from those words, "They that have part in the first resurrection shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years;" for if they reign on earth without him, they do not reign there with him. Moreover, if he continue still at the right hand of God, with what propriety is this resurrection called ἡ παρουσία, "the presence," the appearance of our Lord, and that from heaven?

4. That in this millennium they must fare deliciously, drink precious wines, and have those splendid banquetings of which the fathers often speak, must follow from the application of all those passages to this state, which say, "The meek shall inherit the earth," that they shall "drink new wine with Christ in his kingdom," that they shall receive* "a hundred-fold increase of goods and lands;" that there shall be then a recompense of their alms given, and their feasts made for the poor; and from all that the prophets say, of the fruitfulness of the earth, and of the temporal blessings they shall then enjoy.

5. That the nations shall then serve them, and even build up Jerusalem for them, cannot be denied by them who literally interpret those words of the prophets, "The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister to thee: the sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee, and they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet: and the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish" (Isa. lx. 10. 12, 13): "And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen, and your vinedressers; ye shall eat the riches of the gentiles, and in their glory shall you boast yourselves" (lxi. 5, see also xlix. 22, 23). And,

6. They shall have wives and children, and, as Irenæus saith, "shall be multiplied upon the earth," must follow from the literal exposition of our Saviour's promise, that they who have lost or forsaken wife or children for his sake, "shall receive a hundred-fold:" for children cannot lawfully be begotten without wives, and the use of the marriage-bed. And, lastly, whereas the millennium of the reverend Dr. Burnet is to begin after the conflagration of the world, that of the ancients is still placed before it; "We expect it," saith Justin Martyr,† "before Christ's coming to judgment." "After this," saith Tertullian,‡ "shall be the destruction of the world, and the conflagration at the day of judgment, and we shall be changed in a moment into an angelical substance." "God shall after this reign on earth a thousand years, and renew the world," saith Lactantius.§

It therefore deserves to be admired, that learned men, with so much confidence, make use of these testimonies of scriptures, and these authorities of the fathers, to establish their millennium, and yet so stiffly should deny the consequences which flow so naturally from those scriptures, and reject what these ancients so generally delivered as a part of that doctrine. But, to insist no longer on these things, hence I suppose it evident,

1. That the doctrine of the millennium was not the general doctrine of the primitive church from the times of the apostles to the Nicene council, as Dr. Burnet has asserted; for then it could have made no schisms in the church, as Dionysius* of Alexandria saith it did, declaring how fully he confuted it, and reconciled the brethren that were contending about it, and prevailed upon Coracius, the author and ringleader of this doctrine, to own he was convinced of his error, and promise he would no more embrace, or discourse of it to the people.

Contr. Marcion. lib. iii. cap. ult.

§ Post hæc renovabit Deus mundum, et transformabit justos in figuram angelorum, ut immortalitatis veste donati serviant Deo in sempiternum. Epit. cap. 11, p. 759.

2. That the old doctrine of the millennium differed in many material points from that which is asserted by the new patrons of it.

§. VI. If any man think it not safe to discover so much of the nakedness of the fathers as I have done in this chapter, I answer:

First, That I think it more safe than to let it be confidently said and believed, that they were all millenaries from the first to the fourth century, seeing that shakes the foundation of episcopacy, and the translation of the sabbath to the Lord's day, and other constitutions derived from the apostles.

Secondly, I answer, That this mistake of the fathers, in a matter which they received from the traditions and notions of the Jews, will not invalidate their authority in any thing delivered by them as witnesses of what they saw with their own eyes, or declared to have been then the practice of the church of Christ: nor will it affect their testimony in any other doctrine which they neither did nor could receive, only on the authority of the Jewish doctors.

CHAP. II.

§. I. How far I differ from the ancient and modern millenaries, and in what I agree with them. The proposition that the true millennium is only a reign of the converted Jews, and of the gentiles flowing in to them: Ibid. §. II. Where it is noted, 1. That all spiritual blessings have been still conveyed from the Jews to other nations. 2. That there will be a glorious conversion of the Jews to the Christian faith. §. III. That the description of this conversion of the Jews, made by their own prophets and writers, answers fully to the millennium of St. John, which he speaks of in the very words of the said prophets. §. IV. The characters which the patrons of the millennium give of those times, accord exactly with the characters given by the prophets of the conversion of the Jews. §. V. The prophets seem to intimate, that this conversion shall be effected by a full influence of the Holy Ghost upon them. §. VI. All the passages cited to this effect, from the Jewish writers, speak only of the millennium, the resurrection, the new heavens and earth belonging to the Jewish nation.

HAVING thus given you a just account of the millennium of the ancients, and of the true extent of that opinion in the primitive ages of the church, I proceed now to show, in what things I agree with the assertors of that doctrine, and how far I find myself constrained, by the force of truth, to differ from them.

§. I. I believe, then, that after the fall of antichrist, there shall be such a glorious state of the church, by the conversion of the Jews to the Christian faith, as shall be to it life from the dead; that it shall then flourish in peace and plenty, in righteousness and holiness, and in pious offspring; that then shall begin a glorious and undisturbed reign of Christ over both Jew and gentile, to continue a thousand years during the time of Satan's binding; and that, as John the Baptist was Elias, because he came in the spirit and power of Elias, so shall this be the church of martyrs, and of those who had not received the mark of the beast, because of their entire freedom from all the doctrines and practices of the antichristian church, and because the spirit and purity of the times of the primitive martyrs shall return. And, therefore,

1. I agree with the patrons of the millennium in this, That I believe Satan hath not yet been bound a thousand years, nor will he be so bound till the calling of the Jews, and the time of St. John's millennium.

2. I agree with them in this, That the true millennium will not begin till the fall of antichrist; nor will the Jews be converted till that time, the idolatry of the Roman church being one great obstacle of their conversion.

3. I agree both with the modern and the ancient millenaries, That then shall be great peace and plenty, and great measures of knowledge and of righteousness in the whole church of God.

I therefore only differ from the ancient millenaries in these things;

1. In denying Christ's personal reign upon earth during this thousand years; and in this both Dr. Burnet and Mr. Mede expressly have renounced their doctrine.

2. Though I dare not absolutely deny what they all positively affirm, that the city of Jerusalem shall be then rebuilt, and the converted Jews shall return to it, because this probably may be collected from those words of Christ, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down till the time of the gentiles is come in," Luke xxi. 24, and all the prophets seem to declare the Jews shall then return to their own land, Jer. xxxi. 38—40; yet do I confidently deny what Barnabas and others of them do contend for; viz. that the temple of Jerusalem shall be then built again: for this is contrary not only to the plain declaration of St. John, who saith, "I saw no temple in this new Jerusalem," Rev. xxi. 22, whence I infer, there is to be no temple in any part of it, but to the whole design of the Epistle to the Hebrews, which is to show the dissolution of the temple service, for the weakness and unprofitableness of it; for the Jewish tabernacle was only a figure of the true and "the more perfect tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man;" the Jewish sanctuary only "a worldly sanctuary, a pattern, and a figure of the heavenly one into which Christ our high priest is entered" (Heb. viii. 2, ix. 2, xi. 23, 24.) Now such a temple, such a sanctuary, and such service, cannot be suitable to the most glorious and splendid times of the Christian church; and therefore the apostle saith, "The Lord God omnipotent, and the Lamb, shall be their temple."

3. I differ both from the ancient and the modern millenaries, as far as they assert that this shall be a reign of such Christians as have suffered under the heathen persecutors, or by the rage of antichrist; making it only a reign of the converted Jews and of the gentiles then flowing in to them, and uniting into one church with them. This I believe to be indeed the truth of this mistaken doctrine; and therefore I shall set myself more fully to explain and to confirm it. Let it be noted therefore,

§. II. 1. That as the Jews were the first nation which were owned by God as his people, and therefore are styled "his first-born," Exod. iv. 22, "Israel his elect," Isa. liv. 4, "the children of Jacob, his chosen ones," 1 Chron. xvi. 13, Ps. cv. 6, God having chosen them "to be a peculiar treasure to himself above all the people of earth," Exod. xix. 5, Deut. vii. 6, so all nations of the world have ever since received the word of God and the true religion from the Jewish nation, and Jerusalem hath been still the mother of all other churches. Before the advent of our Lord and Saviour, to them alone, saith the apostle Paul, "belonged the adoption, the glory, and the covenant, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises" (Rom. ix. 3), and none then could be "joined unto the Lord" (Isa. lvi. 3), and worship him aright, unless he joined himself to the Jews, and became a worshipper of the God of Israel, or a member of that church.

After Christ's coming in the flesh, the gospel was first sent to them, as being "the children of the kingdom," Matt. viii. 12; our Lord exercised his ministry only among them, whence he is styled "the minister of the circumcision," Rom. xv. 8, and saith, he was not then sent to any but "only to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," Matt. xv. 24. And sending his apostles, he forbids them, whilst he was on earth, "to go into the way of the gentiles, or to enter into any city of Samaria," Matt. x. 5, but saith to them, "Go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." After his ascension, they were charged to begin their preaching at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47, as accordingly they did, "preaching the word to none but the Jews only," Acts xi. 19. Paul, the apostle of the gentiles, first offers his ministry to them, preaching Christ in their synagogues, "as his manner was," Acts ix. 20, xiii. 5, xiv. 1, xvii. 12. 17, xviii. 4, and declaring "it was necessary that the word of God should be first spoken to them," Acts xiii. 46, the gospel being "the power of God to salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first," Rom. ii. 10, and that through their fall and rejection of it, "the gospel came unto the gentiles," Rom. xi. 28, the halt, lame, and blind, being called to this feast, because those guests first bidden refused to come, Luke xiv. 21.

Note also, that notwithstanding the infidelity of many of them, the first church that ever received the gospel, the doctrine, the sacraments of the New Testament, was the Jewish church, Acts ii. 42. 47. All the churches of the gentiles received the gospel from them, they being "made partakers of their spiritual things," Rom. xv. 27, and the word of God coming out from them to other churches, 1 Cor. xvii. 36, they being all "grafted into their good olive-tree." Hence, in the primitive times, the church of Jerusalem had the pre-eminence of all other churches; to her they went for the decision of their controversies, Acts xv., and the bishop of Jerusalem is therefore styled by the ancients,* "the first bishop, the guide of priests, the top of the heads, the bishop, and chief of the apostles;" and the church of Jerusalem is said to be the church, cui omnes favorem impendunt quasi matri Christiani nominis, "which all favoured as the mother of Christians."

After the fall of antichrist, and before the second coming of our Lord to judgment, the Jews shall be converted, and become a most famous church again. For this mystery the apostle hath revealed, "that blindness in part hath happened to Israel until the fulness of the gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written" in the prophet Isaiah, lix. 20, "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord, when I shall take away their sins." These words are as a key to the great things said by Isaiah touching the Jewish nation, and teach us to interpret them of their glorious conversion to the Christian faith, and the gathering them "out of every kindred, and tongue, and nation, and people;" that "at the blowing of the great trumpet they may come from the land of Assyria and Egypt, and may worship the Lord in the holy mount in Jerusalem" (Isa. xxvii. 13), and they may "fear the Lord from the west, and his glory from the rising of the sun" (Isa. lix. 19). This is that day "when the Lord shall set his hand שנית, a second time to recover the remnant of his people, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth" (Isa. xi. 11, 12); when he will so "bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy on the whole house of Israel, as to leave none of them any more there, nor hide his face any more from them" (Ezek. xxxix. 25. 28, 29); when he shall so "plant them in their land, that they shall no more be pulled up out of the land, that he hath given them" (Amos ix. 14, 15): so Tobit saith, that "when πληρωθῶσιν οἱ καιροὶ τοῦ αἰῶνος, the times of the age shall be accomplished, they shall return from all places of their captivity, and build up Jerusalem gloriously, and the house of God shall be built in it gloriously, as the prophets have spoken thereof," Tobit xiv. 51, vi. 7. And when they shall be thus converted, and receive the gospel, then shall salvation be again derived from them to the gentiles, and they shall be the means of converting such of them as still remain to be converted; and shall draw them to as great purity and zeal, and as great knowledge of the truth, as ever the church enjoyed: for, saith the apostle, "if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing them the riches of the gentiles, how much more their fulness?" And "if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall be the reconciling of them but life from the dead," to the same world? Rom. xi. 12. 15. Of this the prophets speak very fully, saying, "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse which shall stand for an ensign to the people, and to it shall the gentiles seek, and his rest shall be glorious," Isa. xi. 10. "Behold (saith God), I will then lift up my hands to the gentiles, and set up my standard to the people, and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders, and kings shall be thy nursing-fathers, and queens thy nursing-mothers; they shall bow down to thee with their faces towards the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet," Isa. xlix. 22, 23. "Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that have not known thee shall run unto thee, because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee," Isa. lv. 5. "The Lord God that gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him besides those that are gathered to him," lvi. 8. "And the gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising: lift up thine eyes round about, and see; all they gather themselves together, they come to thee; thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side; the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the gentiles shall come to thee," lx. 3—5. "And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: therefore thy gates shall be open continually, they shall not be shut day nor night, that men may bring unto thee the forces of the gentiles, and that their kings may be brought: for the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish, and shall be utterly wasted," ver. 10—12. "Thou shalt suck the milk of the gentiles, and shalt suck the breasts of kings," ver. 16. "Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the gentiles, and in their glory shall you boast yourselves," lxi. 6. "The gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory," lxii. 2. "Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the gentiles like a flowing stream," lxvi. 12. "I will gather all nations and tongues, and they shall come and see my glory," ver. 18. "And they shall bring all their brethren for an offering to the Lord, out of all nations to my holy mountain Jerusalem; and I will also take of them for priests and for Levites, saith the Lord: for as the new heavens and the new earth which I shall make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall their seed and their name remain," ver. 20—22. "Many nations," saith Tobit, "shall come from far to the name of the Lord God, with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the King of heaven, when his tabernacle shall be built again with joy, and he shall make his captives joyful in Jerusalem; yea, all nations shall turn and fear the Lord God truly," xiii. 10, 11.

§. III. Now here it is easy to observe, how fully this description of the conversion of the Jews, by their prophets, answers to the millennium of St. John, who useth the very words by which the prophets had foretold their glorious conversion, and saith, they shall be then accomplished. And,

1. St. John speaks of a reviviscence of the church of the primitive martyrs, that suffered "for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God," Rev. xx. 4 (see ch. iii. §. I.), and with them all the just. Now the very words ἀνάστασις and ἔζησαν, used by St. John, are very frequently used by the prophets, to express the glorious state of the Jewish church; and by St. Paul, to signify the flourishing condition of the gentiles then. St. John saith, they who enjoy this millennium shall be "priests to God and Christ," Rev. xx. 6, and the prophet Isaiah saith of the converted Jews, "Ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the ministers of our God," lxi. 6, and of the gentiles that come to them, "I will take of them to be priests and Levites," lxvi. 21. This was the very thing proposed to the Jewish nation when God entered into covenant with them, that they should be "a kingdom of priests," Exod. xix. 6. Βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, "a kingly priesthood," saith the Septuagint, מלכים כהנים, i. e. "kings and priests," saith the Targum. This all Christians are already made, saith St. Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 5, and St. John, Rev. xvi. 5. 10. "We are," saith Justin Martyr,* "truly priests to God:" it therefore may be expected men should be more eminently so in that glorious state of the church.

2. St. John speaks of a new heaven and a new earth that he saw, saying, "The former heaven and earth were passed away," Rev. xxi. 1, and introduceth our Lord, saying, "Behold, I make all things new," ver. 5. And the prophet

* Cotel. Not. p. 138.

* Ἀρχιερατικὸν τὸ ἀληθινὸν γένος, γένος ἐσμὲν τοῦ Θεοῦ. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 334, 6.

Isaiah introduceth God, thus speaking at the conversion of the Jews, "Behold, I create new heavens and new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind," Isa. lxv. 17. And again, "I have put my word in thy mouth, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people," li. 16. And, thirdly, in the very words of the author of the Revelation, "Behold, I make all things new," xliii. 18, 19. Seeing then these new heavens and new earth must be contemporary with the conversion of the Jews, sure they must be before the conflagration of the world, i. e. before the Jewish nation be consumed to ashes; and therefore can be only a new heaven and new earth, in that moral sense in which Maimonides explains the phrase, when he says, "It signifies, that God will place them in perpetual joy, in lieu of their former sorrow and anxiety; so that the memory of their former sorrow shall no more remain."*

I confess there is this peculiarity in St. John's new earth, that it is said of it, καὶ ἡ θάλασσα οὐκ ἔστιν ἔτι, "And the sea is not yet," because he had all along represented the beast as ascending out of the abyss, "and sitting upon many waters," which were "the peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues, that had submitted to her," Rev. xvii. 1. 15. Now because the beast was utterly destroyed, and Satan was bound up for a thousand years, and Gog and Magog were not to be gathered till then, nor were the armies of the beast which were slain to rise again till the thousand years were past (Rev. xix. 21, xx. 6); therefore the apostle saith, that in this new earth, "the sea was not yet."

3. St. John saith, "I heard a great voice from heaven, saying, The tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself with them shall be their God," Rev. xxi. 3. And Ezekiel, the other prophet who, by the ancients, is supposed to speak of the millennium, saith in like manner, "I will make a covenant of peace with them, and will place them and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore; my tabernacle also shall be with them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people," Ezek. xxxvii. 26, 27.

4. St. John saith, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away, Rev. xxi. 4; so also saith the prophet Isaiah of Jerusalem, that after the former heaven and earth were passed away, "the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying," lxv. 19, that "the Lord will wipe away tears from all faces," xxv. 8, that "they shall not hunger, nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor sun smite them; for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them," xlix. 10, which words exactly answer to those of St. John, Rev. vii. 16, 17.

5. St. John saith, "The building of the wall of the city was of jasper, and the city was of pure gold like unto clear glass, and the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones," Rev. xxi. 18, 19, and Isaiah saith, "I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and thy foundations with sapphires, and I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones," liv. 11, 12; and Tobit saith, "Jerusalem shall be built up with sapphires, and emeralds, and precious stones; thy walls, and towers, and battlements, with pure gold; and the streets of Jerusalem shall be paved with beryl, carbuncle, and stones of Ophir," xiii. 16—18.

6. St. John speaks of "the tree of life planted there," and of "a pure river of water of life, proceeding out of the throne of God, and the Lamb," Rev. xxii. 1, 2. And the prophet Zachary speaks of "living water going out of Jerusalem," xiv. 8. And he that passeth under the name of Esdras saith, "They shall have the tree of life planted for an ornament of sweet savour: for unto you," saith he, "is paradise opened, the tree of life is planted," 2 Esd. ii. 12.

7. St. John saith, "There shall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the sun," xxii. 5. Isaiah saith the same, lx. 19. And the prophet Zechariah saith, "It shall be one day which shall be known unto the Lord, not day nor night; and it shall come to pass, that at the evening-time it shall be light," xiv. 7.

Moreover, St. John so represents the scene of things following the fall of antichrist, as plainly to inform us, that he is speaking of this glorious conversion of the Jewish nation, and God's marrying her again whom he had formerly divorced; for as the church of Christ is represented as "the Israel of God," Gal. vi. 16, "the commonwealth of Israel," Eph. ii. 12, "the Jerusalem, which is above," Gal. iv. 26, "the celestial Jerusalem," Heb. xii. 22, so St. John represents this new scene of things in the same language, saying, "I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven," Rev. xxi. 2. And again, "He showed me the great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God," ver. 10. Now that this great and holy city, this new Jerusalem, is the Jewish church converted to God, the characters he gives of it will not suffer us to doubt; for, first, he saith, "The city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it; and the Lamb is the light thereof," Rev xxi. 23. So saith God of the conversion of the Jews: "They shall call thee, The city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel," Isa. lx. 14. "Thou shalt call thy walls Salvation and thy gates Praise; the sun shall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory," ver. 18, 19. He saith, "The gates of this city shall not be shut at all by day, neither shall there be any night there, and they shall bring the glory, and honour, τιμὴν, the substance of the nations unto it," Rev. xxi. 25, 26. Even as Esaias had said, "Thy gates shall be open continually, they shall not be shut day nor night, that men may bring unto thee the wealth of the gentiles, and that their kings may be brought," Isa. lx. 11. Lastly, he saith, "The nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of this city, and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour to it," Rev. xxi. 24, which I have shown to be the very thing foretold by the prophets at the conversion of the Jewish nation.

Add to this, that he introduceth this holy city, this new Jerusalem, "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband," Rev. xxi. 2, and saith, "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife," ver. 9, 10, and then shows the great city, the holy Jerusalem; and xix. 7, 8, he saith, he "heard a voice saying, The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready; and to her was granted, that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints." Now thus have the prophets represented the Jewish church converted to God: hence is she introduced speaking thus; "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord; my soul shall be joyful in my God: for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with jewels," Isa. lxi. 10. And again, "Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken, neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate: but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married," lxii. 4, and ver. 5, "For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee."

§. IV. Add to this, that all the characters which the patrons of the millennium give of those times, exactly accord with the characters given by the prophets of the conversion of the Jews, and are many of them taken from the very words of the prophets, foretelling those times: for instance,

1. "Indolence and plenty," saith Dr. Burnet, book iv. ch. 7, p. 183, "seem to be two ingredients of this happy state." Accordingly the prophets every where speak, how "the riches of the gentiles shall then flow in to them," Isa. lx. 5. 11, "and they shall eat the riches of the gentiles," lxi. 6, that "there shall be then no hunger nor thirst, no heat nor sun to smite them, no voice of crying or weeping" (see Isa. xxxv. 10).

2. That it shall be "a time of universal peace, and freedom from war and persecution" (ibid. p. 184); and this he proves from the words of the prophets declaring, that at that day, that time when God shall create new heavens and new earth, "the lamb and the lion shall lie down together, and the sucking child shall play with the basilisk, and they shall not hurt in all my holy mountain," as it is written, Isa. xi. 6—9, and lxv. 25, and saying, that "the nations shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more," Isa. ii. 4, Micah iv. 3, as appears also from the promises, that God will then "make her officers peace," Isa. lx. 17, "and will extend peace to her as a river," lxvi. 12.

* Quod dixi, Creabo novos cœlos, &c. id ita intelligo, quòd Vos positurus sum in lætitiam perpetuam loco luctûs et anxietatis prioris, neque illius luctûs prioris memoria sit mansura. More Nevoch. par. ii. cap. 29, p. 268.

3. That it shall be "a kingdom of righteousness" (ibid.). Accordingly of this holy city, Jerusalem, it is said, "There shall no more come into thee the uncircumcised and unclean," Isa. lii. 1; "A highway shall be there, and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it," xxxv. 8; which exactly answers to those words of St. John, "Into the holy city shall nothing enter that is polluted or unclean," Rev. xxi. 27. And again, "Thy people shall be all righteous," Isa. lx. 21 (see Zeph. iii. 9, Zech. xiv. 20, 21).

Moreover this, saith he (p. 185), will be "a state under a peculiar presence and divine conduct, because the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell with them:" and this we see was promised at the conversion of the Jewish nation, Ezek. xxxvii. 27.

"The last character," saith he, "that belongs to this state, or rather to those that enjoy it, is this, that they are kings and priests unto God;" and this also we have shown to be promised to the converted Jews, Isa. lxi. 6, lxv. 20.

I add, That as the ancient fathers generally held that the time would come when "all Israel shall be saved," and be converted to the Christian faith; so did they as generally conceive that this should happen at the close of the world,* and about the time of our Saviour's second coming; and most of them speak of it as a branch of the millennium.

So Justin Martyr says once and again, that† "then the Jews shall see and shall acknowledge him whom they have pierced;" and he confesses to Trypho,‡ "that Jerusalem shall be rebuilt," and that §"Christians shall rejoice with Christ, together with the patriarchs and prophets, and with the Jews and their proselytes;" i. e. the nations then flowing in to them before the coming of our Lord." So Irenæus‖ declares, that then "God will restore them to the land which he had promised, and given to their fathers, and they shall dwell in it in hope:" and Tertullian¶ saith, that "he will then own the circumcision, et Abrahæ gentem, cùm ultimò venerit, acceptatione et benedictione dignabitur, and at his last coming will vouchsafe to accept and bless the seed of Abraham." And this is suitable to the ancient opinion of the Jews, that, "in the end of the world, there should be to them a world full of joy and exultation, so that their heaven and earth should as it were be renewed, according to the words of Isaiah," lxv. 17. So the Targum upon those words of Hosea, "The children of Israel shall seek the Lord their God, and David their king, and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days."

§. V. Nor is it to be wondered that there should be then such a glorious conversion of them, and such a flowing in of the nations to them, seeing the prophets seem to intimate there shall be then a full effusion of the Holy Ghost upon them, somewhat resembling that which was vouchsafed to the first ages of Christianity. So the prophet Isaiah speaks of the desolation of the city, ἕως ἂν ἔλθῃ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς Πνεῦμα ἀφ' ὑψηλοῦ, "until the Spirit be poured upon them from on high," Isa. xxxii. 15, which is the very phrase in which our Lord promiseth the Spirit to his apostles, Luke xxiv. 49. St. Paul proves their conversion from those words of the prophet Isaiah, "The Deliverer shall come out of Zion, and shall turn away iniquity from Jacob:" with which these are immediately connected, "And this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put into thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, from henceforth for ever," lix. 20, 21. And again, xliv. 3, "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground; I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing on thy offspring." So Ezek. xxxvi. 24, "I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land." And ver. 27, "I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes." And xxxix. 28, 29, "I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there: neither will I hide my face any more from them, for I have poured out my Spirit upon the house of Israel, saith the Lord." And this seems plainly to be hinted in these words of St. Paul, 2 Cor. iii. 15—17, "Even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart. Nevertheless, when it shall turn to the Lord the veil shall be taken away; for the Lord is (the giver of) that Spirit, (or οὗ δὲ) where the Lord is, there is the Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," from subjection to the law, and from that veil which hinders them from turning to Christ.

To this Mr. Mede (p. 761. 767) conjectures there shall be added a vision of Jesus Christ to them; for, saith God by his prophet Zechariah, xii. 10, "I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and of supplications, and they shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and mourn for him." And Christ being asked, "What shall be the sign of the end of the world?" Matt. xxiv. 3, saith, ver. 30, "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and they shall see all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." And he spake to the Jews thus, "Verily I say unto you, Yet a little while, and you shall not see me till you say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," Matt. xxiii. 39.

Or, that according to the ancient and general doctrine both of Jew and Christian, they shall have an Elias sent to instruct them, a deliverer ἕνεκεν Σίων, "for the sake of Zion," as the Septuagint, Isa. lix. 20, for, saith he, "It may be fit to conceive magnificently of so great a work of God, towards a people for whom he hath formerly shown so many wonders; especially this being the greatest work of mercy and wonder that ever he did for them, far beyond the bringing them from Egypt, and leading them in the wilderness." And to this he refers these words of Ecclesiasticus; "Elias was ordained to turn the hearts of the father to the son, and to restore, καὶ ἀναστῆσαι, the tribe of Jacob: μακάριοι οἱ ἰδόντές σε, καὶ οἱ ἀγαπήσει κεκοσμημένοι, καὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ζωῇ ζησόμεθα, blessed are they that see, and are adorned with love, for we shall surely live," Ecclus. xlviii. 10, 11. Where note, that their conversion is again represented by a new life, and by the very word used concerning the souls of the martyrs which were slain, Rev. xx. 4.

§. VI. Add to this, that as all the ancient millenaries held, that this reign on earth should be at Jerusalem,* and that the Jews converted then should reign together with the Christians; so all the passages, cited from Jewish writers concerning the millennium, speak only of the millennium of the resurrection, the new heavens and new earth the Jewish nation shall enjoy. This is apparent from those words on which the Midrash Tehillim founds this millennium, viz. "Comfort us, according to the days in which thou hast afflicted us," Ps. xc. 15, in Babylon, in Greece, in Rome: from the words cited by Galatinus, lib. xii. cap. 1, from R. Eliezer, cap. 34, "As I live, saith the Lord, I will raise you in the time to come, in the resurrection of the dead, and I will gather you, with all Israel, into the land of Israel:" from those cited from R. Saadias on Dan. vii. 18, "Because the Jews rebelled against their Lord, their kingdom shall be taken from them, and given to the four monarchies who shall possess it in this world, and shall subdue and carry captive Israel, till the age to come, in which the Messiah shall reign:" from the Targum on Hos. xiv. 8, "They shall be gathered from the midst of their captivity;" and on Ps. i. 4, from the passage quoted by Galatinus, lib. xi. cap. 1, from the book Beracoth, that "Israel shall no more make mention of their departure out of Egypt in the age to come, in the days of the Messiah:" and from the words cited by Mr. Mede, Luke xxi. 24, "The Jews shall be carried captives into all nations, till the times of the gentiles be fulfilled, and then they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds:" from the words of Tobit, cited by Mr. Mede, p. 579, "Then the children of Israel shall go into a very long captivity; but the blessed God shall remember them, and gather them from the four corners of the earth." Accordingly, Mr. Mede sums up their opinion thus: "They expect their forefathers, at least such as were just and holy, should rise in the beginning of the same millennium, and reign in the land of Israel, with their offspring, under the Messiah:" and, saith he, "I can hardly believe that all this smoke of tradition could arise, but from some fire of truth anciently made known to them." And this I freely grant, and do indeed suppose, by asserting a prediction of such a general call of the Jews, near the close of the world, as they styled ζωοποίησις, "a reviving," and "a resurrection" of them. But how comes this tradition to relate to Christian martyrs beheaded for the name of Christ, or to be fulfilled in the resurrection of them only who are chiefly Christians, not of the Jews, but of the gentiles? Mr. Mede solves the matter thus, p. 604, "Under the second sort of these reigners, I would in a particular respect understand the nation of the Jews then converted to the Christian faith, who, coming in towards the end of the day, may, above all others, be said to be those who had not worshipped the beast, nor his image, nor had received his mark upon their foreheads or their hands." And thus will truth prevail at last, but to the ruin of this literal resurrection: for how can they literally be said to "live again, and to have a part in the first resurrection," who were never slain for the faith? and who are not to be converted, say their own prophecies and traditions, till God createth a new heaven and a new earth, and much less till the fall of Babylon?

CHAPTER III.

§. I. This chapter contains an answer to all the arguments produced from scripture, to prove this literal resurrection of the martyrs, and this reign of them on earth a thousand years, viz. 1. To the chief argument for this opinion, from Rev. xx. 4—6. §. II. To 2 Pet. iii. from ver. 5. 13. §. III. To Heb. ii. 5, compared with i. 6. §. IV. To Matt. v. 5, "The meek shall inherit the earth." §. V. To Rom. viii. 19, 20, "The creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." §. VI. To Acts iii. 20, 21, "The heavens must receive him, till the time of the restitution of all things." §. VII. To Matt. xix. 27—29, "Ye that have followed me in the regeneration shall sit upon twelve thrones. —And they shall receive a hundred-fold now in this life."

I PROCEED now to the arguments produced from scripture, for the doctrine of the millennium; to which I hope to return a clear and satisfactory answer, beginning with those words of the Revelation in which all the assertors of this doctrine place their confidence. And they are these:

§. I. Arg. 1. "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

"But the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

"Blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years," Rev. xx. 4—6.

1. Here, say they, is mention of a first resurrection, antecedent to the general resurrection of the just, who are not to live again, till they who first rise have reigned a thousand years on earth.

2. This resurrection, say they, is proper to those who were "slain for the testimony of Jesus, and the word of God, and were not worshippers of the beast."

3. This resurrection, say they, is not a metaphorical, but a proper resurrection; for the souls, i. e. the persons of them that were slain live again.

4. They do "reign with Christ a thousand years," and that reign, say most of them, is to be upon earth; therefore there is to be a reign of those martyrs who were "slain for the testimony of Jesus, and the word of God," upon earth a thousand years.

Now, in answer to this argument, let it be noted:

Ans. 1. That it is not the bodies, but the souls of them that are beheaded, who are said to live. Now the word ψυχὴ, rendered "soul," occurs six times in this book, this place excepted; and in all these places, it signifies either the soul in separation or distinction from the body, or the living soul; for, vi. 9, "the souls under the altar" not only "cry with a loud voice," but they are "clothed with white robes," ver. 10, 11. Which expressions cannot be well applied to dead bodies, viii. 9. The κτίσματα ἔχοντα ψυχὰς are "the creatures having (animal) souls," by which they lived, xii. 11. It plainly signifies their lives, i. e. the souls by which men live, xvi. 3. It is expressly ἡ ψυχὴ ζῶσα, "the living soul," xviii. 13. It signifies the lives of men, or else the souls of men, which they did hunt for, or devour, as Ezek. xiii. 18. 20. 22. 25, and ver. 14, ἐπιθυμία τῆς ψυχῆς is the desire, not of the body, but of the soul: why therefore must this word be here supposed to signify, not the soul, but that dead body opposite to it, which alone properly can be said to rise and live again?

2. Let it be noted, that a proper and a literal resurrection is never, in the whole New Testament, expressed or represented to us by the "living of the soul;" but always by the living, raising, or the resuscitation of the dead, "the raising of the bodies of the saints, of them that slept in the dust," or "in their graves and sepulchres," or who were "buried in the sea," or "in the earth:" if then the Holy Ghost here meant a literal and proper resurrection, why doth he so much vary from the terms he constantly doth use elsewhere, whenever he discourseth of such a resurrection, and take up with the terms so oft applied in scripture to a moral and metaphorical resurrection, as we shall see hereafter?

Ans. 2. I grant that here is mention of a first resurrection, an antecedent to the general and proper resurrection; but then it plainly is a resurrection in which all that are "blessed and holy," and over whom the "second death hath no power," have a part, ver. 6; and they are all whose names are written in the book of life, ver. 14, 15. It is a resurrection of all who had not worshipped the beast, ver. 4, and they are all the same persons, Rev. xiii. 8. It is a resurrection of those who are made "kings and priests to God and Christ," which all good Christians are, 1 Pet. ii. 5, 6, and therefore not of martyrs only.

Again, it is a resurrection before the day of judgment, and before the sea, and death, and the grave deliver up their dead, as the words following intimate, ver. 12, 13, viz. "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened; and another book, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up her dead that were in it: and death and hades delivered up their dead that were in them: and they were judged, every man according to his works." Where note, that the dead delivered up were all that were "judged according to their works." It also is a resurrection before Christ's coming "to render to every man as his works shall be;" for this he after promiseth to do, xxii. 12. Whereas, according to the doctrine of the millennium, Christ had already given to them whom he had raised to reign with him on earth, the blessing promised "to him that overcometh," Rev. ii. 26, 27, iii. 21, v. 10.

3. The rest of the dead, that lived not again until the thousand years were finished, are not the just, but the synagogue of Satan, Gog and Magog, ver. 8. For St. John, ch. xix., represents the "King of kings and Lord of lords," with "the armies which were in heaven, making war with the kings of the earth, and their armies," and giving "their flesh to be meat" unto them; in which war "the beast was taken, and the false prophet, and cast alive into a lake of fire," ver. 20. And then it follows thus, καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ, "And the rest of them," who were gathered together to make war with this King of kings, "were slain with the sword that came out of his mouth, and all the fowls were filled with their flesh," ver. 21. Now, it being by the pagan emperors first, and by the beast afterward, that Satan, "the great dragon, made war with the seed of the woman which kept the commandments of God, and had the testimony of Jesus Christ," Rev. xii. 17, these instruments of Satan being thus slain, and overcome by Christ, Satan is bound a thousand years; i. e. he is so long disabled from persecuting and molesting the church of Christ: and during this space she is raised up to her primitive purity, and flourisheth gloriously, and so is represented as having a resurrection from the dead: this thousand years being ended, Satan is let loose again, and gathers again his instruments, i. e. "the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to battle, and they compass the camp of the saints," Rev. xx. 8, 9. And this is the living of the rest of the dead again after the thousand years were ended, ver. 5. For it is only, οἱ λοιποὶ, "the rest" that were slain, xix. 21, that lived again; it is only those who had no share in the first resurrection, and so were neither blessed nor holy, ver. 6, nor had their names written in the book of life; and consequently, those on which the second death had place, which death they suffered when "fire came down from heaven and devoured them," and they were cast "into the lake of fire with the devil," ver. 10. 15.

And that οἱ λοιποὶ, "the rest," xix. 21, xx. 5, should signify the same persons, cannot seem strange, if we consider that only four verses intervene betwixt them. And that they must be the same persons, is evident from the connexion of the words, thus; "The rest of the dead lived not till the thousand years" of Satan's binding, and the saints' reign, were ended, ver. 5. And when those "thousand years were ended, Satan was loosed, and gathered them together against that church of Christ which had thus reigned a thousand years," ver. 7—10.

And this interpretation of "the rest of the dead" rising again, gives a clear answer to the objection of Mr. Mede against the other senses commonly imposed upon these words, viz. "That it would be a most harsh and violent interpretation to say, The dead and the living again of the dead should not be taken in the same sense:" for, according to this exposition, they are exactly taken in the same sense: the dead church living again, in the same metaphorical sense in which the rest of the dead, the enemies of the church, live again at the end of the thousand years, when Satan is loosed, and gathers them to battle against the church.

4. The souls of them who were "slain for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God," are those Christians who were slain in the time of the ten persecutions; and the souls of them "who worshipped not the beast," are those Christians who chose rather to die, or suffer persecution, than to be guilty of Romish idolatry: and they are said to live again, as the beast which had received τὴν πληγὴν θανάτου, "the wound of death, and one of whose heads was wounded to death, ἔζησεν, lived again," Rev. xiii. 3, 12, viz. in the succession of the antichristian beast to him which exercised the power of the heathen emperors over the earth, and revived the idolatry of the heathen empire. And as the two witnesses, when slain, are said to live again, "the spirit of life from God entering into them," Rev. xi. 7. 11, because a succession of men of the same faith, and the same opposition to the beast, revive and flourish after they were slain; some here reply, that "this was spoken of the two churches," that they were slain, and lived again, not of the supposita. But why then may not the words of St. John be spoken of the church of Jew and gentile, then reviving, and not of the supposita? Moreover, these two witnesses are said to be slain, ver. 7, and their "dead bodies to lie in the streets of the great city," ver. 18, to be seen lying there "three days and a half," and not to be suffered to be put into their graves, ver. 9, and "after three days and a half, the Spirit of God" is said to "enter into them, to make them stand upon their feet, and live again." If therefore nothing of this be spoken of the supposita, why should those words, "I saw the souls of them who were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and they lived again," be spoken of the supposita, and not of the churches of the converted Jews and gentiles? This being the prophetic scheme by which the scripture still represents the glorious restoration of God's church and people. For,

1. The restoration of the church is sometimes represented as a resurrection of it from the dead. So saith the prophet Isaiah, ἀναστήσονται οἱ νεκροὶ, "Thy dead shall arise, and be raised out of their tombs," xxvi. 19. So God speaks to the Jewish nation by Ezekiel, saying, "I will open your graves, and cause you to come out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel," Ezek. xxxvii. 13, 14. The prophet Hosea speaks thus; "In three days, ἐξαναστησόμεθα, we shall rise up again, and we shall live before him," Hos. vi. 2. And the apostle, speaking of this very matter, viz. the conversion of the Jews, saith, "It shall be even to the gentiles, ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, as life from the dead," Rom. xi. 15. Here then is a resurrection of the church of God, agreeable to that which our interpretation of this passage of the Revelation doth import: nor is there any more reason to say the words of St. John respect the supposita, and not the churches, than to say the same of many of the places cited.

Moreover, the scripture doth more frequently mention the restoration of the church, and her return from a low, captive, and afflicted state, under the metaphor of "a new life, a life from the dead," a reviviscence of God's church and people. Thus when God moved the Persian kings to let the Jews return to their own land, he is by Ezra said to give them ζωοποίησιν, "a reviviscence," Ezra ix. 8, 9. The psalmist, speaking of himself, as the text, or of God's people also, saith the marginal reading, useth these words, "Thou which hast shown me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me (marg. us) again, and shalt bring me up again (marg. us) from the depth of the earth," Ps. lxxi. 20. And the church speaketh thus to God, ζωώσεις, "Thou wilt quicken us," and "we will call upon thy name," Ps. lxxx. 18. And again, "Thou wilt return, καὶ ζωώσεις ἡμᾶς, and revive us, and thy people shall rejoice in thee," Ps. lxxxv. Ζήσονται οἱ τεθνεῶτές σου, "Thy dead men shall live," Isa. xxvi. 19, say Symmachus and Theodotion. Ζησόμεθα, "We shall live in his sight," saith the prophet Hosea, vi. 2, 3, and xiv. 17. "They shall live with their children, and return again," saith the prophet Zachary, x. 8, 9. The son of Sirach saith, "At the coming of Elias, ζωῇ ζησόμεθα, we shall live again," xlviii. 11. But the chief seat of this metaphor is in the thirty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel, where God is introduced inquiring of the Jews in Babylon, εἰ ζήσεται, "Can these bones live?" ver. 3, and promising to put into them πνεῦμα ζωῆς, "the breath of life," ver. 5, and saying, "I will put my Spirit into you, καὶ ζήσεσθε, and ye shall live;" and bidding the prophet blow upon them, καὶ ζησάτωσαν, "that they may live," ver. 9, and declaring that when he had done so, "breath entered into them, καὶ ἔζησαν, and they lived again, and stood upon their feet," ver. 10; in all which places, the very word which St. John useth to express the first resurrection is here used to express the return of the church from her obscurity and thraldom to a glorious state. Why therefore may not the word in St. John bear that sense which it so often bears in the prophetic writings, and twice in the New Testament,* when spoken of the gentiles? It hence at last appears, that by this interpretation I put no force upon the words, but do expound them in the familiar sense in which they are still used upon the like occasion in the prophetic writings.

Now it is generally agreed by those who own the conversion of the Jews, that it is not to commence till after the destruction of the beast, or the downfall of antichrist, mentioned ch. xviii. And therefore in the next chapter he begins his discourse upon it saying, xix. 7, "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready;" i. e. she who was formerly put away, because she was not prepared* for the bridegroom's coming, was now to be married to God again. And, ch. xxi., he reassumes this matter, and shows the bride, the Lamb's wife, in such a description as will not suffer us to doubt she is the Jewish nation converted to the Christian faith: for he calls her the holy city, and the new Jerusalem; and tells us, in the very words of Isaiah, lx. 3. 10, that the "nations which shall be saved shall walk in the light of this city." He calleth her also the bride to be married to the Lamb; which is the description the prophets make of this converted nation, viz. as "of a bride adorned with her jewels, and as one that is to be married to the Lord" (Isa. lxi. 10, lxii. 4, 5). And he goes on in a continual description of this new Jerusalem, in the words of the prophets Isaiah and Ezekiel, speaking of the conversion of the Jewish nation. The city also "coming down from heaven," ver. 10, is the new church of the converted Jews, said to come down from heaven, according to the Hebrew phrase; because of that divine wisdom, and those spiritual gifts and graces, with which she shall be adorned from heaven: for, as they were wont to say of one who treated of sublime heavenly things, that he did עלה לרקיע, "ascend into heaven,"† and speak as one who was admitted into the divine councils (Deut. xxx. 11, 12, Prov. xxx. 3), and of those who heard these things, that they were "exalted to heaven" (Matt. xii. 23); so the pouring down of these gifts and blessings is represented as "the opening of heaven," and letting them down upon the earth. Thus when St. John receives his prophecy, he "sees a door opened in heaven," and hears "a voice, saying, Come up hither, and I will show thee what shall be hereafter," Rev. iv. 1. Where note, that the voice he heard then was "as the voice of a trumpet:" and so the very same voice he heard when he was "in the Spirit," Rev. i. 10. The two witnesses also, when they live again, are "called up into heaven," Rev. xi. 11, 12, as being filled with heavenly wisdom. And since the spiritual gifts imparted to the church are said to come "from above, from the Father of lights," James i. 7, and they who were made partakers of them, to have "tasted τῆς δωρεᾶς ἐπουρανίου, of the heavenly gift;" seeing the church of Christ "is the Jerusalem which is from above," Gal. iv. 25, "the heavenly Jerusalem," Heb. xii. 22, it is no wonder that she is represented here as coming down from heaven, when she was, as it were, to have a "new birth" which is "from above," John iii. 3, and to be adorned with "spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ Jesus," Eph. i. 3, and to be reduced to her primitive lustre and purity, for then shall the purity of the church return, and be as it was in the times of the first martyrs for the faith; and the gospel shall be professed, without any antichristian mixture; as they who opposed the beast endeavoured to preserve it: and thus shall these martyrs and opposers of the beast live again.

A reverend and worthy person, of more than ordinary skill in matters of this nature, is of opinion,

First, "That the first resurrection here mentioned, will be a literal resurrection of them that have lost their lives for the testimony of Christ, to enjoy eternal life in heaven a thousand years before the general resurrection, as the martyrs of the Old Testament arose with the body of Christ," Matt. xxvii. 52. "They shall reign," saith he, "with Christ not on earth, but in heaven, where Christ is, and shall be, till he come to judgment."

Secondly, He is of opinion, "that not only the martyrs shall then rise to heavenly bliss, but that their murderers shall then also rise to eternal punishment:" which he gathers from those words of Daniel, xii. 2, "And many of them that sleep in the dust shall arise, some to everlasting life, and some to everlasting shame and contempt." Now,

First, Against the doctrine of the first and second resurrection, properly so called, I have offered some arguments in the annotations on 1 Cor. xv. and ch. iv. §. II. I therefore only farther note,

First, That St. Matthew speaks not one word of any martyrs that arose after Christ's resurrection, but only of the arising of some saints that slept, and their going into the holy city, and appearing unto many; which seems rather to make it probable, they were saints who had lived in the memory of those to whom they appeared, and were known (see the note there).

Secondly, St. Matthew doth not say, as St. John doth, that "many souls lived;" but, that πολλὰ σώματα, "many bodies of those that slept arose out of their sepulchres:" his words must therefore be understood of a proper resurrection of the bodies of the saints: but it cannot be hence inferred, that the words of St. John bear the same sense.

Thirdly, St. John doth not say, his martyrs shall reign with Christ a thousand years "before the general resurrection," but only, that "they shall reign with Christ a thousand years;" which seems an odd expression, when applied to them who are raised to reign for ever with him: add to this, that after the resurrection of St. John's saints to "reign with Christ a thousand years," Satan is loosed, and raises his armies to fight against, and compass about τὴν παρεμβολὴν τῶν ἁγίων, "the camp of the saints," ver. 7—9, which fairly intimates, that the saints, mentioned ver. 6, as partakers of the first resurrection, were still on earth, and not reigning with Christ in heaven.

Lastly, The second part of this opinion seems to contradict many scriptures which expressly teach, that the time of the punishment of the wicked shall be after the sentence of absolution hath been passed upon the blessed, Matt. xxv. 41. 46, when all the good have gone into everlasting life, John v. 28, 29, at the day of judgment, and when we shall appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, Rom. ii. 8, 9. 16, 2 Cor. v. 10, and that they who have persecuted Christ's members, shall be punished at "the revelation of Christ from heaven," 2 Thess. i. 6. 9, at "the conflagration of the world," 2 Pet. ii. 9, iii. 7, at "the day of judgment," Jude 14, 15, "when he cometh in the clouds," Rev. i. 7, and that the crown of glory shall be given to the righteous at the same time (see note on 2 Tim. iv. 8).

Obj. 2. Some refer to this millennium those words of Christ, Matt. v. 5, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth;" saying, that "neither David nor our Saviour could understand this otherwise than of a future state; because it is not the meek, but the great ones of the world, that slice the earth among them, and court-flatterers that scramble for preferment."

Ans. But it is evident to a demonstration, that David did understand this of the present earth, or of the land of Canaan; for the tenor of this whole thirty-seventh Psalm is designed to show, that wicked men shall, by God's judgment, suddenly perish, whilst righteous men lived easily and quietly in the land of Canaan: so ver. 9, "Evil-doers shall be cut off: but they that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth: for yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be, but the meek shall inherit the earth. They that are blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that are cursed of him shall be rooted out." So ver. 34, "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee τοῦ κληρονομῆσαι τὴν γῆν, to inherit the earth; when the wicked are destroyed, thou shalt see it" (see also ver. 14. 17. 19. 23, 24, 25, 26). It is therefore unadvisedly said, the psalmist "could not understand this of the present earth," and that upon a plain mistake of the import of the phrase; as if inheriting the earth was enjoying a vast fortune, or a great share of temporal enjoyments here: whereas, the comfort of this life, as our Lord teacheth, Luke xii. 15, "consisteth not in the abundance of the things that we possess." The phrase rather imports, that meekness is the best way to procure us a long and peaceable life on earth, Ps. xiv. 12. 14, 1 Pet. iii. 10, and that the meek person shall ordinarily have the most sure enjoyment of these things, as far as they are needful: that he shall enjoy them with the greatest quiet and tranquillity, without the strife, debate, anxiety, and trouble, which embitter the enjoyment of these things to others, and with the truest comfort, satisfaction, and contentedness of mind. For, as Chrysostom well observes upon the place, because the Jews had been oft taught this lesson in the Old Testament, our Saviour addresses himself to them in the language they had been accustomed to; this Son of David repeateth and confirmeth to them the promise made by David. And this I judge to be the most natural and truest exposition of these words.

Obj. 3. Our Saviour promises to his disciples and followers, that for the losses they should sustain here on his account, and for the sake of his gospel, they should receive there a hundred-fold, and sit upon thrones with him, judging the tribes of Israel. The words are these: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," Matt. xix. 27, 28. These thrones must, in all reason, be the same with the thrones mentioned, Dan. vii., Rev. xx. 4, and therefore mark the same time and state: and seeing, in those places, they plainly signify the millennial state, or the kingdom of Christ and his saints, they must here signify the same in this promise of our Saviour to his suffering followers. And as to the word παλιγγενεσία, which is here translated "regeneration," it is well known, that both the Greek philosophers and Greek fathers use that word for the renovation of the world, which is to be at or before the millennial state.

Ans. In answer to this argument, I shall not take notice, that what the argument saith is promised to Christ's disciples and followers in general, is indeed promised only to his twelve apostles, to them who had then lost all, "and followed him," Matt. xii. 17, to them who had "continued with him in his temptations," Luke xxii. 28. The thrones here mentioned, therefore, cannot be the thrones spoken of in Daniel and the Revelation; for these thrones are peculiar to the twelve apostles: those in the Revelation are supposed to belong to all who have a share in the first resurrection: the apostles sit upon these thrones, only "to judge the twelve tribes of Israel;" but they "who sit on the thrones," mentioned in the Revelation, are to "rule over the nations, and judge them," Rev. ii. 26, 27, iii. 21, v. 10, xx. 4—6. But,

Secondly, I grant, the παλιγγενεσία, or "regeneration," here mentioned, may be referred to the consummation of the world, and to the new heavens and earth of which the prophets speak: but then I add, this παλιγγενεσία, or "new birth," is only that of the church of Christ, that ζωοποίησις, or "new life," that ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, "life from the dead," she shall receive, when all Israel shall be saved, and the "fulness of the gentiles" shall flow in to them. For,

First, The persons here to be judged, are only the twelve tribes of Israel: which makes it more than probable that the whole promise made to the apostles respects their government over these tribes, coming in at the close of the world, after the fall of antichrist; and that not by a resurrection of their persons, but by a reviviscence of that spirit which resided in them, and of that purity and knowledge which they delivered to the world; and chiefly by admission of their gospel to be the standard of their faith, and the direction of their lives.

Secondly, It hath been observed already, that the delivery of the Jews from their former captivities and miseries, is always represented as a ζωοποίησις, "a giving of life, and a resurrection to the Jews." And thus may those words of St. John be primarily referred to them; viz. "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them" (xx. 4): though these things belong not to them only, but in general "to him that overcometh" (ii. 26, 27, iii. 1). Seeing then their return from their captivity, is, in the style of the prophets, usually represented as a παλιγγενεσία, "a reviving," or "new life;" why may not the time of their most glorious conversion, and collection from all the corners of the earth, be by our Saviour represented under that known metaphor? And this conversion of the Jewish nation, being by me placed in St. John's epocha, viz. after the destruction of the beast, and the death and slaughter of the armies of them that fought for him, or worshipped his image; and her converted members being, in my opinion, the very "bride of the Lamb, which had made herself ready," and, after a long divorce, was now married to God again, I comply in this with all the ancient millenaries, and especially with Justin Martyr,* when he saith, this παλιγγενεσία "is the mystery of all that expect Jesus Christ to appear at Jerusalem," spoken of by Isaiah, ch. lxvi., and that "all Christians entirely orthodox, expect to spend a thousand years in Jerusalem," as the prophet Isaiah hath foretold, saying, "There shall be a new heaven and new earth:" for as these things are spoken by a prophet of the Jews (one sent to speak these things to them), so is it beyond dispute, that they chiefly and immediately concern that nation, and her τεκνογονία, new birth of a numerous offspring, after a long barrenness (lxvi. 7—9), and her exaltation to a high estate of excellence and glory; and that so visible to the gentiles that all nations and tongues shall see her glory.

As for the following words, urged stiffly by the ancient and some latter millenaries, viz. "And every one that hath forsaken house, or brethren, or sister, or father, or mother, or wife and children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brothers, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands; and in the world to come, eternal life:" it is, in my opinion,

First, Very unreasonable to interpret these words of blessing to be conferred on men after the resurrection; for they that are thought "worthy to be the sons of the resurrection," saith our Lord, "neither marry nor are given in marriage," Luke xx. 35. Whence therefore should they have these mothers, and these children, not to add wives, a hundred-fold? They are made like to angels at the resurrection; and what should such angelic persons do with, what advantage will they reap from, a hundred houses, or a like increase of land, in earth?

If you reply, that these words of our Saviour relate not to the first resurrection; of which this text, which speaks of wives and children, is to be interpreted, but only to the second and general resurrection; I answer, that the words are general, and therefore must include all that are "sons of the resurrection." Moreover, by admitting this double resurrection, the first, in which they that are raised might marry, or have wives and children, and the second, in which they could not, the objection or inquiry of the sadducees is partly left unanswered; for this distinction doth suppose a resurrection, in which the ground of their inquiry might take place.

Secondly, This wonderful increase is promised, νῦν, "at present," ἐν τῷ καιρῷ τούτῳ, "in this time of life," Mark x. 30, Luke xviii. 28, in opposition to what they shall receive "in the age to come." Now the millennium is still placed, by Dr. Burnet, in the age to come after the conflagration of the world; this promise therefore cannot refer to his millennium, nor yet to any other which begins after the resurrection of these persons; for that time can with no propriety of speech be said to be now; nor can the blessings then received, be said to be received in this life. Moreover, these blessings are to be received, μετὰ διωγμῶν, "with persecutions;" it being the known observation of critics and grammarians,* that μετὰ with a genitive case, signifies "with." and denotes, τὸν αὐτὸν καιρὸν, "the same time;" and only with an accusative case signifies "after," and denotes ὑστεροχρονίαν, "a following time;" so that these persecutions must be contemporary with the enjoyment of these blessings; whereas a general peace, and freedom from all persecutions,† is made a necessary character of the millennial state.

Lastly, These words afford an argument against the doctrine of the millennium; because, according to them, the only blessing to be received, ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τῷ ἐρχομένῳ, "in the age to come," is "life everlasting;" which blessing is confined to heaven, and not to be enjoyed on the earth, our "house eternal being in the heavens" (2 Cor. v. 1), and our "inheritance eternal reserved in the heavens for us:" and therefore, they to whom the promise is here made, are not in the world to come to live a thousand years on earth, or to enjoy the temporal blessings promised here; because they are not to be enjoyed in the world to come, but now, in this present life; and because the only blessing promised in the world to come, is not to be enjoyed on earth, but is reserved in the heavens for us (1 Pet. i. 4).

Obj. 4. St. Peter, in his sermon to the Jews, after our Saviour's ascension, tells them, that he will come again, and that there will be then a restitution of all things, such as was promised by the prophets: "The heavens," saith he, "must receive him till the time of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his prophets since the world began" (Acts iii. 20, 21).

Ans. I answer, That these words cannot be meant of a restitution of all things to their former state: for sure it is very improper to say, there will be a restitution of all things to their former state, "which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets;" for since these things relate to the forerunner of our Lord, Christ's coming in the flesh, his life, death, resurrection, and ascension, the preaching of the gospel to the gentiles, the reign of antichrist, the calling of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the gentiles, these things may very well be said to be exhibited, performed, accomplished, and consummated: but I see not with what propriety or truth they can be said to be restored to their former states, or be renewed; and therefore ἄχρι χρόνων ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων, is, by the Syriac, rendered, "Until the fulness of the time of all things;" by the Arabic, "Till the time in which all things shall be perfected," or "finished;" by Tertullian,* Adusque tempora exhibitionis omnium; by Irenæus,† Usque ad tempus dispositionis omnium, i. e. "Till the time of the exhibition, or disposal of all things;" by Œcumenius, "Till the time that all things do εἰς τέρας ἐλθεῖν, come to an end." And for the confirmation of this import of the word, we have the suffrage of Hesychius and Phavorinus, that ἀποκατάστασις is τελείωσις, "the consummation of a thing." Hence then I argue thus against this doctrine: Since Christ is to continue in heaven till the completion or consummation of all things, spoken by the holy prophets, if the millennium were any of them, Christ must continue in heaven till the consummation of that also, and therefore is not to come down from heaven to reign on earth till the millennium be ended; nor can that be contemporary with our Lord's second coming, which is from heaven.

The arguments produced in favour of this millennium, from Rom. viii. 19—21, from 2 Thess. ii. 1, from Heb. i. 6, and ii. 5, and from 2 Pet. iii. 8—12, are sufficiently answered in the notes on those places.

CHAPTER IV.

§. I. This chapter contains arguments against the literal resurrection, and the reign of martyrs upon earth a thousand years. First, From the inconsistency of it with the happy state of souls departed. §. II. Secondly, From the accurate description of the resurrection in the holy scripture, without any mention of a first and second resurrection, and with such descriptions of the qualities of the bodies raised, the efficient cause, of the time, circumstances, and consequents of it, which suit not with the doctrine of the millennium. §. III. Thirdly, From the inconsistency of it with the genius of the Christian faith, and the nature of the gospel promises.

Having thus shown, that scripture and antiquity afford no sure foundation for this supposed resurrection of the saints and martyrs to reign with Christ on earth a thousand years, I proceed now to show the inconsistence of this doctrine with many things delivered in the holy scripture.

§. I. First, This doctrine seems not well consistent with the happy state of souls departed, recorded in the sacred writings; for can it rationally be supposed, that those "spirits of just men made perfect," which are now with Christ (Heb. xii. 23), and, being "absent from the body are present with the Lord" (2 Cor. v. 8, Phil. i. 23), should leave those blessed mansions, or quit that happy state, to live on earth again a thousand years? that they who are already "entered into rest" (Luke xxiii. 43), and who enjoy all the delights and satisfactions which paradise itself affords, should quit that station to enjoy peace and plenty upon earth? can they expect to be more righteous and holy, or to have more divine and heavenly speculations, or better company, or a more full fruition of their Lord on earth, than they enjoyed in paradise? if not, who can imagine that God should thus degrade them after so long enjoyment of those happy regions, or that they should voluntarily quit those mansions for any temporal enjoyments of the body, any meat or drink, or earthly pleasures, which they had formerly denied themselves, and were even dead to whilst they lived here; or for any temporary converse upon that earth in which they only lived as pilgrims and strangers, still "looking for a better country, that is, a heavenly?" (Heb. xi. 13. 16.) And if this change seems not consistent with the state of happy souls in general, much less will it comport with those especial privileges and high prerogatives, supposed by some fathers to belong unto the souls of martyrs, viz. that they do instantly receive their crowns, and are admitted to a fuller vision, and a more intimate enjoyment of the God of heaven; for the higher their advancement, the greater must their degradation be, when they return again to live on earth. So that this doctrine seems least of all consistent with the state of those Christian sufferers, who are supposed to be the very persons for whom it chiefly was designed, and to whom it is chiefly promised.

Secondly, Let us compare the resurrection mentioned by the holy scripture, with that supposed by the millenaries, and we shall easily discern, that no man reasonably can desire to enjoy the latter who can be made partaker of the former.

They who believe the resurrection promised in scripture, expect our Lord "from heaven to change their vile bodies into the likeness of Christ's glorious body" (Phil. iii. 21). The millenarics expect him to change or to restore them into such bodies, as shall be still mortal, corruptible bodies; for else, what need of meat and drink, what pleasure can they reap from their plenty? The first expect "this corruptible should then put on incorruption, this mortal put on immortality" (1 Cor. xv. 53). The second, that it should do this only after a thousand years; for they suppose (book iv. ch. 9, p. 206), "that nature may be weak," and they may be "desirous to be dissolved" in the millennial state. The first expect, that their "dishonourable bodies should be raised in glory" (ver. 43). The second, that they be first raised with their dishonourable parts. The first, that the body should be raised "a spiritual and a celestial body," bearing "the image of the heavenly Adam" (ver. 44. 48). The second, that it be first raised an earthly body, bearing the image of the earthly Adam. And oh! how inglorious, how despicable, is the resurrection which these men expect, compared with the resurrection promised in the holy scripture! How much more happy would the saints and martyrs be, could they immediately enjoy the scripture resurrection, than by enjoying that which the millenaries have allotted to them? "And why should any one conceive they should not do it? Is it because there is a necessity they should first live on earth a thousand years,* to prepare them for heaven and eternal glory; ut paulatim assuescant capere Deum, as Irenæus† says, 'that they may by degrees enlarge their capacities, fit and accustom themselves to receive God;' or, as he says in another place, that 'they may become capable of the glory of the Father,' that is, capable of bearing the glory and presence of God?" Sure this is not for the credit of the martyrs, that they should not be fit or capable to receive God, and enjoy the glory of the Father, without employing their contemplations and devotions upon earth a thousand years, when those holy persons, who rise not till the general resurrection, shall from that time be "for ever with the Lord" (1 Thess. iv. 17), and be immediately partakers of the beatific vision. Moreover, what is it that must be thus fitted and capacitated by contemplation to receive God, and to enjoy this blessed vision? Is it not the soul? and can she not as well contemplate him under the altar or the throne, or whilst she doth abide in paradise? Is coming down from those celestial regions to this dull earth, the way to elevate the soul to heaven? Will putting on a corruptible body, a body needing plenty of earthly things, and finding pleasure in them, be the way to quicken and invigorate her heavenly flights and aspirations? Or, is there no true friendship,‡ no ingenuous conversation to be had in paradise, that the soul must descend to earth to enjoy it? Or, is it necessary as Tertullian§ and others‖ argue, by way of retribution, "that the body which hath suffered, may be rewarded in like kind;" i. e. that it may be now gratified with bodily delights, the pleasures of the throat and palate, fine clothes, and innocent diversions here on earth? As if a "change of this vile body into the likeness of Christ's glorious body," were not a better and far more glorious reward of all its sufferings.

Arg. 2. §. II. A second argument against this doctrine, of a proper resurrection to reign with Christ a thousand years on earth, is taken from the accurate description of the resurrection contained in the holy scripture. For,

First, In all the descriptions the Holy Ghost so largely gives us of the resurrection, and the future judgment, in the evangelists and the epistles, there is no mention of a first and second resurrection, or of any prerogative of some saints above others in it, or of any precedence of any before others, as to the resurrection of their bodies; which might have reasonably been expected, had this doctrine been then received, in some of those places where the thing is so largely and critically discoursed on, as to inform us twice, that the order of the resurrection shall be this, "that the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17), and then, "we that are alive shall be changed," and that Christ is raised "as the first-fruits," and that "afterward they that are Christ's" shall be raised "at his coming:" here, I confess, is mention made of an order in the resurrection; for it is said, "In Christ shall all be made alive, every man in his own order," 1 Cor. xv. 33, but then the order is expressed thus, "Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's. Whereas, according to the millennial hypothesis, the words should rather have run thus, "Christ the first-fruits," then the martyrs, and a thousand years after the residue of the just: in the Epistle to the Thessalonians also, there is no order of the resurrection of the dead mentioned; but of them altogether, and without distinction, it is said, "Them that sleep in Christ will God bring with him, and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

In answer to this argument, we have been told, that "as the scripture speaks of the resurrection in gross, without distinguishing first and second, so it speaks of the coming of our Saviour, without distinction of first and second." But this is a great oversight; for the scripture gives express notice of Christ's coming ἐκ δευτέρου, "a second time," for the salvation of his servants, Heb. ix. 20, and of his "coming again," to receive them into those mansions he is gone to prepare for them, John xiv. 3. There being therefore equal reason to expect a like distinction betwixt the first and second resurrection properly so called, the constant silence of the scriptures, as to that matter, is no small prejudice against that hypothesis, which doth suppose a first and second resurrection.

Secondly, The scripture in those places containeth many things which seem most plainly inconsistent with that doctrine; for either in those places the scripture speaketh only of the second resurrection exclusively of the first, and then it is not true which Mr. Mede asserts, that "the day of judgment, and the time of the resurrection, include both the millennium and the general resurrection;" or, that "the scripture speaks of the resurrection in the gross, without distinguishing betwixt the first and second;" for, if it speaks only of the second exclusively of the first, it must speak of it distinctly from the first, or it must in those places intend to speak of both conjunctly and without distinction; and then what is said in them must be applicable to them both without distinction.

Again, The scripture in those places speaketh many things: first, as to the nature of the resurrection, and the qualities of the bodies raised. Secondly, as to the efficient cause of the resurrection, our Lord Jesus. Thirdly, as to the time of the resurrection. Fourthly, as to the circumstances, and the immediate consequences of that resurrection, which are by no means applicable to the first and the particular resurrection supposed by the millenaries, but only to the general resurrection, which all Christians own. And,

First, That which the scripture saith of the nature and the qualifications of the bodies raised, is this, that they shall be raised "glorious, spiritual, immortal, and incorruptible bodies;" for then "this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" (1 Cor. xv. 42. 49); then shall we bear "the image of the heavenly Adam," or of that Lord from heaven who shall "change our vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body" (Phil. iii. 21); then shall we "be clothed upon with our house from heaven, and death shall be swallowed up in victory" (2 Cor. v. 1, 4). Now, can a body raised in glory, i. e. in clarity and in splendour, shining like the sun, and made "like to Christ's glorious body," and "like unto the angels," as they shall be, saith Christ, who are "thought worthy of the resurrection," have any need of all the plenty which Dr. Burnet hath prepared for it on earth?"* Can it feed upon or relish any of the banquets which God, saith Irenæus, and all the ancient millenaries, hath prepared for it? Can a body raised in power, i. e. free from all renitency, all pain and lassitude, continue still, as Dr. Burnet (book iv. ch. 9, p. 206), makes the bodies of his raised millenaries to do, under such weakness of nature as "will not suffer them to continue long under strong passions, or intenseness of mind?" Can a spiritual body, free from grossness and ponderosity, from needing rest, sleep, clothing, sustenance, receive advantage from that universal plenty (ch. 7, p. 184. 186), or need those goods of fortune, that external felicity, that temporal happiness, he hath provided for it upon earth? Can these men, raised with immortal and incorruptible bodies, which have already "swallowed up death in victory," wish to be dissolved, as he saith they will? (p. 206.) Can the devil, when loosed, be so foolish, as to summon up his armies to fight against and kill them who are immortal, and can die no more? Can Gog and Magog, with all their numerous host, hope to prevail against them, or even dare to assault such shining radiant bodies as they then will have? In a word, can such bodies need or receive any farther exaltation to fit them for heaven, or for their elevation into the clouds, to be for ever with the Lord? If not, why should they live a thousand years on earth after God had thus fitted and prepared them for their habitation in the highest heavens? I therefore do imagine, that when the patrons of this millennial resurrection find themselves thus pressed, they will assign to their new-raised inhabitants of the earth, a body capable of enjoying the good things on earth and taking pleasure in those goods of fortune they have there provided for them, and leave their bodies to be changed after the millennium, "into the likeness of Christ's glorious body," and to suffer then another change into celestial and spiritual bodies, though not another resurrection: and it seems necessary for them to admit of the forementioned absurdities, or to admit of this hypothesis; for when the apostle saith, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed," their new-raised inhabitants must belong to the dead, and so be raised incorruptible, and so incapable of those earthly goods they mentioned, as their reward on earth; or to the living, and then they must be changed. And yet the shift is plainly contrary to the account St. Paul hath given us of the resurrection of the body; for he expressly saith, that when this corruptible, weak, dishonourable, earthly body, shall be raised, it shall be raised in incorruption, glory, power, and be a spiritual body; that to the natural succeeds the spiritual body, to the earthy the heavenly body (1 Cor. xv. 43, 44), to the body bearing the image of the earthy, the body bearing the image of the heavenly Adam: whereas this shift must infer a body raised not in glory, or in incorruption, not a spiritual and a heavenly body, and so make these martyrs twice bear the image of the earthy Adam, or at least at their resurrection not to bear the image of the heavenly. Again, they who are then alive, and shall be changed, saith the apostle, are only those who never slept in the grave (ver. 51, 52). Now this cannot be true of martyrs raised from the dead, and so the change here mentioned cannot belong to them.

Secondly, This doctrine seems inconsistent with what the scripture most plainly hath delivered concerning our Lord Jesus, the efficient cause, as well as the exemplar, of the resurrection of those that are Christ's: for he that is the author of this resurrection, is ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, "the Lord coming down from heaven," to effect this, 1 Cor. xv. 47, our omnibus modis, probati per sufferentiam, justum est in ipsâ recipere eos fructus sufferentiæ. Iren. lib. v. cap. 32.

* Dr. Burnet, book iv. ch. 10, p. 217.

Lord descending down ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ, "from the heavens," 1 Thess. iv. 16. The time when God shall give to those that have been persecuted and afflicted, rest with the apostles, who sure will have a share in the first resurrection, is the time "of the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ from heaven," 2 Thess. i. 7. The time of this millennium, say the patrons of it, is the time of the "restitution of all things." Now at that time, saith the apostle Peter, our Jesus is to be "sent down from the heavens" (Acts iii. 20, 21), they being only to contain him till that time. And one would think, that if the saints must reign with Christ on earth a thousand years, he must be with them on the earth: but this the patrons of the millennium will by no means own, but look upon it as a great absurdity. For, that "Christ should leave the right hand of his Father, to come and pass a thousand years here below, living upon earth in a heavenly body; this, I confess," saith Dr. Burnet,* "is a thing I never could digest." And "I dare not imagine," saith Mr. Mede,† "of this presence of Christ in his kingdom, that it should be a visible converse upon earth; for the kingdom of Christ ever hath, and shall be regnum cœlorum, a kingdom whose throne and kingly residence is in heaven." Here then the scripture account of the resurrection, that it shall be effected by the Lord Jesus coming down from heaven, and the millennium of the ancients, is at once rejected; for, as Lactantius‡ saith, "The Son of God shall come, and be conversant among men a thousand years, and rule them with a righteous empire; he shall reign with them upon earth;" so was this the avowed doctrine of all the ancient millenaries: for they not only did assert his reign on earth, but assigned Jerusalem as the peculiar place of his residence, whilst he reigned upon it.

Thirdly, This doctrine is still more evidently repugnant to the time assigned for the resurrection of the just; for they are to be raised, saith the apostle, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump (1 Cor. xv. 52); for the trumpet shall sound, and (then) the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we" that are alive, and have not slept, "shall be changed; for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." Here we are taught, that the dead in Christ, and so the martyrs, shall not be raised till our Lord's descent from heaven; that then they shall be raised in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; that, immediately upon their being raised, they that are then alive shall be changed. St. Jerome§ therefore said, with good ground, that the apostle by these words, cunctam primæ et secundæ resurrectionis excludit fabulam, "destroys the fable of the first and second resurrection;" by asserting that the resurrection of all that are dead in Christ, and sleep in him, shall be performed "in a moment," and "in the twinkling of an eye, at the sounding of the last trump," and "at the shout" or voice "of the last angel:" which leaves no room for a whole thousand years betwixt the first and second resurrection, unless the angel should be supposed to shout, or the trump sound, a thousand years. "The hour cometh" (saith our Lord, John v. 28) "when all that are in their tombs shall hear my voice, and shall come forth." And sure that must be a long hour which lasteth a full thousand years. Again, there shall be pious persons living and unchanged, when all the pious that were dead are raised; "for the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we that are alive shall be changed" (1 Thess. iv. 16, 17), we that have not yet slept, saith the apostle. Place now the millennium after the conflagration of the world, and all things in it, and where will you find these pious men alive, or how will you preserve them from those flames? Dr. Burnet* finds a great difficulty, not common to all, as he imagines, but peculiar to his own invention of a millennium after the conflagration of the present earth; viz. "how Gog and Magog should get into this new earth, the wicked being all consumed in those flames." He is not hardy enough to say that this is the poetic tale of the giants, though he saith (p. 219) it hath great affinity with it. And therefore he produces these men, according to the philosophy of Lucretius and Mr. Hobbes (p. 220), "from the slime of the earth, and the heat of the sun, as brute creatures were at first:" but whence come these pious men that have not yet slept, into this new earth, is a fresh difficulty; and to this the doctor hath yet nothing to say, for he either thought not of them, or was unwilling to take up with the rabbinical notion, that they had eagles' wings given them to mount up into the air, whilst the earth was on fire.

Fourthly, This doctrine seems inconsistent with many circumstances of the resurrection mentioned in the holy scripture, for that speaks constantly of the resurrection of all saints, as of a resurrection not to a temporal life on earth, but to an eternal in the heavens. "They shall come forth out of their tombs to the resurrection of life," John v. 28. "He that seeth and believeth in me, he that eateth my flesh, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day," vi. 54. That teacheth us, that when Christ comes again, they shall be received into the heavenly mansions prepared for them, John xiv. 2, 3, and xvii. 24, "and shall be with him where he now is; that when Christ, who is their life, shall appear, they shall appear with him in glory," Col. iii. 14, that "when he doth appear, they shall be like him, and see him as he is." Whereas, according to the hypothesis of the millenaries, when Christ appears, and when he comes again, they who have been his choicest and most faithful servants shall not immediately be raised to eternal life, but first to that life which is but temporal; they shall not be received into heavenly, but into earthly mansions; they shall not be glorified with him, appear with him in glory, be like him in his glory, or "see him as he is," till they have spent a thousand years on earth to fit them for those blessed mansions, and to prepare them for this beatific vision. Moreover, it is said of all the dead in Christ, of all that slept in Jesus, that they shall be raised first, and that then immediately we "that are alive shall be snatched up with them in clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and then we shall be for ever with the Lord." Now if this be so, surely we cannot expect afterward to live on earth a thousand years; for, as Nyssen puts the question,† τί ἐστι χρεία τῆς κάτω γῆς οἷς ἡ μετάρσιος ζωὴ ἐν ἐλπίσιν ἐστίν; "What need is there that they should live below on earth, who hope thus to live in heaven," and to be "ever with the Lord?" Especially since these words plainly seem to speak not of a temporal, but an eternal life with Christ, not by enjoyment of him upon earth, but by translation from it to heaven? Again, when the same apostle saith, "This I say, brethren, that flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God, neither shall corruption inherit incorruption" (1 Cor. xv. 20), and thence concludes, "that the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed;" does he not sufficiently insinuate that we shall be raised not to enjoy an earthly but a heavenly kingdom, and that our raised bodies, being glorified, shall not consist of flesh and blood? And what then will they do with all that plenty, and that great affluence of the goods of fortune, which the millenaries do so highly value? In a word, the comfort which the apostle gives the Thessalonians concerning their departed friends,‡ who had suffered much affliction, persecution, tribulation, and doubtless many of them death, for Christ's sake, is only this, that they who remained alive should not prevent them in the enjoyment of the happiness promised to the body, but "the dead in Christ should rise first," and then the living should be changed; not this, that these sufferers for the sake of Christ should rise a thousand years before the rest to reign with Christ on earth, which yet is by the millenaries deemed great matter of their consolation, and so was very proper to have been mentioned there, had it been any article of Christian faith.

Arg. 3. §. III. This reign of Christians upon earth agrees not with the genius of Christian faith, or with the nature of Christian promises, or with that frame and temper of spirit it requires from the professors of Christianity. For,

1. The Christian is represented as one who is entirely dead to the world, and to the things of the world; one who is not to love it, or the things of it, who is to use it as if he used it not, as one "whose conversation is in heaven" (Phil. iii. 19), and it is made the character of one who is an enemy to the cross of Christ, that he minds earthly things; whereas, if this be a true gospel promise made to Christians for their consolation and encouragement, under the troubles of this present world, that they shall, after this life is ended, live again on earth a life of indolence, and peace, and plenty, in the enjoyment of the goods of fortune: if this be one great part of the reward which God hath promised to those that suffer for his name, sure it becomes them to have their minds and their affections set upon it, and to live in expectation of it, and to desire to enjoy these goods of fortune, this peace and plenty upon earth; and it would rather be the character of those who bear the cross, in prospect of these blessings, to mind earthly things. That, saith St. Paul, which makes the sufferings of this present world so light unto us, is this consideration, "that we look not at the things which are seen, but which are not seen," not at things temporal, but eternal (2 Cor. iv. 17, 18), even at "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" (v. 1). Whereas if this be one of the great and precious promises contained in the gospel, and made for the encouragement of Christians to suffer for Christ's sake, they must then look not only at things eternal, but things temporal; or for a temporal house on earth, as well as one eternal in the heavens, for their supposed reign on earth will be but temporal.

Again, the exhortation of our Lord, in his admirable sermon on the mount, runs thus: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, but lay up treasures in heaven; for where your treasure is, there will your hearts be also" (Matt. vi. 19—21). And again, "Provide yourselves bags that wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not" (Luke xii. 53, 54). St. Paul exhorts all that are risen with Christ to "set their hearts and their affections not on things on the earth, but on things above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God" (Col. iii. 1—3), and that because they are dead with Christ unto these worldly things, "and their life is hid with Christ in God;" so that when "Christ, who is their life, shall appear, they shall appear with him in glory." And yet if our Lord Christ, in that very sermon, as the millenaries suppose, encouraged them to suffer with patience and meekness upon this consideration, that they "should inherit the earth," and had pronounced them blessed upon this account, surely they might have suffered upon this very prospect of laying up for themselves treasures upon earth in this millennium, and might have had their hearts and affections placed upon them: for wherefore are they bid to lay up treasures in heaven, and to set their affections on things above, but because these are the blessings promised as the reward of Christian piety and patience? If, then, these blessings to be enjoyed on earth after the resurrection be one great part of the reward which God hath promised to the piety and patience of the Christian, what reason can be given why he should not seek and set his heart upon them also? If it be so great a privilege to have a part in the first resurrection, to enjoy this indolency, peace, and plenty upon earth, that the apostle styles them blessed who have a part in it, should they not seek and set their hearts upon that very thing in which their happiness consists? And yet the comfort which our Lord and his apostles do afford these Christian sufferers, is only this, that "great is their reward in heaven" (Matt. v. 12, Luke vi. 23); that "when they are tried, they shall receive a crown of glory" (James i. 12); and that they "have in heaven a better and a more enduring substance" (Heb. x. 34): which as it placeth the reward and comfort of Christ's suffering members not on earth, but in the heavens, and so gives us just reason to conclude our Lord and his apostles knew nothing of this reign on earth, or thought it no great matter of their consolation; so did it give occasion to the ancients to conclude thus,* "If the inheritance of martyrs be in heaven, their reign on earth can be no better than a fable."

Moreover, it is evident that all the ancient patrons of the millennium held that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the patriarchs and prophets, were to be sharers with the Christians in this reign on earth, and that then would the promised Canaan be made good to them; whereas the apostles plainly tell us, that they expected no reward on earth, nor did they mind that Canaan where they dwelt, but only waited for a heavenly country: "They confessed," saith the apostle, "that they were strangers and pilgrims upon earth," that "they were not mindful of that country whence they came out, but sought a better country, that is, a heavenly" (Heb. xi. 13. 16). Since, then, these holy patriarchs and choice friends of God, not only sought not after, but even disdained any inheritance on earth; seeing the only country they did expect and look for was a heavenly country; seeing this only was the inheritance God, as their God, provided for them, and therefore that only which they were to enjoy at their resurrection, when they completely were to be made and treated as the sons of God: surely in vain must Christians hope for any reign on earth with them, who, professing themselves pilgrims and strangers in it, declared they were not mindful of such a habitation in the land of Canaan, and who are at the resurrection to be made like the angels, and to enjoy not any earthly, but that heavenly country, which God hath graciously prepared for them.

In a word, to foretell times of peace and plenty to succeeding ages, to raise the expectation of a people whose backs are bowed down, and have been long enslaved and afflicted, is very suitable to this divine economy; but to promise plenty, and the goods of fortune, as the reward of Christian piety and patience, and let them know that if they suffer for the sake of Christ, he will be sure to raise them up to plentiful enjoyments of the goods of fortune, this is too mean, too much beneath the sublime spirit of Christianity, to be one of her great and precious promises.

VARIANTIUM LECTIONUM

JOHANNIS MILLII, S. T. P.

IN

NOVUM TESTAMENTUM.

BENEVOLO LECTORI PRÆFATIO.

PRÆFATIONIS CAPITA.

§. 1. In hac præfatione proponitur, 1. Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ de regula fidei sententia. §. 2. 2. Ostenditur hanc regulam a Millio labefactari, partim multiplicando lectiones variantes sine ratione, sine modo, et contra omnium fere codicum, versionum, patrum et scholiorum antiquorum fidem, in unius Vulgatæ, Copticæ, aut Ethiopicæ versionis gratiam; et partim agnoscendo corruptelas, interpolationesque haud paucas, ab ipsis Ecclesiæ Christianæ incunabulis, ævoque pene apostolico, sanctis scripturis accidisse. §. 3, 4. Elucidantur hæc ex orthodoxorum de hæreticis querelis, et ex iis quæ ethnicis, et hæreticorum antesignanis sacrorum codicum fidem sugillantibus, respondent patres. §. 5. Objectioni ex verbis Origenis περὶ τῆς τῶν ἀντιγράφων διαφορᾶς responsum datur. §. 6. De Millii prolegomenis notandum, 1. Male illum asserere patrum haud paucos codices mirum in modum vitiatos habuisse. 2. Patres diversis exemplaribus usos esse, et subinde unius, subinde alterius textum, prout ferebat animus, usurpasse. 3. Ea de scholiis, glossisque marginalibus quæ privatorum libros respiciunt, ad codices Græcorum patrum perperam a Millio applicari, in quorum ecclesiis, fatente eodem Millio, libri emaculati, integri, et a scholiis fere liberi permanserunt; quod etiam testimoniis, et argumentis e patrum scriptis deductis, confirmatur. §. 7. Denique agitur de regulis in varia lectione discernenda observandis, et quid a nobis in tribus his libris actum sit, ostenditur.

Tandem aliquando improbo labore pensum hoc arduum absolvi, de quo pauca dicenda habeo.

1. De operis totius momento.
2. De Millii prolegominis.
3. De iis quæ in hoc opere a me sunt præstita.

§. 1. Ea est constans ecclesiæ Anglicanæ, et omnium evangelicorum, seu protestantium sententia, "sanctam scripturam regulam perfectam, satisque perspicuam continere, ex qua omnes fidei articuli creditu necessarii, omnesque morum regulæ ad salutem obtinendam requisitæ, dignoscantur." Hanc normam qui destruit, aut huic saluti obtinendæ minus idoneam reddit, eo ipso fidei nostræ fundamentum subruit, et protinus evertit.

Et quanquam id certum esse fateor, non ita divinam Providentiam sanctis scripturis invigilasse, ut nulla in eas menda irrepserint, est tamen rationi consonum existimare, eum, qui sanctas scripturas pro sola ecclesiæ regula per omnia sæcula instituerit, ita huic regulæ prospexisse, ut fini suo obtinendo nunquam impar esset, aut inhabilis. Nec enim infinita sapientia consilio suo cadere unquam potest, nec bonitas summa, nedum justitia exigere ut vitam suam ad eam normam, sub pœna gravissima, componerent Christiani, quæ huic officio præstando, ob corruptelas ei admistas, sit minus idonea.

Est tamen certum hanc fidei nostræ regulam ab iis plane subverti, qui negant textum originalem adeo purum et incorruptum ad manus nostras pervenisse, ut inde fidei articulos, aut morum regulas ad salutem necessarias, certo et explorato dignoscamus.

§. 2. Doleo igitur, et moleste fero, tam multa me in Millii prolegomenis invenisse, quæ hujus fidei normam vel plane labefactare videantur, vel saltem aliis ansam nimis speciosam præbeant de ea dubitandi; aut demum pontificiorum, aliorumque contra hanc regulam ratiunculis robur adjiciant et firmamentum.

1. Etenim ipsa variantium lectionum immensa moles multorum animos suspensos reddit, iisque suspiciones haud parvas injiciet, parum quid certi ex libris in omni commate, immo in omni fere commatis parte variantibus, expectari posse. Depravationem illam textus Græci, quæ ejus auctoritatem labefactet, ex magna illa lectionum varietate, quam in exemplaribus Græcis R. Stephani invenit, arguit Morinus; quantos igitur de textu eodem triumphos agent pontificii, cum viderint eas lectiones a Millio, per sex lustra in eo opere sudante, quadruplo auctiores factas et demum appendice copiosa locupletatas?

Id insuper causæ nostræ haud parum officere existimo, quod corruptelas, interpolationesque haud paucas, ab ipsis ecclesiæ Christianæ incunabulis, ævoque pene apostolico sanctis scripturis accidisse fidenter Millius pronunciet. De exemplari, quo usus est Clemens Alexandrinus sic loquitur, "Illud nonnihil passum esse ex incertis notulis marginalibus, nimirum ab initio fere canonis Novi Testamenti scholiastæ (μεταιθέντας τὰ εὐαγγέλια quos vocat Clemens noster, Stro. iv. p. 490) ad oras codicum explicatorias stricturas apposuerunt; ex his autem, textu ad quem spectabant, clarioribus scilicet, scribæ, pro arbitrio, alias atque alias intromiserunt in corpus libri, etiam genuinæ lectionis loco, modo obscura ea esset, aut (quod nonnunquam) in speciem absurda; admissæ vero in plurima mox apographa transierunt, auctoque post a lectoribus glossarum marginalium, adeoque et lectionum interpolatarum numero, factum ut posteriores libri fuerint fere prioribus hac in parte maculatiores. Hujusmodi scholia aliqua irrepserunt in Clementis codicem," Prol. p. 61, col. 1.

Quorsum hæc tendunt unico exemplo demonstrabo, hæreseos Artemonis fautores, qui ψιλὸν ἄνθρωπον τὸν σωτῆρα γίνεσθαι, i. e. Christum merum hominem fuisse, acriter contendebant, affirmabant "priscos quidem omnes, ipsosque apostolos ταῦτα παρειληφέναι, καὶ ἐδιδαχέναι ea quæ ab ipsis dicuntur et accepisse, et docuisse ad Victoris P. R. tempora, a Zephyrini autem temporibus, qui Victori successit, παρακεχαράχθαι τὴν ἀλήθειαν, adulteratam fuisse veritatem," quibus respondet Anonymus apud* Eusebius, ἢν δ' ἂν τυχὸν πιθανὸν τὸ λεγόμενον, εἰ μὴ πρῶτον μὲν ἀντέτιπτον αὐτοῖς αἱ θεῖαι γραφαί, "Hoc forte credibile videretur, nisi iis repugnarent primo quidem sanctæ scripturæ, deinde fratrum quorundam scripta Victoris ætate superiora, nempe Justini, Miltiadis, Tatiani, et Clementis." Si autem sanctæ scripturæ, prout hic Millius dicit, interpolatæ fuissent, scribisque, et scholiastis tunc permissum fuisset pro arbitrio in corpus textus adulterinas lectiones pro genuinis admittere, anonymi hujus adversus hæreticos defensio rem adhuc dubiam reliquisset. Porro Clemens, in loco allegato, ne verbum quidem habet de scholiis marginalibus, aut stricturis ad oram librorum positis, et postea in textum admissis, sed tantum περὶ τινῶν μετατιθέντων τὰ εὐαγγέλια, i. e. qui unum pro alio ponentes sententiam evangelicam mutabant, v. g. textus hæc verba, ὅτι αὐτοὶ υἱοὶ Θεοῦ κληθήσονται; alii sic exprimebant, ὅτι αὐτοὶ ἔσονται τέλειοι; alii sic, ὅτι αὐτοὶ ἔξουσι τόπον ὅπου οὐ διωχθήσονται, hoc autem ab hæreticis, de quibus ibi loquitur Clemens in scriptis suis, factum esse nullus dubito. Hæc autem inter variantes hujusce textus lectiones locum unquam obtinuisse prorsus nego, nec vel uno testimonio probavit Millius.

§. 3. Præterea laudabili opera passim in prolegomenis suis ostendit Millius, nihil detrimenti sacros codices ex hæreticorum corruptelis accepisse. Immo plane asserit, proleg. p. 75, col. 1, "Sententiam hanc de adulteratione sacri textus ab hæreticis in præsidium dogmatum suorum facta, merum somnium esse, si unius fere Marcionis, ejusque sequacium corruptelas excipiamus, e quibus tamen ne una quidem aliqua invasit in exemplaria Catholicorum." Quid vero hinc emolumenti nobis accedit, quidve causæ nostræ ex eo subsidium, quod hæc ab hæreticis facta non fuerint, quæ Millius ipse a Catholicis factitata esse non tantum lubens agnoscit, sed multitoties asserit! Rem uno exemplo elucidabo: Objiciunt Marcioni Tertullianus, et Auctor Dial. contra Marcion. p. 151, cum loco ἄνθρωπος, 1 Cor. xv. 47, substituisse Κύριος, quibus in variis lectionibus accedit Millius. At proleg. p. 35, et 139, "hoc e Catholicorum libris, in quos irrepserit, Marcionem in suum Catholicon recepisse" dicit, atque ita Catholicos incusando hæreticum absolvit. Hoc exemplo præmisso audiamus quid patres de hæreticorum Bibliis, sacrique codicis corruptelis pronunciant.

Primo negabant patres hæreticos eosdem habere codices, easdemve scripturas cum orthodoxis, idque hac potissimum ratione moti, quod in dogmatum suorum defensionem scripturarum verba corrupissent: Salvianus nempe, quibusdam dicentibus, "eadem illos legere quæ nos legimus, eosdem apud illos prophetas Dei, eosdem apostolos, eosdem evangelistas esse," ad hunc modum respondet,* "Quomodo eadem quæ ab auctoribus quondam malis, et male sunt interpolata, et male tradita; ac per hoc non jam eadem, quia non possunt penitus dici ipsa, quæ sunt in aliqua sui parte vitiata—Nos ergo tantum scripturas sanctas plenas, inviolatas, integras habemus, qui eas vel in fonte suo bibimus, vel certe de purissimo fonte per ministerium puræ translationis haurimus." Sin vero idem sanctis scripturis quæ apud orthodoxos receptæ, et in ecclesiis continuo lectæ essent, contigisset, quod Millius toties ingeminat, si patres s. codices, quarto et quinto seculo, mirum in modum interpolatos in medium attulissent, eosque pro genuinis scripturis accepissent, easdem ipsas scripturas quæ primitus ecclesiæ sunt traditæ, haudquaquam habuisse fatendum est; si demum "interpolationibus, glossematis, scholiis ad marginem adscriptis" bis millies, ut tradit Millius, vitiati essent ii, quos nos habemus, codices, idem utique de nobis judicium ferendum est.

Præterea scripturas incassum ab hæreticis vitiatas esse monet Epiphanius, atque in ipsorum tantum perniciem, quod eæ adhuc in ecclesia orthodoxa salvæ, et integræ reservatæ essent; sic enim Marcionem alloquitur, "Licet ea quæ scripta sunt, non ea fide referas, qua salvatore pronunciata sunt,† ἀλλ' οὖνγε σῴζονται οἱ τόποι ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τῆς ἁγίας ἐκκλησίας. Loca tamen in evangeliis sacræ ecclesiæ integra servantur; quæ item de evangelio Lucæ detruncasti pudore te afficiant,‡ ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀντιγράφου τοῦ κατὰ Λουκᾶν εὐαγγελίου τῶν τόπων εὑρισκομένων, in exemplari evangelii secundum Lucam inventa cum fuerint, utque imperatoris edicta si qui corrumpere et depravare conentur, prolata in archivis exemplaria fidelissima, insanos illos redarguant,§ οὕτως καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ βασιλικοῦ οἴκου, τουτέστι τῆς ἁγίας τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκκλησίας προσφερόμενον εὐαγγέλιον, ἐλέγχει τοὺς ἀφανιστὰς τῶν καλῶν ἐνδυμάτων μῦιας, ita etiam evangelium prolatum ex sanctæ Dei ecclesiæ archivis, vestium pulchrarum arrosores mures detegit. Denique, πάσης μὲν τόλμης καὶ πονηρίας ὑπόδειγμά ἐστι, τὰ μὲν γεγραμμένα παρακόπτειν, ἃ δὲ μὴ γέγραμμένα προστιθέναι, μάλιστα ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ ἀκαταλύτῳ ὄντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, summæ," inquit, "audaciæ, et flagitii est delere quæ scripta sunt, quæ nusquam scripta sunt addere, præsertim in evangelio quod in æternum stabile est." Teste autem Millio, adeo in evangelia hæc grassati sunt scribæ et librarii, ut sex centum supra mille varias lectiones se notasse asserat; immo multoties ait codices seculi quarti, quo Epiphanius floruit, omnes "interpolatos, ipsîusque Epiphanii codicem, maculatum fuisse, ut cæteri istius ætatis sequentiumque, adeo omnium, scholiis, insititiisque vocabulis," ut frustra esset, cum Epiphanio, ad evangelia in sancta ecclesia servata, aut exemplaria ejus ætatis provocare; immo quod "ultimæ temeritatis, summique flagitii" loco ponit Epiphanius, id eo seculo a scribis et librariis factitatum esse fidenter pronunciat. Vide Proleg. p. 75, col. 2.

§. 4. Restat ut quæ ab ethnicis et hæreticorum antesignanis, contra sacrorum codicum fidem, olim objiciebantur inspiciamus. Objecit hoc olim Christianis Celsus, "Fidelium quosdam in sanctas scripturas multum sibi ipsis indulsisse, iis enim (inquit) usitatum fuit,* πολλαχῇ μεταχαράττειν ἐκ τῆς πρώτης γραφῆς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, καὶ μεταλλάττειν, variis modis transformare evangelium, et ab eo quod primo scriptum erat, in aliud transferre." Eandem calumniam renovans Faustus Manichæus,† "Multa (inquit) a majoribus nostris eloquiis Dei nostri inserta verba sunt, et quæ nomine insignita ipsius, cum ejus fide non congruant, præsertim quia nec ab ipso hæc sunt, nec ab ejus apostolis scripta, sed, multo post eorum assumptionem, a nescio quibus; et ipsis inter se non concordantibus." Celso respondet Origenes protinus negando id unquam a fidelibus factum fuisse, [illegible] Christiani crimen hoc uspiam fuisse, viz. μεταχαράττειν [illegible] οἶδα, ἢ τοὺς ἀπὸ Μαρκίωνος, καὶ τοὺς [illegible] καὶ τοὺς ἀπὸ Λουκιάνου, i. e. "a nemine alio mutatum evangelium scio præterquam a Marcionis, Valentini, et forte a Luciani discipulis," qui, monente‡ Epiphanio, per omnia κατὰ Μαρκίωνα sentiebant. De his autem Marcionis et aliorum hæreticorum corruptelis, "ne una quidem," inquit Millius, "invasit in exemplaria Catholicorum," Prol. p. 75, col. 1, c. 6. Fausto Manichæo respondet Augustinus, "Quis tandem tanto furore cæcatur, qui dicat hoc meruisse non potuisse apostolorum ecclesiam, tam fidam, tam numerosam fratrum concordiam, ut eorum scripta fideliter ad posteros trajicerent, cum eorum cathedras, usque ad præsentes episcopos, certissima successione servarat, cum hoc qualiumcunque hominum scriptis, sive extra ecclesiam, sive in ipsa ecclesia, tanta felicitate proveniat." Porro nullo modo potuisse Manichæos, "qui jam in manibus essent omnium codices Christianorum" falsare, hoc argumento probat Augustinus, "quia mox ut facere cœpissetis, vetustiorum exemplarium veritate convinceremini; qua igitur," inquit, "causa a vobis corrumpi non possunt, hac causa a nemine potuerunt: quisquis enim hoc primitus ausus esset, multorum codicum vetustiorum autoritate confutaretur, maxime quia non una lingua, sed multis eadem scriptura contineretur."

At vero liberius multo cum sanctis scripturis agit Millius. Is enim summo studio, parique arte, bis mille locos invenit, in quibus exemplaria, ab ecclesia ad nos transmissa, corruptelis obnoxia fuisse, fidens pronunciat, quorum non pauca textui originali ab ipsis ecclesiæ primordiis inserta esse lubens agnoscit: v. g. annotatis in Matth. iv. 10, ὀπίσω μου, inquit, MSS. cod. plurimi non agnoscunt, "et licet jam olim ab apostolorum fere ævo in exemplaribus nonnullis lectum constet, aliunde tamen assutum videtur ex Matth. xvi. 23, vel Luc. iv. 8, a scriptore memori, scioloque, quod in plurimis aliis locis factum videmus." Ad cap. quinti v. 22, hæc habet, "τὸ εἰκῇ, videtur omnino scholion esse e margine alicujus libri in textum admissum, vetustum tamen, et quod apostolicorum fere temporum codices invasit." Ad v. 27 hæc apud Millium nota occurrit, "τοῖς ἀρχαίοις, additum videtur ex v. 21, idque jam olim a primis Christianismi seculis, habent enim Irenæus, et Vulgatus." Multa his similia passim observabit sedulus lector tam in prolegomenis, quam in variis lectionibus ejusdem Millii. Id denique animadversione, immo reprehensione dignum existimo, quod eodem judice "sciolus lector, adnotator quispiam," plus millies originalem textum interpolationibus suis fœdavit, maculavit, corrupitque; et quod prius "marginale scholion" fuit, haud rarius, inquit, "in textum irrepsit, omnesque codices continuo pervasit:" hoc enim fieri minime potuisse sine summa ecclesiæ Christianæ incuria, et præpositorum, in quorum manibus essent hi codices, mira oscitantia et socordia, manifestum est; multoque minus hæc scholia imaginaria in omnes codices per totum Christianum orbem sparsos, et in alias linguas translatos pervascrint, nisi ex composito res ageretur. Dum enim hi codices sacri omnibus in locis continuo legerentur, et exemplaria originalia, aut ex originalibus fideliter conscripta, in manibus fidelium quorumcunque, et in ecclesiarum omnium scriniis conservata essent, nemo sanus existimabit hæc aliter nisi ex mutua eorum conspiratione fieri potuisse. Adeo ut mihi temperare vix possim quin quæ Fausto Manichæo, de s. scripturarum corruptelis loquenti, *Augustinus respondet, ea Millio regererem, "Videris id agere ut omnis de medio scripturarum auferatur autoritas, et suus cuique animus autor sit quid in quaque scriptura probet, quid improbet; id est, ut non autoritate scripturarum subjiciatur ad fidem, sed sibi scripturas ipse subjiciat, non ut ideo placet illi aliquid, quia hoc in sublimi autoritate scriptum legitur, sed ideo recte scriptum videatur, quia hoc illi placuit."

* De Gubern. Dei, Ed. Oxon. lib. v. p. 151, 152.

§. 5. Objectio. Dicat tamen aliquis non frustra laborare cum Epiphanio et Augustino contendentes exemplaria s. codicum in ecclesiis fidelium pura, atque integra asservata esse; is enim ipse Origenes qui ea ab hæreticis solis corrupta fuisse pronunciat, alibi contrarium disertim asserere videtur his verbis, †πολλὴ γέγονεν ἡ τῶν ἀντιγράφων διαφορὰ, εἴτε ἀπὸ ῥαθυμίας τινῶν γραφέων, εἴτε ἀπὸ τόλμης τινῶν μοχθηρᾶς τῆς διορθώσεως τῶν γραφομένων, εἴτε καὶ τῶν τὰ ἑαυτῆς δοκοῦντα ἐν τῇ διορθώσει προστιθέντων, ἢ ἀφαιρούντων, i. e. "Magna exemplarium existit discrepantia, sive ob quorundam scriptorum socordiam, sive ob audaciam aliorum, perverse quæ scripta sunt emendantium, sive ob eos qui quæ ipsis videntur in emendatione adjiciunt, aut subducunt." Hæc quidem Veter. Testamenti exemplaria Græca potissimum respicere ex verbis immediate sequentibus manifestum est, τὴν μὲν οὖν ἐν τοῖς ἀντιγράφοις τῆς παλαιᾶς διαθήκης διαφωνίαν Θεοῦ διδόντος, εὔρομεν ἰάσασθαι, "Discrepantiæ quæ est in Vet. Testamenti exemplaribus, Deo dante, remedium adhibuimus." Est tamen ingenue fatendum eundem Originem, eodem in loco, occasione verborum Christi (ad divitem profitentem se mandatum illud, "Diliges proximum sicut teipsum," a juventute sua observasse) dicentis, "Vende omnia quæ habes," futili plane ratione adductum suspicari hæc verba, "Diliges proximum sicut teipsum," a Servatore cum non essent dicta, ab aliis προστεθῆφθαι, i. e. inserta esse, et in suspicionis istius subsidium hæc verba adducere, καὶ εἰ μὲν μὴ καὶ περὶ ἄλλων πολλῶν διαφωνία ἦν πρὸς ἄλληλα τῶν ἀντιγράφων ὥστε πάντα τὰ κατὰ Ματθαῖον μὴ συνάδειν ἀλλήλοις, ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ εὐαγγέλια, κἂν ἀσεβής τις ἔδοξεν εἶναι ὁ ὑπονοῶν ἐνταῦθα προστεθῆφθαι, οὐκ εἰρημένην ἀπὸ τοῦ Σωτῆρος πρὸς τὸν πλουσίον τὴν ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον ὡς σεαυτὸν ἐντολήν, i. e. "Nisi de aliis multis discrepantia esset exemplarium inter se, adeo ut omnia quæ a Matthæo sunt dicta non consonent cæteris evangeliis, et similiter se res haberet in reliquis evangeliis, forte impius esset qui suspicaretur hæc verba, Diliges proximum tuum sicut teipsum, a Servatore erga divitem, cum non sint dicta, a quopiam inserta esse."

Respondeo primo. Homiliam octavam in Matthæum a veteri translatione per Merlinum editam, Græcis quæ in hac sectione de divitis et Christi interloquio occurrunt, plane respondere, in ea tamen hæc ultima verba quæ ex Origenis Græcis citavimus, omnino prætermissa esse, ex quibus suspicandi ratio oritur ea, quæ jam in Græcis Origenis occurrunt, olim in iis inventa non esse, sed ab aliis ea postea ejus textui addita fuisse.

Respondeo secundo. Nihil aliud hic adducit Origenes præter suspiciones iniquas, et minime necessarias. Suspiciones, inquam, non necessarias; fatetur enim in eadem homilia Origenes ita hæc verba intelligi posse, ut nullus suspicioni suæ sit locus relictus: iniquas dico, nec enim ad exemplaria Matthæi emendatiora, aliave hic provocat, sed primo suspicandi hanc causam ducit ex ratione plane futili et inepta; nempe quod ei qui hoc præceptum, "Diliges proximum sicut teipsum," servasset, non potuit Christus dicere "Si vis perfectus esse, vende quæ habes," quasi qui sensu Judaico proximum suum, i. e. Judæum dilexisset, eo ipso perfectus haberetur. Secundo, "quod ipsum locum Marcus et Lucas exponentes, neuter hoc addidit," quasi in Matthæo nihil dici potuisset, quod non pariter eadem verborum plenitudine in Marco et Luca poneretur. Ex quibus constat nullam prorsus rationem habuisse Origenem suspicandi hæc verba in Matthæi exemplar inserta fuisse.

Tertio respondeo. Διαφωνίαν τῶν ἀντιγράφων "discrepantiam exemplarium" quam in hoc loco Origenes recenset, non esse discrepantiam exemplarium in eodem textu, nedum in eodem evangelio, sed tantum discrepantiam textus unius evangelii a verbis alterius evangelii, nec enim dicit omnia quæ sunt in Matthæo, μὴ συνάδειν ἑαυτοῖς "sibimetipsis non consentire," sed ἀλλήλοις "reliquis evangelistis consona non esse;" neque hoc probat, sive ex aliis verbis sive codicibus Matthæi, sed ex eo tantum quod hæc verba Matthæi apud Marcum et Lucam desiderantur; denique coronidis loco hæc addit, "Quod in Græcis feci, in exemplariis Novi Testamenti hoc ipsum me facere posse sine periculo non putavi; tantum suspiciones exponere me debere, rationesque et causas suspicionum non esse irrationabile existimavi." Percurrat jam lector integras duorum tomorum in evangelia expositiones, et mecum inveniet eas totas in evangeliorum inter se διαφωνίαις enumerandis impendi, de commatis cujusdam variante lectione ne verbum quidem proferre. Id ergo tantum hic dicit Origenes quod apud patres alios non tantum in confesso est, sed tanquam indicium sinceritatis evangelistarum in evangeliis suis conscribendis adducitur, et præsertim a Chrysostomo* his verbis, πολλαχοῦ διαφωνοῦντες ἐλέγχονται, "Sæpe discrepantes inveniuntur evangelistæ, hoc autem (inquit) maximum veritatis indicium est, aliter enim rem ex composito se egisse suspectam esset, νυνὶ δὲ καὶ ἡ δοκοῦσα ἐν μικροῖς εἶναι διαφωνία, nunc autem hæc quæ videtur esse in minutioribus discrepantia omni eos suspicione liberat."

Id etiam in Millii prolegomenis advertendum est, nempe male illum colligere ex eo quod Epiphanius, Basilius, aliique patres interdum loquuntur περὶ ἀντιγράφων ἀκριβεστάτων seu ἀδιορθώτων,† "eos exemplaribus diversis usos fuisse, et subinde unius, subinde alterius textum, prout ferebat animus, usurpasse." Quis enim exemplaribus iis uteretur, quæ ipse minus correcta, aut accurata pronunciat, cum ei ad manus essent emendatiora? id forte fieri potuisset ab Origene ex tempore perorante, id inter Latinos ab Hieronymo factum esse aliquando contra adversarium pugnante, ex ejus operibus, et verbis liquet; ab aliis hoc factum esse nego. Nec unquam de iis exemplaribus verba faciunt patres Græci, nisi ubi de lectione vera controversia oritur, aut inter se variant exemplaria, ex eorum igitur verbis id tantum constat, quod doctioribus notum est, habuisse eos ad tempora Tertulliani exemplaria primæva apostolorum manibus exarata, a tempore Origenis, et Eusebii exemplaria accurata, ad quæ, cum opus esset, provocare solebant, certaque media ex quibus emendatiora a non correctis, accurata ab inaccuratis, ab interpolatis genuina distinguere potuerunt, quæ quidem omnia non ad confirmanda, sed potius ad refutanda Millii prolegomena multum valeant.

Est insuper illud ex ipso Millio in Prolegomenis, p. 33, col. 1, imprimis observandum, "Inter codices ecclesiarum et privatorum hominum hoc fere interfuisse, quod isti, prout e librariorum manibus exierunt, emaculati, notulisque marginalibus liberi, fere integri in ecclesiarum tabulariis remanserint, hi vero ab ipsis, in quorum gratiam fuerant conscripti, statim fere inter lineas, aut ad marginem, glossis scholiisque fuerint conspersi, maximopere in id incumbentibus s. literarum studiosis ut textum s. quem apud se habebant, explicatiorem, suisque usibus magis indies et magis idoneum redderent." Ex quibus duo duco porismata.

Primo, ex codicibus vetustissimis occidentalis ecclesiæ, et præsertim Cant. Clar. Ger. parum subsidii ad lectionem genuinam dignoscendam expectari posse; ii enim, monente Simonio, oculari teste, ejusmodi scholiis, glossis, et emendationibus nunc eadem manu, qua libri ipsi, nunc alia conscriptis undique referti sunt: cum enim a scribis originalis textus plane insciis conscripti essent, aliorum manu, qui Græce sciebant, aut exemplaria Latina proprius et accuratius inspexerant, nunc ocius nunc serius fuerant emendati.

Secundo, id serio animadvertendum est male a Millio hæc, quæ privatorum tantum libros respiciunt, applicari ad codices Græcorum patrum, in quorum ecclesiis, fatente Millio, libri emaculati, integri, et a scholiis fere liberi, remanserint. Et præcipue ad codices episcoporum orientalium, quibus tam ante quam post Origenis, Pierii, Pamphili, et Eusebii diligentiam, exemplaria ἀκριβέστερα defuisse nemo sanus existimabit; is enim* Eusebius, Origenis, Pierii, Ammonii, et aliorum codicum lectissimorum usuram cum nactus esset, "inde quinquaginta volumina Novi Fœderis, ad Constantinum M. transmisit, ecclesiis Constantinopoli et alibi agentibus ideo mittenda, quod earum usum ecclesiis maxime necessarium esse intelligebat, quæque idcirco ab antiquariis vetustissimis, et exacte scribendi peritissimis, describi fecit." Alexandriæ etiam in ecclesia, s. literarum sede nobilissima, non defuisse lectissima exemplaria agnoscit Millius, Prol. p. 71, unde Athanasius Constantis Aug. literis rogatus, transmisit ipsi πυκτία τῶν θείων γραφῶν, s. scripturarum volumina. Idem Eusebius† nos docet plurimos fuisse apostolorum successores, qui post eorum obitum "salutaris regni cœlestis semina spargebant ἀνὰ πᾶσαν εἰς πλάτος τὴν οἰκουμένην, per universum terrarum orbem, munusque evangelistarum obibant iis qui fidei sermonem nondum audivissent," et qui præcipue hoc in animo habuerunt τὴν τῶν θείων εὐαγγελίων παραδιδόναι γραφήν, q. d. "evangeliorum scripturas tradere;" quæ si quis animo expenderit, ei haud parum verisimile censebitur hos omnes ecclesiæ antistites libris interpolatis, scholiis et marginalibus notis vitiatis, s. scripturæ textum posteris tradidisse, aut omnia exemplaria sæculi istius in quo florebant, utut id Millius ubique pronunciat, interpolata et vitiata fuisse. Nec enim de iis tam aspere judicare par est, quibus in promptu esset exemplaria ἀκριβέστερα adire, et quibus nec ingenium defuit textum ab his glossematis et scholiis marginalibus discernendi, nec erga s. scripturas ea reverentia, quæ ipsos ad istam discretionem faciendam sedulo moveret.

Respiciamus titulos illos, quibus s. scripturas adornabant primorum sæculorum patres; ab iis etenim βιβλία θεῖα, "libri deifici, verba divina," θεῖαι γραφαί, καὶ θεόπνευστοι, sæpius dicebantur. An ergo paterentur manus sive sacrilegas, sive temerariis divina hæc Dei eloquia interpolationibus suis corrumpere, et depravare? certum est apud nos, inquit* Josephus, has nostras scripturas divinas esse, unde a tempore prophetarum, οὔτε προσθεῖναί τις οὐδὲν, οὔτε μεταθεῖναι τετόλμηκεν, "nemo ausus est iis addere quidpiam, aut detrahere:" cum ergo eadem fuerit Christianis erga scripturas s. reverentia, nonne jure merito expectandum fuisset eos pari diligentia curasse, ne quid hujusmodi, in Novi Fœderis norma et regula contingeret. Expendamus denique quanto studio proviserent, ne eorum scripta vel a librariis negligentius transcriberentur, vel ab aliis mutarentur. Priscos enim illos, et sanctissimos ecclesiæ antistites, tanquam pulcherrimum exactissimæ in his rebus diligentiæ exemplum posteris proponens† Eusebius, dicit primo "Irenæum adversus eos qui τὴν ὑγιῆ τῆς ἐκκλησίας θεσμὸν, sinceram ecclesiæ legem adulterabant, varias epistolas conscripsisse." Secundo, in finem libri sui de octonario, sive Valentinianorum Ogdyade, hanc eum clausulam adjecisse; ὁρκίζω σε τὸν μεταγραψάμενον τὸ βιβλίον τοῦτο, "Adjuro te qui conscripseris hunc librum, per Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum—ut conferas quod transcripseris, et diligenter illud emendes ad exemplar ex quo transcripsisti, atque adjurationem hanc similiter describas, et exemplari tuo inseras;" qui autem tantam diligentiam adhibuerunt in scriptis suis integris conservandis a librariorum negligentia, et aliorum quorumcunque corruptelis, et depravationibus, eos de sanctis et θεοπνεύστοις scripturis in eadem integritate sanctæ ecclesiæ reservandis non minus sollicitos fuisse merito existimandum est.

§. 7. Nostra quod attinet, in primo libro satis monstrasse me puto harum lectionum variantium fundamenta incerta esse, et penitus inidonea ex quibus hodierni codices in dubium vocentur: ne tamen me lector hic nimium præstitisse existimet, aut media omnia sustulisse ex quibus de lectione genuina certum, vel saltem idoneum, in quo acquiescat judicium, feratur; dico,

Primo, id certum, et extra dubium esse videatur, ubi patres in his rebus versati variasse lectionem textus pronunciant, variantem ibi lectionem ante eorum tempora obtinuisse, de qua non aliter judicium fieri potest, ubi in neutram partem aliquid pronunciant, quam ex priorum patrum lectione, versionibus antea conceptis, aut textus ipsius circumstantiis. Ex. gr. dicit Origenes‡ quosdam Hebr. ii. 9, legisse non prout textus habet χάριτι Θεοῦ, sed χωρὶς Θεοῦ, lectionem tamen hodiernam huic præponendam esse non tantum ex eo constat, quod versiones omnes et patrum plerique cum ea consentiunt, sed quod de gratia Dei in eo manifesta quod filium suum dilectum morti pro nobis tradidit, s. scripturæ passim loquuntur; de Christo "sine Deo," sive seposita quasi Deitate, patiente, prorsus nihil.

Secundo, ubi patrum multi, nullo refragante, cum versionibus antiquis, et codicum manuscriptorum majori parte, in una lectione conveniunt, eam lectionem certo genuinam pronuncio; hic enim locum obtineat illud Tertulliani "Quod apud omnes unum invenitur, non est erratum, sed traditum;" cum vero in diversa abeunt, ea lectio, cæteris paribus, verisimilior censenda est, quæ potiori autoritati innitatur.

Tertio, in epistolis, in quas extant quatuor Græca scholia cum totidem versionibus antiquis, ubi Græca scholia cum versionibus universim in una lectione conspirant, id veræ lectionis indicium existimo minime respuendum; hinc Millium in eo potissimum culpandum existimo, quod sexcenties (ut in variarum ejusdem lectionum diligenti examine probatum dedimus) ab hisce omnibus, aut fere omnibus, unius Italicæ, Æthiopicæ, aut Copticæ versionis gratia, in vera lectione assignanda, deviaverit.

Quarto, ea lectio quæ sensum integrum relinquit, cæteris paribus, ei præferenda est quæ sensum mutilum et imperfectum exhibet, eumve interrumpit; eique multo magis quæ sensum penitus corrumpit: nec enim concedendum est in scriptis θεοπνεύστων virorum vel sensum prorsus defuisse, vel verba quibus integrum eum exhiberent: excipiendi sunt hic defectus ex idiomate linguæ profluentes, ut "Descendebat in domum suam δεδικαιωμένος, ἢ ἐκεῖνος," Luc. xviii. 14, aut ex contextu facile supplendi, ut 2 Thess. ii. 7, μόνον ὁ κατέχων, ἄρτι (sup. καθέξει) ἕως ἐκ μέσου γένηται. His adde, Quinto, regulam Waltoni tertiam; viz. "Lectio quæ, cæteris paribus, sensum fundit clariorem, et cum antecedentibus et s. scripturæ analogia magis congruentem, contrariæ præferenda est." Antecedentium enim, et consequentium consideratio, et locorum similium collatio ad veram lectionem eruendam plurimum conducunt. Exemplis paucis hanc regulam elucidabo. Contendit Millius his verbis, ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται, Heb. x. 38, addendum esse μοῦ post τό ἐκ πίστεως, sic enim textum hunc patres quidam allegant: sic LXX. Interpretes legunt, Hab. ii. 4. Obstat tamen præter Græcorum scholiorum omnium cum textu consensum, id quod hunc locum idem apostolus, Rom. i. 17, Gal. iii. 11, eodem prorsus modo allegavit. Contendit acriter idem Millius, Gal. ii. 5, in his verbis, οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν εἴξομεν τῇ ὑποταγῇ, τό οὐδὲ tollendum esse, in annotatis ibi ad Millium id perperam dictum esse probavimus, ex antecedentibus, et consequentibus, et integro apostoli scopo.

Ex operis hujus secundo libro ediscat primo lector, id quod caput rei est, textum Novi Fœderis salvum, et satis integrum ad nos pervenisse, nec potuisse Millium in opere triginta annorum labore assiduo, industria summa, arteque non exigua, et sæpe non ingenua, versatum, variasque lectiones suo marte, et aliorum adminiculo undique colligentem, ejusdem αὐθεντίαν convellere, nedum labefactare.

Secundo, varias lectiones quæ morum regulam, aut fidei articulum vel unicum respiciant, vix ullas esse; quæ sensum verborum in re momenti alicujus mutent, paucissimas. Hoc ultro fatetur Millius, Prol. p. 142, col. 2, his verbis. "In his codices omnes conveniunt, et si forte locus aliquis qui summi momenti esse videtur, uni, alteri, seu etiam quamplurimis codicibus exciderit (id quod non nisi in uno loco factum est, quod viderim, nempe 1 Joh. v. 7), idem tamen quoad sensum alibi inculcatus occurrit, ut proinde neutiquam inde periclitetur Christiana veritas." In hoc nobiscum conveniunt pontificiorum critici probatissimi. Ita* Dupinius, "Esse varias lectiones haud paucas ex editione Novi Fœderis Oxoniensi etiam oculis pateat, eas autem omnes parvi sane momenti esse, et ex parte potissima vel librariorum vitia, vel minutissima παρεράματα." Idem agnoscit Simonius infra citandus; sed testimoniis non est opus: inspiciat aliquis loca omnia a nobis diligenter collecta, percurrat exempla omnia insigniorum s. scripturæ locorum, a Morino recte, vel perperam adducta, ex oculari inspectione inveniet ea nec morum regulam ullam, vel fidei articulum uspiam respicere, nedum labefactare.

Tertio, ex nostra variantium lectionum uberiori discussione in capitibus ejusdem libri sequentibus, liquido constabit, nec in minutioribus istis, et pene frivolis, deesse nobis, potissima saltem ex parte, testimonia, quibus hodierni textus lectio stabiliatur, quod etiam ultra constabit ex diligenti examine locorum fere omnium, quos ex Vulgatæ, seu potius Italicæ versionis autoritate, pro genuinis nobis obtrudit Millius. Id enim in iis omnibus vel gratis, atque ex mera ipsius conjectura, dictum esse, et contra majorem testium molem probavimus, vel ipso Millio teste, contra omnem MSS. codicum, et excusorum fidem, quo nihil fortius dici potuit ad fidem istarum lectionum minuendam.

De tertio libro id tantum dico, brevem esse, at forte, epilogi saltem et appendicum gratia, non contemnendum.

OPERIS TOTIUS PARTITIO.

§. 1. Opus D. Millii suis laudibus exornatur, et in quibus deficiat, aut operis instituto minime satisfecerit, indicatur. §. 2. Operis nostri suscepti ratio redditur. §. 3. In Millii collectaneis multa inter lectiones variantes immerito locum obtinere ostenditur. §. 4. Lectiones variantes ad tria genera reducuntur.

Quam propositam sibi in magno suo opere rationem habuit Cl. Millius, eam nemo satis laudare potest: In animum enim suum induxit Novum Testamentum pristinæ suæ restituere integritati, fidam ex criticorum arte exhibendo regulam qua ab emunctioris naris hominibus inter varias lectiones veræ a falsis discernerentur, atque ex hac statuit genuinam firmare lectionem "in locis circiter mille," Bernardi sui judicio, læsam et interpolatam, atque "atheis hoc pacto, cæterisque religionis nostræ hostibus cavillandi occasionem præcidere; cum e lectionibus ipsis variantibus, ex quibus omnia in libris nostris incerta esse arguunt, egregie stabilitum viderint s. codicis textum." Quod quidem manus in se susceptum si feliciter absolvisset, nulli dubium est quin ille "theologorum commodis egregie inservisset, operamque navasset ecclesiæ Christianæ longe gratissimam, atque utilissimam."

§. 1. Quanquam autem eruditus vir, cujus mortem, ut spero, gloriosa immortalitas consecuta est, de ecclesia optime sit meritus, dum locos consimiles inter se compararet (quos si propius inspicias, ex iis fructum haud parvum recipies), dum ex patrum scriptis lectissimos flores decerpsit, et aliquoties dum textum annotatis illustrare conatus fuit, tametsi genuinam lectionem egregie firmarit omnibus fere in locis in quibus Sociniani, Erasmus, Grotius, sensum orthodoxum labefactare maximo opere nisi sunt; tametsi etiam ad auctoritatem s. codicis stabiliendam permagnum pondus attulerit, nec in hac parte operis sui peccarit unquam, nisi quod inscriptionem Epistolæ ad Ephesios immerito repudiarit; quod tamen ad susceptum operis consilium attinet, a scopo suo plurimum aberrasse visus est. Tantum enim abest ut fidam regulam constituerit, unde genuina lectio a spuria dignosceretur, ut in plerisque incertiores nos plane reliquerit; imo tantum abest ut atheis silentium imposuerit, ut lectionum varietatem magno cumulo augens, et a seipso dissidens, more hominum conjecturam modo huc modo illuc ducentium, hostibus religionis nostræ nova ministrarit arma, pontificiisque simul novam ansam dederit objiciendi, nihil nos certi de s. codice habere posse, nisi ex testimonio ecclesiæ, quod tamen aliis in causis respuimus, et aspernamur.

§. 2. Grave quidem onus in me ante recepi quam aut de magnitudine rei, aut de grandi appendice, et prolegomenis autoris ipsius magis quam textus menda corrigentibus, aliquid possem suspicari. Pollicebar enim olim, parum cautus expectatissimum illud opus editum modo esset me in vivis agente, eo consilio expensurum me esse, ut multitudo variarum lectionum ad compendiolum, si fieri posset, redigeretur. Jam vero annos septuaginta natus, acie etiam oculorum obtusiore facta, rudem meruisse videar. At cum promisso meo nihil sit mihi sanctius, aut antiquius, impedimentis hisce omnibus susque deque habitis, improbo labore libellum tandem confeci, qui Deo gloriam, commodum ecclesiæ, s. textui plus roboris exhibeat, benevolique lectoris exspectationi, ut spero, satisfaciat.

In prolegomenis et appendice multum discrepat Millius a collectaneis quæ textui subjiciuntur, secum igitur sæpissime pugnat, et non modo non cohærentia inter se dicit, sed maxime disjuncta, atque contraria. Itaque si inter vivos numeraretur, ipsi forsan non ingratum foret, quod videret se a seipso vindicatum, suumque maturum judicium subitis ejusdem cogitationibus anteponi. Quod si falso aut male allegatorum locorum reum fieri graviter molesteque ferret, ego etiam ad illa* παρεράματα proferenda invistisimus accessi. Cum vero ingens odus suscepisset quod non nisi junctis, ut ait, plurimorum laboribus confici potuit, facile credam non ipsi integritatem, sed accuratam aliis diligentiam defuisse.

§. 3. De instituti mei ratione sciat lector me in primo libro illius vestigiis acriter institisse: cum enim ingentem hunc cumulum coacervasset aggregando lectiones variantes partim patrum Græcorum versionumque orientalium, alia rumque vetustate insignium, ex quibus, inquit, eluceant Græca primævorum codicum e quibus effluxerint, partim versionis Italicæ, et patrum Latinorum, qui Italicum in scriptis suis, ut ait, adhibent, partim quoque MSS. magnæ et venerandæ antiquitatis, sub iisdem capitibus quam parum ei profuit impensus labor, indicavi; ostendens insuper nullam textus corrigendi causam fuisse, nisi cum ad unum omnia, vel saltem major pars eorum inter se convenissent, quod non ultra viginti locis, idque levioris momenti, unquam accidit. Cum ergo totius operis Milliani hoc sit fundamentum, primus liber in eo labefactando totus versabitur.

In chartis suis valde laboriosis tantam rerum sylvam congessit Millius, quantam nec enumerare velim; nec de singulis judicium ferre, si vellem, possem; sigillatim enim cuncta persequi, et aliis molestum, et mihi ad munus nostrum obeundum haud esset necessarium. Licet etenim hæ variæ lectiones molis permagnæ fuerint, sunt tamen dimidia ex parte eo nomine protinus indignæ; ex reliquis earum paucæ receptæ lectionis sensum afficiunt, mutantve. In his tamen levioris momenti expendendis haud parum laboravi. Et ubi textum interpolatum esse Millius contendit, aut παρεμβλήσεως incusat, judicium meum interposui, textumque pro modulo meo, vindicavi. Ordinis autem gratia has quas appellat varias lectiones ad tria genera reduxi.

Primo, sunt ergo multa quæ inter variantes lectiones locum tenent, et tamen in numero earum sunt minime reputanda, nam ut præteream ea quæ de initio, defectu, sine manuscriptorum in Græca aut Latina lingua scripsit.

Primo non illæ variantes lectiones merito dicendæ sunt, quæ ex oscitantia, incuria, inscitia, aut ignorantia scriptoris aut librarii evenerunt: eadem enim opera quæ in Bibliis Anglicanis mendæ occurrunt typographicæ, pro variis lectionibus habeantur: vix tamen caput occurrit in quo non aliquid hujus generis reperias.

Secundo, neque illæ inter variantes lectiones recensendæ essent quæ a MSS. codicibus fere omnibus, et antiquis versionibus, plenoque omnium patrum cunsensu dissentiunt, et discrepant; has enim si admiseris, quænam ullibi rejiciendæ forent? Sexcentis autem in locis lectionem quandam ex fide solius Italicæ, Copticæ, Æthiopicæ, &c., genuinam esse asserit, contra omnium codicum, aut fere omnium fidem, contra versiones omnes, reclamantibus etiam istis patribus qui locum illum allegarunt ad unum omnibus. Vide Proleg, a p. 42 ad 48.

Tertio, multo minus pro variis lectionibus habendæ sunt quæ adulterinis evangeliis, aut hæreticorum pravitati ortum suum debent; quanta autem profert ille ex evangelio Nazaræorum, aut Ebionitarum! quam frequenter nos monet, hunc vel illum versiculum ab his aut illis hæreticis repudiatum* fuisse! Longa Epiphanii narratio de locis a Marcione corruptis sparsim huic operi inserta est, ut moles in immensum cresceret. Et demum in prolegomenis circiter viginti ex depravatis illis archetypum ipsum fideliter exhibuisse, acriter contendit, p. 36, col. 1.

Est, quarto, valde incongruum patrum glossemata, aut interpretamenta pro variis lectionibus exhibere; eadem enim de causa patrum scrinia compilasse potuit, centies tamen, imo bis centies, illi in confesso est, hoc vel illud quod a recepta lectione variat, natum fuisse ex interpretamento, ex glossemate, atque ex altera parte sublatum fuisse aliquid quod offenderit.

Quinto, tollenda sunt denique errata ipsius autoris, cujus generis copiam non minimam annotata exhibent, atque ita acervo multum decrescente, onereque sublevato ad reliqua progredior.

* Hær. 42.

Supersunt adhuc variantes lectiones innixæ quidem auctoritati patrum quorundam, aut versionum, aut manuscriptorum cod. venerandæ antiquitatis. Sicut tamen textus significationem aut non omnino, aut leviter saltem immutant, ita textus ipse pari auctoritate, atque exemplarium copia, plerumque nititur. Quoniam autem hujus generis pene innumeræ sunt, partitionem quandam earum feci.

Primo, quæ in quatuor evangeliis, atque Actis Apostolorum continentur, illas in quinque species divisas, in capite secundo libri secundi edissero.

Secundo, quæ ad epistolas spectant, eas pariter eundem in modum ad rationem revoco capite insequente.

Tertio, inania et levia, quæ numerum plane superant, ad capita quædam reduxi, ad singula eorum digitum libro tertio intendens, et specimen aliquale exhibens, ex quo studiosus lector de reliquis conjecturam faciat. Porro, in hujus libri et operis totius epilogo, id paulo diligentius curavi, ut pontificiis, aliisque religionis nostræ hostibus solide responderem; nempe iis qui objiciunt quod variantes tot lectiones textum suspectum reddant, aut saltem in dubium adducere videantur, ideoque quod sacra Biblia nullo modo sufficere valeant, ut nos in iis omnibus quæ ad salutem creditu factuque necessaria sunt, erudiant.

CAPITIS PRIMI LIBRI PRIMI.

ARGUMENTUM.

§. 1. Ex patrum scriptis, aut s. scripturæ allegationibus non posse certo colligi eos aliter quam hodiernus textus se habet legisse. Adstruitur primo ex eo, quod sæpe allegarint s. scripturæ τμήματα, non ex textu inspecto, sed ex memoria. §. 2. Secundo aliquoties summatim, et quoad sensum tantum, verborum nulla ratione habita. §. 3. Tertio, quia multa textui sæpe adjiciunt. §. 4. Quarto, verba multa, imo periodos, non raro omittunt. §. 5. Quinto, quia patres iidem qui interdum aliter citant, cum editis, in aliis locis, conveniunt. §. 6. Sexto, quia multas scripturarum περικοπὰς frequenter congerunt, quæ in diversis locis, quoad sensum, occurrunt, nec ῥητῶς alicubi inveniuntur. Hæc omnia exemplis plurimis confirmantur, ibid.

SECTIO PRIMA.

Ut de his variis lectionibus rectius judicemus, operæ pretium duxi in earum fontes inquirere, atque utrum firmum exhibeant lectionis variantis fundamentum sedulo investigare, quod quidem præstare conabor, Millium κατὰ πόδα sequendo per omnia illa capita, ex quibus has lectiones se collegisse profitetur. Dico igitur primo sanctos patres apud scripturam s. alia legisse olim verba, quam quæ nos jam legimus; aut exemplaribus usos fuisse diversis ab iis quibus nos jam utimur, male colligi ex eo quod e Novo Fœdere passim testimonia citant, editis nostris parum congruentia. Est enim criticorum omnium, et speciatim P. Simonii* judicium, citationibus patrum, raro scilicet accuratis, non temere credendum esse, nec ad earum fidem Græca exemplaria corrigenda, "Hoc enim," inquit Simonius "sine magno s. scripturæ detrimento fieri non potest." Grotius etiam vir magni judicii, et emunctæ naris, idem, vere et libere pronunciat. "Veteres," inquit, "scriptores sæpe utuntur testimoniis ex scriptura, sed ita ut appareat codicem ab illis non inspectum." Quare non est quod eo nomine suspecta nobis sit recepta lectio. "Non raro patribus usitatum," inquit Heinsius, prolegomenis in Exercitationes S., "ut intenti rebus, sensum potius quam verba spectent, neque raro prætermittunt aliquid, vel addunt, sed et voces alias reponant, de memoria ne dicam, cui tribuisse plusculum nonnunquam videntur. Primo autem quid tam sibi proprium, aut quasi suum patres esse volunt quam ut ταυτοδυναμοῦντα, sive alia quæ idem notant, aut notare existimant, in adducendis locis, verba, aut vocabula reponant. Iidem nonnunquam quod desiderari credunt, ipsi adjiciunt. Nihil æque usitatum iis quam ut alios, atque alios conjungant locos, sæpe quæ in medio sunt, aut præcedunt, prætermittunt: libenter enim dicuntur, contrahunt, hæc autem patrum citationibus contigisse dicit ex eo quod ἐκ προχείρου, hoc est e memoria, ex tempore, et inconsulto codice, eas adducerent." Horumque omnium exempla in medium se protulisse ait, "ne quis temere ex iis Græcum textum emendandum esse existimet."

* Crit. Hist. Text. N. T. cap. 31, p. 151.

Imprimis autem allegasse sæpissime patres τμήματα quædam s. scripturæ non e textu, sed ex memoria, quæ licet thesaurus, rerumque custos sit, eas tamen, sine scripto, verbis semper iisdem reddere non valet, exemplis, et criticorum fide dignorum testimoniis, probatum dabimus.

Exempli gratia, apud Apologiam Justini M. ed. Oxon. a sectione 18 ad 24, occurrunt citationes bene longæ desumptæ ut plurimum ex concione Christi in monte habita, et ex sermone ejus non dissimili apud Lucam cap. sexto memorato, sed pleræque omnes variunt a textu quem agnoscunt Biblia nostra, Græci scriptores, et versiones antiquæ. Idcirco D. Grabii in citationes e Matt. v. 28, xviii. 9, hæc est annotatio, Martyri commodum visum fuit tum hic, tum in sequentibus, non ipsa Christi verba, prout in sacro evangelii codice extant, exacte omnia recitare, seu sententiam aliquando eorum imperatoribus ethnicis tradere.

Cum* Irenæus pharisæorum quæstionem citet ad hunc modum, ἐν ποίᾳ δυνάμει τοῦτο ποιεῖς; ἐξουσίᾳ, inquit Grabius, habent omnes tres evangelistæ (adde etiam ταῦτα, Matt. xxi. 23, Marc. xi. 28, Luc. xx. 2) sed Irenæus, aut Marcosii, ex memoria allegarunt. Cum in eodem capite Irenæus citet hæc verba, Luc. xix. 42, εἰ ἔγνως καὶ σὺ σήμερον τὰ πρὸς εἰρήνην, ἐκρύβη δέ σου, teste Grabio, hæc iterum ex memoria citata esse patet.

Origenes contra Celsum, l. 2, p. 58, et l. 4, p. 193, et Gal. iv. 21, hæc profert, λέγετέ μοι οἱ τὸν νόμον ἀναγινώσκοντες, textus, οἱ ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον θέλοντες εἶναι, p. 65, legit ἥμαρτον παραδοὺς αἷμα δίκαιον, textus, ἀθῷον, Matt. xxvii. 4, p. 68, κεηυχθήσεται τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦτο ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ κόσμῳ, textus, ἐν ὅλῃ τῇ οἰκουμένῃ, Matt. xxiv. 14, p. 71, ἰδόντες ὅτι ἐξέπνευσεν, textus, αὐτὸν ἤδη τεθνηκότα, John xix. 14, pro his, et innumeris ejusdem generis hanc apologiam facit Huetius: Origenes nimirum in referendis a scriptura locis tam sæpe ab exemplari recessit, quod inconsultis libris festinatione impeditus, et memoriæ confisus ea recitaret. Not. in Orig. p. 61, 76, et Origenianorum lib. iii. cap. 1, §. 6, scripturæ testimonia ab eo sæpenumero aliter relata reperies ac in editionibus concepta sunt quæ hodie circumferuntur, quod et ex memoriæ perfidia aliquando contigit; par in evangeliorum depromptis ab eo locis discrimen occurrit; nam præterquam quod variantes suas lectiones Novi quoque Testamenti codices habebant, ut hodieque habent, utebatur ad hæc sæpenumero Adamantius Evangelio secundum Hebræos, ut tradit Hieronymus in libro de scriptoribus ecclesiasticis, cap. iv., atque inde discrepantiam illam extitisse conjicio.

Denique de Græcis Irenæi hæc dicit Millius, proleg. pag. 40, col. 2. Ea maxima ex parte intercidisse, et in eis quæ supersunt, Epiphanius, aliique, quibus ea debemus, haud semper citarunt loca Nov. Test. ad textum Irenæanum, sed nonnunquam ad codices suos posteriores, seu etiam ex memoria, unde sequitur nihil certe ex iis de codice Irenæi colligi posse. De Latinis Tertulliani hæc pronunciat, ibid. p. 49, Millius "In eo citatasunt s. codicis loca negligentius, ex memoria, contracte, ad sensum, haud sine levicula aliqua subinde mutatione." Et in variis suis lectionibus sæpissime monet, hæc et illa a patribus ex memoria recitata esse.

Unum adhuc restat quod patrum saltem homilias, concionesve eo minus idoneas reddat, ex quibus recepta s. textus lectio sollicitetur, nempe constat a tempore Origenis homilias eorum, conciones, et sermones, habitos fuisse αὐτοσχεδιαστικῶς, sive ex tempore, eosque excepisse notarios, qui arte quadam, et celeritate scribendi, non verba solum insigniora, sed integras periodos exhibuerunt. Hic igitur errandi duplex causa, primo etenim cum in extemporaneis hisce declamationibus exemplaria ipso inspicere neutiquam potuerint patres, perfrequens necessario fuit lapsus eorum memoriæ. Secundo, fac in hoc patres rarius errasse, quid tamen verisimilius est, quam in tot minutis patrum verbis exscribendis crebro lapsos fuisse notarios? Atque his duabus causis, ut conjicere licet, debetur magna pars variantium istarum lectionum, quas Millius industria singulari, nec sine artificio quodam, coacervavit.

* Lib. i. cap. 17, p. 87.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

Usitatissimum porro est apud patres, præsertim primi seculi, allegare commata quædam s. scripturæ juxta sensum eorum, aut summatim, nulla adhibita ratione ipsorum verborum; id unum vero imprimis lectorem moneo, ut in locupletissima hac rerum sylva colligenda, et sub capitibus suis reponenda, accuratam diligentiam quæ tædium pareret, non expectet; nec mihi vitio vertat quod in hac rerum partitione, non omnia inveniat adeo exacte, aut juxta regularum logicalium normam disposita, ut capiti huic potius quam alteri instantia quæque respondeat. His prælibatis, ad patres ordine procedo.

Ignatius raro aliquid citat prout jam illud apud evangelia, epistolas, aut ullam ex antiquis versionibus occurrit, sed quæ in mentem itineranti venerunt, additis, subductis, aut immutatis quibusdam adduxit; v. g. in Epistola ad Ephesios, sic

§. 2, Scriptum legimus, ἵνα ἐν μιᾷ ὑποταγῇ ἦτε κατηρτισμένος τῷ αὐτῷ νοΐ, καὶ τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ, καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ, sc. si margini sit fides, ex 1 Cor. i. 10, hic vero sicut καὶ μὴ ἦ ἐν ὑμῖν σχίσματα omittit, ita etiam addit ἐν μιᾷ ὑποταγῇ, et περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ, et transponit τὸ αὐτὸ λέγητε πάντες. In Constitutionibus Apost. lib. ii. cap. 44, verba sic se habent, ὅπως μὴ ἦ ἐν ὑμῖν σχίσματα, ἦτε δὲ ἓν σῶμα καὶ ἓν πνεῦμα κατηρτισμένοι τῷ αὐτῷ νοΐ, καὶ τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ κατὰ τὴν κυριακὴν θέσιν, ubi addita sunt textui verba quibus linea subducta est. Quid ad hæc Millius notat, sc. desse ἐν ante τῷ νοΐ, et τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ; de reliquis prorsus silet.

§. 4, In eadem epistola habes φανερὸν τὸ δένδρον ἀπὸ τοῦ καρποῦ αὐτοῦ, et in margine Matt. xii. 33, cujus verba sunt, ἐκ γὰρ τοῦ καρποῦ τὸ δένδρον γινώσκεται· §. 8, hæc reperies, ποῦ σοφός; ποῦ συζητήτης; ποῦ καύχησις τῶν λεγομένων συνετῶν. 1 Cor. i. 20, ubi ut omittit ποῦ γραμματεύς, et τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, sic posteriorem clausulam de suo addit. In Epist. ad Rom. §. 5, desumit hæc verba ex 1 Cor. iv. 4, ἀλλ' οὐ παρὰ τοῦτο δεδικαίωμαι, Textus legit ἐν τούτῳ. In Ep. ad Eccles. Smyrn. §. 6, legit ὁ χωρῶν χωρείτω, Matt. xix. 12. Textus vero ὁ δυνάμενος χωρεῖν. Atqui in omnibus his locis nulla ex Ignatio adhibetur varians lectio.

In Polycarpi Epistola nihil fere occurrit, cui tanquam stabili fundamento varians lectio innitatur; de verbis Petri 1 Pet. i. 18, actum est alibi: §. 2, hæc habet διὸ ἀναζωσάμενοι τὰς ὀσφύας, δουλεύσατε τῷ Θεῷ ἐν φόβῳ καὶ ἀληθείᾳ, et in margine legas, 1 Pet. i. 13, et Ps. ii. 11, quasi hæc loca in unum confudisset Polycarpus, cum revera in neutro hæc verba reperias. Ibidem legimus, μὴ ἀποδιδόντες κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ, ἢ λοιδορίαν ἀντὶ λοιδορίας, ἢ γρόνδον ἀντὶ γρόνδου, ἢ κατάραν ἀντὶ κατάρας, postrema addit Polycarpus de suo. Ita Millius in 1 Pet. iii. 9, §. 5, πᾶσα (φησὶ) ἐπιθυμία κατὰ τοῦ πνεύματος στρατεύεται, ex 1 Pet. ii. 12, κατὰ τῆς ψυχῆς. Petrus ipse, §. 8, in citando v. 24 ejusdem capitis, omittit αὐτὸς, et pro ἐν τῷ σώματι αὐτοῦ legit τῷ ἰδίῳ σώματι, atque hæc Polycarpi solius autoritate inter varias Millii lectiones locum obtinent, sicut etiam ex §. 7, πᾶς ὃς ἂν μὴ ὁμολογῇ τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθέναι, ἀντίχριστός ἐστι. Sed Œcumenius et versiones omnes editis congruunt, sc. πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ—ἐληλυθότα ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὗκ ἐστι, καὶ τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ τοῦ ἀντιχρίστου, vide locum hunc excussum 1 Joh. iv. 3.

Idem dicendum est de locis a Justino Martyre ex memoria, ut dixi, citatis, a §. 18 ad §. 26, quæ speciatim jam attingo, v. g. Matt. v. 28, ὃς ἂν ἐμβλέψῃ γυναικί, Just. πᾶς ὁ βλέπων γυναῖκα, textus, ἤδη ἐμοίχευσε τῇ καρδίᾳ παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, Just. ἐμοίχευσεν αὐτὴν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτοῦ, text. v. 46, ἐὰν γὰρ ἀγαπήσετε ὑμᾶς, τίνα μισθὸν ἔχετε; οὐχὶ καὶ οἱ τελῶναι τὸ αὐτὸ ποιοῦσι; ita Matthæus: τί καινὸν ποιεῖτε; καὶ γὰρ εἰ πόρνοι τοῦτο ποιοῦσιν, Just. cap. vi. 21; ἐκεῖ ἔσται καὶ καρδία ὑμῶν, text.; καὶ ὁ νοῦς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, Just. cap. v. 16; λαμπάτω δὲ ὑμῶν τὰ καλὰ ἔργα ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἵνα βλέποντες δοξάσωσι τὸν πατέρα ὑμῶν——ἵνα ἰδόντες δοξάσωσι, text. §. 21, legit οὐδεὶς ἀγαθὸς εἰ μὴ μόνος Θεὸς ὁ ποιήσας τὰ πάντας Matt. xix. 17, §. 26, e Matt. x. 28 aut Luc. xii. 34 legit μὴ φοβεῖσθε τοὺς ἀναιροῦντας, φοβεῖσθε δὲ τὸν μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν δυνάμενον, &c. ubi textui adduntur verba μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν, §. 48, allegat hæc verba tanquam dicto a Judæis Christo in cruce suffixo, νεκροὺς ἀναγείρας, ῥυσάσθω ἑαυτόν, ubi Grabius nos refert ad Matt. xxvii. 39, 40, qui versiculi verbis Martyris parum conveniunt. In Dialogo cum Tryphone, p. 235, habet hæc verba a Luc. xi. 52, "Væ vobis scribis," ὅτι κλεῖδας ἔχετε. Textus, ὅτι ἤρατε τὴν κλεῖδα τῆς γνώσεως.

Luc. xii. 50, dicit Christus "Baptismum habeo baptizari," καὶ πῶς συνέχομαι ἕως οὗ τελεσθῇ, hanc clausulam sic exhibet Irenæus, lib. i. cap. 18, p. 89, καὶ πάνυ ἐπείγομαι εἰς αὐτό, Epiphanius, Hær. Arian. p. 784, καὶ τί θέλω, εἰ ἤδη ἐβαπτίσθην;

Clemens Alex. ait, Pædag. lib. i. cap. 6, p. 82, cum Dominus noster baptizatus esset, ecce vox e cœlis dicens, "Hic est filius meus dilectus," ἐγὼ σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε, et lib. ii. cap. 1, p. 45, allegat verba apostoli, 1 Cor. viii. 6, ad hunc modum, ἀλλὰ μόνος ὄντως ἐστὶν εἷς ἡμῶν ὁ Θεὸς ἐξ οὗ τὰ πάντα, ubi textus sic, ἀλλ' ἡμῶν εἷς Θεὸς ὁ πατήρ, &c. Hanc insignem mutationem præterit Millius; notat autem omitti verba sequentis, καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτόν. Ubi Sanctus Judas scripsit δεσμοῖς ἀϊδίοις ὑπὸ ζόφον τετήρηκεν, ibi Clemens habet ὑπὸ ζόφον ἀγρίων ἀγγέλων, Stro. iii. p. 467; ὁ Κύριός [φησιν] ὁ γήμας μὴ ἐκβαλλέτω, καὶ ὁ μὴ γαμήσας, μὴ γαμείτω, quæ ut videtur citare non ex evangeliis, sed ex 1 Cor. vii. 27, ita neque verbis, neque sententiæ apostoli satis apte respondent. Stro. iv. p. 488, sic verba Zacchæi profert, ἡμίσιν τῶν ὑπαρχόντων μου δίδωμι ἐλεεμοσύνην τοῖς πτωχοῖς, et deinde addit, ἐφ' οὗ καὶ ὁ σωτὴρ εἶπεν, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐλθὼν σήμερον τὸ ἀπολωλὸς εὗρεν, quod multum discrepat a Luc. xix. 8—10. In eadem pagina hæc verba desumit, vel e Matt. xii. 42, vel e Marc. ix. 41, καὶ ὃς ἂν δέξηται ἕνα τῶν μαθητῶν τούτων τῶν μικρῶν, μισθὸν οὐκ ἀπολέσει, quæ receptæ lectioni parum congruunt. Eodem libro, p. 529, his verbis, tanquam a Christo dictis φησὶν affigit, ἐὰν ποιήσῃς ἐλεημοσύνην, μηδεὶς γινωσκέτω, καὶ ἐὰν νηστεύσῃς ἀλείφου· ἵνα ὁ Θεὸς μόνος γινώσκῃ, ἀνθρώπων δὲ οὐδείς, ubi certe nihil sibi statuit præterquam Christi dicta, Matt. vi. in epitomen redigere. Stro. vi. p. 662, parabolam, Matt. xiii. 47, 48, sic recitat, ὁμοία ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν ἀνθρώπῳ σαγήνην εἰς θάλασσαν βεβληκότι, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ πλήθους ἁλωκότων ἰχθύων τὴν ἐκλογὴν τῶν ἀμεινόνων ποιουμένῳ, sensum sic afferens, non verba Christi; pariter ac Stro. iii. p. 440, ubi illo teste, Christus ait, Luc. xii. 58, μετὰ τοῦ ἀντιδίκου βαδίζων φίλος αὐτοῦ πειράθητι ὑπαλλαγῆναι. Ex his et iis quæ dicentur infra, facile discamus, in judicio quod de patrum citationibus fecit, longe aut falli, aut prejudiciis abreptum, a veritate multum aberrasse Millium. Clemens enim, eo teste, in adducendis N. Test. locis creber est, et cautus raro, quicquam ingerens, seu etiam prætermittens. Prol. p. 60, col. 2.

De Origenis in scripturis citandis licentia, aliquid supra diximus, locisque in præcedente sectione notatis. Sexcenta nullo negotio addere possim. Sed ne in iis proferendis nimius sim, pauca ex innumeris depromam, v. g. pro τί θέλω εἰ ἤδη ἀνῆφθη; Luc. xii. 49, Orig. in Exod. ed Huet. to. i. p. 22, legit, εἴτε δὲ ἑκάη. Com. in Matt. p. 463, verba apud Lucam, cap. xiv. 28, 29, sic repræsentat, τίς ἐξ ὑμῶν βουλόμενος πύργον οἰκοδομῆσαι οὐχὶ ψηφίζει, εἰ δύναται θεῖναι θεμέλιον καὶ ἐκτελέσαι, ἵνα μὴ ἄρξωνται οἱ θεωροῦντες ἐμπαίζειν τῷ μὴ τελέσαντι; ubi sensum Christi retinens, in verbis plurima mutat, hæc tamen sic introducit, περὶ τοῦ τοιούτου νομίζω λελέχθαι πύργου ὑπὸ τοῦ σωτῆρος τό, Com. in Matt. p. 307; pro τότε συνῆκαν οἱ μαθηταί, Matt. xvii. 13, habet Origenes οἱ συναναβάντες τρεῖς μαθηταί, ibid. p. 489; ita allegat, 1 Tim. ii. 3, σωθήσεται δὲ διὰ τῆς τεκνογονίας, ἐὰν τὰ τέκνα μείνῃ ἐν πίστει, immutans μείνωσι in μείνῃ, et simul addens τὰ τέκνα explicandi gratia. Et pro ἐν ποίᾳ παραβολῇ παραβάλωμεν αὐτῷ; Orig. in Matt. p. 208, legit, ἐν τινὶ αὐτῷ παραβολῇ θῶμεν;

Athanasius in scriptis suis genuinis receptam lectionem plerumque retinet, et de via raro aliter quam addendo pauca declinat, v. g. 2 Cor. v. 15, hæc reperias, ὅτι εἰ εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν, "utique omnes mortui sunt, et pro omnibus mortuus est," ἵνα οἱ ζῶντες οὐκέτι ἑαυτοῖς ζῶσιν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ἀποθανόντι καὶ ἐγερθέντι, at vero illud de Incarn. Verbi, p. 62, sic legit, ὅτι εἷς ὑπὲρ, &c.——ἵνα ἡμεῖς μηκέτι ἑαυτοῖς (f. ἐμαυτοῖς) ζῶμεν, ἀλλὰ τῷ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἀποθανόντι ἀναστάντι ἐκ νεκρῶν, τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ, ubi de defectu εἰ, et de posteriori additamento, mentionem facit Millius, de reliquis variationibus nullam. In secunda oratione contra Arian. p. 351, παρὰ τοῦ Πέτρου (inquit) λέγεται ὅτι ἐπειδὰν Θεὸς ὢν γέγονεν ἄνθρωπος, nec tamen existimabat verba hæc ῥητῶς in Petri epistolis inveniri, sed tantum virtute in 1 Pet. iv. 1 contineri. Nam orat. iv. p. 483, sic suam ipse sententiam aperit. Postquam enim hæc attulisset verba, Χριστοῦ οὖν παθόντος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν σαρκὶ, addit, hoc autem est ἴσον τοῦ φάναι Θεὸς ὤν, ἴδιον ἔσχε σῶμα, καὶ τοῦτο χρώμενον ὀργάνῳ, ἄνθρωπος γέγονε δι' ἡμᾶς.

Cyrillus Hierosol. sic loquentem introducit Paulum, μὴ ἐξίστασθε, ἐγὼ οἶδα ὅτι σκληρόν μοί ἐστι πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν, Catech. 10, p. 90, et Catech. 5, p. 45, pro τηρῆσαί σε τὴν ἐντολὴν, 1 Tim. vi. 14, legit τηρῆσαι ταύτην ὑμᾶς τὴν παραδεδομένην πίστιν.

Producit sæpissime in scenam Epiphanium, ut lectionis non tantum variæ, sed genuinæ testem idoneum (quod non modo ex annotationibus, sed ex prolegomenis, p. 75, col. 2, et p. 76, col. 1, 2, apparet). Fatetur tamen ipse Millius ibidem ab Epiphanio plerumque negligentius, et ad sensum allegata esse s. codicis testimonia, quorum falsa et vera inter se numero non distinguuntur, v. g. in Anchorato hæc depromit, p. 26, e Joh. xii. 35, οὐκ ἔστε ἐν νυκτὶ, ἵνα ἡ ἡμέρα ἐν σκότει ὑμᾶς καταλάβῃ, quæ a textu, aut verbis Christi, pro quibus adducuntur, adeo longe discrepant, ut licet forte videantur additamentum e 1 Thessal. v. 4, neutiquam tamen dicenda sint legitima explicatio. In Anacephalæosi, p. 156, sic legit, 1 Cor. xv. 42, τὰ νῦν σπειρόμενα ἐν θανάτῳ, ἐγείρονται ἐν ἀθανασίᾳ. Textus autem ἐν φθορᾷ, ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ. In Panario, i. e. volumine Adv. Hær. quinquies vel sexies legit, Joh. viii. 44, καὶ ὁ πατὴρ αὐτοῦ ψεύστης ἦν, viz. p. 279 bis, 295, 297, 676, 677, qua ex lectione originem suam duxit absurda illa quorundam Christianorum de patre diaboli opinio. Interdum quædam Christi aut apostolorum adducit testimonia, quæ nusquam sunt gentium. Ita, p. 690, post verba, quibus Christus alloquitur suos discipulos, "Attendite a fermento pharisæorum quod est hypocrisis," addit, καὶ ἐν ἄλλῳ τόπῳ ἤ ἐστι φιλαργυρία, forsan alludens ad Luc. xvi. 14, ubi pharisæi φιλάργυροι appellantur. Et p. 751, 754, 917, dicit, ὁ Κύριος εὐλογῶν τοὺς μαθητὰς, ἔφη, πάτερ, ὁδὸς αὐτοὺς ζωὴν ἔχειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς· at vero neque hæc verba apud s. scripturam occurrunt, neque perfectio illa divina hominibus communicari potest. Supervacaneum autem est, post Heinsii labores, plura hic adducere, cum enim multa hujusmodi in medium protulerit, orationem sic claudit, "Cujusmodi si singula vel ex solo hoc adducerem autore, in quo miram ubique licentiam notavi, quis futurus finis esset?"

Sanctus Basilius, tom. ii. 664, verba Pauli, Eph. iv. 2, sic exhibet, ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλλήλων ἐν ἀγάπῃ Χριστοῦ, non quia ibi reperisset Χριστοῦ, sed explicationis gratia, vel forte ex cap. v. 2, περιπατεῖτε ἐν ἀγάπῃ, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς.

Cyrillus Alex. recitat verba Luc. xi. 11, sic, ὁπόταν ἐλεημοσύνην, καὶ ἰδοὺ πάντα ὑμῖν εὐόδα ἔσται, De Ador. Sp. p. 272. Pro ταῦτα γράφειν, Phil. iii. 1, sæpius habet ταῦτα λέγειν, in Hos. p. 1, in Amos. p. 285, in Joel, p. 381. Allegat verba Jacobi c. v. 20, ad hunc modum σώσει ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ, in Min. Proph. p. 494.

Sanctus Chrysostomus sic Agrippæ regis verba profert, κινδυνεύεις με ἐν ὀλίγῳ ποιῆσαι χριστιανόν, ed Mor. to. i. p. 669, sed in commentario editis congruit. Sic etiam Christi verba refert, Luc. xiii. 2, 4, δοκεῖτε ὅτι ἐκεῖνοι ἁμαρτωλοὶ ἦσαν μόνον, ubi recepta lectio habet παρὰ πάντας τοὺς Γαλιλαίους, παρὰ πάντας ἀνθρώπους, vide to. v. p. 74, 75. Hæc etiam Rom. ix. 32, tanquam ipsissima textus verba recitat, ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ ἔργων νόμου ἠθέλησαν δικαιωθῆναι. Omnia percurrere infinitus esset labor; ecce autem e grandioribus exemplis, Matt. xxv. 34—36, sic textum exhibet, καὶ τοὺς μὲν ἀποδέξεται ὅτι πεινῶντα αὐτὸν ἔθρεψαν, καὶ διψῶντα ἐπότισαν, καὶ ξένον ὄντα συνήγαγον, καὶ γύμνον ὄντα περιέβαλον, καὶ ἀσθενοῦντα ἐπεσκέψαντο, καὶ ἐν φυλακῇ ὄντα εἶδον, καὶ δώσει τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτοῖς, ubi si sensum spectes, nihil deest; si verba, in omnibus deficiunt.

SECTIO TERTIA.

Si singula enumerare velim, quæ textui de suo adjecerunt patres Græci, in molem immensam cresceret oratio: ut igitur pauca de multis attingam.

Primo hoc in genere Clemens Alexandrinus centies ad minimum peccat, nec enim fides adhibenda est Millio dicenti raro ipsum quicquam ingenere. Frustra enim verbis asseritur quod re ipsa falsi arguatur. Ex. gr. Protrept. p. 3, Tit. iii. 2 sic recitat, ἦμεν μὲν ἦμέν ποτε καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀνόητοι, non quod τὸ ἦμεν bis ibi legeret, sed vocem rhetorum more ingeminat. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 4, p. 14, Luc. xx. 31 sic exhibet, ἐν γὰρ αἰῶνι τούτῳ φησὶ (sc. ὁ Χριστὸς) γαμοῦσι καὶ ἐκγαμίσκονται, ἐν ᾧ δὲ μόνῳ τὸ ἢλυ τοῦ ἄρρενος διακρίνεται, ἐν ἐκείνῳ δὲ οὐκέτι· cap. 5, p. 85, Matt. xix. 13, 14 sic legit, προσήνεγκάν τε αὐτῷ, φησὶ, παιδία εἰς χειροθεσίαν εὐλογίας· κωλυόντων δὲ τῶν γνωρίμων, εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς, et post decem lineas, Matt. xxi. 9 sic, εὐλογημένος ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, φῶς, καὶ δοξα, καὶ αἶνος, μεθ' ἱκετηρίας τῷ Κυρίῳ· cap. 6, p. 97, sic allegat 1 Cor. iii. 11, ὅτε ἦμην νήπιος ὡς νήπιος ἐφρόνουν, ἐκειδὴ εἰκόμην τῷ νομῷ· Ep. p. 88, hæc habet, ὁ ἀπόστολος ἐπιστέλλων πρὸς Κορινθίους, φησὶν, 1 Cor. xi. 2, ἡρμοσάμην γὰρ ὑμᾶς ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ παρθένον ἁγνὴν παραστῆσαι τῷ Χριστῷ, εἴτε ὡς νηπίους, καὶ ἁγίους, πλὴν ἀλλὰ τῷ μόνῳ Κυρίῳ· ibid. p. 99, his verbis, 1 Cor. iii. 3, ἐπεὶ γὰρ σαρκικοί ἐστε, addit, τὰ τῆς σαρκὸς φρονοῦντες, ἐπιθυμοῦντες, ἐρῶντες, ζηλοῦντες, μηνιῶντες, φθονοῦντες· cap. vii. p. 112, hæc habet, διό φησὶν ἡ γραφὴ (Joh. i. 17) ὁ νόμος διὰ Μώσεως ἐδόθη, οὐχὶ ὑπὸ Μώσεως, ἀλλὰ ὑπὸ μὲν τοῦ Λόγου, διὰ Μώσεως δὲ τοῦ Θεράποντος αὐτοῦ, διό καὶ πρόσκαιρος ἐγένετο, ἡ δὲ ἀΐδιος χάρις, καὶ ἀλήθεια, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐγένετο, cap. 9, p. 125, ex Matt. iii. 12, τὸ γὰρ πτῦον ἐν τῇ χειρὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, ᾧ ἀποκρίνεται τοῦ πυρὸς τὸ ἄχυρον τὸ ὀφειλόμενον τῷ πυρί. Lib. iii. cap. 12, p. 263, inter apostoli præcepta enumerat hoc, Eph. v. 1, γίνεσθε οὖν φρόνιμοι, καὶ μιμηταὶ Θεοῦ ὡς τέκνα ἀγαπητὰ (ubi τὸ φρόνιμοι inter variantes lectiones locum obtinet, licet omittat vocabulum illud idem Clem. Stro. iii. p. 431), et post sex lineas sequitur hoc præceptum ex v. 28, aut 33, ἀγαπάτωσαν οὖν ἀλλήλους οἱ συνεζευγμένοι ὡς τὰ ἴδια σώματα, de quo altum est apud Millium silentium. Lib. ii. cap. 1, p. 141, ὁ Κύριος λέγει γοῦν, Luc. xiv. 13, ὅταν ποιῇς δοχὴν, κάλει τοὺς πτωχοὺς, ἐφ' ᾧ μάλιστα δεῖπνον ποιητέον. Cap. ii. p. 156, εἰκότως οὖν ὁ ἀπόστολος ἐπιστέλλει, μὴ μεθύσκεσθε ἐν οἴνῳ, ᾧ ἐστιν ἀσωτία πολλή). Eph. v. 18, ubi variantes lectiones notat Millius, cap. 10, p. 197, ὡς φησὶν ὁ Παῦλος (1 Cor. vi. 15) οὐ χρὴ πόρνης μέλη ποιεῖν τὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ μέλη, οὐδὲ μὴν νεῶν τῶν παθῶν τῶν αἰσχρῶν, τὸν νεὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ποιητέον. Ibid. p. 201, ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ λέγει (Matt. xi. 8) ἰδοὺ οἱ ἐν τῷ ἱματισμῷ ἐνδόξῳ, καὶ ἐν τροφῇ διάγοντες, ἐν τοῖς βασιλείοις εἰσὶ ἐπιγείοις. Stro. i. p. 280, ὁ Κύριος μόνος γινώσκει τοὺς διαλογισμούς, ex 1 Cor. iii. 20: p. 289, εἴ τις μὴ προάρχεται ὑγιαίνουσι λόγοις, φησὶ (1 Tim. ix. 2), διδασκαλία δέ τινι τετύφλωται, &c.: p. 296, ex Col. ii. 8, βλέπετε μή τις ἔσται ὁ συλαγαγὼν ἀπὸ τῆς πίστεως τῆς εἰς τὸν Χριστὸν, διὰ τῆς φιλοσοφίας, p. 313, Ἰουδαῖοί φησι (1 Cor. i. 22), σημεῖα αἰτοῦσι πρὸς πίστιν, ubi observat Mill. σημεῖα esse pro σημεῖον, sed de additamento nihil, Stro. iii. p. 471, sic recitat Gal. ii. 20, ζῶ δὲ οὐκ ἔτι ἐγὼ, ὡς ἔζων κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, ζῇ δὲ ἐν ἐμοὶ Χριστὸς διὰ τῆς τῶν ἐντολῶν ὑπακοῆς, ἁγνῶς, καὶ μακαρίως· et Stro. iv. p. 379, "Mihi enim crucifixus est mundus, et ego mundo," βιῶ δὲ ἤδη ἐν σαρκὶ ὤν, ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ πολιτευόμενος. Vide bina additamenta ad Eph. iv. 21, 22, Pæd. lib. iii. cap. 3, p. 224, addit ad 2 Cor. xiii. 5, p. 225, ad Matt. v. 29, p. 251, ad 1 Pet. i. 17, p. 258, ad Hebr. xii. 6, Stro. ii. p. 360, ad 2 Cor. v. 12, Stro. iii. p. 452, ad Luc. xix. 8, Stro. iv. p. 488, ad 1 Cor. ix. 12, p. 513, ad Matt. xviii. 3, p. 538, ad Luc. viii. 8, Stro. v. p. 545, ad Joh. x. 16, Stro. vi. p. 668, denique ad 1 Cor. viii. 4, p. 695.

Origenes in Celsum, lib. vi. p. 278, sic ait, καὶ Ἰωάννης λέγει ὅτερ φῶς ἀληθινὸν φωτίζει πάντα ἀνθρωπον ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν ἀληθινὸν καὶ νοητὸν κόσμον, καὶ ποιεῖ αὐτὸν φῶς τῷ κόσμῳ. Lib. ii. p. 61, sic Christi verba refert, Luc. xxii. 27, ἐγὼ δὲ ἐγενόμην ἐν μέσῳ ὑμῶν, οὐχ ὡς ὁ ἀνακείμενος, ἀλλ' ὡς ὁ διακονῶν. Lib. i. p. 44, exemplum licentiæ quam sibi sumpsit tum in mutando, tum in addendo verba Dei. Sic, inquit, loquitur Gamaliel, Act. v. 38, ἐὰν ᾖ ἐξ ἀνθρώπων ἡ βουλὴ αὕτη, καὶ ὁ λόγος οὗτος (text. καὶ τὸ ἔργον τοῦτο), καταλυθήσεται· ὡς καὶ ἐκείνων κατελύθε ἀποθανόντων, ἐὰν δὲ ἐκ Θεοῦ (text. εἰ δὲ ἐκ Θεοῦ ἐστιν) οὐ δυνήσασθε (text. ἐύνασθε) καταλύσαι τὴν τούτου διδασκαλίαν (text. αὐτό).

Athanasius Alex. Hom. in "Omnia mihi tradita," p. 150, ad verba Matt. cap. xi. 28, addit tanquam Christi verba, "Venite ad me omnes——reficiam vos, παρεδόθη γάρ μοι ἵνα κοπιῶσαντας ἀναπαύσω, καὶ νεκρωθέντας ζωοποιήσω."

Ad 1 Pet. i. 14, addit cum multis aliis, τὸ τῆς ἀγνοίας. Epist. ad Serap. p. 200, Orat. ii. contra Arianos, p. 310, allegatis Judæorum verbis sub formula interrogandi, "Cur tu, homo cum sis, facis te Deum?" addit καὶ λέγεις, ἐγὼ καὶ ὁ πατὴρ ἓν ἐσμέν. Ibid. p. 314, verba, 1 Tim. iv. 1, sic recitat, "In novissimis temporibus ἀποστήσονταί τινες τῆς ἰδίας πίστεως τῆς ὑγιαινούσης," et p. 303, τῆς ἁγίας πίστεως, et p. 367, Joh. iii. 17 sic legit, "Non enim misit Deus filium suum in mundum ut judicet mundum," ἀλλ' ἵνα πάντα λυτρώσηται. Orat. iv. p. 478, his verbis, Rom. xi. 29, ἀμεταμέλητα γὰρ τὰ χαρίσματα τοῦ Θεοῦ, subjungit καὶ ἡ χάρις τῆς κλήσεως. Ibid. p. 480, quæstioni, Joh. vi. 42, "Quomodo ergo dicit quod de cœlo descendi?" præmittit πῶς λέγει πρὶν Ἀβραὰμ γενέσθαι ἐγὼ εἰμι. Orat. iv. p. 532, adducit tanquam verba Christi, Joh. xv. 22, εἰ γὰρ οὐκ ἤλθον—νῦν δὲ πρόφασιν οὐκ ἔχουσιν (supple περὶ τῆς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν) φησὶ ἀκηκόατε μου τῶν ῥημάτων δι' ὧν σωτηρίαν καρπίζονται οἱ φυλάσσοντες. In sermone de Salut. Adventu Christi, p. 640, sic recitat 1 Pet. iii. 19; ἐπορεύθη τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ κατακεκλεισμένοις πνεύμασιν εὐαγγελίσασθαι τὴν ἀνάστασιν. Ibid. p. 646, legit Joh. xvii. 5, δόξασόν με πάτερ τῇ ἀϊδίῳ δόξῃ. Serm. de Sabbato, et Circumcisione, p. 968, post συναφέντες αὐτῷ ἐν βαπτίσματι addit εἰς τὴν ἄδην.

Cyrillus Hierosol. citans 1 Cor. xii. 28, post γένη γλώσσων addit καὶ πάσης ἀρετῆς ἅπαν εἶδος. Catech. xviii. p. 222.

Apud Epiphanium sæpe Christum audias dicentem, Joh. v. 23, "Qui non honorificat filium sicut honorificat patrem, ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπ' αὐτὸν μένει." Ita Panar. p. 377, 884, 977: p. 516, iisdem verbis subjungit hæc, οὐκ ἔχει ζωὴν ἐν ἑαυτῷ. Ad 1 Joh. ii. 22, addit, p. 878, ὁ ὁμολογῶν τὸν υἱὸν, καὶ τὸν πατέρα ὁμολογεῖ. Addit Philip. ii. 11, καὶ πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξομολογήσηται ὅτι ὁ Κύριος, id est Χριστὸς, ὁ οὐκ ἀλλότριος Θεοῦ ὤν, ἀλλ' εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ πατρὸς, p. 972: p. 880, 1 Cor. ii. 17, pro ἃ καὶ λαλοῦμεν legit, ἐν ᾧ καὶ λαλοῦμεν, et deinde, ἐν ᾧ καὶ λατρεύομεν, καὶ προσκυνοῦμεν. Post τὰς χεῖράς μου καὶ τοὺς πόδας μου, Luc. xxiv. 39, addit, p. 1003, καὶ τοὺς τύπους τῶν ἥλων. Et p. 1055, 1 Tim. iv. 1, addit ἔσονται γὰρ νεκροῖς λατρεύοντες, at p. 296, et alibi, recitat eundem versiculum absque illo additamento.

Sanctus Basilius his verbis, εἷς Θεὸς ὁ πατὴρ, καὶ εἷς Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα, addit καὶ ἓν Πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐν ᾧ τὰ πάντα. Lib. ii. de Spiritu Sancto, cap. 2, tom. ii. p. 294, et tom. i. Hexam. p. 6, col. i. 16, addit εἴτε δυνάμεις, εἴτε ἀγγέλων στρατιαὶ, εἴτε ἀρχαγγέλων ἐπισπασίαι, forsan interpretamento horum verborum, τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ γῆς, quæ omittit.

Macarius Ægyptius in his additamentis præ cæteris abundat. Hom. ix. p. 5, 1 Cor. ii. 15, ὁ πνευματικὸς (φησὶ) γινώσκει ἕκαστον πόθεν λαλεῖ, ποῦ ἕστηκε καὶ ἐν ποίοις μέτροις ἐστίν. Hom. xii. p. 73, Martham introducit sic Christum alloquentem, Luc. x. 40, ἐγὼ κάμνω εἰς πολλὰ, καὶ αὐτὴ παρακαθέζεταί σοι. Hom. xiv. p. 75, legit 1 Cor. ix. 10, καὶ ὁ λαμβάνων γυναῖκα ἐπὶ ἐλπίδι τοῦ ἔχειν κληρονόμους. Matt. xix. 21, his verbis, "Vende quæ habes," addit μίσησον τὴν κοινωνίαν σαρκικὴν, δούλευσον τῷ Θεῷ. Ep. p. 211, addit Gal. iv. 2, ὑπὸ ὑποτρόπους καὶ οἰκονόμους τῶν πονηρῶν πνευμάτων. Vide similia ed. Paris. p. 88, 202, 236.

Theodoretus, Hær. Fab. p. 309, ad 1 Cor. vii. 7, θέλω γὰρ πάντας ἀνθρώπους εἶναι ὡς καὶ ἐμαυτὸν ἐν ἐγκρατείᾳ, ita enim explicat hæc verba in commentario suo. Idem eadem de causa fecit Chrysostomus, ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 12 et 385, et tom. iv. p. 539. Cum vero tantum legimus, Acts xiii. 46, στρεφόμεθα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, Theodoretus in Isa. xi. et orat. 10 adv. Gr. p. 639, legit καθαροὶ ἡμεῖς, ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν εἰς ἔθνη πορευσόμεθα. Cum editis tamen congruit Comment. in Jer. p. 170, legendo ἰδοὺ στρεφόμεθα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη.

Denique verbis Christi, Matt. xix. 17, εἰ μὴ εἷς ὁ Θεὸς, adjiciunt patres primævi nunc ὁ ποιήσας πάντα, Just. M. Apol. 2, p. 63, alias ὁ πατὴρ μου ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, Dial. Cum Tryph. p. 328, Clem. Alex. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 8, p. 118, et Iren. lib. i. cap. 17, alias simpliciter ὁ πατήρ. Orig. Exhort. ad Martyr. p. 169, Com. in Joh. p. 38, et p. 60, et contra Cels. lib. v. p. 238.

SECTIO QUARTA.

Multa verba sæpe et periodos omittunt patres, aut saltem contrahunt reclamantibus suis exemplaribus, ex eo quod forsan quibusdam illa locis superflua videbantur (sicut Millio centies in ore est) vel nihil ad rem facere, vel quod posita essent in parenthesi, vel quod bis in eadem reposita periodo, vel propter aliam quamlibet causam. V. g.

Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 8, p. 158, legit Matt. xi. 19, ἦλθεν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, καὶ λέγουσιν, præterito ἐσθίων, καὶ πίνων, sed Stro. iii. p. 448, legit hæc verba; Stro. ii. p. 368, habet hæc verba, πιστέον τῇ γραφῇ, S. Matt. xix. 24, Θᾶττον κάμηλον διὰ τρυπήματος βελόνης διελεύσεσθαι, ἢ πλούσιον φιλοσοφεῖν. Ibid. p. 381, sic recitat Matt. xvii. 20, ἐὰν ἔχητε πίστιν ὡς κόκκον σινάπεως, μεταστήσετε τὸ ὄρος. P. 389, ὃ γὰρ ἐπιθυμήσας, ἤδη μεμοίχευκε, φησίν. Matt. v. 28, p. 391, ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν (Joh. xv. 11) ἵνα ἡ χαρὰ ἐμὴ πληρωθῇ, mediis, ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ καὶ ἡ χαρὰ ὑμῶν, Stro. iii. p. 438. Πᾶς γὰρ ὁ ἁμαρτάνων δοῦλός ἐστιν, ὁ ἀπόστολος λέγει, nimirum, opinor, ex Rom. vi. 16, ubi sensus fere idem est, verba tamen diversa. P. 440, sic se habet Luc. xii. 58, μήποτε παραδῷ σε κριτῇ, ὁ κριτὴς δὲ τῷ ὑπηρέτῃ τῆς ἀρχῆς διαβάλῳ. Stro. iv. p. 480, ὁ Κύριος ἐν εὐαγγελίῳ φησιν (Marc. x. 29) ὃς ἂν καταλείψῃ πατέρα——ἕνεκεν εὐαγγελίου, καὶ τοῦ ὀνόματός μου, μακάριος οὗτος. Vide etiam Stro. iv. p. 529, vi. p. 644, 662. Ecce hominem qui Millio judice raro quicquam prætermittit.

Cyrillus Hieros. Joh. i. 3, omittit ὃ γέγονεν. Catech. vi. p. 50, et Luc. ii. 11, σωτὴρ ὅς ἐστι, Catech. x. p. 86.

Epiphanius in Anchorato, p. 61, legit Act. xxvii. 37, ὡς ὀγδοήκοντα ψυχαί, et p. 83, ὡς ψυχαὶ ἑβδομήκοντα. Textus autem αἱ πᾶσαι ψυχαὶ διακόσιαι ἑβδομήκοντα ἓξ, numerum sc. majorem prætermittit, et in minori a se ipso dissentit. In Hæresi Manichæorum, p. 679, parabolam zizaniorum recitat ex Matt. xiii. a v. 24 ad 31, ubi ut missa faciam minutiora illa a Millio notata, primo pro ἀνθρώπῳ σπείροντι καλὸν σπέρμα ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ αὐτοῦ, habet ἀνθρώπῳ οἰκοδεσπότῃ ὃς ἔσπειρε τὸν ἀγρὸν αὐτοῦ καλὸν σπέρμα. Secundo omittit, ἅνα μέσον τοῦ σίτου καὶ ἀπῆλθεν, v. 25, una cum toto versiculo sequenti. Tertio, v. 27, addit, ὁ δὲ ἔφη ναί, sc. pro "non," in quo sensu nunquam occurrit apud s. scripturam. Quarto, Christum introducit messoribus dicentem, δήσατε ἐσμὰς, καὶ ἑτοιμάζετε τὰ ζιζάνια εἰς κατακαῆναι πυρὶ ἀσβέστῳ. In Hær. Catharorum, p. 494, recitat, Heb. vi. a v. 4 ad 8, ubi deest, v. 7, ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, ait Millius, et v. 6, εἰς μετάνοιαν, et v. 4, γευσαμένους τῆς ὠρεᾶς τοῦ ἐπουρανίου, καὶ μετόχους γεννηθέντας Πνεύματος ἁγίου, de quibus nihil Millius.

Sanctus Basilius ter repetit verba Christi, Matt. xxviii. 19, ad hunc modum, πορευθέντες βαπτίζετε εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ πατρός, viz. lib. i. contra Eunom. p. 714, lib. iii. p. 752, 758, sed quater cum excusis convenit, legens, πορευθέντες μαθητεύσατε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη βαπτίζοντες αὐτοὺς, &c. viz. tom. i. p. 549, 560, tom. ii. p. 423, 479.

Hoc sæpissime accidit cum eadem verba bis in eadem periodo reperiuntur. Ita Origenes, hom. 11, in Jer. p. 113, verba Christi sic profert, Matt. x. 34, μὴ νομίζετε ὅτι ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰρήνην——ἀλλὰ μάχαιραν, præterita, posteriori illo ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰρήνην. Com. in Joh. p. 169, omittit ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, Marc. xi. 10, quia occurrit in fine versiculi præcedentis. Cyrillus Alex. sic allegat 2 Cor. v. 15, εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν, ἄρα οἱ πάντες ἀπέθανον——ἵνα οἱ ζῶντες, omisso, καὶ ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν quod dictum fuit prius Thesaur. 278. Et de Ador. Sp. p. 351. Chrysostomus, ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 10 et 19, citat Luc. vi. 36 sic, γίνεσθε οὖν οἰκτίρμονες ὡς ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ex Matt. iv. 48. Sic Act. vi. 13, omittit βλάσφημα in commentario suo quia lectum est, v. 11. Hujus generis exempla multa occurrunt apud ipsius Commentaria in Psalmos, et apud Millii prolegomena, et varias lectiones.

Frequenter etiam omittuntur verba quæ in parenthesi collocantur, sic Act. xii. 3, a Chrysostomo omissa sunt ἦσαν δὲ ἡμέραι τῶν ἀζύμων. Sic 1 Cor. xv. 3, ὃ καὶ παρέλαβον, ab Irenæo, lib. iii. cap. 20, p. 246, a Tertulliano, lib. iii. contra Marcion, cap. 8, et Hilario P. omittuntur. Quanquam ergo agnoscant hæc verba versiones, Græcique scholiastæ ad unum omnes, utpote ἐμφατικώτερα, si Millium tamen audias, Prol. p. 47, col. 2, commentarius est ex v. 1, et p. 81, col. 1, vox explicatoria de margine est mixta cum Italicæ genuinis.

Nihil etiam apud patres usitatius quam in citandis scripturis, quæ procœmii aut præfationis loco habentur prætermittere. Ita Origenes, περὶ Εὐχῆς, p. 87, 88, omittit ἀμὴν, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, Joh. vi. 53, incipiens ab ἐὰν μὴ φάγητε, et v. 53, ἐγώ εἰμι ἄρτος τῆς ζωῆς, absque εἶπε δὲ αὐτοῖς, et Chrysostomus, ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 756, in unum confundit Col. iv. 4, Eph. vi. 20, quod tamen in utraque epistola est, ὡς δεῖ με λαλῆσαι, negligit.

Hoc etiam crebro contingit in clausula periodi, ubi patres decurtant, et amputant verba quæ ad rem suam minime pertinent. V. g. Cyrillus Alex. Thes. p. 163, ut probaret secundam in sancta Trinitate personam meram creaturam non fuisse, citat Eph. ii. 10, αὐτοῦ γάρ ἐσμεν ποίημα κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, abscissis ἐπὶ ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς, utpote ad argumentum nihil facientibus. Et p. 169, filium non esse creaturam probat ex 1 Cor. viii. 6, εἷς Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα, prætermittentes καὶ ἡμεῖς δι' αὐτοῦ, utpote in prioribus inclusa. Chrysostomus, ed. Morel. tom. iii. p. 41, sic allegat Eph. iv. 13, μέχρι καταντήσωμεν οἱ πάντες εἰς ἄνδρα τέλειον εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας, præteritis τοῦ πληρώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ in fine, et duabus pericopis in medio versiculi.

Non raro etiam omittunt quæ superflua illis videbantur, præsertim cum sint idiotismi Hebraici in usu frequenti apud LXX. Interpretes. Ita Joh. vi. 2, "Sequebatur eum multitudo magna, ὅτι ἑώρων αὐτοῦ τὰ σημεῖα ἃ ἐποίει," αὐτοῦ, deest in versionibus antiquis, Chrysost. Cyril. Chron. Alex. nempe quia superfluum videbatur. Esse tamen pleonasmum Hebraicum constat. Vide Buxtorf. Gram. p. 412. Sic 1 Pet. ii. 24, οὗ τῷ μώλωπι αὐτοῦ ἰάθητε, τὸ οὗ deest. Sic Joh. vi. 9, παιδάριον ἓν ὧδε, deest ἓν quia παρέλκει. Sic v. 15, deest πάλιν MSS. quibusdam et versionibus, Chrysostomo, et Nonno: res tamen ipsa minime dubia est, siquidem subiit in eundem montem Jesus, v. 3. Sic v. 22, "Navicula alia non erat ibi nisi una εἰ μὴ ἓν ἐκεῖνο," ubi a Chrysost. et MSS. aliquibus ἐκεῖνο omissum existimat Lucas Brug. quod in eis δ quod sequitur, satis significetur. Sic Joh. vii. 3, "Ut videant discipuli tui τὰ ἔργά σου ἃ ποιεῖς," omittunt σου Chrysost. Cyril. Theophyl. ob eandem causam. Act. iv. 17, ἀπειλῇ ἀπειλησώμεθα, quo idiotismo vehementiam exprimunt Hebræi. Qui hoc non intelligebant, ἀπειλῇ omiserunt. Luc. i. 75, πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας τῆς ζωῆς ἡμῶν, Vulg. et Syr. omittunt τῆς ζωῆς, utpote in reliquis inclusum. Cap. xiv. 18, ὅταν κληθῇς εἰς γάμους, ὑπό τινος omisso, qui enim invocatus fuerit ad cœnam, ab aliquo ut vocetur necesse est. Cap. xix. 2, ὁ ἀνὴρ ὀνόματι καλούμενος Ζακχαῖος, deest καλούμενος. Hinc ipse Millius agnoscit hoc vel illud vocabulum crebro omitti ut supervacaneum.

Denique, contingit nonnunquam, ipsis patribus id indicantibus, quod quidam inter eos dedita opera omiserint verbæ aliqua ex vano timore, ne sanæ doctrinæ obesse, aut hæreticæ pravitati patrocinari videantur: sic quoniam quidam sentiebant, fletum, cum singultu, Christi personæ haud bene convenisse, et tamen flevisse eum, cum videret Hierosolymam, legimus, Luc. xix. 41, et post mortem Lazari, Joh. xi. 35. "Hæc loca," inquit Grotius, "male olim solicitata ab iis qui Christum nobis stoicum effingere voluerunt." Sit autem hoc incertum, utpote quod fidei unius Epiphanii innitatur, cujus verba in alium sensum trahit Grabius, et post illum Millius, quem ægre, me judice, ferunt. Certo tamen certius est totum illud. Luc. xxii. 43, 44, ab orthodoxis quibusdam omissum fuisse, metuentibus ne in malam illud partem hæretici interpretarentur, aut quia pusilli videbatur animi in tanta fuisse agonia Christum formidine mortis, ut sudor ejus esset sicut guttæ sanguinis. Hinc Hieronymus, lib. ii. adv. Pelagian, f. 103, lit. F, hæc habet, "In quibusdam exemplaribus [N. B. tam Græcis, quam Latinis,] invenitur, scribere Lucam, Apparuit illi angelus de cœlo confortans eum, et factus in agonia, prolixius orabat, et factus est sudor ejus sicut guttæ sanguinis decidentis in terram." "In quibusdam," inquit, "invenitur," in multis ergo defuit. Hilarius de Trin. lib. x. p. 253, in eandem sententiam loquitur his verbis, "Nec sane ignorandum a nobis est, et in Græcis et in Latinis codicibus quamplurimis, vel de adveniente angelo, vel de sudore sanguinis nil scriptum reperiri." Epiphanius hoc plenius agnoscit, in Anchorato; cum enim dixerit, corpus suum dedit Christus percutientibus, et faciem suam non avertit a conspuentibus, addit, p. 36, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐκλαυσε, κεῖται ἐν τῷ μετὰ Λοῦκαν εὐαγγελίῳ, ἐν τοῖς ἀδιορθώτοις ἀντιγράφοις, καὶ κέχρηται τῇ μαρτυρίᾳ ὁ ἅγιος Εἰρηναῖος ἐν τῷ κατ' Αἱρέσεων πρὸς τοὺς ὀκνήσει τὸν Χριστὸν πεφηνέναι λέγοντας, "Sed in Evangelii Lucæ exemplaribus non correctis habetur quod flevit, eoque testimonio utitur Irenæus contra eos qui Christum specie tantum apparuisse dicebant," ὀρθόδοξοί εἰ ἀφείλοντο τὸ ῥητόν, ζοβηθέντες, καὶ μὴ νοήσαντες αὐτοῦ τὸ τέλος, καὶ τὸ ἰσχνρότατον, καὶ γινόμενος ἐν ἀγωνίᾳ ἠρώσε, καὶ ἐγένετο ὁ ἱδρὼς αὐτοῦ ὡς θρόμβοι αἵματος, καὶ ὤφθη ἄγγελος ἐνισχύων αὐτόν. Vide Millium, Proleg. p. 101, col. 2.

SECTIO QUINTA.

Quinto, innumeræ e patribus Græcis depromptæ citationes, in quibus a recepta lectione aliquantulum discedunt, ad mutandam receptam lectionem eo minus autoritatis habent, quod iidem alias aliter legunt, et plerumque cum editis conveniunt. Ex. gr.

Clemens Al. Christi verba, Matt. vi. 33, Stro. iv. p. 488, sic recitat, ζητεῖτε πρῶτον τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν, καὶ τὴν δικαιοσύνην, καὶ τὰ περὶ βίον προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν, Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 10, p. 198, sic, ζητεῖτε τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ τὰ τῆς τροφῆς, &c., cap. 12, p. 207, ζητεῖτε πρῶτον τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ ταῦτα πάντα, ubi in prima et tertia citatione habet βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν, in secunda, τοῦ Θεοῦ juxta textum, in tertia retinet πάντα ταῦτα, in prima et secunda mutat in τὰ περὶ βίον, et τὰ τῆς προφῆς. In secunda deest πρῶτον, in secunda et tertia δικαιοσύνην, quæ tamen apud primam occurrunt. Hæc ipsa verba Theodoretus decies ad minimum repetit editis congruentia, at Comment. in Ps. cii. reperias, καὶ ταῦτα πάντα ἐκ περισσοῦ προστεθήσεται, hinc autem constat, immerito a locis ad hunc modum citatis receptam lectionem solicitari.

Verba Matthæi, cap. xi. 27, sic se habent, "Nemo novit filium nisi pater, οὐδὲ τὸν πατέρα τις ἐπιγινώσκει εἰ μὴ ὁ υἱός," quæ verba cum allegaverit Marcion sic, οὐδεὶς ἔγνω, judice Irenæo, lib. i. cap. 17, p. 88, et lib. iv. cap. 14, legendum fuit οὐδεὶς γινώσκει, ut lectum est a Justino, Dial. p. 326. Is tamen, in Apol. 2, ed Ox. §. 82, 83, legit οὐδεὶς ἔγνω τὸν πατέρα, unde Grabius, notis in Iren. p. 300, ait, "Mirum autem quod Justinus, Apol. I, p. 122, verba Christi citaverit perinde ac hæretici legerunt;" sed decrescet mirandi causa si recordemur hæc ad eundem modum citata esse a Clem. Alex. Protrept. p. 8, Pædag. lib. i. cap. 5, p. 89, et Stro. i. p. 355, ab Orig. Com. in Joh. p. 264, 416, et contra Cels. lib. ii. p. 104, et lib. vii. p. 361. Eusebius contra Marcel. Ancyr. lib. i. cap. 12, p. 72, habet μηδεὶς ἔγνω τὸν πατέρα, εἰ μὴ ὁ υἱός, &c. 15, p. 76, οὐδεὶς οἶδε, et in eadem pagina οὐδεὶς ἐπιγινώσκει. Et cap. 16, p. 77, οὐδεὶς ἔγνω. Et p. 78, οὐδεὶς οἶδε. Sicut etiam Basilius, tom. i. contra Eunom. p. 714, 770. Similiter Epiphanius in Anchorato, p. 16, 25, 71, legit οὐδεὶς οἶδε, sed p. 78, οὐδεὶς ἔγνω. L. de Hæres. p. 466, 532, 613, 766, 891, 943, 977, legit οὐδεὶς οἶδε, sed p. 898, οὐδεὶς ἔγνω. Clemens Al. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 5, p. 88, verba Pauli, Eph. iv. 13, sic refert, μέχρι καταντήσωμεν οἱ πάντες εἰς τὸν ἑνότητα τῆς πίστεως, καὶ ἐπιγνώσεως Θεοῦ, ubi, adnotante Millio, deest τοῦ υἱοῦ. Sed Stro. iv. p. 527, diserte dicit, καὶ τῆς ἐπιγνώσεως τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Origenes contra Cels. lib. v. p. 273, legit 1 Tim. iv. 2, κεκαυτηριασμένων τὴν οἰκείαν συνείδησιν, quæ inter variantes lectiones locum occupat. Idem tamen, Com. in Matt. p. 357 et 400, legit τὴν ἰδίαν συνείδησιν, juxta textum, lib. i. contra Cels. p. 2, legit Rom. viii. 35, "Quis nos separabit ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Θεοῦ;" sed Com. in Matt. p. 357, 358, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ut se habet textus. Ibid. p. 40, sic recitat Matt. xxviii. 13, εἶπατε ὅτε οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, ἡμῶν κοιμωμένων νυκτός, ἔκλεψαν αὐτόν. Sed Com. in Joh. p. 357, ἐλθόντες νυκτὸς ἔκλεψαν αὐτὸν, ἡμῶν κοιμωμένων. Lib. i. p. 47, Joh. xviii. 36, νυνὶ δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου τούτου ἡ βασιλεία ἡ ἐμὴ, sed Com. in Joh. p. 21, ἐντεῦθεν perinde ac in textu. Lib. ii. p. 56, legit Act. x. 9, ἀνέβη ὁ Πετρὸς εἰς τὸ ὑπερῷον, sed Com. in Jer. p. 177, εἰς τὸ δῶμα ut edit. Ibid. p. 58, legit Gal. iv. 21, λέγετέ μοι οἱ τὸν νόμον ἀναγινώσκοντες, sed Philoc. p. 10, et Com. in Joh. p. 428, οἱ ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον θέλοντες εἶναι ut ibi apostolus: omittit 1 Cor. viii. 6, καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς αὐτόν. Lib. viii. contra Cels. sc. ibi, p. 381, uncis hæc inclusa sunt, sed reperies illa verba absque uncis, lib. iv. p. 179. Orig. contra Celsum, inquit Millius, legit 2 Thess. ii. 3, ἀνθρωπος ἀνομίας, p. 98, nempe quia sic scriptum est in margine, sed legit ἁμαρτίας, lib. vi. p. 307, et Com. in Matt. p. 347, et in Joh. p. 76. Legit, inquit Millius, οἶδα, lib. vi. p. 307; at hoc factum est oscitantia librarii. Legit enim οἴδατε, lib. ii. p. 89. Legite quidem πέμπει p. 307, sed πέμψει p. 90. Legit ἅπαντες p. 307, ubi in margine adnotantur novem variantes lectiones, sed Com. in Joh. p. 76, πάντες. Com. in Joh. p. 135, legit Joh. vi. 50, ζήσει εἰς αἰῶνα, sed Com. in Matt. p. 254, ζήσεται. In eodem versiculo omittit ὃν ἐγὼ δώσω, ex more patrum, ubi eadem verba bis occurrunt, sed eadem legit bis περὶ Εὐνῆς, p. 88. Com. in Joh. p. 164, legit Joh. vi. 55, ἡ σάρξ μου ἐστὶ ἀληθῶς βρῶσις, τὸ αἷμά μου ἀληθῶς πόσις, sed Com. in Matt. 417, ἀληθῶς utrobique. Com. in Matt. p. 291, legit ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ αὐτοῦ, καὶ τῇ δόξῃ αὐτοῦ, sed p. 294, absque illo additamento. Utque hujusmodi multa intacta prætercam, Com. in Matt. p. 324, legit Marc. ix. 36, ἓν τῶν παιδίων, sed intra paucas lineas ἓν τοιούτων παιδίων. Matt. xi. 22, legit ἀνεκτότερον ἔσται ἢ ὑμῖν, Philoc. p. 109, et Com. in Ex. tom. i. p. 25, sed Com. in Matt. p. 327, addit ἐν ἡμέρᾳ τῆς κρίσεως. Com. in Joh. p. 253, legit Joh. i. 33, οὗτος ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, sed commentario eodem, p. 58, 76, 93, 133, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ βαπτίζων Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, juxta textum.

Ad hunc modum sæpissime a seipso differt Epiphanius. V. g. in Hær. Nazar. p. 114, legit Gal. v. 4, οἵτινες ἐν νόμῳ καυχᾶσθε, cum in Hær. Cerinth. p. 113, legisset δικαιοῦσθε, ut etiam infra, Hæres. Dimær. p. 1032. Anchor. p. 8, bis legit Joh. v. 31, "Si ego testimonium perhibeo de meipso," ἡ μαρτυρία οὐδέν ἐστιν, sed Hær. 65, p. 614, οὐκ ἔστιν ἀληθὴς, pariter ac in textu. Anchor. p. 22, legit 1 Cor. xii. 8, ὁ λόγος διδασκαλίας, et Hær. 69, p. 782, διδασκαλία, sed Anchor. p. 77, legit ὁ λόγος γνώσεως, juxta receptam lectionem. Anchor. p. 67, legit Tit. ii. 11, ἐπεφάνη ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σωτήριος διδάσκουσα ἡμᾶς, sed p. 74, legit ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σωτήριος παιδεύουσα ἡμᾶς, ut textus se habet. Anchor. p. 75, legit Rom. ix. 20, σύ τις εἶ ὁ ἀντιλεγόμενος τῷ Θεῷ, alibi vero cum textu ἀνταποκρινόμενος.

Gregorius Nyssenus, hom. vii. in Eccles. p. 444, recitat Joh. xiv. 30, ἐν ἐμοὶ εὑρίσκει τῶν ἰδίων οὐδέν· sed alibi omittit τῶν ἰδίων, hom. i. in Cant. p. 492. Paulo de seipso fatenti quod blasphemus fuit, et persecutor, et contumeliosus, addit, καὶ μέλας, explicans sc. illa verba, Cant. i. 5, μέλαινά εἰμι, καὶ καλὴ, sed eadem omittit, hom. xiii. p. 669. Sic tom. i. p. 856, allegat Rom. viii. 29, πρωτότοκος, ἀντὶ σπορᾶς, ἐν τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, sed tom. ii. p. 24 et 213, additamentum illud non agnoscit.

Cyril. Alex. addit 1 Cor. viii. 7, καὶ ἓν Πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἐν ᾧ τὰ πάντα, de Ador. Spir. p. 185, sed crebro etiam cum divinam Sancti Spiritus naturam asserebat, versiculum absque illa clausula allegat, scil. lib. v. par. ii. p. 117, 169, in Isaiam, p. 539, de Recta Fide, p. 47. In libro de Ador. p. 26, sic citat 1 Cor. xii. 3, "Nemo dicit Jesum anathema nisi in Βεελζεβούβ." Et sic passim alibi, ut in Thesauro suo, p. 346, et lib. de Recta Fide, p. 64, legit cum textu οὐδεὶς ἐν Πνεύματι Θεοῦ λαλῶν. De Ador. Sp. p. 359, legit 1 Cor. ix. 8, μὴ στρουθίων μέλει τῷ Θεῷ, sed p. 99, 130, 247, habet τῶν βοῶν, sicut textus. P. 404, legit Jacob. i. 17, πᾶν δώρημα ἀγαθὸν, καὶ πᾶσα εὐλογία, ἄνωθέν ἐστι κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον· sed de Recta Fide, p. 76, Glaph. in Gen. p. 205, Com. in Amos. p. 315, cum editis congruit. Lib. ix. contra Julianum, p. 319, D, Petri verbis, Act. x. 14, addit οὐδὲ εἰσῆλθεν εἰς στόμα μου πᾶν κρέας βέβηλον, sed receptam lectionem exhibet, Com. in Hos. p. 12. In Hab. p. 568, recitat Matt. xiii. 52, "Similes est" ἀνθρώπῳ πλουσίῳ, et sic alibi: sed Glaph. in Exod. p. 292. Com. in Zech. p. 745, 781, ἀνθρώπῳ οἰκοδεσπότῃ. Com. in Zech. p. 669, legit μέλη ἐκ μέλους, 1 Cor. xii. 21, sed p. 692, ἐκ μέρους. Quæstio Christi ad divitem, Matt. xix. 17, sic allegatur, Thes. p. 310, τί με ἐρωτᾷς περὶ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ; sed p. 346, τί με λεγεις ἀγαθόν; Glaph. in Gen. p. 8, citat Joh. vii. 39, οὔπω γὰρ ἦν Πνεῦμα ἅγιον, ut jam in impressis: sed p. 145, habet οὔπω γὰρ ἦν Πνεῦμα, sicut plerique veterum.

SECTIO SEXTA.

Obtinuit etiam mos iste inter primævos patres, ut plurimas s. scripturæ portiunculas, diversis temporibus, diversis de causis, et a diversis evangelistis memoratas, tanquam a Christo simul prolatas congererent, idque iis sub verbis quæ ῥητῶς nullibi apud N. Test. occurrunt. V. g.

Clemens Rom. Ep. 1 ad Cor. §. 48, hæc habet, "Recordamini verborum Jesu Domini nostri, εἶπε γὰρ οὐαὶ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ ἐκείνῳ, καλὸν ἦν αὐτῷ εἰ μὴ ἐγεννήθη, ἢ ἕνα τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι, κρεῖττον ἦν αὐτῷ περιτεθῆναι μύλον, καὶ καταποντισθῆναι εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, ἢ ἕνα τῶν μικρῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι," ubi, teste Cotelerio, notis in Ep. Clem. p. 98, multa testimonia in unum conjungit, nempe Matt. xxvi. 24, Luc xvii. 2, Matt. xviii. 6, quod antiquis non insolens fuit. Si quis autem inspiceret locos a Cotelerio citatos, inter Clementem R. et evangelistas permultum interesse discriminis comperiet. Præterea hæc ipsa verba a Clemente Al. citantur, Stro. iii. p. 472, parvo admodum facto discrimine, nempe, pro ἵνα τῶν μικρῶν μου σκανδαλίσαι, legit ἵνα τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν μου διαστρέψαι. In Dialogo contra Marcion. §. 1, p. 25, sic legimus, "Christus ipse in Judam sententiam tulit, dicens, σὺαὶ τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ ἐκ' οὗ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου παραδίδοται· συμφέρει αὐτῷ εἰ μὴ ἐγεννήθη, ἢ γεννηθέντα μύλῳ ὀνικῷ προστεθῆναι, καὶ καταποντισθῆναι ἐν τῷ βάθει τῆς θαλάσσης."

In eadem epistola §. 13, "Memores sitis," inquit Clemens R. "sermonum Domini Jesu—οὕτως γὰρ εἶπεν, ἐλεεῖτε ἵνα ἐλεεθῆτε, ἀφίετε, ἵνα ἀφεθῇ ὑμῖν, ὡς ποιεῖτε οὕτω ποιηθήσεται ὑμῖν, ὡς δίδοτε οὕτω δοθήσεται ὑμῖν, ὡς κρίνετε οὕτω κριθήσεται ὑμῖν, ὡς χρηστεύεσθε οὕτως χρηστευθήσεται ὑμῖν," ubi margini inscribit Cotelerius, Luc. vi. 56. Sed sicut ibi, ὡς et οὕτως non extant, ita per totum illud caput nihil extat quod quibusdam ex his similitudinibus apte respondeat. Hanc tamen sententiam paululum immutatam reperias in Polycarpi Ep. ad Philip. §. 2da, et in Clemente Al. Stro. ii. p. 399, mutato tantum ἐλεεῖτε in ἐλεᾶτε. Idem Clemens Al. Stro. i. p. 295, tres scripturæ locos in unum confundit, ἵνα μὴ πεποιθότες ὦμεν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῷ Θεῷ τῷ ἐγείροντι τοὺς νεκροὺς, ὁ ἀπόστολός φησιν, ὃς ἐκ τηλικαύτου θανάτου ἐρρύσατο ἡμᾶς (2 Cor. i. 9, 10), ἵνα ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν μὴ ᾖ ἐν σοφίᾳ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει τοῦ Θεοῦ (1 Cor. ii. 15), ὁ γὰρ πνευματικὸς ἀνακρίνει πάντα, &c. (v. 15).

Origenes in Matthæum, p. 357, 359, et in Joh. p. 402, Judæos dicit εἰρηκέναι ἐπ' αὐτῷ de Christo dixisse, αἶρε ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς τοιοῦτον, σταυροῦ, σταυροῦ αὐτόν, de quibus confer Act. xxii. 22 cum Luc. xxiii. 18, et Joh. xix. 15. In Philoc. p. 2, citat e Matt. vii. 22 hæc, πολλοί ἐροῦσί μοι— οὐ τῷ ὀνόματί σου ἐφάγομεν, καὶ τῷ ὀνόματί σου ἐπίομεν, καὶ τῷ ὀνόματί σου δαιμόνια ἐξεβάλομεν, καὶ ἐρῶ αὐτοῖς, ἀποχωρεῖτε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ οἱ ἐργαζόμενοι τὴν ἀνομίαν. Lib. ii. contra Cels. p. 88, addit post ἐξεβάλομεν, καὶ δυνάμεις πολλὰς ἐποιήσαμεν, καὶ ἐρῶ αὐτοῖς ὅτι ἐστὲ ἐργάται ἀδικίας. Com. in Joh. p. 293, iisdem verbis adjicit, οὐδέποτε ἔγνων ὑμᾶς, καὶ τὸ οὐκ οἶδα πόθεν ἐστὲ, conjunctis sic Matt. vii. 22, 23 cum Luc. xii. 26, 37, quoad sensum, non quoad verba. Tom. i. p. 38, sic recitat Luc. xi. 52, "Væ vobis jurisperitis ὅτι ἤρατε τὴν κλεῖδα τῆς γνώσεως, αὐτοὶ οὐκ εἰσήλθετε καὶ τοὺς εἰσερχομένους οὐκ ἀφίετε εἰσελθεῖν," periodum claudens cum verbis Christi, Matt. xxiii. 13, sed Philoc. p. 8, editis congruit——Sic Com. in Joh. p. 30, Christum allegat dicentem, Joh. xv. 15, οὐκέτι ὑμᾶς λέγω δούλους, ὅτι ὁ δοῦλος οὐκ οἶδέ τι τὸ θέλημα τοῦ κυρίου αὐτοῦ (text. τί ποιεῖ ὁ κύριος αὐτοῦ) ἀλλ' ἐγὼ ὑμᾶς φίλους λέγω (text. ὑμᾶς δὲ εἴρηκα φίλους) ὅτι διαμεμενήκατε μετ' ἐμοῦ ἐν πᾶσι πειρασμοῖς μου, quæ occurrunt Luc. xxii. 21, absque πᾶσι. Ita Com. in Joh. p. 413, conjungit Colos. i. 20, ii. 15.

Cyrillus Alex. sic recitat 1 Pet. ii. 5, καὶ ὑμεῖς ὡς λίθοι ζῶντες ἐποικοδομεῖσθε οἶκος πνευματικὸς, addens ex Eph. ii. 21, 22, εἰς ναὸν ἅγιον, εἰς οἰκητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Πνεύματι. In lib. primo de Sancta Trin. ait, "Cum Christus in forma Dei esset, formam servi accepit, ἵνα ἀποκαταλλάξῃ τὰ πάντα, κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον, εἰρηνοποιήσας διὰ τοῦ σταύρου, τὰ ἐν οὐρανοῖς, τά τε ἐπὶ γῆς, μεσιτεύων καὶ ἀνθρώποις, δεόμενα γοῦν ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, καταλλάγητε τῷ Θεῷ," ubi coacervantur Phil. ii. 6, 7, Colos. i. 20, 1 Tim. ii. 5, 2 Cor. v. 10. Quod si hoc pro prudentia sua diligentius animadvertisset Millius, non ita præter modum crevissent variantes istæ lectiones, quarum trecentæ non aliud sunt quam voces sacræ scripturæ ab uno evangelista aut apostolo in alterum a patribus translatæ.

Denique plurima quæ a patribus primorum seculorum tanquam e s. scriptura recitantur, desumpta reperias aut ex adulterinis evangeliis, aut ex apocryphis: ita de Clemente R. qui post apostolos primus aliquid literis mandavit, ingenue fatetur Millius, Proleg. p. 16, col. 2, quod in Epistola prima ad Corinthios, et posterioris, si quidem ejus sit, fragmento, nonnulla adducit ex evangeliis, quæ jam ante nostram editionem Christianis in usu fuerant, nonnulla et e nostris, ut apparet, sed omnino mixtim, et confuse, ita ut vix, ac ne vix quidem, noris ex verbis ejus ad quodnam e nostris potissimum respexerit. Paucis exemplis satis hoc confirmare possumus. V. g.

Clemens R. Ep. 2, §. 4, Christi verba, Matt. vii. 21, ad hunc modum recitat: "Non omnis qui dicit mihi, Domine, σωθήσεται, ἀλλὰ ὁ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην." Nam εἶπεν ὁ Θεὸς (v. 23, aut Luc. xiii. 17) ἐὰν ἦτε μετ' ἐμοῦ συνηγμένοι ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ μου, καὶ μὴ ποιεῖτε τὰς ἐντολάς μου, ἀποβαλῶ ὑμᾶς, καὶ ἐρῶ ὑμῖν, ἀπάγετε ἀπ' ἐμοῦ, καὶ τὰ καθ' ἑξῆς. Sect. quinta, miram quandam Petri responsionem narrat ad Christi verba: "Ecce ego mitto vos, sicut oves in medio luporum. Ἀποκριθεὶς δὲ ὁ Πέτρος αὐτῷ λέγει, ἐὰν οὖν διασπαράξωσι οἱ λύκοι τὰ ἀρνία, Quid si lupi agnos discerpserint? εἶπεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς τῷ Πέτρῳ, μὴ φοβείσθωσαν τὰ ἀρνία τοὺς λύκους μετὰ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν αὐτὰ, καὶ ὑμεῖς μὴ φοβεῖσθε τοὺς ἀποκτείνοντας ὑμᾶς, καὶ μηδὲν ὑμῖν δυναμένους ποιεῖν," &c. Luc. xii. 4, 5. "Hæc," ait Cotelerius, "deprompsit ex apocryphis." §. 8, hæc habet, λέγει γὰρ ὁ Κύριος ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ, εἰ τὸ μικρὸν οὐκ ἐτηρήσατε, τὸ μέγα τις ὑμῖν δώσει; Irenæus pariter, lib. ii. cap. 64, p. 199, "Similiter Dominus dixit ingratis in eum existentibus, 'Si in modico fideles non fuistis, quod magnum est quis dabet vobis?'" ubi vide Grabii conjecturam hæc ex Evangelio ad Ægyptios deprompta esse. Sectione duodecim, interrogatus a quodam Dominus quando venturum esset regnum ejus, εἶπεν, ὅταν ἔσται τὰ δύο ἕν, καὶ τὸ ἔξω, ὡς τὸ ἔσω, τὸ ἄρσεν μετὰ τῆς θηλείας, οὔτε ἄρσεν, οὔτε θῆλυ. Quod desumptum fuit ex apocryphis, juxta Cotelerium, juxta Clementem Al. Stro. iii. p. 465, ex Evangelio Ægyptiorum.

Ignatius in Epistola ad ecclesiam Smyrnensem Christum introducit, qui Petrum, cæterosque qui præsto erant, sic alloquitor, λάβετε, ψηλαφήσατε, καὶ ἴδετε ὅτι οὐκ εἰμὶ δαιμόνιον ἀσώματον, Luc. xxiv. 39, quod juxta Hieronymum desumitur ex Evangelio Nazarenorum,—juxta Cotelerium ex apocryphis, juxta Origenem dictum fuit a nullo qui Spiritu Dei inspiratus fuit. Et tamen locum obtinuit, Luc. xxiv. 39, inter variantes lectiones apud Millium.

In codices Origenianos admissas fuisse ῥήσεις aliquas ex Evangelio secundum Hebræos, aliove aliquo apocrypho, ostendit ipse Millius, Proleg. p. 66. Plura hujusmodi reperiat lector in Epist. Barnabæ, §. 7, in Just. M. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 267, in Iren. lib. v. cap. 33, p. 454, 455, in Orig. Com. in Matt. p. 308, sed lectorem non tenebo pluribus. Ponam tandem judicium Millii de Epistola Clementis R. aliorumque ejusque temporis scriptorum, Proleg. p. 16, col. 2, his verbis editum: "De qua, ut et aliis opusculis, sub hoc tempus conscriptis, notandum quod ex evangeliis et epistolis nullam unquam pericopen citant accurate, et ad fidem exemplarium, et cum ad evangelii cujusvis aut epistolæ clausulam aliquam respiciant, neque libri, ubi extet, neque scriptoris nomen proferunt, et quidem loci ipsius diserta verba raro admodum proponunt, sed sensum fere, ac sententiam, ex memoria tradunt, quin et ab apocryphorum testimoniis haud abstineant, sed ea promiscue cum apostolicis ipsis ξυνεπνεύστοις, pro re nata, citent, allegentque."

CAPUT SECUNDUM.

§. 1. Monstrat lectionem variantem non posse certo colligi ex codice Latino, aut versione Latina Græci scriptoris, aut demum e loco a Latinis patribus citato. Primo, quoniam quomodocunque se habeat textus archetypus, mos est interpretum ut ad Vulgati versionem verba accommodent. §. 2. Secundo, quod parum idonei in hac re sint arbitri patres Latini, nec feliciter de Græcis criticen exerceant. §. 3. Tertio, ex Millii ipsius de patribus Latinis sententia idem colligitur.

SECTIO PRIMA.

Ut varians lectio nascatur e codice Latino, aut ex versione Græci alicujus patris, aut ex citatione a Latino patre desumpta, quæ Græco exemplari non congruit, mihi quidem valde importunum, et iniquum, videtur. Hoc enim, ut cum Hieronymo loquar, nihil aliud est quam cœnosos rivulos adire, ut fons purgetur. Hinc tamen ortum suum debet fere dimidia pars earum variarum lectionum quæ in epistolas adnotantur, ubi Latinus interpres Irenæi, Origenis in Romanos, Didymi de Spiritu Sancto, Tertullianus, Cyprianus, Ambrosius, Hilarius Diac. Hilarius Pictav. Augustinus, Pseudo-Hieronymus, sive Pelagius, magnam voluminis partem implent, quod quam absurdum sit, ex his rationibus colligere possis.

Primo quod quomodocunque se habeat archetypus, mos est interpretum ut ad Vulgati Latini arbitrium, et quasi nutum totos se fingant, et accommodent. Ex. gr. Origenes, Com. in Joh. p. 115, legit ἀξίους καρποὺς τῆς μετανοίας, interpretes e Vulg. "fructum dignum."—P. 339, legit Joh. vii. 39, οὔπω γὰρ ἦν Πνεῦμα, Lat. "Nondum erat Spiritus datus," ut Vulg.—In Commentario in Rom. Ruffinus in textu fingendo veterem Vulgatam secutus est, fatente Millio, ubi verus Origines eidem contradicit. Cyrillus Hieros. cat. xii. p. 119, et xvii. p. 195, legit τὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον, sed Latina vulgati vestigia sequuntur, "Quod nascetur ex te Sanctum." Gregor. Nyssenus, tom. ii. ed. Paris. 1615, p. 731, legit Rom. i. 32, οἵτινες τὸ δικαίωμα Θεοῦ ἐπιγόντες, absque οὐκ ἐνόησαν, interpres autem "Qui cum justitiam Dei cognovissent, non intellexerunt." Ita Chrysostomus, hom. 12 ad Pop. Antioch. ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 145, οὐκ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι, Lat. cum Vulg. "Non solum qui ea faciant, sed etiam qui consentiunt," &c. Quater habet Chrysos. ποτήριον ψυχροῦ, Matt. x. 42, toties Lat. "Aquæ frigidæ." Sanctus Basilius, tom. i. lib. v. contra Eunom. p. 376, et Cyril. Al. de Recta Fide, p. 66, de Ador. Sp. 494. Hom. Pasc. p. 246, 311, 334, legunt τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, 2 Cor. v. 10, Lat. semper "Propria corporis." Cyril. Al. legit οὔπω γὰρ ἦν Πνεῦμα ἅγιον, Lat. "Spiritus datus." Luc. ii. 15, legit, ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία, Hom. in Div. p. 380, Lat. "Hominibus bonæ voluntatis." Luc. i. 35, τὸ γεινώμενον ἅγιον, hom. in Divers. p. 383, de Recta Fide, p. 88, Lat. "Quod ex te nascetur Sanctum." Matt. vii. 13, στενὴ δὲ ἡ πύλη, H. Pasch. p. 156, Lat. "Quam angusta porta." 1 Joh. iv. 3, πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ, Lat. "Qui solvit Jesum." 1 Tim. iii. 16, ὁ Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκὶ, de Recta Fide, p. 124, Lat. "Quod manifestatum est in carne." Nimirum omnibus his locis Vulgati plus valebat auctoritas quam ipsorum patrum; sed cum hoc sexcenties apud Latinos interpretes evenerit, speciatim in commentariis Origenis et Theodoreti commemoratio plurium testimoniorum supervacanea est.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

Hoc etiam luce clarius fiet, si modo quam parum idonei in hac re arbitri, et quam infeliciter de Græcis criticen exercuerint Latini, lector mecum recognoscat. Cum in Græcis exemplaribus suum tulisset judicium Hilarius Diac. ait Millius, ita cæcus de coloribus. Nihil de codicibus Græcis novit Ambrosiaster, Prol. p. 139, col. 2, nec iniquum de eo tulit judicium. Is enim Com. in Rom. v. 14, veram lectionem esse ait, "In eos qui peccaverunt," absque negationis particula, scilicet, ex fide cod. Latinorum quos incorruptos simplicitas temporum servavit. Atqui etiam illi fluxerunt ex veteribus codicibus Græcis. Quod si Millium audiamus, codices Græci hodieque omnes, tempore Augustini omnes, aut pene omnes, etiam Irenæus, si interpreti ejus credimus, legebant cum negatione, quod idem de præstantioribus Latinis dicendum, Prol. p. 75, col. 1. De vero Ambrosio dicit Millius, Prol. p. 78, col. 2, eum pium magis quam doctum fuisse, cum enim Marc. xiii. 32, sic legimus, "De die autem illo aut hora nemo scit, neque angeli in cœlo, οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός," Ambrosius de Fide, lib. v., cap. 8, hæc habet, "Codices Græci non habent 'quod nec filius scit.'" "Certe nulli sunt," inquit ibidem Millius, "nec opinor unquam fuerunt libri Græci a quibus abesset οὐδὲ ὁ υἱός." Idem lib. iii. de Spiritu Sancto, cap. 11, clausulam hanc, Joh. iii. 6, sic exhibet, "Quod natum est de Spiritu, spiritus est, quia Deus Spiritus est;" ubi queritur hæc verba eo quod Spiritus Sancti divinitatem abstruere videantur, ab Arianis sublata esse, et tamen, judice Millio, Prol. p. 79, col. 1, haud alia erat hæc particula quæ erasa videbatur, quam lectoris cujuspiam scholion. Vide exempla plura a Millio congesta, Prol. p. 78, col. 2, 79, col. 1. Denique dicente Augustino, Retract. lib. i. cap. 19, "Codices Græci Matt. v. 22 non habent sine causa," Hieronymo in locum his verbis adstipulante, "In quibusdam codicibus additus sine causa, cæterum in veris tollitur," hoc tamen non obstante, P. Simonius vere dicit, obtinuisse hanc lectionem quæ εἰκῇ exhibet non modo apud Syrum, sed etiam apud patres antiquissimos, tam Græcos quam Latinos; "est ergo (inquit) in Vulgato restituendem, qui in eo omittendo antiquitati repugnat, multisque exemplaribus," Hist. Crit. in N. Test. lib. ii. cap. 32. Plura his addere facillimum esset, sed compendio rem agere consultius visum est, instantias enim passim dabunt tum Millii prolegomena, tum lectiones variantes.

SECTIO TERTIA.

Tertio, ita Latinorum plerosque patrum depingit Millius, ut, se judice, citationes ex iis desumptæ exiguam mereantur fidem.

Agmen ducit Tertullianus, de quo ecce sanum et subtile judicium Millii: "In eo citata sunt loca s. codicis fere neglectius ex memoria, contractim, ad sensum, haud sine levicula aliqua subinde mutatione, ipsisque porro allegatis ab eo testimoniis immista sunt nonnunquam aliqua a stylo Vulgati interpretis* diversa, Africanæ φράσεως, et vocabula mire barbara. Immo penes se habebat Italicæ exemplar haud parum maculatum, certe si quid de cæteris ejus partibus conjectare liceat ex Evangelii Lucæ codice quo usus est in libro quarto contra Marcionem. Denique, alia (inquit) loca sumpta videntur ex variis versionibus quæ tempestate ista ferebantur. Nempe præter Italicam, innumeras alias primis seculis (de suo tantum seculo dictum fuisset) extitisse notat Augustinus." Et tamen non tantum de varia lectione Tertullianum, velut testem idoneum, producit; sed etiam in prolegomenis sæpius lectionis quæ apud Vulgatum prius obtinebat. Ita, p. 105, col. 2, "Vulg. ut apparet ex Tertulliano." Miror hic quo critico naso tam accurate discernere potuerit inter tot varias versiones quid a Vulgato prodierit, aut cur tam fidenter pronuntiarit virum Græce doctissimum, loca a se citata ex Latinis versionibus produxisse; Pamelio etiam contradicente eum non tam Latinis translatis, quam Græcis codicibus veteribus usum esse.

De Cypriano hæc dicit Millius, "Nempe ex citatis ab ipso N. Test. pericopis abunde constat Italicam (hanc enim unam in usu ei fuisse ex allatis ab ipso N. Test. pericopis manifestum est) temporis tractu magis magisque fuisse interpolatam." Veruntamen vitiatis hujusmodi lectionibus non parvo numero præmissis, p. 67, col. 1, 2, hæc habet, "Restant lectiones quædam quas ex Africanis aliisque quibusdam profectas probabile est." Tria hic notanda veniunt. Primo criticorum divortium. Quod enim hic Millio de Italica manifestum est, Simonius manifesto falsum pronuntiat in locis infra adducendis. Secundo, Millium sibimetipsi contradicere, dum ait unam, i. e. solam, Italicam Cypriano in usu fuisse, et tamen eundem ex Africanis aliisque quibusdam versionibus quædam protulisse. Denique ex codice hoc Cypriani tractu temporis magis magisque interpolato, non tantum varias lectiones plus centies exhibet, sed vulgatæ lectionis Italicæ argumentum non semel.

De Hilario Pictavorum Episcopo mentionem faciens, Prol. p. 72, nihil ex eo profert nisi lectiones interpolatas, quasi nec unam genuinam habuisset, h. e. cum versione Italica sua consentientem. Lucifer Calaritanus, judice Millio, vitiis misere scatet, nec s. codicis loca integra producit, Prol. p. 73, col. 2. Testimonia nimirum protulit ad MS. exemplar unum, idque perperam descriptum, adornata, unde lectionum ejus interpolatarum catalogum tantum exhibet. Victorinum Afrum, et Zenonem Veronensem Latina secutos esse nonnullis in locis interpolata pronuntiat: locum unicum in quo additamentum, Joh. iv. 56, occurrit, genuinum pronuntiat, refragante Simonio, Græcis scholiis, et versionibus universis. Optati citationes fere omnes interpolatas fuisse asserit, p. 74, col. 1, 2.

Hilarium Diaconum quod attinet, "Is certe (inquit Millius) cum scripta sua testimoniis s. codicis passim tesselaverit, tum in commentariis in epistolas D. Pauli ex Italicæ versionis textu, qualis tum temporis ferebatur, exhibuit," Prol. 74, col. 2. Quanquam ergo interpolatas ex eo lectiones ibi produxerit, sexcenties tamen Ambrosiastrum hunc pro veræ lectionis teste idoneo profert, ejusque textum ceu genuinæ lectionis Italicæ certissimum argumentum exhibet. Quam falso, et in causæ suæ præjudicium, ex lectionum ejus appendice quam infra dabimus, judicabit lector.

Porro id ex Millio discimus patres Latinos fere omnes post ortam Arii hæresin, id semper Arianis objecisse quod scripturas s. corrumpere, pericopas ex iis eradere, mutilare solerent, adeo ut eadem nobiscum hæreticos habere biblia vix agnoscerent. Objiciunt hæc illis Hilarius Pict. Hilarius Diaconus, Ambrosius, Salvianus; quæ omnia, Millio judice, frustra, et sine causa hæreticis objiciebantur, cum rari essent qui scripturis temerarias manus intulere. Vide loca omnia in quibus hoc factum esse clamitant, a Millio bene vindicata, Prol. p. 78, col. 2, 79, col. 1. Qui autem de Græcis codicibus tum falso et imperite judicabant, qui de Latinis ea sublata esse existimabant quæ alii ex ipsis s. codici adjiciebant, eorum de lectione genuina judicium non magni æstimandum esse æquus lector censebit.

Sed de his plura dicere eo minus necessarium videtur, quod sæpius videamus Millium integrum patrum Latinorum consensum rejicientem. Ex. gr. Gal. iv. 14, pro πειρασμὸν μου, ὑμῶν, inquit, legunt Vulg. Clar. Lat. Ger. Lat. Hieron. Hilarius D. Latini omnes, teste Esthio, quod sane sensum parit duriusculum ac coactum nimis quam ut probem. 1 Pet. i. 12, sic legimus, εἰς ἃ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν οἱ ἄγγελοι παρακύψαι, in quem, inquit Millius, legunt Vulg. et ita fere Latini codices, reclamantibus Græcis ad unum omnibus, et quidem Irenæus, cujus Latinæ licet versioni Vulgatæ congruant, lib. ii. cap. 24, lib. v. cap. 36, advertenti tamen seriem contextus manifestum est Irenæi Græca fuisse, εἰς ἅ, quomodo quoque se habent Latina ejus, lib. iv. cap. 67. Plura ejusdem generis occurrunt a nobis observata annotatis in varias lectiones Millii.

CAPUT TERTIUM.

§. 1. Ostendit ex codicibus MSS. ecclesiæ occidentalis non posse certo colligi, textum hodiernum corrigendum esse, primo ex P. Simonii testimonio, ex librariorum ignorantia; et ex erroribus quibus abundabant ipsa exemplaria. §. 2. Secundo, ex Millii ipsius sententia.

SECTIO PRIMA.

Quanquam ultra mille variantium lectionum ex unico MS. vel binis fortasse, aut tribus depromat Millius (atque illam lectionem genuinam esse asserit quam duo aut tres agnoscunt codices, reclamantibus reliquis omnibus), non tamen hinc sequitur quod ad eorum normam textus corrigendus sit. In promptu ratio est, si enim quæ variant exemplaria sint pauca, certo certius est majorem partem eorum cum editis congruisse.

Hoc etiam magis constabit ex animadversionibus quibus in codices quosdam MSS. usus est Simonius, vir sat acris in his rebus judicii, si Millium audimus; nam in Critica N. Test. Historia, parte secunda, cap. 30—32, in codices quosdam MSS. censoria animadversione utitur ad hunc modum. Primo, "Quod, teste Hieronymo, magnus in codicibus (hisce) error inolevit, dum quod in eadem re alius evangelista plus dicit, in alio quia minus putaverint, addiderunt, vel dum eundem sensum alius aliter expressit, ille qui unum e quatuor primum legerit, ad ejus exemplum cæteros quoque existimaret emendandos; unde accidit ut apud nos mixta sint omnia, et quæ singulis propria sunt, in aliis inveniantur."

Secundo, "Quod Græci librarii, ut evangeliorum atque epistolarum voces magis perspicuas redderent, unum evangelium ex alio, planum fecerint, et quia multa obscura videbantur, aut ambigua, verbis clarioribus explicarunt, et pro more suo, apostolorum scripta ad puritatem Græci sermonis revocare studuerint," atque hanc verissimam esse causam summo judicio asserit, quamobrem codex Cantabr. plures suppeditat variantes lectiones quam reliqui omnes in unum collecti. "Quicunque enim in Bezæ exemplar oculis castis inspexerit, haud illum præteribit quod scriba textum, propter elegantiam Græcæ linguæ, sæpissime correxerit, et nova, quæ synonyma visa sunt, interserit verba, ut res involutæ apertiores fierint, et faciles explicatus haberent. Hanc sibi, tum temporis, licentiam N. T. aperiendi causa, sumpserunt scribæ, de vocabulis utrum archetypum fideliter exhiberent parum solliciti, modo a sensu eorum non deflexerint."

Tertio, "Qui hos codices, (inquit Simonius,) ad examen revocarunt, non aliud sibi statuerunt quam ut clariora fierent omnia, adeoque a genuina evangelistarum atque apostolorum lectione multum aberrarunt, paraphrasin adhibendo, intricatiora subducendo, recidendis superfluis, plurimisque inter se, claritatis gratia, transpositis, atque hoc semel monere satis est, absque longa enumeratione exemplorum, quorum amplam sylvam codex Cant. subministrat, speciatim in Actis Apostolorum, nam in ecclesiastica primi seculi historia emendanda plurimum sibi indulserunt librarii." Hæc Simonius, qui tamen consolandi nos, ut ita dicam, causa, hæc subjicit, "Quamcunque mutationem passi sint hi codices, et licet apostolorum et evangelistarum verba non retineant, discrepantiam tamen in sensu diligentissimus lector reperiet nullam." Hæ Simonii observationes planum faciunt quod parvam illi codices mereantur fidem, nec ad eorum fidem receptam lectionem emendandam esse. Simonium laudibus suis in cœlum sustulit Millius, Prol. p. 166, col. 1, "Vir erat (inquit) in hac rei biblicæ parte singularis plane eruditionis, acerrimique, si quis unquam, judicii." Quod si judicio illius libenter obsecutus esset, variantes e Cant. Ger. et Clar. lectiones, parcius deprompsisset, nec volumen suum, absque causa, in immensam magnitudinem excrevisse passus fuisset.

Auctoritati enim horum codicum multum detrahitur ex eo quod exemplaria Græca transcripta sint ab hominibus Latinæ ecclesiæ, qui nec ipsi exemplaria optima nacti sunt, nec Græcam linguam optime calluerunt, sed eo consilio in hoc munere fungendo versati sunt, ut Græci Vulgati erroribus magis faverent, et patrocinarentur. "Quod scribæ fuerint Latini, (inquit Simonius,) constat quia utraque lingua non modo eundem scriptorem agnoscit, sed etiam quædam e Latinis literis sunt puræ putæ Græcæ, et quædam e Græcis pariter Latinæ (verius dixisset Gothicæ); ad summam, errata pene innumera, quæ in Græco codice occurrunt, satis sunt argumenti exaratum eum fuisse ab homine istius linguæ prorsus imperito. Nec enim in orthographia sola, sed etiam in vocabulis ipsis sæpissime peccatur." Idem Simonius, p. 147, sic pergit, "Tot menda in Græca parte codicis Clar. ubique reperies, ut exscriptum fuisse ab homine indocto quis non plane sentiat?" Et cap. 32, p. 156, "In nostris bibliothecis," inquit ille, "exemplaria quamplurima Græca extant, quæ, ut e Græcis exarata, ita apud illos communi quodam in usu erant, atque hæc quidem inter se discrepant in rebus parvi momenti, sed mire conveniunt in eo quod longissime distant ab iis codibus quos Latini exscripserunt." P. 157, hæc verba habet notatu dignissima, "Mihi quidem dubitationis nihil est quin Cardinalis Ximenius Complutensem editionem paraturus, quamplurimos codices eximiæ vetustatis, et spectatæ fidei corrogaverit: suspectam tamen habeo illam aliquando reliquis antelatam esse lectionem, quæ Vulgato cum interprete maxime concordat. Fieri etiam potest, (inquit) ut Stephani editio, quam cum Græcis MSS. in Italia contulit, non paucas in se receperit lectiones ad Vulgatæ versionis normam expressas. Idem dicendum est de variis lectionibus sedecim MSS. codicum quas Marchio Velesius collegit, et quæ editioni nostræ Vulgatæ mirifice favent." Hæc quidem adversante et renitente animo confitetur ipse Millius. V. g. Matt. xvii. 2, legimus λευκὰ ὡς φῶς, sed Steph. B. Cant. Vulg. ὡς χιών, e Marco, quibus hæc sequuntur, "De varietate hac aliud dicere nequeo," inquit Lucas Brugensis, "quam quod Stephanus B. Latinæ editioni sæpe consonet, et aliquando potius erroribus ejus editionis inolitis, quam germanæ lectioni. Quod idem omnino dicendum videtur de Cant." Ita Millius. Sic 1 Pet. ii. 6, textus habet ἐν τῇ γραφῇ, MSS. aliqui ἡ γραφὴ, ubi annotatio, "Vereor ne locus studio sit efformatus, ut in aliis quibusdam factum, ad versionem Latinam," inquit Esthius. Ita 1 Pet. iii. 19, post ἐν φυλακῇ addit Steph καταλειομένοις, "ad exemplar fidei non magnæ, quod existimetur ad codices Latinos esse efformatum," inquit Esthius. Vide similes annotationes in Marc. vi. 32, ix. 21, xv. 8, et passim.

Hinc liquet causam nullam esse quare recepta lectio emendetur ad exemplar eorum codicum, quos (primo) Hieronymus adeo contempsit, ut teste Simonio, necesse sibi habuerit Latinam ipsam versionem, ad codices, ex oriente petitos, exigere et reformare. (Secundo) Codicum qui exarati fuerunt a librariis Græcæ linguæ miserum in modum ignaris, quique plurima menda non modo in orthographia, sed in ipsis dictionibus contraxerant. (Tertio) Codicum qui licet inter se conveniant, a Græcæ ecclesiæ codicibus ita sunt diversi ut vix speciem eorum gerant. (Quarto) Codicum qui dedita opera immutati fuerunt ut ad Latinam versionem efformarentur. (Quinto) Codicum qui vitia retinent, quibus Italica versio scatebat ante castigationem Hieronymi, ut inquam, editi nostri ad horum codicum regulam, ac normam corrigerentur, nemo sanæ mentis unquam judicabit.

Hæc quidem, et præsertim quæ de Cant. Ger. et Clar. MSS. dicta sunt Dupinio mecum conveniunt, nam observationibus suis, in quibus Simonium potissimum consecutus est, absolutis, hæc infert, "Et eis observationibus conjectura non levi ducor ad suspicandum Græcum textum horum codicum a librario ad Vulgatam versionem, quam simul exaravit, accommodatum, vel saltem ex alio exemplari ad hunc modum efformato desumptum fuisse; quo dato et concesso, varietas istorum codicum (ait ille) neutiquam censenda est tanquam tot variantes lectiones Græci exemplaris, sed solummodo tanquam castigatio, seu potius depravatio facta ex ista versione, quæ archetypum parum fideliter repræsentabat." Hist. de Canone Vet. et N. Test. vol. ii. p. 106. De antiqua Latinorum versione, qua occidentales ecclesiæ utebantur, et ad quam hi codices Græci, Simonio judice, confirmabantur, vide dissertationem nostram de Vulgato interprete, et Italica translatione, capite subsequenti.

Coronidis loco notatu non indignum est quod cum MSS. codices, quos contulit Millius, sint fere nonaginta, quandocunque viginti, vel triginta ad summum, varianti cuidam lectioni favent, sequitur vel curam et diligentiam in Millio desiderari, vel plures saltem codices congruere cum editis, quam ab illis discrepare.

Veniam mihi dabit candidus lector, quod ab aliis hic testimonia, et rerum confirmationem sumpserim, cum enim codices ipsos MSS. evolvendi neutiquam mihi facultas data sit, id feci quod potui.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

Hoc etiam fiet multo evidentius ex confessionibus Millii, et ex exemplis quæ ab illo mutuari possumus. V. g. Matt. iii. 11, deest καὶ πυρὶ 25 MSS.: sed, ut recte idem Millius asserit, de recepta lectione minime dubitandum est. Matt. iv. 10, ὀπίσω μου retinetur apud MSS. 36, juxta tamen ibi annotata, MSS. plurimi non agnoscunt, aliunde assutum videtur, a scriptore memore scioloque. Matt. v. 47, apud amplius quam triginta cod. MSS. φίλους occurrit, cui tamen ille lectionem in textu ἀδελφοὺς merito anteponit. Matt. xxvii. 42, καὶ πιστεύσομεν αὐτῷ, MSS. fere quinquaginta habent ἐπὶ vel εἰς· illo tamen judice, præfixum fuit ἐπὶ vel εἰς ex loco male intellecto. Marc. vi. 6, textus habet ὅτι, quod et sensus videtur postulare: at omittunt illud plus quam viginti cod. et septem habent ἵνα· sed ὅτι, rectius inquit Grotius, cui Millius astipulari videtur, utut, pro more suo, sibimetipsi contradicat, Prol. p. 115. 131. Luc. iii. 2, ἀρχιερέως agnoscunt triginta MSS., sed ex illius sententia ἀρχιερέων recte. Lucas enim etiam annum, utpote semel functum pontificatu, congrue satis vocat ἀρχιερέα. Luc. vi. 26. 28, omittunt πάντες circiter viginti MSS.; sed "omnino legendum arbitror," inquit ibi Millius, utut a sententia sua in prolegomenis temere recesserit: Proleg. p. 126, col. 2.

Præterea tanquam prætor de tribunali sæpius pronunciat hoc vel illud vocabulum, commentarium, irreptitium, adjectitium esse, quod, eodem fatente, in plerisque omnibus jam codicibus aut extat, aut occurrit: Prol. p. 133, col. 2. 156, col. 1 163, col. 2. 165, col. 2. Crebro etiam ait "vix ac ne vix obstat codicum omnium consensus," p. 163, col. 2 bis, et "absque codicum omnium consensu," p. 154, col. 2, 155, col. 2. Quinctiam de Italicis genuinis lectionibus, quæ ex ipsius cerebro irrepserunt, et quibus Græcis Latinæ istæ responderint, acturus, ad hunc modum præfatur. Græca vero hæc cum ob oculos positurum me dico, "Partem illam hic duntaxat intelligo, quæ a MSS. nostris fere omnibus, et excusis discrepat." Ut vero se hominem ostenderet, hanc aut illam germanam et veram lectionem esse ibi affirmat ex auctoritate unius, aut duorum, aut trium exemplarium, et aliquando ex plurimorum MSS. codicum fide: Proleg. a p. 41, ad p. 50.

CAPUT QUARTUM.

§. 1. Versionum fere omnium in una lectione consensus non est, vel Millio judice, lectionis genuinæ certum indicium. Speciatim agitur primo de versione Coptica. §. 2. De versione Æthiopica, et Millii de hac versione judicio. §. 3. De versione Syriaca, ex Simonii sententia et ex iis quæ Millius de hac versione pronunciat. §. 4. De versione Arabica, ex qua nullas lectiones variantes exhibent Millii prolegomena. §. 2, 3, De versione veteri Vulgata, sive Italica latius agit sectio quinta, in qua evincitur primo incerta esse quæ de hac versione Millius certissima ducit, puta eam præ cæteris ad optimos codices adornatam fuisse. In ea omnia de textu archetypo optime et juxta genuinum verborum sensum reddita fuisse. Et demum versionem veterem Italicam ante tempora Hieronymi miris modis interpolatam, pristinæ suæ integritati restitui posse, et ejus industria restitutam esse. §. 4. Frustra id Millium aggressum esse ostenditur, primo ex codice Cantab., omnium quos unquam viderit corruptissimo, aut ex Germ. et Clarom. codicis ejusdem parte secunda. §. 5. Secundo ex scriptis patrum Latinorum, qui ante ætatem Hieronymi vixerunt.

SECTIO PRIMA.

Versionum fere omnium in una lectione consensus, et συμφωνία, non est, Millio judice, genuinæ lectionis certum indicium; is enim ipse agnoscit Hebr. xii. 7, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. legisse εἰς παιδείαν vel ἐν παιδείᾳ· editum tamen, inquit, εἰ παιδείαν ὑπομένετε, præter exemplaria plurima, et Græcorum commentarios, affirmant ea quæ sequuntur versu proximo, εἰ δὲ χωρὶς ἐστε παιδείας. Sed non est hisce immorandum, cum tam in Millii prolegomenis, quam in nostris ad varias ejus lectiones annotationibus, sexcenta occurrant loca, in quibus versionibus omnibus repugnet.

Superest, ut de versionibus hisce, separatim sumptis, breviter agamus.

Et primo de versione Coptica, sive Ægyptiaca, hæc habet Millius, Proleg. p. 152, "Mirum certum est bibliorum multilinguium editores de Coptica nihil cogitasse, maxime cum non tantum profluxerit ex fonte Græco, sed etiam expressa fuerit ad exemplar optimum, unumque e primævis, aut certe ex ejusmodi aliquo, ut apparet ex variantibus ipsius lectionibus." Vin', lector, scire rationem cur a Millio hæc versio, quam Waltonus ὁ πάνυ neglectam habuit, has laudes obtinuerit? Eam exhibet Simonius his verbis, "Coptica exemplaria multis in locis conveniunt cum editione Latina, ubi Græco textui conformis non est," Crit. Hist. cap. xvi. p. 142. Porro ex variantibus ejusdem lectionibus, id tantum constat versionem ipsam haud esse flocci faciendam; quod ut lectori manifestum appareat, præ oculis ejus ponam illam ipsam variarum lectionum συλλογὴν, quam nobis hic Millius exhibuit.

Matt. xx. 34, Καὶ εὐθέως ἀνέβλεψαν αὐτῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοί, adjectitium est.

xxi. 2, Καὶ εἰρήσατε, τὸ εὐθέως insertum est, statim. Vulg. xxv. 16, "Qui quinque talenta acceperat," ἐποίησε ἄλλα πέντε τάλαντα, additum est ex superioribus.

Marc. xiii. 11, Μελετᾶτε irreptitium est. Vide hic an notata.

xiv. 27, Σκανδαλισθήσεσθε ἐν ἐμοὶ est Matthæi, immò Vulg. et Hieron. Theoph. Syr. Arab.

Luc. vi. 45, Λαλεῖ τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ, addititium est.

viii. 9, Ἐπερώτησαν αὐτὸν οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ, λέγοντες, adjectitium est, xviii. 20, σου addititium est.

xxiii. 23, Κατίσχυον αἱ φωναὶ αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἀρχιερέων, de margine irrepsit. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

Act. iii. 13, Ὁ Θεὸς Ἀβραὰμ, Θεὸς Ἰσαὰκ, καὶ Θεὸς Ἰακὼβ, retento, Θεὸς, quod in aliis deest.

xv. 17, Ὁ ποιῶν ταῦτα, πάντα irrepsit e margine. Agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcumen. Syr. Arab.

xix. 3, Εἶπετε πρὸς αὐτοὺς, injectitium est. Agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcum. Syr. Arab. Æthiop.

xx. 32, Παρατίθεμαι ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, τῷ Θεῷ,—Ἀδελφοὶ insertum de margine. Agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcumen. Arab. Æthiop.

2 Cor. i. 17, Τοῦτο οὖν βουλευόμενος. Βουλευόμενος fecit lector ex βουλόμενος. Cum textu legunt Theodoretus, Œcumenius, et hanc lectionem firmant verba sequentia, ἢ ἃ βουλεύομαι κατὰ σάρκα βουλεύομαι.

SECTIO SECUNDA.

Secundo, de versione Æthiopica en P. Simonii judicium, viz. "Versio hæc Romæ impressa, et in Bibliis Polyglottis de novo edita, adeo parum accurata est, ut ampliori consideratione sit protinus indigna," Hist. Crit. ver. cap. xvii. p. 145. Ipse* Millius in prolegomenis sententiam suam de hac versione his verbis indicat: "In evangeliis plerumque satis accurata est, rarius paulo abit a verbis s. textus, et ubi in paraphrases excurrit, et commentarios, vestigia haud obscura videris Græcæ, quæ interpreti ob oculos fuerat, lectionis. In Actis Apostolorum secus aliquanto se res habet, laxiora his pleraque, omissa hinc inde varia, alia perperam, ac præter sensus Græci textus reddita, ne quid dicam de exemplari, quod nacti fuerunt Æthiopes in nonnullis hujus libri locis lacero, et lacunoso: unde factum ut ne quidem integra ad nos devenerit versio, sed partim mutila manserit, partim suppleta fuerit hic illic ab his editoribus ex lingua Græca et Romana, ut loquuntur, hoc est, ex Vulgata versione, et codicibus Vaticanis Græcis, quos cum Vulgata Latina consentientes deprehenderant. In epistolis D. Pauli major paulo adhuc apparet laxitas, et immanis nonnunquam a litera textus aberratio, interprete verba, quæ ob oculos habebat, adeo non numerante, ut ne ad ipsorum quidem sensum, seu etiam significationem in locis nonnullis quidquam attenderit. Sed neque in epistolis catholicis et Apocalypsi res multo melior; utcunque enim hic ad literam Græcam propius fere nonnihil accedatur, in ipsis tamen haud raro translatoris curam et diligentiam desideramus." Hinc toties apud eum occurrunt hæc versionis hujus epitheta, "turbida, et obscura versio;" quærelæ hæ,† "Hinc omnia turbavit Æthiops." Et tamen post hæc omnia, mirum dictu, "Codex ille optimus est, et aut unus e primævis, aut ad primarium expressus est, et archetypum textum retinet in locis nonnullis, ubi ab eo cæteri abierunt." En quibus versionibus originarii textus emendationem Millianam debemus, iis nimirum, ex quibus, aliis judicibus, vix aliud quam corruptelas expectare fas sit, præsertim cum hanc longam genuinarum, si Millio fides, lectionum syllogen hoc epilogo absolvat. ‡ "Dolendum interea, turbidam hanc, confusam, et a textus non verbis tantum, sed et sensu nonnunquam toto cœlo aberrantem versionem intercepisse nobis conspectum plurimarum lectionum Græci, ad quem facta erat, codicis, quas alias notasse licuisset." Dolendum potius virum doctum ex hac turbida, confusa, obscura versione, in qua, evangeliis exceptis, laxiora pleraque, omissa hinc inde varia, alia perperam, et præter sensum Græci textus reddita, quatuor paginas implevisse lectionibus suis genuinis, sunt enim omnes quas congessit (paucis tantum exceptis, quas examini subjicimus) adeo frivolæ, ineptæ, notatu protinus indignæ, ut magno opere in iis colligendis nihil egisse videatur. Aperiendus est denique fons hujus sententiæ Millianæ, nempe congruentia versionis hujus cum fictitia illa versione Italica, quam tanquam genuinæ lectionis normam, et regulam fidissimam ubique nobis oggerit. Nimirum agnoscunt versionis hujus editores se multa, quæ in Actis Apostolorum in hac versione deerant, ex codicibus Latinis, Græcisque cum iis consentientibus supplevisse, "verendumque est (inquit Ludolphus) ne idem in cæteris N. Testamenti libris fecerint, quippe Æthiops meus in multis eos differre aiebat ab exemplaribus MSS. patriæ suæ;" nec aliud expectandum fuit a versione Romæ concinnata: si enim Romæ fueris, non tantum Romano more vivendum est, sed etiam scribendum.

SECTIO TERTIA.

De Syriaca versione Millius sententiam suam his verbis exhibet. "(Primo) Syriacæ quod attinet, haud ea Græcis suis adeo accurate semper, et velut ad amussim conveniunt, ut ex iis intelligi possit, quid legerit interpres. (Secundo) Quod in nonnullis pro versione exhibeat Syrus commentarium. (Tertio) Quod in aliis omittat non tantum textus Græci partes quasdam minutiores, sed insigniora quoque vocabula, seu quod ea superflua judicaverit in versione, aut quod etiam ipsa non intellexerit. (Quarto) Quod in aliis inserat, addat, mutet varia uberioris sensus, et claritatis gratia, ut in versione sæpius videre est. (Quinto) Quod in aliis Græca reddat omnino perperam, et præter sententiam loci. (Sexto) Accedunt quæ ex divisione versionis in lectiones additu, seu quovis modo mutata sunt, ad initia lectionum. Denique, non mirum esse (ait) si pro temporum istorum ἀμαθία, textus ejus aliquantulum hinc inde passus est a librario." Hæc omnia habes, Proleg. p. 128. "Cætera," inquit, "forte accurata erant, et quidem textus, quem exhibebant in plerisque adeo mirifice cum Græco vulgari congruebat, ut uterque ex uno et eodem codice descriptus prima fronte videatur. Collatis certe his invicem (viz. codicibus Syri et Vulgati) convenisse hunc cum altero deprehendimus, in lectionibus etiam quæ ab excusis variant sexaginta supra mille, e quibus quadraginta (quadringenta) septuaginta octo genuinæ sunt." Huic Millii sententiæ opponimus, (primo) Simonii critici si non acrioris, æquioris certe judicii testimonium, "convenire nempe frequentius hanc Syriacam versionem cum Græcis exemplaribus, ex quibus Hieronymus Italicam castigavit, quam cum ipsa versione Italica," Crit. Hist. ver. cap. xv. p. 119. Porro ex iis quæ Millius annotavit, hæc plane sequuntur. (Secundo) Sexcentis fere locis codicem tam Syrum quam Vulgatum spurium esse; ea enim versio, quæ in lectionibus in quibus ab excusis variat plus sexaginta supra mille, 478 tantum genuinas lectiones habet, in reliquis 582 eam non genuinas habere necesse est. (Tertio) Ex eo quod versio hæc cum Græco vulgari adeo mirifice congruit, eam mirum in modum vitiis scatere, ex iis quæ de Græco vulgari ex Simonio notavimus, liquido constabit. (Quarto) Ex eo quod versio adeo obscura sit, et a Græco exemplari eo usque aliena, ut ex ea intelligi non possit, quid legerit interpres, in quibusdam pro versione exhibeat commentarium, in aliis omittat insigniora textus Græci vocabula, in aliis inserat, mutet, addat varia, in aliis Græca reddat perperam, et præter sententiam loci, aut tanquam superflua in versione rejiciat, et demum pro temporum istorum ἀμαθία a librariis hinc inde passus sit, incertum sane relinquitur utrum in iis locis quos pro genuinis ostentat Millius, idem factum non fuerit. Contra antiquitatem hujus versionis objicitur, quod Matt. v. 22, εἰκῇ retinet: Matt. vi. 13, δοξολογίαν in fine orationis Dominicæ exhibet, et Luc. xi. tertiam et quintam ejusdem orationis petitionem; respondet Millius in textum hæc postea inserta fuisse, et accidisse versioni Syriacæ, quod Italicæ, quod aliis, ut longo temporis tractu mutatus et correctus fuerit textus ejus ad codices posteriorum temporum. Hoc cum ab eo sine teste, adeoque sine ratione dictum fuerit, quid impedit quominus idem a nobis dicatur in omnibus iis locis, quos pro genuinis nobis obtrudit Millius! Nihil certe, nisi quod hoc Millii κρησφυγέτῳ nobis non opus sit, utpote qui lectiones hasce imaginario genuinas, ubi res postulare videbatur, diligenter excusserimus, easque fere semper nihil minus quam genuinas deprehenderimus.

SECTIO QUARTA.

De Versione Arabica.

Ex versione Arabica nullas lectiones genuinas vel interpolatas notavit Millius. Quanquam enim, eodem fatente, ea hinc inde emendatior, et ad pleraque Græciæ exemplaria conformatior sit, quam Syriaca, eo tamen remotior fuit a Millii Italica, eique ut plurimum repugnat. Visum est ergo illi melius eam missam facere, quam de eadem, quod verum esse ex annotatis nostris constabit, agnoscere. "Facile tamen est (teste Simonio) cernere versionem hanc minime puram esse, sed aliquibus in locis ad Latinæ versionis normam emendatam fuisse:" Crit. H. ver. cap. xviii. p. 158.

SECTIO QUINTA.

De Versione veteri Vulgata, sive Italica.

§. 1. De versione Italica qualem hic nobis eam ex suo cerebro confinxit Millius, fusius agendum est. Hoc enim ipsius commentum penitus destruendo integrum prolegomenωn opus, in quantum lectiones genuinas respicit, cum illo loco cedere necesse est. Igitur observandum (primo) quod in eo potissimum se ostentet et immodice se efferat Millius, quod ex hac unica versione loca N. T. plus ducenta, quæ solitaria intercedebant absque omni codicum, patrum, versionum comitatu, et quæ jam a plurimis seculis interpolata fuerant, originariæ suæ puritati restituerit. Harum lectionum inter alia longe plura συλλογὴν satis prolixam exhibet a pag. proleg. 41 ad 58, in quibus hoc potissimum notandum venit, quod exempla multa coiligens ex libris fere omnibus totius N. Fœderis, hac tamen præfatione utatur: "Hæc quæ a MSS. codicum fere omnium, et impressorum lectione differunt, videntur tamen genuina."

Cui id primo respondeo, quod Helvidio Hieron. cap. primo adv. Helv. t. 4, lit. D, "Licet tu mira confidentia hæc in Græcis codicibus falsata contendas, quæ non solum omnes pene Græciæ tractatores in suis voluminibus reliquerunt, sed nonnuli quoque e Latinis ita ut in Græcis habentur assumpserint; nec (non tamen) necesse est de exemplarium varietate tractare, cum omne et Veteris et Novæ Scripturæ instrumentum in Latinum sermonem exinde translatum sit, et multo purior manare credenda sit fontis unda, quam rivi."

Secundo, cum id pro certo atque indubitato sæpius assumit Millius, Vulgatam Latinam, seu versionem Italicam, ab ipsis propemodum apostolorum temporibus adornatam fuisse ad codices optimos "solisque forte apostolorum ipsorum authenticis dignitate inferiores;" Proleg. p. 162, col. 1; "Eamque ab hodiernis quidem nostris codicibus nonnunquam recedere, a Græcis autem primorum temporum nusquam adeo recedere ut necessario sit deserenda," Proleg. p. 138, col. 1, 2—Ut multa alia ejusdem confidentiæ hic missa faciam, aliud tamen peritissimos Romanæ ecclesiæ criticos de hac versione sensisse et docuisse, ex eorum verbis et testimoniis luce clarius patebit.

Nam primo Dupinius, etiamsi pro pontifice Romano steterit, Italicam versionem ab origine sua plurimis forsan maculis inquinatam fuisse, aperte et ingenue fatetur. "Primo enim, interpres qui potuit falli ut humanus, hallucinatus forte est, et textum male reddidit; aut secundo, nactus fuit codicem mendosum; aut tertio, sui codicis parum fidus anagnostes; aut quarto, cum scriptum esset ambiguum, et duplicis sensus aut interpretamenti capax, interpres fortasse minus commodam secutus est sententiam, et in dictione aliqua aut idiomate Hebraico multum aberravit. Quinto, de suo etiam adjecisse potuit plurima, aut claritatis gratia, aut ut unus evangelista cum altero melius concordaret" (atque etiam subtraxisse, et rejecisse quædam tanquam superflua, ut asserit Millius de Syro). "Sexto, multa forsan additamenta deprompsit ex apocryphis (prout Clemens Rom. in Ep. ad Corinthios)." Hæc ille de vetere interprete N. T. cap. iii. §. 4, p. 109.—Simonius, cap. vi. p. 50, "Multum (inquit) debemus sancto Hieronymo, qui Italicam versionem, locis pene innumeris mancam et imperfectam, suæ integritati restituit. Optima Græca exemplaria plerumque secutus est, præteritisque iis, quæ ad Vulgatam de industria conformabantur, et multis quæ apud orientales ecclesias perlegebantur, commodissimum quodque elegit; atque hinc est, quod illi cum Græcis scholiastis omnia fere conveniunt. Admodum antiqui fuerunt codices, quos mutilos in editis sui temporis Hieronymus deprehendit, et ab ipsis Christianismi primordiis originem suam traxerunt. Unde inducor ad credendum veterem versionem Latinam a MSS., ad hunc modum mutilatis, ab initio traductam fuisse, quam tamen totam rejecisse, aut in novam penitus effinxisse formam, criticorum ille præstantissimus nequaquam ausus est." Adeo in re Biblica peritissimi Simonius et Dupinius a Millio quam longissime dissentiunt!

§. 3. Secundo, sicut nec ipse Millius diffitetur versionem istam tractu temporis valde corruptam fuisse, ita res nota ac manifesta erit e crebris Simonii confessionibus, qui, cap. iii. p. 20, ait, "Omnibus apertum est miserandum fuisse statum illius ante castigationem Hieronymi;" et cap. iv. p. 24, "Latinam ecclesiam summo beneficio sibi devinxit Hieronymus, cum ad optima Græca exemplaria Vulgatam versionem pessime ab aliis habitam (ut testatur ipse in Ep. ad Damasum) correxerit;" et cap. vi. p. 50, "Innumeros pene locos, hiantes olim et lacunosos, reduxit ille ad sanitatem;" et p. 52, "Vetustissimi cod. Vulgati multa παρεμβεβλημένα, verbis passim immutatis, retinent, quæ in editione nostra Hieronymus acri judicio perpendit, et emendavit, cap. xii. p. 115." Si Zegerum ipsum audias, "hæc ipsa versio multis in locis noscitur vitiata, mutilata, et aucta." Atqui versio in statu isto miserando, utpote quæ locis innumeris vitiata, mutilata, et aucta fuerit, minime quidem digna fuit, ut præ cæteris palmam ferret, suamque archetypo puritatem restitueret. "Hinc est, quod (teste Simonio) post castigationem Hieronymi de Italica versione in antiquum statum restituenda nemo unquam vel per somnium cogitaverit, sed (hac ad Millium ablegata provincia) codices suos ad Hieronymi editionem conformarunt, ex omnium confessione optimam et accuratissimam, adeo ut post aliquos annos vetus Italica versio, cum in extremis esset, vel sublata penitus fuerit vel sub nomine et titulo Hieronymianæ versionis delituerit. Hanc enim Cassiodorus monachis suis regulam præscripsit, ut codices suos ad Hieronymianos audacter corrigerent;" et cap. vii. p. 59, "Non aliud occurrit nomen in vetustissimis, quæ jam extant, Latinis Bibliis, quam Hieronymi, nec nota aliqua, qua distingueretur Hieronymiana a vetere ista, quam occidentales ecclesiæ usurparunt, versione. Hæc ergo quæ olim Vulgata et Italica dicebatur, post Hieronymi in Novum Testamentum labores, sensim evanuit, cum enim Hieronymiana magis quam Italica versio plerisque arriserit, scrinia, in bibliothecis illius nomine præfixo, occupavit, Italica penitus neglecta, quam omnes minus accuratam esse crediderunt;" et cap. ix. p. 83, ex pervetusto codice in bibliotheca Sancti Germani reposito, hæc citat verba, "Hieronymi presbyteri Bethlem secundum Græcum ex emendatissimis libris conlata:" unde constat, quod ex pervulgata illorum temporum opinione, Hieronymus integrum Novum Testamentum castigaverit ex emendatissimis Græcis manuscriptis: "Nulla tum de Italica versione mentio facta est; librarii enim non aliam quam Hieronymi editionem transcripserunt, quod sæpissime disertis verbis in fine libri adnotarunt." Ad hunc modum illa ipsa versio, quam ad cœlum sustulit Millius, et cujus beneficio loca Novi Testamenti plus ducenta, a plurimis seculis interpolata, restituere conatus est originariæ suæ puritati, illa ipsa, inquam, versio ex judicio et consuetudine occidentalis ecclesiæ, prætermissa, spreta, et repudiata fuit. Postremo, cum in ea prope sententia Millius associatum se esse ex Latino Irenæo, Tertulliano, Cyprianο, Hilario Diacono, codicibus Cant. Clar. et Ger. quæ in plerisque N. T. fuerint ipsius Italicæ genuina, et quibus Græcis Latina ista responderint. Quam commentitia futilisque sit illius sententia, mecum paucis recognoscite.

§. 4. Primo etenim codicem Cant. ad hanc rem minime aptum esse, patet ex testimonio tam Millii, quam Simonii. Ad Morini argumentum, qui trecentis fere in locis ex codice Cant. confirmatam esse ait Vulgatam ecclesiæ versionem, respondet Millius (Prol. p. 141, col. 1), "Exemplar hoc Cantabrigiense omnium quotquot unquam ad ætatem nostram devenire, interpolatissimum fuisse;" et annotatis in Lucæ caput tertium, "Omnium quos unquam viderim, non uno nomine, corruptissimum. Unde et mutata ad hujus generis codices Latina corrupta in plurimis fuerint necesse est." Atqui de hoc ipso codice, ait Simonius, cap. vi. p. 51, "Græca istius codicis ad Italicam versionem per omnia respondisse; unde sequitur ipsam Italicam versionem, omnium quotquot unquam ad ætatem nostram devenere, interpolatissimam fuisse:" et p. 52, Codex Cant. a reliquis Græcis exemplaribus et Vulgatis ita longe "abest, præsertim in Actis Apostolorum, ut videatur esse codex novus." Immo, dicente Millio, annotatis ad Lucæ caput tertium, "Hujus codicis scriba in evangeliis finita, pro arbitrio, addere, detrahere, mutare ausus est,——et Lucæ denique evangelium adeo misere passim interpolavit, ut Monotessaron quoddam fere, magis quam ipsius Lucæ Evangelium dixeris." At vero cum Clar. et Ger. sint solum ejusdem exemplaris partes secundæ, illos quoque codices a reliquis Græcis et Vulgata ad eundem modum discrepasse, rationi haud absonum est conjicere; et p. 52, "Vetustissimi (Lat.) codices additamentis mendisque innumeris abundant, quæ sustulit Hieronymus, correxitque ad normam eorum exemplarium, quæ suo tempore præstantissima habebantur, et quæ cum nostris propius consentiunt. Inter libros, qui apud Græcos et orientales ecclesiæ prolegebantur, sunt aliquæ quidem varietates et discrepantiæ, non tamen ejusdem naturæ cum variantibus istis lectionibus, quæ in Cant. et quibusdam aliis, et Vulgata vetere versione ad eos codices conformata, facile deprehendas. Constat quidem eos codices temerariam librariorum manum sæpius fuisse passos, qui multa addiderunt claritatis gratia, atque ordinem verborum immutarunt, ut oratio fieret concinna, accurata, et polita." Unde colligere licet, quam falsas rationes inferat Millius dicendo, ita Cant. ita Ger. ita Cler. adeo vetus Italica.

§. 5. Secundo, alterum quod jacit fundamentum Millius, sc. testimonia patrum, qui ante tempora Hieronymi vixerunt, Simonio judice, parum stabile et firmum est. Nam in Critica de Versionibus Historia, cap. iii. p. 22, "Monet nos Sanctum Cyprianum non ad amussim exhibuisse Vulgatam editionem sui temporis, sed aliquando ad sensum verborum respexisse, potius quam ad textum veteris interpretis;" et p. 21, "Cyprianus et coætanei illius locos s. scripturæ non ex publica aliqua versione deprompserunt, sed ipsi eos e re nata interpretati sunt." Atque iterum, "Tertullianus et Cyprianus potestatem sibi permiserunt adeundi fontes, ac Græcum sermonem pro libitu suo vertendi. Hinc Pamelius in vita Tertulliani ait non tam Latinis translatis, quam Gr. cod. veteribus usum esse auctorem Græce doctissimum, mallet nempe ex fontibus bibere, quod aiunt, quam ex lacunis." De Cypriano idem dignoscitur ex locupletissimo indice locorum Nov. Test. in edit. Oxon. collectorum. Ex his Simonius recte colligit falli Zegerum, qui additamenta in Lat. MSS., seculo Irenæi aut Cypriani pauciora fuisse, quam reliquis deinceps seculis existimat. "Siquidem major pars antiquissimorum codicum additamentis ac varietate innumera gaudet, et tantum abest ut nostra Vulgati interpretis editio ad Irenæum, Tertullianum, Cyprianum, aliosque scriptores venerandæ antiquitatis corrigi debeat, ut tutius foret testimonia eorum ad editos nostros, seu Græcos seu Latinos, emendare. Hoc quibusdam forsan mirum videbitur, (ait ille) et inauditum, sed de rei ipsius veritate satis liquet;" et p. 53, "Haud tutum semper est ecclesiasticos scriptores, qui antiqui merito audiunt, tanquam duces nostros sequi, cum e certis argumentis dignoscatur codices, quos nacti erant Nov. Test. præsertim Latinos, misere confusos et turbidos fuisse."

His etiam subjungit, p. 54, "Scripta Latinorum patrum, qui Hieronymi versionem ætate præcesserunt, crebram mutationem passa esse. Editores enim, qui typis illa mandari curarunt, citationes eorum ad nostram Vulgatam sæpius accommodabant, nec melius factum est Hilario Diacono, qui ex omnibus Latinis cum vetere Italo interprete maxime congruit." Turrianus, cum apostolorum canonum defensionem susceperit, "meminisse (se ait) non ita pridem cum esset Cyprianus Romæ imprimendus, fuisse qui judicarunt tunc in testimoniis Veteris Scripturæ, quæ sunt omnia apud Cyprianum ex interpretatione LXX., pro interpretatione LXX. interpretationem Hieronymi, substitui debere." Quid multa? Teste Dupinio, si Epistolarum Paulinarum Latinam versionem in Clarom. et Germ. codicibus, cum textu in commentariis Ambrosiastri et Pelagii diligenter conferas, miram ubique discrepantiam facile reperies: Hist. 5, et N. T., vol. ii. p. 115. Quibus ex argumentis in unum collatis satis constat vanum fuisse Milli inceptum, dum e scriptis patrum veterem Italicam versionem eruere conatus est, neque illum aut criticum aut dialecticum bonum egisse, cum in prolegomenis toties dixit, "Ita Irenæus Lat. ita Tertullianus aut denique ita Cyprianus, adeoque vetus Italica."

CAPUT QUINTUM.

§. 1. Exhibet uberiorem dissertationem de hac versione Italica, in qua primo sententia Millii proponitur. §. 2. Secundo, patres Latinos existimasse versionem Italicam ex Græcis exemplaribus corrigendam fuisse ex testimoniis Ambrosii, Hieronymi, Damasi P. et Augustini probatur. §. 3 et 4. Unde sequitur primo ex patrum horum sententia non defuisse tunc Græcos codices puros et incorruptos, ex quibus versionis Italicæ σφάλματα corrigerentur. Secundo, patribus hisce nullam tunc cognitam fuisse versionem Italicam, ex qua aliorum Latinorum codicum varietas aut dissonantia tolleretur, Ibid. Frustra tentasse Millium versionem hanc integritati suæ restituere ex Tertulliano, Cypriano, Hilario Diac. et Augustino, aut ex codicibus manuscriptis, ostenditur.

Quanquam ea quæ de hac versione jam diximus, aliis sufficere videantur, quoniam tamen controversiæ cardo in hoc potissimum versatur, operæ pretium esse duxi Millii de hac versione sententiam plenius refutare.

SECTIO PRIMA.

Imaginarium scilicet hanc versionem* "adornatam fuisse ad optimos codices, solisque forte apostolorum authenticis dignitate inferiores" censet Millius. Immo non patitur Boisium nostratem supponere† "ipsam a Græcis alicubi sic recedere, ut necessario sit deserenda." "Recedit," inquit, "nonnunquam ab hodiernis hisce nostris, non vero a Græcis primorum temporum." Et Prol. p. 142, col. 1, hæc habet, "Veterem Italicam, ceu ad exemplaria primæva compositam, summa veneratione prosequimur, ejusque vel semesa MSS. fragmenta quælibet auro cariora, non cara duximus. Optandam equidem foret ut Hieronymus, ex collatione præstantissimorum, qui ætate ista comparari poterant, codicum Latinorum, restituere studuisset Italicam originariæ suæ puritati. Cum autem ex Græcis suis eam castigare ipsi visum sit, ex animo certe gaudemus quod in hac re parum sibi permiserit, ac pauca duntaxat immutarit; hoc siquidem pacto manet etiamnum haud exigua pars Italicæ, textusque adeo primævi originarii vestigia passim haud obscura videre est, quæ ex morosiori ejus ad Græcos codices qui tum ferebantur confirmatione, pleraque prorsus periissent. Hæc nostra est de Vulgata versione sententia."

SECTIO SECUNDA.

Operæ pretium esset dignoscere unde hæc versio mendis libera, et a Græcis primorum temporum nusquam recedens, adeo comparanda esset, ut pro certo haberetur nos ipsissimam versionem Italicam, qualis a prima origine extabat, puram putamque possidere. Mirum certe, fatente* Millio, quanta jam ab ipso fere initio licentia textum hujus versionis interpolarint Latini veteres. Quæro qua certe et explorata methodo, pura ab his interpolationibus et integra ad Millii manus pervenisset? Versionem Italam aut Vulgatam continuo ingeminat; ex hoc rivulo fontes ipsis Græcos purgandos esse existimat; Clementem, Origenem, Eusebium, Græcos fere omnes coram hoc tribunali sistit: quicquid in iis a suo Vulgato dissentit, incusat παρεμβλήτως, irreptitium, interpolatum esse, aut marginale scholion fidenter pronunciat; quicquid eidem consonat est plane genuinum. Quærimus tandem unde hæc rara avis pervenerit, quibusque machinis e cœlo devoluta ad Millium descenderit, et quibus indiciis, post longum hoc temporis intervallum, id nobis denuo innotescat? Ex Millio id luce clarius ediscas, cujus ipsissima verba in medium jam adducam.

"Versionem ipsam quod attinet, adeo mire tractu temporis interpolata erat a librariis, aliisque, ut ipsius textum genuinam haud alias investigare liceat quam partim ex fragmentis patrum Latinorum, partim ex MSS. exemplaribus translationis Italicæ, qualis jam incedebat ante castigationem Hieronymi, adhibita in consilium hodierna Vulgata, quæ quantumcunque vitiata, haud exiguam certe partem retinet veteris genuinæ. Hujusmodi quidem monumentorum accurate inter se, et cum textu Græco (N. B.) commissorum, adminiculo, revocari etiamnum posse videtur maxima ex parte Itala hæc, qualem eam dederint primi interpretes."†

Prodisse apud Latinos innumeras s. scripturæ interpretationes testis est Augustinus, et inter reliquas unum apud Afros, quinto jam seculo speciatim Italam dictam, quod ab Italia ad ipsos pervenerit. Quis hodie fidem dabit versionem Italam primævam, seu Pii Secundi temporibus dicente Millio, adornatam ex apostolorum autographis, immo apographis desumptam fuisse? Unde nimirum habuissent Epistolam ad Hebræos, et Johannis Apocalypsin a Romana ecclesiæ nondum agnitas? Unde Epistolas Catholicas, quarum aliquæ in dubium ideo vocabantur, quod earum parcior fuisset mentio in primævis Christianismi seculis? In versione Syriaca, iisdem fere temporibus adornata, Petri Epistolam Secundam, Johannis Secundam et Tertiam, Judam, Apocalypsin, Historiam Adulteræ defuisse agnoscunt eruditi: securos quis nos faciat eas in versione Italica non pariter defuisse? Aut quo indicio certo constabit Italum hunc interpretem linguæ Hebraicæ idiomata moresque Judaicos adeo ad unguem calluisse, ut in iis vertendis nunquam a vero aberraverit? Quis dabit denique Italam versionem, de qua unus loquitur Augustinus, eam ipsissimam fuisse quæ primo ab Italis concinnata fuerit? Immo post miseram illam corruptelam, quam multo ante Augustini tempora in hanc versionem irrepsisse ultro fatetur Millius, quis certiores nos reddet eam in Afrorum manus incorruptam pervenisse? Si certum id esset, quod summa confidentia certissimum pronunciat Millius, Italam hanc olim puram, et autographis apostolicis dignitate tantum inferiorem extitisse, mendisque nullis obnoxiam, et a qua nunquam necessario recedendum esset; eamque a bibliothecis Hieronymi ætate salvam et integram comparari potuisse; quanta ecclesiæ Latinæ incuria, immo socordia factum est, ut nova Hieronymi emendatio ei prævaluerit, ita ut, ea insuper habita, Hieronymi versio Vulgata apud omnes ubique obtineret, et pro authentica haberetur. Isidoro etenim monente ‡ "Hieronymi editione generaliter omnes ecclesiæ usquequaque utuntur pro eo quod veracior sit in sententiis, et clarior in verbis;" et § Gregorio P. apud Millium eadem his verbis dicente, "Nova hæc translatio cuncta verius transfudisse perhibetur, et credendum est quicquid in ea dicitur." Cur demum id eo tempore dictum esset, cum eodem‖ Gregorio fatente, sedes apostolica utraque utebatur, se tamen novam translationem disserente? Quid tandem dicat Augustinus audiamus, ¶ "In ipsis (inquit) interpretationibus Italæ cæteris præferatur, nam est verborum tenacior, cum perspicuitate sententiæ." Ut autem hic de judicio Augustini, Latini hominis in Græcis minime instructi, taceam, Italam versionem ad aliarum multitudinem comparatam, "verborum præ aliis tenaciorem et in sententiis magis perspicuam (pronunciat) eam tamen quantumlibet emendatam Græcis cedere oportere haud dubium est." Ait idem Augustinus,* "Iisque potissimum qui apud ecclesias doctiores et diligentiores reperiuntur, Latinis quibuslibet emendatis Græci," inquit, "adhibeantur, sunt enim Græcorum auctoritate adhuc emendandi, duabus enim aliis linguis ad scripturarum divinarum cognitionem opus est, Hebræa sc. et Græca, ut ad exemplaria præcedentia recurratur, si quam dubitationem attulerit Latinorum interpretum varietas." En Augustinum non Millio adstipulantem, sed plane adversantem; lectorem nempe Latinum titubantem non versioni Italicæ, sed Græcis exemplaribus stabiliendum mittit; immo haud dubium esse ait, Latinam quamlibet versionem, adeoque Italam, Græcis cedere oportere.

Cum Augustino consentiunt ecclesiæ Latinæ patres ad unum omnes, qui de his rebus verba fecerunt, unoque ore asserunt textus Græcos N. Testamenti semper fuisse et adhuc esse authenticos, ad quos omnes versiones probari et examinari debent. Constans hæc erat, juxta Waltonum, veteris ecclesiæ sententia: Ambrosius† hæc habet, "Si quis de Latinorum codicum varietate contendit, quorum aliquos perfidi falsaverunt, Græcos inspiciant codices." Et libro de Incar. Dom. Sacramentis; "Ita," inquit, "in Græcis codicibus invenimus, quorum potior est auctoritas." Proximus illi Augustinus‡ ita loquitur, "Recte fieri nullo modo dubitaverim ut, cum diversum aliquid in duobus codicibus invenitur, quandoquidem ad fidem rerum gestarum utrumque non potest esse verum, ei linguæ potius credatur, unde est in aliam, per interpretes, facta translatio." "Hoc ipsum," inquit ibi Vives, "Hieronymus clamat, hoc ipsa dicit ratio, et nullus est saniore judicio qui repugnet." Hieronymus epistola ad Suniam et Fretellam rem sic expedit: "Si quando apud Latinos in N. Testamento quæstio exorta est, et inter exemplaria varietas, recurrimus ad fontem Græci sermonis quo novum scriptum est instrumentum." Idem Ep. ad Licinium hæc habet, "Ut veterum librorum fides de Hebræis voluminibus examinanda est, ita novorum veritas Græci sermonis normam desiderat:" quæ verba a Gratiano in jus canonicum a pontifice probatum relata sunt, dist. 9, cap. Ut veterum agmen claudat Damasus Papa, cui sic scribit Hieronymus, "Novum opus facere me cogis ex vetere, ut post exemplaria scripturarum toto orbe dispersa, quasi quidem arbiter sedeam, et quia inter se variant, quæ sunt illa quæ cum Græca consentiunt veritate decernam." Ex his satis constat quantum veteres fontes prætulerint versionibus, iis vero qui versiones præferunt dico cum Hieronymo, quibus displicet fontis unda purissima, cœnosos rivulos bibant. Ex hac autem veteris ecclesiæ sententia duo, coronidis loco, plane concludi videntur.

Primo, non defuisse, horum patrum ætate, fontes ex quibus purissima hæc unda biberetur, i. e. non defuisse Græcos codices puros, et incorruptos, ex quibus Latinorum, adeoque ipsius versionis Italicæ σφάλματα corrigerentur, quibusque Latina omnia exemplaria cedere oportere haud dubium tunc esset. Quorsum enim Græcos codices inspicere, ad fontem Græci sermonis recurrere, ei linguæ potissimum credere unde est in aliam facta translatio, et cum Latina exemplaria varia esse contigerit, quæ sint illa quæ cum Græca veritate consentiunt decernere, nos toties monerent, nisi puri hi fontes adeundi, codices hi Græci inspiciendi essent, unde decerni potuisset Græca veritas? Frustra ergo decies ad minimum in prolegomenis suis asserit et contendit Millius, Græca exemplaria misere corrupta et vitiata fuisse, interpretationibus, et scholiis e margine in textum irrepsentibus undique scatere, fœdata, polluta, nec unum inter Græcos codicem extitisse Italo suo vetustiorem, qui archetypam apostolorum et evangelistarum scripturam ipso fidelius expresserit. Hoc enim si patrum atque ecclesiæ antiquæ judicio ita fuisset, ad eum certe aliquando, et non ad Græcorum exemplaria, pro veritate dignoscenda continuo provocassent, nec in hujusmodi verba toties irrupissent. Latinorum* codicum vitiositatem, quæ ex diversitate librorum omnium comprobatur, ad Græcam originem. unde et ipsi translatam esse non denegant revocandam fere, ex puris fontibus potius quam ex cœnosis rivulis bibendum esse. Et veritatem quærendam esse ad Græcam originem revertendo.

Secundo, hinc constat patribus hisce nullam tunc cognitam fuisse versionem Italam, aliamve quamlibet, vel in bibliothecis, ut putat Millius, extantem, vel aliunde comparandam, ex qua aliorum codicum Latinorum varietas aut dissonantia, tolli posset, aut N. Testamenti versio Latina ad integritatem suam restitui. Id liquet ex patrum omnium in hac ipsa quæstione alto silentio. Ad Græca exemplaria provocant omnes. Ad ea quoties in Latinis dubium aliquod occurrat, recurrendum esse uno ore pronunciant, Italam quandam versionem Latinis cæteris præferendam esse unus, quod sciam, Augustinus pronunciat, ex ea reliquas emendandas esse ne unus quidem. Audi Hieronymum clara voce sciscitantem, "Si Latinis† exemplaribus fides est adhibenda, respondeant quibus? Tot enim sunt exemplaria pene quot codices: sin autem veritas est quærenda de pluribus, cur non, ad Græcam originem revertentes, ea quæ vel a vitiosis interpretibus male reddita, vel a præsumptoribus imperitis emendata perversius, vel a librariis dormitantibus aut addita sunt, aut mutata, corrigimus? De N. Testamento nunc loquor quod (excepto apostolo Matthæo) Græcum esse non dubium, hoc certe cum in nostro sermone discordat, et in diversos rivulorum tramites ducit, uno de fonte quærendum est." Latuit ergo Hieronymum Romæ degentem, et Damaso P. familiarem, ea quæ Millio, post longum hoc ætatis intervallum compertissima (si fides ei sit adhibenda) fuit versio pura Italica, ad optimos codices adornata, solisque apostolorum authenticis dignitate forte inferior. Latuit Hieronymi adversarios studiose de illo detrahentes, quod quædam in evangeliis emendare tentaret, et Latinorum codicum vitiositatem ad Græcam originem revocaret. Latuit denique Damasum P. id Hieronymo in mandatis dantem, ut "ex Latinorum exemplaribus variantibus quæ sint illa, non quæ cum versione Italica, sed cum Græca consentiant veritate, decerneret."

SECTIO TERTIA.

Ad Millium jam redeo, qui excussis aliquot ex modo memoratis atque antiquissimis codicibus, ut et allegationibus patrum‡ vetustissimorum Latinorum, in ea prope fuit sententia assecutum se esse quæ in plerisque N. Test. locis fuerunt ipsius Italicæ genuina, et quibus Græcis Latina ista responderint.

Quæro ex quibus patrum veterum monumentis id consecutus sit; an ex Irenæi Latinis, ad quos in lectionibus ejus variantibus sæpius nos mittit? Nihil minus, ipso enim Millio§ monente, paucis in locis, necnon ex contextu orationis satis haud assequi possis quænam fuerit codices Irenæi lectio; et in hac, inquam, interpretatione Latina ex adductis per omnem fere paginam locis N. Test. pro seculo isto haud facile credibilis apparet Italici textus interpolatio.

An ex Tertulliano ad quem sæpe provocat? Nec id quidem; fatente enim eodem Millio,‖ "in eo citata sunt s. codicis loca fere negligentius, ex memoria, contracte, ad sensum, haud sine levicula aliqua subinde mutatione; ipsisque porro allegatis ab eo testimoniis, immista sunt nonnunquam aliqua a stylo Vulgati interpretis diversa, Africanæ φράσεως, et vocabula mire barbara; immo penes se habebat Italicæ¶ exemplar haud parum maculatum certe:" adeo ut hoc patre uti in scripturis ad originalem Græcum emendandis, esset plane otio et opera abuti.

De Cypriano idem est Millii judicium, "ex allatis ab illo N. T. pericopis manifestum esse Italicam tractu temporis magis magisque fuisse interpolatam," adeo ut in illo nihil fere notatum videam, nisi lectiones vitiosas, aut ex Africanis aliisque versionibus profectas.

Denique, aliis Latinis patribus sepositis, in uno Ambrosiastro, unoque Augustino tandem acquiescit. Hilarius enim, qui sub Ambrosii titulo diu latuit, Romanus diaconus cum esset, ab eo spes erat versionem Italam, si quæ tum purior extitisset, castius et sincerius exhibendam. Sunt autem de hoc Diacono observanda tria, primo eum nimirum,* ipso teste, hos commentarios edidisse, cum ecclesiæ Romanæ rector esset is ipse Damasus, qui Hieronymo invidiosum illud munus imposuerat de Latinis codicibus dissidentibus ex Græca veritate decernere, adeoque eo ipso tempore quando remedio isto, Damasi saltem judicio, indigebant Latini codices universi. Secundo, ex utriusque inspectione pro compertissimo habebit lector vel Hieronymi Vulgatam vel Hilarii valde corruptam prodiisse, quod ex variantibus Hilarii lectionibus ad calcem hujus operis conjectis, oculari demonstratione constabit. Tertio, "Præscribitur nobis (inquit Hilarius) de Græcis codicibus quasi non ipsi invicem discrepant.——Constat autem quosdam Latinos, porro olim de veteribus Græcis translatos codicibus, quos incorruptos simplicitas temporum servavit et probat." "Ita," inquit† Millius "Latinus de Græcis, cæcus, ut aiunt, de coloribus, nihil de codicibus Græcis novit Ambrosiaster." Somnium ejus de Latinis codicibus incorruptis ipsius Hilarii textus refutabit.

Ad Augustinum jam venio. Is autem Græcam linguam suis Latinis necessariam pronunciat; ut "ad exemplaria præcedentia recurratur, si quam dubitationem attulerit Latinorum interpretum infinita varietas;" et quod in Latinis codicibus titubat, Græcis haud dubio cedere oportere ait, adeoque codices Græcos Italicæ suæ versioni eundem prætulisse res ipsa loquitur. Adeo ut si verum id esset, quod pro vero, contra experientiam, nobis obtrudit‡ Millius, "Augustini, nempe, opera portionem bene magnam versionis Italicæ, qualis in codicibus illius ætatis ferebatur, exhibuisse," nihil inde profecerit Millius, partim quod codices, ante ætatem istam, fatente eodem Millio, misere interpolati essent; partim quod ipse Augustinus codices istos qualescunque fuerint, et Græcis corrigendos esse asserat. Denique ad Augustinum provocat Millius contra Augustini ipsius ad Hieronymum verba, quæ ad hunc modum se habent:§ "Proinde haud parvas Deo agimus gratias de opere tuo, quod evangelium ex Græco interpretatus es, quia pene in omnibus nulla offensio est, cum scripturam Græcam contulerimus, unde si quispiam veteri falsitati (N. B.) contentiosus fuerit, prolatis collatisque codicibus, vel docetur facillime, vel refellitur; et si quædam rarissima merito movent, quis tam durus est qui labori tam utili non facile ignoscat, cui vicem laudis referre non sufficit?" Quibus adjicias Hieronymi his verbis responsum; "Si me, ut dicis, in N. Testamenti emendatione suscipis, exponisque causam cur suscipias, quia plurimi linguæ Græcæ habentes scientiam, de meo possint opere judicare, eandem integritatem debueras etiam in Veteri credere Testamento." Hinc verisimile est Dupinium recte contra Millium dicere "Augustinum ex instituto versionem ab Hieronymo reformatam" in operibus, post eam editis, allegasse.

SECTIO QUARTA.

Supersunt jam codices MSS. iique, si Millio fides, ante castigationem ab Hieronymo conceptam exarati; Codices nempe Cant. Clarom. Germ. qui omnes unum tantum volumen N. Testamenti constituunt. "Hi," inquit Millius, "Italicam versionem qualis existebat ante Hieronymi tempora, nobis exhibent:" hoc est Hieronymo‖ judice, "vitiis undique scatentem, iisque adeo multis, ut ea tantum corrigere instituerit quæ sensum videbantur mutare; reliqua manere passus sit, ut fuerunt," ne multum a Latinæ lectionis consuetudine discreparent. "Magnus siquidem error in nostris codicibus inolevit (inquit Hierony-mus), et apud nos mixta sunt omnia." Non alium de hac controversia judicem desideramus quam Hieronymum, ocularem codicum tam Græcorum quam Latinorum inspectorem. Quid hic Millius? Hieronymum mendacii incusat, immo contra constare dicit* "haud alterius generis vitia versionem hanc Italam contraxisse, quam quæ cæteri omnes codices, tractu temporis, incuria, et licentia librariorum. Codices vero Græcos ad quos revertendum centebat Hieronymus, in multis abiisse a primævis illis e quibus Latina hæc profluxere. Verbo dicam," inquit, "libri qui hac ætate ferebantur, etiamque præstantissimi quique, interpolati erant et mixti, ne Origeniani quidem, et cæteri probatiores, ad quorum fidem ex occasione provocat Hieronymus, ab assumentis aliisque vitiis vacabant, soli puri et immaculati erant qui ex autographis apostolorum manabant, proximi istis, licet haud ita puri, quos aliquanto post constitutionem canonis N. Test. describi contigerit, et ex horum aliqua expressa erat versio Italica, adeo ut, ad ipsam emendandam ex Græco, consulendi forent codices, si qui extarent, similes istis ad quorum textum erat composita. Quod autem hos una cum aliis istorum temporum interpolarint magis magisque librarii ante seculum Hieronymi, frustra ex temporum posteriorum Græcis institui ejus in integram restitutionem: cum enim a lectione quam referebat hæc versio, abierint haud raro libri recentiores, certe quo propius in ea recensenda ad hos acceditur, eo magis Italicam a primogenia sua scriptura reddes alienam; nec reformabis ipsam, sed transformabis in novam nescio quam, a genuina vet Italica plurimum discrepantem."

Putares, lector, te audire Morinum aliquem, aut Amelotium, pro Latinis codicibus, tanquam pro aris et focis contendentem, potius quam protestantem, aut ecclesiæ Angl. filium. Ut autem hic mittam ea quæ hic Millius de versione primæva Italica tam fidenter asserit esse gratis dicta, cui unquam persuadebit, Origenis temporibus, hoc est, dum exemplaria in ecclesiis suis archetypa consulenda essent, ejusque Pamphili et Pierii opera tam egregie laboratum est, ut integre conservarentur, vitiis ita scatuisse, ut non ex iis, sed Italica nescio qua versione, per Millium tandem forent emendanda. Aliud certe existimavit Augustinus, qui pro versione Hieronymi Deo haud parvas egit gratias, eamque eo nomine præcipue suscepit, quod viri in Græcis versati de ea judicare potuissent? Quis ferat Millium tam audacter pronunciantem Græcos codices, e quibus Hieronymus Latinorum sphalmata emendavit, ante seculum Hieronymi a librariis adeo magis magisque interpolatos fuisse, et operam in iis consulendis plane inserit Hieronymus, nec Vulgatam ex eorum collatione emendatam nobis exhibuerit, sed potius in novam transformatam, et a genuina veteri Italica, quam sibi per somnium excogitavit Millius, plurimum discrepantem? Denique cum dicit† "In saniora consilia reversum esse Hieronymum, dum ita calamo temperavit, ut iis tantum quæ sensum mutare videbantur correctis, reliqua manere pateretur ut fuerant," quid aliud agit quam insaniæ Hieronymum arguere, codicum Latinorum sphalmata ex Græca veritate corrigentem, insaniæ Damasum id munus eidem imponentem, insaniæ Ambrosium potiorem illius auctoritatem concedentem, insaniæ Augustinum de libris Græcis apud ecclesias doctiores et diligentiores loquentem, e quibus Latini codices corrigerentur, iisque Latinos codices cedere oportere pronuncientem? insanivisse demum universam ecclesiam existimare, quam in hanc sententiam concessisse monet ὁ πάνυ Waltonus? Verbo dicam, aut in his tam audacter, et quasi de tribunali pronunciatis, ipse Millius, aut totus mundus insaniit.

Porro in consilium adhibuisse se dicit Millius,‡ "Vulgatam hodiernam quæ quantumcunque vitiata, haud exiguam certe partem retinet veteris genuinæ." Frustra, se judice. "Jam," enim inquit, "quando Latina nostra longo seculorum tractu misere corrupta sunt, vix illi libri sunt minus probati quam qui maximam præferunt cum Latinis nostris consonantiam." Simonius, cujus criticam in N. T. merito laudat Millius, id fieri non posse contendit hoc argumento, quod multa in veteri Vulgata menda intacta reliquerit Hieronymus, ne Latinorum suorum aures offenderet. Ex libro autem mendis quamplurimus adhuc scatente, et in paucis non semper recte, si Millio* fides, mutato, nihil certo colligi posse quo vetus Italica ad suam integritatem restituta esset, nemo non videt.

Horum, inquit Millius,† "mediorum cum textu Græco commissorum adminiculo, sive excussis antiquissimis codicibus, et allegationibus vetustissimorum patrum Latinorum, exactisque iis singulis ad fontem Græcum, assecutum me esse confido, quæ in plerisque Nov. Test. locis fuerint ipsius Italicæ genuina."

Juvat hic Millium Millio committere. Hieronymum a Millio reprehensum audivimus, quod ad hos fontes, librariorum interpolationibus, ejus ætate magis magisque vitiatos, provocaverit. Id Millius post mille et ducentos annos, se felici opera præstitisse existimat, quod frustra Hieronymus, cum suis interpolatis Græcis aggressus est. An id Hieronymo accidit codicum Latinorum vetustissimorum, aut patrum Latinorum inopia? Mirum contingere id potuisse Latino Romæ id temporis agenti, cum opus illud concinnasset, et de scriptis Latinorum patrum usque ad suam ætatem in catalogo suo judicium proferenti. Id unum dicendum superest, Hieronymo judicium, vel criticum illum nasum in genuinis decernendis defuisse, qui Millio tandem in eadem opera versanti contigit, aut juxta Augustinum, "operam omni laude majorem in veteri falsitate corrigenda Hieronymum præstitisse." Porro si Græci codices ita, Hieronymi ætate, interpolati fuissent, ut nullum ex iis certum judicium de Latinis codicibus ferre potuerit Hieronymus,‡ unde est quod Codicem Alexandrinum inter exemplaria Vet. Test. non tantum toto orbe vetustissima, sed et probatissima ponat Millius, "ita ut certe ab ipsis fere canonis incunabulis," inquit, "vix extitisse censeam qui archetypam evangelistarum et apostolorum scripturam fidelius expresserit?" An codicem hunc Hieronymo, qui ad Pierii et Origenis exemplaria in bibliotheca Alexandrina conservata toties provocat, ignotum fuisse existimandum est? Codicem ex quo versio Æthiopica§ prodit, unum e primævis, aut ad primævum aliquem expressum esse censet Millius, quo jure videmus. Idem de versione Coptica‖ pronunciat, eam nempe ex fonte Græco profluxisse, exemplari optimo, unoque e primævis, aut certe ex hujusmodi aliquo descripto. Inter codices Millio jam notos, ex quibus Novum Testamentum mendis bis mille purgatum se nobis exhibuisse præ se fert Millius, Hieronymo in Palæstina versanti, bibliothecæ Alexandrinæ scrinia pervestiganti, Antiochiam, Constantinopolin, variasque Asiæ provincias perlustranti, immo dum in Ægypto ageret monasteriorum Nitriensium codices evolventi, ne unum quidem ex tot Græcis codicibus primævis contigisse, ex quo Latinos suos emendaret, quis sanus judicaverit?

Lectiones variantes a MSS. desumptas, quas nec antiqui patres, nec Græci commentatores, nec versiones vetustissimæ agnoverunt, jure optimo rejiciendas esse nemo inficiabitur. Ex iis lectionibus, quas agnoverunt, quædam magni momenti sunt, ideoque majorem disquisitionem postulant, et merentur; aliæ minoris, aut nullius momenti, quas accurata consideratione indignas quis non putat? Hac præsertim de causa, quod licet ex patribus non pauci, 2—5, 8, volumini exararint, raro Millius paginam caput aut librum indicet, ubi variantes suas lectiones reperire possimus; et licet in plurimis patrum editionibus scripturaram, quæ ab iis citantur, occurrant indices, adeo tamen manci et imperfecti sunt, ut vix dimidiam partem earum exhibeant, et in hac dimidia parte ex mendis librariorum miræ sint tenebræ. Ne tamen aliquid notatu dignum præteriisse videar, mihi molestum non erit in hanc rem aliquid temporis et laboris insumere.

1. Variarum lectionum quæ notabiles sunt, primam invenies, Matt. v. 22, πᾶς ὁ ὀργιζόμενος τῷ ἀδελφῷ αὐτοῦ εἰκῇ, "Vox εἰκῇ," ait ille, "videtur omnino scholion esse, e margine codicis alicujus in textum admissum:" ego quidem hujusmodi conjecturæ parum faveo, nec in textum ecclesiis Christianorum publice recitatum insolens aliquod irrepsisse facile credam, nisi ex causa graviori, quam hic loci nullo modo invenio. Vulgatæ enim versioni, patribusque Latinis, habeo quod opponam, testimonium Justini M. Nec quis mihi merito objiciat, quod vocem εἰκῇ præterierit Justinus* secunda sua apologia his verbis, ὃς δ' ἂν ὀργισθῇ, ἔνοχός ἐστιν εἰς τὸ πῦρ. Periodus enim ista omnibus suis numeris non expleta est, atque μακὰ aliquis et μωρὲ pari jure ac εἰκῇ textu depellat. Idem de Irenæo dicendum est, qui Christi præcepta summatim enumerans ait,† "Dominus pro eo quod est non occides, neque irasci quidem præcepit;" sed‡ tribus aliis locis hunc ipsum textum proferens, diserte addit, "sine causa." Ita Cyprianus, lib. iii. p. 64, Apost. Constitutiones, lib. ii. cap. 53. Ita Chrysostomus, Euthymius, et Theophylactus in locum. Ita Basilius M. tom. ii. p. 447, Greg. Ducæum; et p. 114 et 116 bis; et tom. v. p. 315. Syrus autem et Copt. vocem hanc ita propriam hoc loco putarunt, ut retinere eam maluerint quam interpretari. Cum vero "vox εἰκῇ," ex Millii sententia, "necessario adhibenda videretur, ad emolliendum sc. quod aliqui durius dictum putarent;" ex ea sententia recte colligimus, quod vocem illam nemo quidem de industria omiserit; potuit tamen omitti ex oscitantia librariorum, quod aliis locis accidisse ipsi sæpissime in confesso est.

2. Ex insignioribus variantium lectionum secunda est, ea quæ dominicam orationem claudit doxologia, ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία, καὶ ἡ ἐύναμις, καὶ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, Matt. vi. 13, "quam Græcis liturgiis ortum suum debuisse" Millius multique critici judicant, quoniam sicut non reperitur apud Lucam xi. 4, ita neque apud patres Latinos; præterea deest apud Græcos, Origen. Cyprian. tertio seculo; Cyrillum Hierosol. Gr. Nyssen. quarto seculo; etiam ubi dominicam orationem ex professo interpretantur: ægre tamen in animum inducam meum precationi ab ipso Domino nostro compositæ commentitium aliquod adjecisse sanctos patres: quod sic hic loci factum esset, cur non etiam pari temeritate apud Lucam? Reperies quidem hanc clausulam in omnibus orientalibus versionibus, e quibus Syriaca, Waltono judice, apostolorum fere temporibus confecta est, et apud eruditos haud paucos, ait Millius,* "convenit ipsam seculo apostolico proxime sequente a viris apostolicis fuisse concinnatam;" legas eam apud Chrysostomum, Euthymium, Theophylactum, i. e. apud omnes Græcos commentatores in locum; Chrysostomus explicat eam, et explanat ad hunc modum, ταῦτα γάρ φησιν, αἰτῶ παρά σου, ὅτι οἶδά σε βασιλέα πάντων, αἰώνιον κεκτημένον κράτος, καὶ πάντα δυνάμενον ὅσαπερ ἂν θέλῃς, καὶ δόξαν κεκτημένον ἀναφαίρετον. Isidorus Pelusiota, Ep. lib. iv. ep. 24, dominicam orationem interpretatus est, atque ibi asserit, si recitaret aliquis hæc verba, ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία, καὶ ἡ ἐύναμις, καὶ ἡ δόξα, καταφρονεῖν δὲ τοῦ πᾶσαν δύναμιν καὶ δόξαν πηγάζοντος, fontem interim omnis potestatis et gloriæ sperneret illum, quicunque sit criminis irremissibilis se reum facere; eosque solos eadem verba sincere proferre, qui ad singula Dei jussa toto corpore contremiscunt. Apostolicæ Constitutiones† hanc precationem bis exhibent pariter ac in textu, minime mutilam et decurtatam, eamque appellant nomine precationis, ἣν ὁ Κύριος ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ διετάξατο. Denique cum Lucianus Philopatrim suam absolvens ait, τὴν εὐχὴν ἀπὸ πατρὸς ἀρξάμενος καὶ τὴν πολυώνυμον ᾠδὴν εἰς τέλος ἐπιθείς, illum dominicæ orationis initium, ac finem perstrinxisse censet Cotelerius. Originem‡ in hac re parvi facio, cujus testimonio si fides adhibenda esset, tum γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου, ὡς ἐν οὐρανῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, item ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ, de Lucæ textu, tanquam de loco non suo, tollenda sunt; temerarium facinus ac valde periculosum: ad summam, Gr. Nyssen et S. Ambrosius hanc clausulam non (prout innuit Millius) penitus omiserunt, sed more Græcarum quarundam liturgiarium hanc una cum doxologia Filii et Spiritus Sancti simul protulerunt. Gr. Nyssen enim suam dominicæ orationis explicationem peragit his verbis:§ "Quin stantes Deum precemur, Ne nos inducas in tentationem, sed libera nos a malo, a quo liberet nos gratia Christi, ὅτι αὐτῷ ἡ ἐύναμις, καὶ ἡ δόξα, ἅμα τῷ Πατρὶ καὶ τῷ Ἁγίῳ Πνεύματι, νῦν καὶ ἀεὶ, καὶ εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, ἀμήν." Ad eundem modum Pseudo-Ambr. lib. vi. de Sacram. c. ult. Denique cum hæc δοξολογία, testibus Drusio et Lightfooto, saltem quoad sensum, in publicis Judæorum liturgiis obtinuerit, et in versionibus Syrorum et Arabum, in confiniis gentis Judaicæ degentium, atque adeo ex iis hanc formulam recipientium, inveniatur, cumque apud patres Græcos invaluerit mos mentione Patris facta ei adscribere μεγαλοσύνην καὶ δόξαν εἰς αἰῶνας, ἀμήν, vide Clem. R. Epist. ed. Junii, p. 29, et in fine, verisimile est eam locum hic suum obtinere, potius quam manu aliena et temeraria huic s. orationi additam fuisse.

3. Matt. vi. 32, mentio facta est de additamento quodam ab Origene et Clemente Alex. haud semel citato; viz. αἰτεῖτε τὰ μεγάλα, καὶ τὰ μικρὰ ὑμῖν προστεθήσεται· καὶ αἰτεῖτε τὰ ἐπουράνια, καὶ τὰ ἐπίγεια ὑμῖν προστεθήσεται. "Ita tamen (ait ille) ut tricesimi tertii commatis loco positum haud putem; sed appositum potius interpretamenti gratia:" quod luce clarius fiet ex ipso Clemente, Strom. iv. p. 488, cum enim Christi verba citasset, ζητεῖτε πρῶτον τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ τὴν δικαιοσύνην, addit, ταῦτα γὰρ μεγάλα, et deinde sequitur, τὰ δὲ μικρὰ, καὶ περὶ βίον ταῦτα προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν.

4. Cap. x. 8, νεκροὺς ἐγείρετε, "Probabile est adjectum hoc aliunde (ait Millius) et quidem ab ipsis pene Christianismi primordiis (cum id Syrus, Vulg. et Cant. legant) quoniam omittunt MSS. triginta amplius,‖ Basilius, Chrysostomus, Euthymius, et Theophylactus in locum." Sed extant hæc verba apud Hilarium canon. 9, apud Cant. et Alex. MSS. apud Cyrillum Alex. Is. p. 862, Glaphyr. in Deut. p. 426, et de Sancta Trinitate, lib. iii. p. 494. Cur autem omissa fuere ratio probabilis a Millio redditur, nempe, quod neminem ante Christi resurrectionem ab apostolis vitæ redditum legimus; qui maximam hujusce capitis partem ad secundam missionem Christo demum e mortuis suscitato respectum habuisse parum animadverterunt; hac forsan ex ratione ad illa omittenda facile adduci potuerunt: cur autem adderentur, ne color quidem, aut prætextus est, cum novam afferant difficultatem, nulla adhuc mentione facta de mundatis leprosis pariter ac mortuis suscitatis. Ita cap. xi. 5, χωλοὶ περιπατοῦσι, νεκροὶ ἐγείρονται desunt (ait ille) in Origene in Joh. sc. p. 103. Sed longe fallitur opinione; primam periodi partem agnoscit Origenes, et alteram absque ulla variante lectione reperies Luc. vii. 22, ideoque utrum sint Christi verba, in dubium venire non potest.

5. Cap. xi. 23, καὶ σὺ Καπερναοὺμ, ἡ ἕως τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθεῖσα· μὴ ἕως ποῦ οὐρανοῦ ὑψωθήσῃ, MSS. quædam, Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 70, p. 371. Sed ex annotationibus doctissimi Grabii constat, quod illa lectio non ipsius Irenæi, sed solius Latini interpretis sit: "Nam in nullo (ait Grabius) Græcorum patrum hunc locum ita allegatum reperio: Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Arabica, Syriaca, Persica vers. textui assentiuntur."

6. Cap. xix. 17, τί με λέγεις ἀγαθόν; in annotationibus Millii Matthæus, inquit Origenes, ὡς περὶ ἀγαθοῦ ἔργου ἐρωτηθέντος τοῦ σωτῆρος ἐν τῷ τί ἀγαθὸν ποιήσω; διέγραψεν τί με ἐρωτᾷς περὶ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ; ὁ δὲ Μάρκος καὶ Λουκᾶς φασὶ τὸν σωτῆρα εἰρηκέναι, τί με λέγεις ἀγαθόν; Sed Justinus M. in Dial. cum Tryph. p. 328, Irenæus, lib. cap. 17, Origenes contra Celsum, lib. v. p. 238, cum textu congruunt. De altera hac lectione venerandæ antiquitatis, silentium est apud Millium, viz. Θεὸς ὁ πατὴρ, vel, πατὴρ ὁ ἐν οὐρανοῖς, vel πατὴρ μου ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. Occurrit hæc lectio in Justino M. p. 328, Clemente Alex. Pædag. p. 118, Origene, ubi supra, Exhort. ad Mart. p. 160, Comment. in Joh. p. 38, et lib. i. de Principiis, cap. 3. Placuit forte Millio hanc lectionem prætermittere, quoniam, Ariana exorta controversia, vocem πατὴρ in evangelio scriptam fuisse præcise negarunt. Adjecta erat a Marcionitis, inquit Epiphanius.* Et orthodoxus in primo Dial. de Trin. (quem nonnulli† Athanasii fuisse putant) οὐκ εἴρηται (ait) οὐδεὶς ἀγαθὸς εἰ μὴ εἷς ὁ πατὴρ, ἀλλὰ εἰ μὴ εἷς ὁ Θεός. Vox quidem πατὴρ nec apparet jam in nostris MSS., nec agnita olim fuit a vetustis interpretibus. Cum vero Valentiniani, Marcionitæ, aliique hæretici hac voce causam suam fulcire putentur, sanctos patres hoc usurpasse verbum, reclamantibus MSS. suis quis credat? Hinc constat quam parum fidei et auctoritatis variantes ex iis desumptæ lectiones mereantur.

7. Matt. xxvi. 28, τὸ περὶ πολλῶν ἐκχυνόμενον, "Qui effundetur," Vulg. "Futurum se (ait ille) quod futuri loco; nec enim illis vinum hoc ipse sanguis Christi erat jam effusus, sed ejusdem mox effundendi symbolum." Sed N. B. (1.) quod omnes evangelistæ et apostoli cum de institutione sacramenti corporis Christi loquantur, dicunt τὸ διδόμενον, τὸ κλώμενον, Luc. xxii. 19, 1 Cor. xi. 24, et de sanguine Christi, τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον, Mar. xiv. 24, Luc. xxii. 20, verbum in præsenti tempore usurpantes, quoniam ex hac institutione facta est repræsentatio corporis Christi quod mox frangendum, et sanguinis Christi qui mox effundendus erat; per quam illos Domini mortem annunciare oportet, donec veniat. (2.) Quod eadem figura dicendi de ambobus sacramentis veteris fœderis utitur sacra scriptura; de circumcisione enim ante dicit quam Abraham circumcideretur, "Hoc est pactum meum, αὕτη ἡ διαθήκη, quod observabitis inter me et vos," Gen. xvii. 10. Et de agno paschali ante dicitur, πάσχα ἐστὶ Κυρίῳ, "Victima transitus Domini est," Exod. xii. 27, quam transivit Dominus super domos filiorum Israel, percussit autem omne progenitum in terra Ægypti. Vide annotata mea in hunc locum.

8. Marc. i. 2, ἐν τοῖς προφήταις, hanc lectionem pro virili parte jamdudum tubear; cui defensioni adjunge testimonium Hieronymi in Matt. iii. f. 8, lit. C. Nos autem nomen Isaiæ putamus additum scriptorum vitio.

9. Marc. xv. 25, "Erat autem τρίτη ὥρα, tertia hora, et crucifixerunt eum," Joh. xix. 14, ὥρα ὡσεὶ ἕκτη. Vide hoc ἐναντιοφανές, conciliatum in annotatis nostris ad hunc locum. Lectio τρίτη ad Joban. librariorum sine dubio est, non evangelistæ, inquit Millius.

10. Luc. i. 35, διὸ γεννώμενον ἅγιον. Hic loci MSS. omnesque versiones, et plurimi e patribus, post γεννώμενον addunt ἐκ σοῦ, quam lectionem versio Anglicana probat et firmat, dicendo "quod nascetur ex te;" nec injuria; id hunc enim modum legunt Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 26, Tertullianus contra Prax. cap. 26, Novatianus de Trin. cap. 19, Origenes, Dial. contra Marcion. p. 121. Eutropio enim postulante ut ex scripto recitentur verba, recitantur τὸ γεννώμενον ἐκ σοῦ, hac simul nota adnexa, quod evangelista non dicit διὰ σοῦ ἀλλ' ἐκ σοῦ· ad eundem modum autor Quæstionum et Respond. ad Orthod. qu. 46, p. 430, Epiphanius, Anch. p. 69, Chrysostomus, ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 476. Quibus comites adjungit Millius Athanasium, Greg. Thaumaturgum, Titum Bost. et Hesychium. Videtur tamen illi quod hæc lectio ortu sit ex interpretamento, ἵνα φῦσαι γενόμενον ἐκ Μαρίας πιστευθείη. Pace tua dicam, docte editor, inter illas quas germanas esse acriter contendis, non una ex sexcentis pari atque hæc lectio auctoritate innititur. Vide Proleg. p. 72, col. 1.

11. Luc. ii. 22, αἱ ἡμέραι τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ αὐτῶν. Vulg. et Arab. αὐτῆς· veram et antiquam lectionem textui convenisse ex his Origenis verbis, hom. 14 in Lucam, f. 100, D, discimus; "Si scriptum esset 'propter purgationem ejus,' i. e. Mariæ, nihil quæstionis oriretur, et audacter diceremus Mariam, quæ homo erat, purgatione indiguisse post partum; nunc vero in eo quod ait 'dies purgationis eorum,' non videtur unum significare, sed alterum, sive plures." Vide hic Millium textum confirmantem, Prol. p. 64, col. 2. p. 72, col. 1. p. 80, col. 2. Corrige igitur annotata nostra in hunc locum.

12. Luc. xi. 2,——γενηθήτω τὸ θέλημά σου, ver. 4, ——ἀλλὰ ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. Utraque petitio, ait Origenes,* explicans hanc precationem, παρὰ Λουκᾷ σεσιώπηται. Notat et Augustinus† "quod evangelista Lucas in oratione dominica petitiones non septem, sed quinque complexus est,——Ostendens ergo Lucas tertiam petitionem duarum superiorum esse quodammodo repetitionem, magis eam prætermittendo fecit intelligi. 'Et libera nos a malo' iste non posuit, ut intelligeremus ad illud superius, quod de tentatione dictum est, pertinere." Δοκεῖ δέ μοι (inquit Origenes) ὁ Λουκᾶς διὰ τοῦ, μὴ εἰσενέγκῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμόν, ἐνιάμει ἐδιδαχέναι καὶ τὸ ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. Omittuntur in Vul. et in plerisque exemplarium Latinorum, ait Maldonatus; quem tamen habemus ingenue confitentem, quod extent in omnibus fere MSS. Græcis. Agnoscunt has petitiones, et interpretantur, Euthymius et Theophylactus, et singulæ versiones orientales. Origeni quos opponam habeo Sanctum Cyprianum, Cyrillum Hieros. Gr. Nyssenum, Chrysostomum, in quorum commentariis de insigni hac omissione altum silentium est: Augustino Augustinum oppono, qui in tractatu de verbis Domini secundum Lucam universas septem petitiones diserte enumerat; et S. Ambrosius hanc precationem e Luca textui congruentem depromit. Vulgatam minoris facio, quæ in Luca sic exorditur, "Cum oratis, dicite, Pater, sanctificetur," &c. at vel ipse Origenes ait, τοῦ δὲ Λουκᾶ οὕτως, Πατὴρ ἡμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. Unde cogitur Millius dicere irrepsisse hæc ante tempora Origenis, Prol. p. 44, col. 1. Postremo etiam quod inter omnia exemplaria Græca, Millio teste, bina sola his petitionibus careant, quod si olim defuissent hæ petitiones tum in Græcis tum in Latinis MSS., eas tot Græcos librarios dedita opera adjecisse quis sibi unquam persuadere potest?

13. Luc. xi. 13, δώσει Πνεῦμα Ἅγιον τοῖς αἰτοῦσιν αὐτόν. "Ἀγαθὸν δόμα, Cant. (et Origenes, ut opinor, qui tamen bonum illud interpretatur Πνεῦμα τῆς υἱοθεσίας) 'Spiritum bonum,' Vulg. cum quatuor MSS. 'magno consensu exemplarium; quibus ego sane magis assentior,' inquit Erasmus." Hæc Millius. Erasmi autem verba sunt, "Græci codices, qui tum aderant, legebant Πνεῦμα Ἅγιον· sed magno consensu reclamantibus exemplaribus Latinis etiam vetustis." Cecidit belle quod dixerat Latinis: omnia enim exemplaria Græca, Athanasius de Humana Natura Suscepta, p. 607, Theophylactus in locum, textui consentiunt, et explicantes versiculum nonum,—"Quærite et invenietis;"—ex his verbis recte colligunt, quod Pater sit daturus Spiritum Sanctum petentibus. Denique omnes orientales versiones reddunt Πνεῦμα Ἅγιον, sicut Chrysostomus, hom. 1 de Precatione, ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 747.

14. Joh. i. 3, οὐδὲ ἓν ὃ γέγονεν——4, ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν. Tot hic loci variantes lectiones quot nec ipse Millius enumerare potuit. Apud commentatores plena errorum sunt omnia, adeo inter se invicem, et etiam a subimetipsis dissident, atque discordant, ut quicunque scripta eorum pervolutabit, næ incertior ille fiat multo quam dudum, 1. Quidam ex antiquis legunt, ὃ γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν. Ita Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 9, p. 186. Origenes Com. in Joh. p. 63 et 66, φησὶ γὰρ καὶ ὃ γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν. Alios quamplurimos hanc lectionem retinuisse ex eo colligitur, quod apud illos hujus versiculi clausula est, ἐγένετο οὐδὲ ἕν. Sed Maldonatus ait, "Non enim quia hæc tantum verba citare solent, continuo putandum est, ibi eos punctum finitæ sententiæ posuisse, sed ea tantum protulisse verba, quæ ad probandum id quod agebant satis erat, quod nos etiam sæpe facere solemus." Certum indicium quod Ambrosius, qui lib. iii. de Fide, cap. 3, fine, "Ipso factum esse nihil quod factum est," legendum esse contendit, vel potius apud plerosque obtinere, ait, aliquando non nisi hæc legat verba, "Omnia per ipsum facta sunt, et sine ipso factum est nihil," ut sermone 20 in Ps. cxviii.* Et quod magis mirum est, Hilarius, qui legendum esse dicit, "Sine ipso factum est nihil, quod factum est in ipso;" sæpe tamen in eodem libro non nisi hæc verba citat, "Omnia per ipsum facta sunt," aliquando hæc sola, "Sine ipso factum est nihil." Quod si hic Maldonati sermo ad Hilarium non exquisite quadraret, certo tamen certius est quadrasse illum cum omnibus fere Græcis patribus, qui textum ipsum firmant et corroborant. Altera autem lectio olim fuit Valentinianorum, Iren. lib. i. p. 39; Arianorum, Ambrosius, lib. iii. de Fide, cap. 3; Epiphanius, Anchor. p. 80, Eunomianorum et Macedonianorum; unde Chrysostomus in locum, οὐδὲ γὰρ τὴν τελείαν στιγμὴν τῷ οὐδὲ ἓν ἐπιθήσομεν κατὰ τοὺς αἱρετικούς, ἐκεῖνοι γὰρ βουλόμενοι τὸ Πνεῦμα κτιστὸν ποιεῖν, φασὶν ὃ γέγονεν ἐν αὐτῷ ζωὴ ἦν· similiter Euthymius et Theoph. Secunda lectio, quam memoratu vix dignam afferunt Epiphanius et Hilarius, cum quibusdam aliis, hæc est: "Nihil factum est quod factum est in ipso." Tertia est ipsius textus lectio, quam apud plerosque obtinuisse merito asserit Ambrosius. Nam ut silentio transeam supra memoratos, qui primam lectionem veluti hæreticam adjudicarunt, Cyprianus, lib. ii. contra Jud. §. 2, Hilarius de Trin. lib. i. p. 6, Epistola ad Antiochenos Ignatio ascripta, p. 298, Epiphanius, Hær. 51, p. 434, Hieronymus in Isa. xliv. et in Amos vi., lectionem in textu retinent; et licet Millius Gr. Nazianzenum primæ lectionis patronum adoptarit, in ea tota quidem re erravit: cum enim hæretici, qui Spiritum Sanctum creaturam esse contendebant, opinionem suam confirmarint ex eo quod dictum est de Christo, "Omnia per ipsum facta," et per consequentiam Spiritum simul Sanctum; hanc objectionem flocci facio, inquit Nazianzenus,† πάντα γὰρ ὅσα γέγονεν εἴρηται, οὐχ ἁπλῶς ἅπαντα. Præterea in hac lectione conveniunt omnes versiones, et quod germana sit lectio, colligi potest. 1. Quod vox ἕν postulare videatur, vel ὃ γέγονεν, vel saltem τῶν γεγεννημένων χωρὶς αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο οὐδὲ ἓν ὃ γέγονεν, quod "absque illo factum est ne unum quidem eorum quæ facta sunt." 2. Si hæc lectio retineatur, sensus verborum erit perspicuus, alius obscurus, et explicatu perquam difficilis. Cum autem reduplicatio, figura dicendi apud Hebræos usitatissima, latuerit quondam patres, factum est quod alteram lectionem facilius admiserint, v. g. Isa. xxxix. 4, πάντα τὰ ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ μου, εἶδοσαν, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ μου, ὃ οὐκ εἶδοσαν. Ita v. 20 hujus capitis, καὶ ὡμολόγησεν, καὶ οὐκ ἠρνήσατο, καὶ ὡμολόγησεν. Quid multa? hoc potius inter varias ejusdem periodi puncturas, quam inter variantes lectiones annumerandum est.

15. Act. viii. 37, εἰ πιστεύεις ἐξ ὅλης τῆς καρδίας, ἔξεστι. Desunt hæc in Syr. Æthop. MSS. 20: unde pro commate παραβεβλημένῳ habet hic Millius,‡ a primis Christianismi seculis injecto, ut et alia in libro Actorum Apostolorum haud pauca; legunt siquidem Vulg. (Arab.) Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 12, lib. iv. cap. 40 (unde, notante Grabio, apparet Irenæum hæc verba in suo codice legisse), Tertullianus de Bapt. cap. 18, Cyprianus ad Quirin. lib. iii. §. 33, Œcumenius in locum, Hieronymus, tom. iv. f. 46, lit. I, Augustinus de Fide et Operibus, cap. 9 et 12.—Idem tamen Millius, Prol. p. 40, col. 2, iisdem fere testimoniis adductus contrarium plane dicit, nempe, "Hunc versiculum pro injectitio olim a nobis habitum, lectum ab Irenæo constat, lib. ii. cap. 12, p. 229, et ad αὐθεντίαν ejus stabiliendam, haud parum conferunt Vulg. Tertullianus, Cyprianus." Nec difficile est rationem assignare vero proximam, cur ægre a quibusdam sequioris ævi scriptoribus hæc verba retinerentur; objici nempe ea solent in præjudicium disciplinæ et πράξεως ecclesiasticæ in restringendis tamdiu a baptismo catechumenis, ac tot iis fidei capita discenda proponendi more, priusquam ad salutare lavacrum admitterentur. Constat hoc ex illatis Tertulliani, Hieronymi, Augustini locis, in quibus huic objectioni responsum quale quale exhibent. Hinc denique præsul doctissimus hanc Cypriano notam apponit, "Leges ecclesiasticæ, quæ cavebant ne Judæi, vel gentiles, aliique indigni præpropere admissi, Christiano nomini dedecus inurerent, nec debent, nec possunt gratiæ divinæ prejudicare."

16. Rom. i. 32, οἵτινες τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιγνόντες (ὅτι οἱ τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες ἄξιοι θανάτου εἰσὶν) οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι. Integra hæc lectio (ait Millius) sic se habebat, οἵτινες τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπιγνόντες, οὐκ ἐνόησαν, ὅτι οἱ τὰ τοιαῦτα πράσσοντες ἄξιοι θανάτου εἰσὶν, οὐ μόνον δὲ οἱ ποιοῦντες αὐτὰ ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ συνευδοκοῦντες τοῖς πράσσουσι. Hinc ex una parte sunt Vulg. et Latini patres qui Vulgata versione usi sunt, Cyprianus, Lucifer Calaritanus, Gildas, Hesychius Latine ab Hesychio Salonitano (inquit Cavius nostras) ad Vulgatam versionem adaptatus, Ambrosius, Pseudo-Hieronymus, Salvianus, Augustinus; atque his palmam defert Millius: ex altera parte sunt non omnes modo versiones orientales, sed etiam Chrysostomus, Theodoretus, Œcumenius, Theophylactus in locum, qui conantur rationem reddere cur συνευδοκοῦσι postponatur ποιοῦσιν, et sic textus lectioni robur addunt et firmamentum. Vide Chrysost. Hom. ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 145, tom. ii. p. 1023, tom. iii. p. 618, Epiphan. Hær. Orig. p. 585, Basil. tom. i. in Isa. p. 160, tom. ii. Mor. p. 450, Reg. Brev. p. 632, Greg. Nyssen. tom. ii. p. 734, et Theologium Diaconum ubi ad suas illum partes trahit Millius. Quæstio enim erat, ait Isidorus,* τί ἐστι τὸ οὐ μόνον αὐτὰ ποιοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνευδοκοῦσι τοῖς πράσσουσι; respondet Isidorus, οἱ μὴ νοήσαντες τὸ εἰρημένον putant περιπεπωθέναι τὰς λέξεις τὰς ἀποστολικὰς, et legendum arbitrantur οὐ μόνον οὐ ποιοῦντες αὐτὰ, ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ συνευδοκοῦντες, i. e. cum Millio quidam sentiebant. Mihi autem non videtur, ait ille, ἡμαρτῆσθαι ἐν τούτῳ τὰ ἀποστολικὰ βιβλία,— et deinde ad recitandam et explicandam textus lectionem progreditur. N. B. Quod hæc Isidori verba citentur etiam ab Œcumenio in locum. Quod ad Clementem Rom. attinet in binis ad Corinthios Epistolis, scito illum perpaucos Novi Fœderis locos juxta textum allegasse; adeo ut in parag. 45, idcirco solum posteriorem versiculi partem ad hunc modum citasse videatur, quo facilius illam ad precedentia verba acommodaret, ταῦτα γὰρ πράσσοντες στυγητοὶ τῷ Θεῷ ὑπάρχουσιν, καὶ οὐ μόνον οἱ πράσσοντες, &c.

17. Rom. vii. 26, εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, v. l. χάρις τῷ Θεῷ, sic Origenes, Exhort. ad Mart. p. 164, Cyrillus Alex. contra Anthropomorph. p. 178. Omnia autem Græcorum scholia textum referunt, (fallitur enim Millius cum Theodoretum excipit, qui in commentario suo alterius cujuscunque lectionis ne suspicionem quidem affert) et Sanctus Basilius, tom. i. p. 551. Utraque lectio idem significat, viz. gratia agenda est Deo. Tertia lectio, "gratia Dei," soli Vulg. auctoritati innititur, ejusque etiam depravatæ; Hieronymus enim uno loco legit, "Gratias ago Deo," ait Esthius in locum. Vide tamen Millium, Prol. p. 65, col. 1.

18. Rom. xi. 6, εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶ χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶν ἔργον. Cum desint hæc verba quatuor MSS. Vulg. et per consequentiam Ambrosio et Latino Origenis interpreti, proinde subdititia summo consensu tradunt Erasmus, Zegerus, Esthius, Grotius, et Millius: genuina autem esse asserunt auctoritate graviores viri, Photius, Œcumenius, Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Theodoretus, qui his non solum verbis utitur, sed in com-mentario observat suo, quod apostolus in eandem sententiam loquatur, Rom. iv. 4, "Ei autem qui operatur, merces non imputatur secundum gratiam, sed secundum debitum." His adde Chrysostomum, qui, tom. v. ed. Morel. p. 718, et citat textus verba et explicat: ὁ γὰρ ἐξ ἔργων νομικῶν σωθῆναι φιλονεικῶν οὐδὲν ἔχει κοινὸν πρὸς τὴν χάριν, ὅπερ οὖν καὶ Παῦλος αἰνιττόμενος ἔλεγεν, εἰ χάριτι, &c. εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶ χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶν ἔργον. Adeo longe fallitur opinione Millius, cum Chrysostomum ac Theodoretum hæc verba in commentariis suis non attigisse indicat.

19. Rom. xii. 11, τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες, sic legunt e MSS. plus viginti, omnes versiones, Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. iii. cap. 12, Basilius tom. ii. p. 471, omnia Græcorum scholia, Hieronymus Ep. ad Marcel. tom. ii. fol. 33, lit. D; cujus hæc sunt verba, "Illi legant, spe gaudentes, 'tempori' servientes; nos legamus 'Domino' servientes; illis placeat humanus sermo; nos cum Græcis, i. e. cum apostolo, qui Græce locutus est, erremus." "Latini omnes, excepto Ambrosio," inquit Esthius; qui tamen non potest non confiteri quod in Græco dicatur sic habere "Domino" servientes. Atque ad hanc lectionem stabiliendam non leve momentum affert dictio ipsa δουλεύειν, nam δουλεύειν τῷ Θεῷ, Κυρίῳ, Χριστῷ alibi occurrunt in Novo Fœdere; quod si δουλεύειν τῷ καιρῷ in toto sacro codice quæras, frustra suscipiatur labor. Millius tamen tum hic tum in proleg. suis, p. 61, 84, 117, 140, "Facile crediderim (ait) cum Erasmo τῷ καιρῷ esse germanam lectionem."

20. Rom. xii. 13, ταῖς χρείαις τῶν ἁγίων κοινωνοῦντες. Μνείαις genuinum, ait Millius locis pluribus. Lectioni tamen isti nemo favet præter Latinos patres quarti et quinti seculi, postquam celebrandi memorias martyrum, sepulchraque eorum prava superstitione frequentandi mos et consuetudo increbuit. Omnia autem Græcorum scholia, omnes versiones, ne ipsa quidem Vulgata excepta, et Sanctus Basilius, tom. ii. p. 471, χρείαις retinent. Esthius Ruffino astipulatur, eamque censet veriorem quæ Græcorum erat codicum, "quandoquidem eam (unum Ambrosiastrum cum Sedulio si demas) concorditer in textu habent, et exponunt, quotquot tam Latine quam Græce in hanc epistolam commentatos novimus, nec in ullo, vel Latino vel Græco, exemplari, quod hodie extat, diversa lectio repiriatur," existimatque non male, istud lectionis dissidium olim accidisse ex vicinitate Græcarum vocum χρείαις et μνείαις. Hoc autem mendum simul ac a librariis factum fuit, cupidis ulnis amplexi sunt e Latinis isti, qui superstitiosa sollicitudine et zelo sepulchra martyrum coluerunt, utpote quod consuetudini suæ aliquibus suspectæ, et a multis reprehensæ, majorem in modum patrocinari putarent. Hilarius, in sua ad Constantinum epistola, sic eum alloquitur, "Apostolus communicare sanctorum memoriis nos docuit, tu eas negare coegisti." Pro eo quod proferunt MSS. libri plerique et excusi omnes (ait Millius, Prol. p. 17, col. 1) videtur certe legisse Clemens Rom. in archetypo suo, ταῖς μνείαις τῶν, &c. et locum hunc interpretatur Clemens, "inopum, vel afflictorum Christianorum procul a nobis degentium memoriam habere μετ' οἰκτιρμῶν, seu ita ut ipsorum necessitates sublevemus." In hac Millii sententia οὐδὲν ὑγιές, sed purum ipsius commentum, sine ullo indicio B. Clementem de his verbis vel per somnium cogitasse. Sic enim incipit hæc sectio, "Oremus pro eis qui in aliquod peccatum lapsi sunt, ut detur illis ἐπιείκεια mansuetudo, et humilitas, quo non nobis, sed voluntati Dei cedant;" et deinde sequuntur verba a Millio citata, οὕτως γὰρ ἔσται ἔγκαρπος, καὶ τελεία ἡ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ τοὺς ἁγίους μετ' οἰκτιρμῶν μνεία, i. e. "sic enim memoria ipsorum cum commiseratione utilis ipsis et perfecta erga Deum, et sanctos erit." Judicent jam eruditi, utrum hic sit vola vel vestigium sublevationis inopum vel afflictorum Christianorum procul a nobis degentium, sive τῆς κοινωνίας τῶν ἁγίων, de quibus Millius tam fidenter agit. Judicent etiam utrum aliqua sit ratio existimandi Clementem hunc D. Pauli locum in animo habuisse: rogo denique, ubi facta est apud scriptores primorum ecclesiæ seculorum mentio τῆς κοινωνίας τῶν ἁγίων; Τὰς τῶν ἁγίων μαρτύρων μνήμας ποιεῖν, τῆς μνείας μαρτύρων τελεῖν, sunt phrases quæ apud canonum scriptores sæpius occurrunt. Sanctorum adhuc viventium, ταῖς μνείαις κοινωνεῖν nusquam. Frustra ergo ἐκ μνείας factum esse χρείας a scriba quodam eruditulo pronunciat Millius hic, et Prol. p. 46 et 82.

22. 2 Cor. x. 12, οὐ συνιοῦσιν. Omittunt Vulg. Clar. Gr. Lat. Ger. Lat. retinent igitur omnia (præter Clar.) Græca exemplaria et scholia. Ne tamen Vulgatæ suæ αὐθεντία diminuta esset, de Græcis, tanquam grammaticæ constructionis insciis, fidenter pronunciat Millius* in hunc modum: "Græci, quibus apostoli ista paulo præruptiora visa sunt, sumptis αὐτοὶ, ἑαυτοὺς, ἑαυτοῖς, in tertia persona, suppleverunt orationem istam per marginale scholion, οὐ συνιοῦσιν, quod irrepsit mox in contextum libri." En testes omni exceptione majores, quibus pudore suffundantur Græci, Ambrosiastrum qui hic omittit; nos autem, teste Esthio, contra fidem omnium exemplarium tam Latinorum quam Græcorum; Pelagium hæreticum, seu potius Pseud. Hieronymi commentarios, nullo judicio (teste Usserio†) a posteriore aliquo compaginatos; et Luciferum Calaritanum, cui opponimus D. Augustinum cum Græcis sæpius consentientem, scil. Comment. in Psal. xxxiv. cxviii. cxli. l. 22, contra Faustum cap. 27, et alibi.

23. Gal. ii. 5, οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν εἴξαμεν τῇ ὑποταγῇ, "Expungendum porro est, (ait Millius‡) τὸ οὐδὲ, et legendum 'quibus ad horam cessimus subjectione:'" quam tamen Hieronymus ait solam esse lectionem quorundam Latinorum codicum, viz. Iren. lib. iii. cap. 13, p. 234, Tertul. contra Marc. lib. v. cap. 3, Ambrosii, reclamantibus quod fatetur Græcis. Græca scholia et singulæ vetustissimæ versiones, inter quas Vulgata, textui fidem faciunt, atque illius veritatem satis firmant. Sed conjectura auguratur Millius in ipso codice, quo usus est Vulg. interpres, defuisse negationem οὐδὲ, credo quod eam haudquaquam ferre videtur apostolicæ dictionis tenor, nedum ipsa rei veritas. Pace autem illius dicam. 1. Tenor apostolicæ dictionis postulat negationem: sermo enim erat de iis quæ acciderunt postquam ascendisset Hierosolymam Paulus; ubi "neque Titus (ait ille) qui mecum erat, cum esset gentilis, compulsus est circumcidi" (nam Millii forsan solius opinio est cessisse tandem Paulum permittendo ut circumcideretur Titus). Nunquam igitur iis Judæis cessit, qui circumcisionem gentilium necessariam ad salutem judicarunt. 2. Noluit Titum circumcidi, ea potissimum de causa, ut opponeret se falsis fratribus, qui κατελθόντες ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας subintroierunt explorare libertatem quam habuerunt in Christo Jesu, ut eos in servitutem redigerent; quibus zelotis acriter resistendum esse duxit, ut veritas permaneret apud Galatas, sc. ut permanerent in libertate a jugo circumcisionis quam illis dedit evangelium Christi: hinc est quod capite quinto sic hortatur Galatas, "State, et nolite iterum jugo servitutis contineri; quoniam si circumcidamini, Christus vobis nihil proderit, evacuati estis a Christo, a gratia excidistis," 1, 2, 4. Quicquid igitur Morinus et Millius e contra litigent, certo certius est tum ipsam rei veritatem apostolicæ dictionis tenorem postulasse negationem.

24. Gal. ii. 11, ὅτε δὲ ἦλθε Πέτρος, et v. 14, εἶπον τῷ Πέτρῳ· Κηφᾶ——Κηφᾶ, sic Alex. (ait Millius, Prol. p. 70), aliique codices, Vulg. Euthalius, sed omnia Græca scholia et Arab. textum præferunt. De altera autem lectione in textum admissa in excusationem Petri, ut obviam irent blasphemiis Porphyrii, ad hunc modum judicium suum tulit Hieronymus. "Quibus primo respondendum, Alterius nescio cujus nescire nos nomen, nisi ejus qui in evan gelio, et in aliis Pauli epistolis, et in hac ipsa, modo Cephas, modo Petrus scribitur; non quod aliud Cephas, aliud significet Petrus, sed quod, quem nos Latine et Græce Petrum vocemus, hunc Hebræi et Syri, propter linguæ inter se vicinam, Cepham nuncupent. Deinde totum argumentum quod oblique de Petro, Johanne, et Jacobo dicitur huic intelligentiæ repugnare." Vide Cotelerii notas in Constit. Apost. p. 99, 100.

25. Ἡ πρὸς Ἐφεσίους ἐπιστολή. Hanc inscriptionem hic clanculum, sed in Prol. p. 9, col. 1, ex professo et palam rejicit. In præfatione mea ad hanc epistolam, locisque citatis ab eo ad paradoxum suum stabiliendum, argumenta illius dilui, simulque ostendi, quod ab initio agnita fuerit tanquam Epistola ad Ephesios, ex testimoniis Ignatii in principio, Irenæi in medio, Clementis Alex. in fine seculi secundi, Origenis etiam et Tertulliani dicentis, lib. v. contra Marc. cap. xi. "Epistolam hanc nos ad Ephesios præscriptam habemus, hæretici vero ad Laodicenos." Vide etiam cap. xvii. quibus adde e tertio seculo S. Cyprianum, item Paulum ad Ephesios, Test. ad Quirin. lib. ii. §. 28, p. 48, lib. iii. §. 7, p. 64, §. 11, p. 66, §. 13, p. 67, §. 41, p. 77, §. 70, p. 85, §. 72, 73, ibid. 117, p. 90. Illud ipsum ostendo ex testimoniis in seculo quarto Athanasii, orat. 3 adv. Ar. ὁ δὲ Παῦλος ἐν τῇ πρὸς Ἐφεσίους, p. 416, atque iterum p. 445, Epiphanii τῆς πρὸς Ἐφεσίους, Hær. Marcion. p. 147, 372, Greg. Nysseni, φησὶ γὰρ πρὸς Ἐφεσίους γράφων, in Cant. p. 596, διὰ τῶν πρὸς Ἐφεσίους λόγων, orat. prima de Resur. tom. ii. p. 828. Tametsi vero Basilium et Hieronymum allegat Millius asserentes quod hæc verba ἐν Ἐφέσῳ (in quibus cardo controversiæ vertitur) omissa fuerint quibusdam in exemplaribus, vel decipitur ipse, vel nos arte quadam fallere conatur. Testimonium Basilii occurrit, tom. i. p. 743, ubi se probaturum esse confidit, quod gentes utpote separatæ a Deo denominentur, μὴ ὄντες,— illi autem qui uniuntur Deo, οἱ ὄντες. Apostolus enim (ait ille) τοῖς Ἐφεσίοις ἐπιστέλλων, ὡς γνησίως ἡνωμένοις τῷ ὄντι διὰ ἐπιγνώσεως, ὄντας αὐτοὺς ἰδιαζόντως ὠνόμασεν, εἰπὼν τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσι, καὶ πιστοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· οὕτω γὰρ οἱ πρὸ ἡμῶν παραδεδώκασι, καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐν τοῖς παλαιοῖς τῶν ἀντιγράφων εὑρήκαμεν. Hæc disserit Basilius* contra Marcionitas, et alios qui depravarunt scripturas, τὰ μὲν, inquit, τῶν θείων ἐξαίροντες, τὰ δὲ παρεγγραφέντες· et consilium illi fuit firmare veritatem hujusce lectionis, τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, quam expunxerunt Marcionitæ, cum hanc epistolam ad Laodicenos datam contendissent. Atque hanc nimiam de voce ὄντες subtilitatem exagitat Hieronymus; "Quidam (inquit) curiosius quam necesse est, putant ex eo quod Moysi dictum sit, 'Qui est misit me,' etiam eos qui Ephesi sunt sanctos et fideles, essentiæ vocabulo nuncupatos;" quibus verbis pariter ac præfatione illius docemur, hanc epistolam ad Ephesios scriptam fuisse.

26. Eph. v. 4, ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστός. Ita legunt Græca scholia, et versiones omnes. Ita Clemens Alex. Protrept. p. 54, Athanasius, or. quarta contra Arianos, p. 427. Ait tamen Millius, Prol. p. 48, col. 2, ἐπιφαύσει σου "lectionem fuisse, quæ in codicibus Græcorum jam tempore Chrysostomi et Theodoreti extabat." Verba Chrysostomi sunt hæc, οἱ μὲν ἐπιφαύσεις φησὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, οἱ δὲ ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστός, μᾶλλον δὲ τοῦτό ἐστι. Theodoretus, καὶ τοῦτο μάλιστα τῇ ἀκολουθίᾳ τῶν εἰρημένων πρόσφορον. En utrosque lectionem hanc plane rejicientes; quibus accedit Hieronymus, cujus in locum hæc sunt verba, "Scio me audisse quendam de hoc loco in ecclesia disputantem, et non ut legimus ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστός, i. e. orietur tibi Christus, sed ἐφάψεται, i. e. continget te Christus recitantem, sed cum loci istius interpretatione ac contextu sensus 'iste non convenit:" ubi fontem lectionis hujus aperit, nempe fabulam de Adamo, in loco Calvariæ ubi Christus crucifixus est sepulto, et tactu corporis et sanguinis Christi vivificando.

27. Heb. ix. 1, εἶχε οὖν καὶ ἡ πρώτη σκηνή. Σκηνὴ omittunt Chrysostomus, Theodoretus, Vulg. et MSS. quamplurima. Subaudiendum διαθήκη monent Chrysostomus et Photius. "Irrepsit igitur (ait Millius in locum) editum σκηνή, ut videtur, ex proxime sequentibus, in quibus tabernaculi descriptio." Sed extat σκηνὴ apud Chrysostomum de Die Natali Domini, ed Mor. tom. v. p. 472, apud Theodoretum, et Œcumenium. In annotationibus meis in locum probavi quod hæc sit germana lectio; quam quidem sequentia verba, viz. σκηνὴ γὰρ κατεσκευάσθη ἡ πρώτη extra omnem omnino dubitationem ponunt.

LIBRI SECUNDI CAPUT SECUNDUM

Continet Examen variantium Lectionum in Evangelia Matthæi, Marci, Lucæ, Johannis, et in Acta Apostolorum.

SECTIO PRIMA—IN MATTHÆUM.

Cap. i. 6. Δαβὶδ δὲ ὁ βασιλεύς.] Deest ὁ βασιλεύς, Syr. Arab. Pers. Habent Hieronymus, Vulg. Theophylactus, et verba immediate præcedentia, "Jesse autem genuit" τὸν Δαβὶδ τὸν βασιλέα, satis indicant quod vocabulum illud hic retineri oporteat.

V. 18. Τοῦ δὲ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἡ γέννησις οὕτως ἦν.] Vulg. Pers. et Lat. Irenæus omittunt Ἰησοῦ, quod tamen agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syrus, et Arabs. Inconsulte igitur ac temere suspicatur Erasmus additum ex consuetudine recitationis ecclesiasticæ; male etiam rejicitur a Millio, Prol. p. 40, 42, 103.

Cap. ii. 1. Ἐν ἡμέραις Ἡρῴδου τοῦ βασιλέως.] Hæc verba diserte habent Hieronymus, Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, et venerandæ antiquitatis versiones omnes. Quod si desint forte illa in quatuor MSS., retinentibus amplius quam quadraginta, hoc non modo non labefactat lectionem, sed potius multo plus firmamenti et roboris ei dat. Sed "suspecta mihi fere sunt παρεμβλήσεως (inquit Millius*), quis verba tam insignia absque omni erroris occasione prætermiserit?" Quasi scribæ oscitantes nihil hallucinarentur! Sed ut frigido huic argumento responsum ex Millio demus, animum adverto, quod contendat is ipse "insignem illum locum Johannis de testimonio Patris, Verbi, et Spiritus ex Græcis ferme omnibus, ex MSS. permultis excidisse;" quid istuc igitur tam mirum, si hanc pericopen, parvi momenti, alteraque multo breviorem, præ incuria ac socordia sua quatuor forsan librarii prætermiserint? Verba etiam Joh. vi. 56, καθὼς ἐν ἐμοὶ ὁ πατὴρ, κἀγὼ ἐν τῷ πατρί. Ἀμὴν, ἀμὴν, λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐὰν μὴ λάβητε τὸ σῶμα τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ὡς τὸν ἄρτον τῆς ζωῆς, οὐκ ἔχετε ζωὴν ἐν αὐτῷ· verba, inquam, tam insignia, ac numerosa, neutiquam interpolatis lectionibus adnumerari vult Millius; sed "pro genuina pericope, multis retro seculis omissa, habendo" arbitratur, Prol. p. 74, col. 1. Vide etiam Append. p. 32.

V. 4. Παρ' αὐτῶν.] Ita Græca scholia, versionesque. Ita Hieronymus; ita etiam, demptis quatuor, codices universi, et absque his verbis sensus non plenus est. "Nescio tamen (ait Millius) an irrepserint παρ' αὐτῶν jam olim ex v. 7 hujus cap." Prol. p. 154, col. 2.

V. 11. Et magi intrantes domum εὗρον τὸ παιδίον.] Origenes in Matt. p. 374, Chrysostomus, Euthymius. Theophylactus, MSS. plura, Æthiop. Syr. Arab. Pers. legunt εἶδον. Hieronymus vero, Vulg. Epiphanius, εὕρον. Quod si magi Christum oculis adspexerint suis, invenerint certe illum quem quærebant, et si invenerint, hoc non aliter quam videndo illum, et aspiciendo contigit: non in re igitur, sed in verbo controversia est; cum vero Herodes dixerit, ἐπὰν δὲ εὕρητε, ἀπαγγείλατέ μοι, v. 8, si legas εὕρον, extrema primis optime respondebunt.

V. 18.] Desunt θρῆνος καὶ Hieronymo, Justino M. Dial. p. 304, versionibusque cunctis. Sed adsunt in Jer. xxxi. 15, unde, teste Hieronymo, citantur hæc verba, et cum Justinus M. diserte dicat Sanctum Spiritum locutum esse hæc verba διὰ Ἱερεμίου οὕτως, citans illa a propheta, non ab apostolo, satis magno argumento esse debet, quod citationibus illius parum fidei adhibendum sit. Versionibus autem, nempe, orientalibus, quæ textui Græco Hebraicum, et Latinis, quæ Hieronymum prætulerint, facile opponam Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, et LXX., qui cum editis congruunt.

* Prol. 162, col. 2.

Cap. iii. 8. Ποιήσατε οὖν καρποὺς ἀξίους τῆς μετανοίας.] Καρπὸν ἄξιον, magis probat Millius; nimirum quia codices plurimi, Lat. Irenæus, lib. ii. p. 212, Vulg. Arab. Copt. Æthiop. sic legunt. Πρὸς τοὺς φαρισαίους καὶ σαδδουκαίους, inquit Origenes,* Comm. in Joh. p. 119, ποιήσατε, ἐνικῶς, καρπὸν ἄξιον τῆς μετανοίας· πρὸς δὲ τοὺς ὄχλους παρὰ Δουκᾶν πληθυντικῶς καρποὺς ἀξίους. Nulla hic in sensu diversitas; constat enim moneri pharisæos et sadducæos ut digna veræ pœnitentiæ opera facerunt. Lectionem autem in textu tuentur ac defendunt Syr. Chrysostomus, et Theophylactus in locum; Basilius, tom. ii. p. 425, qui citat hæc verba nominatim ex Matthæo in numero plurali; Cyrillus Alex. qui sic legit in Matthæo, Comm. in Isa. p. 315, in Mich. p. 408, et Hom. Pasch. 5, p. 43; immo et ipse Origenes, qui eodem in commentario, p. 115, habet hæc verba, ποιήσατε οὖν καρποὺς ἀξίους μετανοίας· ταῦτα γὰρ ὑπὸ τοῦ Βαπτιστοῦ εἴρηται παρὰ τῷ Ματθαίῳ, N. B. ἰδόντος πολλοὺς τῶν φαρισαίων καὶ σαδδουκαίων ἐρχομένους πρὸς τὸ βάπτισμα. Nota etiam quod τὸ παρὰ Δουκᾶν, utut citatur a Millio, non est apud Origenem, qui loco prius dicto forte mysterium quoddam pro more suo celavit, quod explicatu difficile est.

Cap. iv. 12.] Ὁ Ἰησοῦς deest in duobus MSS. Æthiop.; sed Græca scholia, Hieronymus, et antiquæ versiones præter Æthiop. omnes retinent illud vocabulum; nec injuria, absque enim illo claudicaret periodus; sed judice Millio "subintellectum ὁ Ἰησοῦς scribæ jam olim in textum introduxere," Proleg. p. 148, col. 2.

Cap. v. 27. Ἐρρέθη τοῖς ἀρχαίοις.] Τοῖς ἀρχαίοις, Millio additum videtur, quanquam Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Cyrillus, Alex. in Julian. p. 9, et Theodoretus in Psal. ix. p. 433, e Græcis; et Lat. Irenæus lib. iv. cap. 27, p. 314, Hieronymus, et Vulg. τοῖς ἀρχαίοις agnoscant. Cum igitur nemo dubitet quin hoc dictum fuerit antiquis, et allegatum sit a tot patribus, nulla cujuscunque variantis lectionis mentione facta, cur rejiciant, causæ nihil est.

V. 32. Καὶ ὃς ἐὰν ἀπολελυμένην γαμήσῃ μοιχᾶται.] Deest hic pericope in Cant. cod. aliis, teste Augustino, ait Millius. Sed extat apud versiones omnes, Basilium, tom. ii. p. 491, Hieronymum, Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, et quod caput est infra cap. xix. 7, et Luc. xvi. 18, ubi eadem loquendi se obtulit occasio.

V. 44. Εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς καταρωμένους ὑμᾶς, καλῶς ποιεῖτε τοὺς μισοῦντας ὑμᾶς.] "Chrysostomo (quantum ex commentariis assequor) Copt. Vulg. Fulgentio, Salviano, Hieronymo;" sic Millius. Sed totam hanc pericopen neque mutilam neque decurtatam reperias apud Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, atque omnes orientales versiones; et tam Hieronymus quam Vulg. legunt, "Benefacite his qui oderunt vos."

Cap. vi. 1. Προσέχετε τὴν ἐλεημοσύνην ὑμῶν.] Plerique antiquorum patrum legunt δικαιοσύνην, inquit Junius, teste Millio. Ex libris tamen impressis ne unus quidem ab illo coram productus est, neque ego unum aliquem e patribus adhuc reperire potui qui habeat δικαιοσύνην. Origenes in Matt. p. 255, Greg. Nyssen. tom. ii. p. 743, Basilius, tom. ii. p. 416, Chrysostomus, Theodoretus, et Theophylactus, retinent ἐλεημοσύνην. "Nec dubito (sic pergit Millius) quin Matthæi צדקה, δικαιοσύνην reddiderit hoc loco Græcus interpres." Ego vero imprimis nego Matthæi Græca esse interpretis, et non ipsius apostoli. Vide dissertationem nostram de hac quæstione. Secundo, quæro cur idem interpres eodem modo idem vocabulum non reddiderit v. 2—4, ubi eadem de re agitur; "Attendite ne faciatis ἐλεημοσύνην ὑμῶν coram hominibus, alioquin mercedem non habebitis apud patrem vestrum:" per modum illationis sequitur v. 2, "Cum ergo facis ἐλεημοσύνην, ne facias sicut hypocritæ, ut honorificentur ab hominibus." Dein per modum consilii, "Te autem faciente ἐλεημοσύνην, nesciat sinistra tua quid facit dextra," v. 3. Quorum ratio sequitur his verbis, v. 4, "Ut sit ἐλεημοσύνη tua in abscondito." Quis jam non videt ἐλεημοσύνην pro genuina lectione habendam esse?

V. 4. Ἐν τῷ φανερῷ.] Desunt hæc apud Origenem in Joh. p. 238, Hieronymum, Vulg. Augustinum, qui notat se in Græcis non invenisse, sed tantum in Latinis aliquot. Agnoscunt nihilominus Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Constit. Apost. lib. iii. cap. 14, Basilius, tom. ii. p. 429, Syr. Arab. Pers. Legenda esse constat ex antithesi in propatulo. Ita Maldonatus.

V. 21. Ὅπου γάρ ἐστιν ὁ θησαυρὸς ὑμῶν, ἐκεῖ ἔσται καὶ ἡ καρδία ὑμῶν.] Hic Chrysostomus legit ὅπου ὁ θησαυρὸς ἀνθρώπου, ἐκεῖ ἡ καρδία αὐτοῦ. Basilius, tom. i. p. 340, σοῦ pro ὑμῶν utrinque, sicut etiam Hieronymus; et Vulg. parvo admodum discrimine. Sed Theophylactus versionesque orientales ab excusis non dissentiunt; et verba illa, θησαυρίζετε ὑμῖν, v. 19, 20, et Sanctus Lucas, qui hæc ipsa Christi verba citat, cap. vi. 31, lectionem textus firmant. Vide tamen Millii Proleg. p. 42, col. 1.

V. 25. Καὶ τί πίητε.] "Desunt hæc (inquit Millius) apud Æthiop. Vulg. Arab. Epiphanium, Basilium, Chrysostomum, Euthymium, Hilarium, Hieronymum." Habent autem Theophylactus, Syr. Pers. et pace doctoris, Arabs. Quod si cum repetantur hæc verba, v. 31, recte legamus, μὴ οὖν μεριμνήσητε λέγοντες τί φάγωμεν, ἢ τι πίωμεν; mihi quidem argumento est etiam hic recte legendum esse, τί πίητε.

V. 34. Τὰ ἑαυτῆς.] Ita Basilius, Moral. tom. ii. p. 451, et Theophylactus. Chrysostomus vero περὶ ἑαυτῆς, quod in idem recidit.

Cap. vii. 2. Καὶ ἐν ᾧ μέτρῳ μετρεῖτε, ἀντιμετρηθήσεται ὑμῖν.] Allegantur hic codices plurimi, Theodoretus, et Theophylactus, qui legunt μετρηθήσεται. Quibus opponere possem Polycarpi Epistolam ad Philip. §. 2, Clementem Alex. Strom. ii. p. 399, Origenem, Comm. in Matt. p. 335, et in Joh. p. 396, qui legunt ἀντιμετρηθησόεται (Origenes autem in Jer. p. 161 habet μετρηθήσεται) sicut et Chrysostomus, ut et Vulg. et Hieronymus, qui habent "remetietur:" sed hoc atque illud idem valet.

Cap. viii. 8. Εἰπὲ λόγον, v. l. λόγῳ. V. 18. ἐν τῇ ὥρᾳ ἐκείνῃ, v. l. ἀπὸ τῆς ὥρας ἐκείνης.] Absque discrepantia quæ sensum afficiat.

V. 25. Καὶ προελθόντες οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ.] Desunt οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ apud Hieronymum et codices quosdam Latinos: agnoscunt autem Theophylactus et versiones antiquæ omnes.

V. 41. Ἀπόστειλον ἡμᾶς.] Desunt Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. sed Syr. Chrysostomus, et Theophylactus, et Luc. viii. 32, habent pariter ac in textu ἀπόπεμψον ἡμᾶς.

Cap. ix. 7.] Hieronymus, Vulg. Syr. ἐφοβήθησαν, seu Theophylactus et Arab. ἐθαύμασαν· v. Mar. ii. 12.

V. 14. Non veni vocare justos ἀλλ' ἁμαρτωλοὺς εἰς μετάνοιαν.] Millius fidenter asserit εἰς μετάνοιαν traductum huc esse e Luca, idque a primis pene seculis; sed cum rationes expectemus, sæpe in earum locum confidentia succedit: quod Christus enim hæc verba protulerit, locuples testis est Lucas, cap. v. 32. Et primæ illius concionis exordium fuit, "Pœnitentiam agite, appropinquavit enim regnum cœlorum," Matt. iv. 17. Quare igitur εἰς μετάνοιαν non hic censenda sunt ipsissima Christi verba? Retinentur apud Barnabam, §. 1, apud Justinum M. Apol. ed. Ox. §. 18, apud Iren. lib. iii. cap. 5, p. 207 (quanquam illius testimonium in contrariam partem trahat Millius, Prol. p. 38), apud Origenem in Joh. p. 366, apud Chrysostomum in locum, et ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 348, tom. iv. p. 175, apud Cyrillum Alex. in Hose. p. 158, in Soph. p. 627, apud Theophylactum et Arabem. Ad pauca ut redeam, cum Christus vocarit peccatores, illos eum vocasse ad pœnitentiam luce clarius est, ideoque τὸ εἰς μετάνοιαν, si non retineatur, saltem subaudiendum est.

V. 35. Τὰς πόλεις πάσας.] Sic Hieronymus, Græci, cæteræque interpretes omnes. Ἐν τῷ λαῷ omittunt quidem Hieronymus, versionesque antiquæ; sed agnoscunt illa Chrysostomus et Theophylactus, et necessario subaudienda sunt; cujus enim, præterquam populi, languores et infirmitates curavit Christus?

V. 36. Ἐκλελυμένοι.] Enervati, debilitati, membra soluti, languescentes. V. l. ἐσκυλμένοι, vexati, disjecti, divulsi. Sic Hesychius, ἐσκυλμένοι, διασκεδασμένοι εἰσίν. Ita sub diversis verbis sensus non multum diversus est.

Cap. x. 3. Καὶ Λεββαῖος ὁ ἐπικληθείς.] Desunt hæc juxta Millium, apud Vulg. et Hieronymum; agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, orientales versiones omnes; et fatente Millio, "Hieronymus alibi lectum ait, ipseque lib. de Hebraicis nominibus explicat." Millius, Prol. p. 42, col. 1, "Ἰακωβος ὁ τοῦ Ἀλφαίου καὶ Θαδδαῖος, et sic Origenes qui notat Levi, sive Lebbæum, non fuisse numero apostolorum, nisi apud Marcum duntaxat: omnino recte. Λεββαῖος ὁ ἐπικληθείς insertum non aliud est quam scholion marginale." E contra Cotelerius in hæc verba, Const. Apost. lib. viii. cap. 25, p. 319, "Μαθθαῖος ὁ καὶ Λουκᾶς hæc habet, consentiunt antiqui, et recentiores, id recte ex evangelii comparatione colligentes." Origenes in præfatione explanationis in Epistolam ad Rom., "Matthæus in catalogo apostolorum dicit Jacobus Alphæi et Lebbæus; Marcus, Jacobus Alphæi et Thaddæus; Lucas vero ita posuit, Jacobus et Judas Jacobi. Igitur eundem quem Matthæus Lebbæum, Marcus Thaddæum dixit, Lucas Judam Jacobi scripsit. Certum est autem evangelistas non errasse in nominibus apostolorum, sed quia moris erat binis vel ternis nominibus uti Hebræos, unius et ejusdem viri, diversa singuli nominum vocabula posuere." Hieronymus in locum, "Thaddæus apostolus ab evangelista Luca Judas Jacobi dicitur, et alibi appellatur Lebbæus." "Credendumque est eum fuisse trinomium:" ad locum Orig. lib. i. contra Cels. p. 48. Vide responsum Cotelerii, not. in Constit. Apostol. p. 315.

* Lib. ii. cap. 2, sect. 2.

V. 28. Μὴ φοβεῖσθε.] MSS. Justinus; sed Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Luc. xii. 4, habent cum textu μὴ φοβηθῆτε.

V. 29. Οὐ πεσεῖται ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, v. l. εἰς τὴν παγίδα.] Chrysostomus, et interpretamento; Origenes utroque modo; sed Theophylactus et versiones omnes textum sequuntur.

V. 42. Μόνον——οὐ μὴ ἀπολέσῃ.] Deest μόνον MSS. Æthiop. ἀπολέσει MSS. utrumque legunt cum textu Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Origenes in Matt. p. 346, Basilius, tom. ii. p. 444, Cyrillus Alex. tom. i. p. 356. Nihilominus τὸ μόνον irrepsit e margine, Proleg. p. 121, col. 2. Vide etiam Proleg. p. 42, col 1.

Cap. xi. 2. Δύο τῶν μαθητῶν.] Syr. διὰ τῶν, sed Origenes in Matt. p. 229, Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. textui consentiunt. Vide tamen Millium pro διὰ contendentem, Proleg. p. 42, col. 1.

V. 5. Κωλοὶ περιπατοῦσι——νεκροὶ ἐγείρονται.] "Deest prima pericope in Origene," ita Millius. Male; agnoscit enim eam Comm. in Joh. p. 103. Secunda ibi deest: legit autem Clemens Al. Pædag. lib. i. cap. 10, p. 129. Utramque legunt versiones omnes, Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Cyrillus Alexan. de Recta Fide, p. 89, D. Lucas, cap. vii. 22. Vide e contra Millii Proleg. p. 42, col. 1.

V. 21. Οὐαί σοι Βηθσαϊδάν.] Legendum vult Millius καὶ Βηθσαϊδά, Prol. p. 42; renitentibus Origene in Ex. p. 25, Chrysostomo, Hieronymo, Theophylacto, et versionibus antiquis universis.

Cap. xii. 8. Κύριος γάρ ἐστι καὶ τοῦ σαββάτου.] Quanquam καὶ agnoscatur a solo Vulg., cum tamen id reperias apud Mar. ii. 28, et Luc. vi. 5, et per consequens Christi ipsius sit, et vocabulum admodum elegans, quod vim plurimam argumento affert, mihi quidem retinendum videtur.

V. 32. Ἐν τούτῳ τῷ αἰῶνι.] MSS. ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι, quod idem est.

V. 35. Ἐκ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ θησαυροῦ τῆς καρδίας.] Deest τῆς καρδίας, Vulg. Syr. Arab. sed adest apud Athanasium tom. ii. p. 169, Basilium, tom. ii. p. 634, Chrysostomum in locum, et apud Luc. vi. 45; et verba immediate præcedentia, "Ex abundantia τῆς καρδίας os loquitur," hanc lectionem stabiliunt et firmant.

V. 47. Ζητοῦντές σοι λαλῆσαι.] Ita Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr. Origenes in Matt. p. 238, Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. "Ζητοῦντές σέ, σοι λαλῆσαι ex v. 46 desumptum videtur;" ita Millius.* Et sane cum foris starent mater et fratres quærentes λαλῆσαι αὐτῷ, v. 46, nil verius dicere enarrator potuit quam foris stant ζητοῦντές σοι λαλῆσαι.

Cap. xiii. 14. Ἀναπληροῦται ἐπ' αὐτοῖς.] Theophylactus, et codices plurimi, habent solummodo αὐτοῖς. Sed Chrysostomus, versionesque antiquæ omnes, vel legunt ἐπ' vel ἐν αὐτοῖς, quod in idem recidit.

V. 27. Ἐν τῷ σῷ ἀγρῷ.] Ab aliquot MSS. et unico Epiphanio, omissum est σῷ. Bene autem habet, quod non nobis narret Millius quo Epiphanii in loco hoc factum sit. Pervolventi enim eum contra Hær. p. 679, occurrebant mihi plurimæ lectiones insigniter variantes, una cum additamento in fine, καὶ ἑτοιμάζετε τὰ ζιζάνια κατακαυθῆναι τῷ πυρὶ ἀσβέστῳ.

V. 35. Διὰ τοῦ προφήτου Ἡσαΐου τοῦ προφήτου.] "Plerique codices olim, teste Hieronymo; qui et pro Ἀσὰφ τοῦ προφ. positum dicit vitio librarii;" ita Millius: neutrum autem hodie legitur vel in Græcis patribus vel in MSS. aut versionibus. Vide annot. nostras in hunc locum.

V. 51. Λέγει ὁ Ἰησοῦς· συνήκατε ταῦτα πάντα.] "Præmissa hæc sunt lucis causa jam ante Chrysostomi tempora," Millius, Prol. p. 42, col. 1. At agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers.; esseque verba hæc necessario intelligenda constat ex sequentibus, λέγουσιν αὐτῷ, ναὶ Κύριε.

Cap. xiv. Ὡσεὶ πεντακισχίλιοι.] Sic Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Æthiop. et in annotationibus variantis alicujus lectionis nulla est mentio. Dicit tamen Millius, Prol. p. 127, col. 1, "Ὡσεὶ quod in MSS. plerisque omnibus, Lucæ est, non Matthæi."

V. 33. Ἐλθόντες.] Sic Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Pers. Deest tantum Æthiop.; "est tamen intrusum uberioris explicationis gratia," Proleg. p. 161, col. 1.

Cap. xv. 4. Τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου.] "Deest σου in MSS. pluribus, Irenæo, Chrysostomo;" ita Millius. Deest quidem apud Lat. Irenæum pariter, ac apud Vulg. sed Chrysostomus deserte ait, τίμα γάρ φησι τὸν πατέρα σου, similiter Origenes in Matt. p. 244, et Theophylactus. Hoc certo mandatum ad uniuscujusque proprium parentem pertinet, et seq. καὶ μὴ τιμήσῃ τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ, σου retinendum esse ostendunt.

V. 8. Ἐγγίζει μοι ὁ λαὸς οὗτος τῷ στόματι αὐτῶν, καὶ τοῖς χείλεσί με τιμᾷ.] Prol. p. 34, col. 2, et 42, col. 1, asserit Millius genuinam lectionem esse, ὁ λαὸς οὗτος χείλεσί με τιμᾷ. Cætera nempe desunt in Cant. Copt. Vulg. Syr. Pers. Æthiop. ut et apud Esaiam, Cod. Alex. et Marc. Quicunque hic apud LXX. defectus fuit, clam quidem erat Origene, qui Comm. in Matt. p. 247, loquitur ad hunc modum: "Propheta Isaias dicit, ἐν αὐταῖς λέξεσιν, ἐγγίζει μοι ὁ λαὸς οὗτος ἐν στόματι αὐτῶν."

V. 26. Οὐκ ἔστι καλόν.] Sic Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab.: est tamen adjectitium καλόν, Prol. p. 42, col. 2.

V. 30. Κωφούς.] Deest, et v. 31, deest κυλλοὺς ὑγιεῖς, refragante ipso textu utrinque. Nam si τὸ κωφοὺς non esset in v. 30, unde κωφοὺς λαλοῦντας, v. 31. Quod si τὸ κυλλοὺς recte ponatur v. 30, idcirco etiam τὸ κυλλοὺς ὑγιεῖς ponendum est, v. 31. Sed Prol. p. 42, col. 1, interjecta sunt ad absolvendam sententiam κυλλοὺς ὑγιεῖς. Idem de voce κωφοὺς, Prol. p. 133, col. 2.

Cap. xvi. 3. Ὑποκριταί.] D. Chrysostomo, Vulg. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Lucas xii. 56; quin igitur hoc vocabulo usus sit Christus nemo dubitet.

Nota etiam quod in binis postremis versiculis variantes lectiones satis refutentur testimonio Origenis, qui cum editis congruit, Comm. in Matt. p. 290, 291—294.

Cap. xvii. 14.] Tres hic variantes lectiones, sed nullius momenti, et textum ipsum exhibet Origenes, p. 308, 309. Ita etiam v. 21—23, Origenes ab impressis ne transversum quidem digitum discedit, p. 313, 315. Quod autem ἐλθόντων αὐτῶν, v. 14, "recte mutatum esse ab Arabe et Vulgato in ἐλθόντος," ait Millius, Prol. p. 42, col. 1, "ex historiæ circumstantiis manifestum esse: non enim venisse Christum simul cum discipulis suis ad multitudinem, sed venisse eum solum, et aliquanto post discipulos quos turba jam circumfusos, et cum scribis disputantes offendit;" in eo mirum in modum falli Millium ex historiæ circumstantiis certissimum est; commate enim decimo interrogant eum discipuli ex monte cum eo descendentes, "Quid ergo scribæ dicunt quod Eliam oportet primum venire?" et commate decimo tertio ex Christi ad hanc quæstionem responso, "intellexerunt discipuli quod de Johanne Baptista dixisset eis;" veniebant ergo cum eo hi tres discipuli et cum reliquis disputantes scribas invenit.

V. 21.] Deest versus totus Coll. et Æthiop. "Neque quidem hujus evangelistæ est, licet hic sedem occupet in omnibus propemodum libris nostris, sed Marci solius, quod ostendit canon Eusebianus: "Sic Millius in Appendice, p. 7. Sed reperias illum apud Origenem in Matt. p. 313, apud Syrum et Arabem interpretem, qui omnes ante vixerunt quam canon iste conficeretur; agnoscit etiam Hieronymus, quanquam canonem istum Matthæo præfixerit, sicut etiam agnoscunt eundem versiculum Græca scholia et reliquæ versiones.

V. 23. Καὶ ἐλυπήθησαν σφόδρα.] Desunt hæc verba in binis MSS. Sed retinent illa Origenes in Matt. p. 315, Græci, cæterique interpretes omnes: et tamen in Prol. p. 165, col. 2, "commentarius est, non textus."

Cap. xviii. 29.] Omittunt πάντα codices plurimi: sed sequitur ex v. 26, quod retinendum sit.

Cap. xix. 19. Καὶ ἀγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον—] Agnoscunt hanc periodi partem Græca scholia, versionesque universim, et quod contra illam ex Origene affert Millius, valde leve est ac nugatorium. Nam si quis stricte acciperet ac servaret mandata secundæ tabulæ tali modo ac more quali ea Judæi observarunt, non ille quidem dicendus est præstitisse universam legem, quæ ad proximum suum pertinet, et multo minus quæ ad Deum. Vide Luc. x. 29, 30. Nota etiam quod ἐκ νεότητός μου, v. 20, retinetur apud Græca scholia versionesque omnes.

Cap. xx. 15. Οὐκ ἔξεστί μοι ποιῆσαι ὃ θέλω.] Seq. ἐν τοῖς ἐμοῖς, "quod est in nostris commentariis est, non textus." Ita Millius cum suo Vulgato, Prol. p. 42, col. 2; repugnantibus reliquis versionibus, Chrysost. Theophyl. et Orig. in Matt. p. 407.

V. 22. Potestis bibere calicem quem ego bibiturus sum? καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα, ὃ ἐγὼ βαπτίζομαι βαπτισθῆναι ;] "Posterior pars commatis (judice Millio) non Matthæi, sed Marci est," sc. ex fide quatuor MSS. Hieronymi, Vulg. Ambrosii, et speciatim Origenis in Matt. p. 415, qui postquam dixerat, ζῦσασθε πεῖν τὸ ποτήριον ὃ ἐγὼ μέλλω πίνειν, addit ἢ ὡς ὁ Μάρκος ἀνέγραψε——ὃ ἐγὼ πίνω, καὶ τὸ βάπτισμα, καὶ τὰ ἑξῆς. Quis autem satis certo scit utrum Origenes Marcum allegarit, ratione habita ad posteriorem partem commatis, vel ad levem illam discrepantiam quæ intercedit inter ὃ μέλλω πίνειν, et ὃ ἐγὼ πίνω· sed demus hæc Millio. Constat ex Marco x. 38, 39, periodum hanc Christum protulisse omnibus suis numeris expletam; cur non igitur Matthæus periodum hanc plenam ac perfectam citasse censendus est? cum testes ejus rei fidos habeamus Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, et Basilium Seleuciensem, hom. 24, p. 134, vel quonam id, quæso, sacræ scripturæ dispendio sit, si postrema illa verba apud unicum Marcum reperiantur? Atque hoc, ut opinor, obviam it sexcentis variantibus lectionibus: quæ enim a diversis memorantur evangelistis, cum ea semel tantum locutus sit Christus, si ab uno aliquo literis mandentur memoria eorum nunquam obliterabitur.

Cap. xxi. 4. Τοῦτο καὶ ὅλον γέγονεν.] Deest ὅλον, Cant. Arab. Æthiop. Copt. Origene in Joh. p. 161. At agnoscunt τὸ ὅλον Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. nec magni, quod Origenes hic habeat, refert; nam ibid. p. 174, omittit v. 5, σοῦ post βασιλεῖς, et καὶ post πραῢς· sed p. 169, et Comm. in Matt. p. 432, utramque vocem retinet: post πῶλον omittit υἱῶν, p. 169, quod tamen habet p. 174; omittit hæc verba, v. 8, ἄλλοι δὲ ἔκοπτον κλάδους ἀπὸ τῶν δένδρων, καὶ ἐστρῶννυον ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ. Sic v. 12, τοῦ Θεοῦ deest Orig. sc. Comm. in Joh. p. 175, sed commentarius ejus in locum Matt. p. 439, sic se habet, καὶ εἰσῆλθεν ὁ Ἰησοῦς εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ.

V. 19. Κτήσασθε.] Ed. Ox. Polyg. Hic ergo Millius, Prol. 65, col. 1, pro varia lectione, ipsum textum, "possidebitis" exhibet.

Cap. xxii. 39.] "Diliges proximum tuum ὡς σεαυτόν" MSS. ἑαυτόν. Ita Rom. xiii. 9, Gal. v. 14, "Dicisne hoc ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ, a temetipso?" Joh. xviii. 34, et σεαυτόν, Jac. ii. 8. Vide in his locis Millium, et nos in Rom. xiii. 9.

V. 40. Ἐν ταύταις ταῖς δυσὶν ἐντολαῖς ὅλος ὁ νόμος.] Omittunt ὅλος Syr. codex unus, Copt. et Arab. Habent autem illud Æthiop. Vulg. Chrysostomus, et Theophylactus, Hilarius, et Hieronymus in locum; Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. iii. cap. 12, p. 260, Irenæus lib. iv. cap. 25, p. 312, Origenes hom. 23 in Matt. f. 42. Atque tamen hanc lectionem simplicem (sc. absque ὅλος) ipsius evangelistæ fuisse haudquaquam dubito, Prol. p. 129, col. 2.

Cap. xxiii. 4. Καὶ δυσβάστακτα.] Omiserunt Copt. Syr. Pers. Vulg. Irenæus. At agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Hieronymus, Vulg.

V. 5. Τῶν ἱματίων αὐτῶν.] Desunt Vulg. Æthiop. At legunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 8. Εἷς γάρ ἐστιν ὑμῶν καθηγητής.] MSS. plurima, Origenes in Joh. p. 5, hom. 10 in Jer. p. 107, et Chrysostomus, legunt ὁ διδάσκαλος. Cum vero tum καθηγητὴς, tum διδάσκαλος, sit interpretatio ejusdem vocis Hebraicæ, nempe rabbi, ex eo facile intelligitur, verbis illos, non re dissidere.

V. 14. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν γραμματεῖς καὶ φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί.] "Ista non agnoscunt Origenes et Eusebius; traducta puto e Marco aut Luca," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 42. Id autem agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, et versiones universim.

V. 19. Μωροὶ καὶ τυφλοί.] "Μωροὶ καὶ præfixum est ex v. 17," ita Millius Prol. p. 42. Agnoscunt autem Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

"Non dubium est quin v. 13 e Marco et Luca huc transmiserint librarii," ait Millius in locum. Quod si fuissent verum nec additur quidquam, nec subducitur de verbis Christi: versiculum tamen hunc agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Hieronymus, versionesque. Crit. Hist. N. T. p. 171, ipse illum inveniat apud Græca exemplaria satis multa, versu quidem isto et subsequente transposito, sicut in pluribus Millii MSS. contigit.

V. 26.] Deest in Clemente Alex. Irenæo, lib. iv. cap. 34, p. 326. Habent autem illud Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, versiones antiquæ omnes.

Cap. xxv. 1.] Licet a commate primo usque ad decimum tertium viginti variantes afferantur lectiones, Sanctus tamen Basilius, dum hanc parabolam explicat, a textu ne latum quidem unguem discedit. Nam tametsi, tom. ii. p. 412, habeat tantum πέντε, tamen p. 425 habet αἱ πέντε.

V. 13. Ἐν ᾗ ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἔρχεται.] "Deest in MSS. aliquot, nec occurrit apud probatissimos primæ ætatis interpretes; ex cap. præcedente sumitur," ita Millius hic, sed inter hæc atque illa verba plurimum interest: cum vero præcesserit, "Vigilate itaque, quia nescitis diem neque horam," aliquid hujusmodi addendum est, ne claudicet sensus; quidni igitur hæc ipsa verba? quæ agnoscit Theophylactus, et quæ optime respondent illis quæ concludunt caput præcedens, viz. si malus servus non vigilet, "veniet Dominus illius in die qua non sperat, et hora qua ignorat;" atque istiusmodi homines, fatuarum ad instar virginum, a nuptiis clausa janua excludentur. "Vigilate igitur," &c.

V. 33. Καὶ στήσει τὰ μὲν πρόβατα.] Deest μὲν Cant. Syr. Quod tamen postulant seq. τὰ δὲ ἐρίφια, satisque firmant Theophylactus, Vulg. et exemplar Alexandrinum.

V. 41. Τὸν ἡτοιμασμένον, v. l. ὃ ἡτοίμασεν ὁ πατήρ μου.] Ita Irenæus, Cyprianus, Augustinus, adde Justinum M. Dial. p. 301. Origenes autem in Joh. p. 426, Græca scholia, versiones antiquæ omnes legunt cum textu.

Cap. xxvi. 1. Πάντας τοὺς λόγους τούτους.] Deest πάντας Chrysost. Pers.: habent Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. Syr. Æthiop.

V. 3. Καὶ οἱ γραμματεῖς.] Desunt hæc apud Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. At retinent Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr.

V. 42. Τοῦτο τὸ ποτήριον.] Deest τὸ ποτήριον, Chrysostomo; legunt Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Ἀπ' ἐμοῦ deest Vulg. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 44. Ἐκ τρίτου.] Deest in Alex. At illud habent Theophylactus, et versiones antiquæ universim.

V. 59. Καὶ οἱ πρεσβύτεροι.] Deest in Vulg. sed illud retinent Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 74. Ἤρξατο καταναθεματίζειν.] Ita Chrysostomus et Theophylactus; καταθεματίζειν, quod habent codices MSS. in N. T. nusquam occurrit, at genuinum censet Millius, Prol. p. 109, col. 2.

Cap. xxvii. 13. Ὥστε θαυμάζειν τὸν ἡγεμόνα λίαν.] Ita Hieronymus, Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. ait tamen Millius, "ex Syri solius auctoritate addebat codicum vulgus ex præcedentibus, τὸν ἡγεμόνα," Prol. p. 129, col. 2.

V. 24. Ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ δικαίου.] Τὸ τοῦ δικαίου agnoscunt Hieronymus, Theophylactus, versiones omnes: "sed (ait Millius) insertum in reliquis τοῦ δικαίου, irrepsisse videtur ex Actis, aliisve locis," Prol. p. 133, col. 2.

V. 35. Ἵνα πληρωθῇ τὸ ῥηθέν· καὶ τὰ ἑξῆς.] Cum omittatur hæc periodus a Græcis, interpretibusque cunctis, si a Vulg et Hieronymo discesseris, simile vero videtur desumptam eam fuisse ex Joh. xix. 24, utrum vero hic, an illic legenda sit, eadem sane, qua reliquæ scripturæ partes, veneratione a nobis afficienda est.

V. 37. Ἰησοῦς ὁ Βασιλεύς.] Ἰησοῦς omittunt MSS. Copt. Retinent Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr.

V. 43. Νῦν.] Hic agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones omnes, estque emphaticum in ore Judæorum.

V. 55. Ἀπὸ μακρόθεν θεωροῦσαι.] Deest in Vulg. sed habent Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Syr. Arab.

V. 64. Νυκτός.] Deest in Chrysostomo, Vulg. Arab. at illud legunt Theophylactus, et Syr.

Cap. xxviii. 9. Ὡς δὲ ἐπορεύοντο ἀπαγγεῖλαι τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ.] Desunt hæc apud Chrysostomum, Hieronymum, Augustinum, Vulg. Syr. Agnoscunt tantum Theophylactus et Æthiop. Sæpe hoc contingit cum eadem verba repetuntur; videntur tamen hic necessario intelligenda.

SECTIO SECUNDA—IN MARCUM.

Cap. i. 2. Qui præparabit viam tuam ἔμπροσθέν σου.] Desunt hæc in Irenæo, lib. iii. cap. 11, p. 217, Origene in Joh. p. 117, Syr. Copt. Pers. Æthiop.; sed agnoscunt illa Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. et Origenes in Joh. p. 3, et citat illa nominatim ex Marco, lib. ii. contra Cel. 60, et siquidem Christus diserte ait Baptistam eum esse de quo scripta est prophetia his ipsis verbis, Matt. xi. 10, de veritate eorum non est ambigendi locus, licet in autographo ipsius Marci non inventa fuissent.

Tribus versiculis, sc. 5, 11, et 13, tres sunt variantes lectiones, sed nulla in sensu diversitas.

V. 16. Περιπατῶν δὲ παρὰ τὴν θάλασσαν.] Ita Theophylactus, Cod. Alex. παράγων· Vulg. Arab. "Fuit ambulando pertransiens," sine discrimine.

V. 42. Εἰπόντος αὐτοῦ.] Deest in Cant. Syr. agnoscunt Theophylactus, Vulg. Cod. Alex.

V. 44. Μηδενὶ μηδὲν.] Deest μηδὲν, MSS. Sed habet Theophylactus.

V. 45. Πολλά.] Deest in Vulg. Sed leget Theophylactus.

Cap. ii. 1. Δι' ἡμερῶν.] "Octo, Latini codices aliqui; citra non Græcorum modo fidem sed et Latinorum plerumque omnium;" ita hic Millius. Sed Proleg. p. 44, col. 1, "Græca procul dubio erant δι' ἡμερῶν, et sic evangelista."

V. 4. Μὴ δυνάμενοι προσεγγίσαι.] Vulg. προσενέγκαι· Theophylactus et reliquæ versiones cum textu.

V. 7. Εἰ μὴ εἷς ὁ Θεός.] Deest εἷς, Cant. Sed retinet Theophylactus, et reliquæ versiones antiquæ omnes.

V. 15. Ἁμαρτωλοί.] Occurrit in Theophylacto et in versionibus Polyg. omnibus. "Mihi tamen (inquit Millius) vehemens est suspicio, ex v. 16 huc traductum esse." Append. p. 12, col. 1.

V. 18. Οἱ τῶν φαρισαίων.] Theophylact. et versiones omnes: Vulg. "pharisæi."

V. 20. Ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις.] Ita Theophylactus, Vulg. Lucas v. 35, ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ. Syr. Æthiop. MSS. sine discrepantia.

V. 22. Οἶνος ὁ νέος.] Habent ὁ νέος, Theophylactus, Lucas v. 35. Deest in Cant. Vulg. Syr. Verba autem præcedentia et sequentia lectionem textus genuinam esse indicant.

Cap. iii. 5. Καὶ ἀποκατεστάθη ἡ χεὶρ αὐτοῦ ὑγιὴς ὡς ἡ ἄλλη.] Deest ὑγιὴς MSS. versionibusque: retinet Theophylactus, occurrit apud Matt. xii. 13, et Luc. vi. 10, interpretes hoc forte quasi minus necessarium omiserunt; cum enim manus arida restituatur, et fiat alteri similis, non potest non esse ὑγιής.

V. 29. Αἰωνίου κρίσεως.] Codices pauci habent ἁμαρτίας, seu ἁμαρτήματος. Vulg. et Cyprianus "delictum," et exinde Græca quædam exemplaria ad Latinos conformata, ἁμαρτίας· sed Syr. Arab. Theophylactus, Græci patres legunt κρίσεως, nec talis occurrit dictio qualis αἰώνιος ἁμαρτία per totum N. T.

V. 32.] Addit hic C. Alex. καὶ ἀδελφαί σου· repugnantibus omnibus versionibus, Hieronymo, Theophylacto, verbisque immediate præcedentibus, οἱ ἀδελφοὶ, καὶ ἡ μητὴρ αὐτοῦ—— ἀπέστειλαν πρὸς αὐτόν.

Cap. iv. 4. Τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ.] Deest τοῦ οὐρανοῦ in MSS. et versionibus quibusdam: agnoscunt Vulg. et Theophylactus; et cum aves per Vetus Testamentum sæpissime vocitentur, vel volucres aeris, vel volucres cœli, τοῦ οὐρανοῦ videtur subaudiendum ubi non exprimitur: rejicit autem Mill. Prol. p. 109, col. 2.

V. 11. Γνῶναι τὸ μυστήριον.] Deest γνῶναι in MSS. sed habent Theophylactus et versiones omnes, eoque dempto sensus deficit; et tamen medium γνῶναι Matthæi est aut Lucæ Proleg. p. 161, col. 1. Cur non et Marci?

V. 18. Καὶ οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ εἰς τὰς ἀκάνθας σπειρόμενοι, οὗτοί εἰσιν.] Deest secundo loco οὗτοί εἰσιν apud Theophylactum, et MSS. nec mirum; Hebraismum quippe non intelligebant; habent Vulg. Syr. nec deesse videntur apud Arab. "Repetitio hæc vocum οὗτοί εἰσιν non est aliena ab Hebraismo, quod ejus insolitis mutandi causam dedit, idque non uno modo; quod hujus lectionis veritatem ostendit;" ita Grotius.

V. 20. et v. 8. Ἓν μὲν τριάκοντα, ἓν ἑξήκοντα, ἓν ἑκατόν.] V. l. ἓν, ἓν, ἓν, MSS. sed præter MSS. codices plurimos, fatente Millio, ἓν legunt Theophylactus, versiones omnes, Syr. v. 8, et lectionem hanc comprobat locus parilis Matt. xii. 8. 23, ubi occurrit par distributium, ὁ μὲν ἑκατόν, &c.

V. 24. Ὑμῖν τοῖς ἀκούουσιν.] Τοῖς ἀκούουσιν, desunt in Vulg. Arab. sed illa habent Theophylactus et Syr.

V. 31. Ὡς κόκκῳ.] MSS. κόκκος aut κόκκον, sine discrimine et sine causa; ὡς hic παραδειγματικὴν significationem habet, "nempe;" ita Schmidius: seu potius est signum dativi casus, ut ב apud Hebræos sæpius.

V. 33. Πολλαῖς.] Deest in Syr. Pers. Arab. sed illud habent Theophylactus et Vulg.

Cap. v. 11. Πρὸς τὰ ὄρη.] V. l. πρὸς τῷ ὄρει, quod in idem recidit. Ib. Μεγάλη deest in Cant. Eph. Copt. Goth. Pers. sed habent Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab.

V. 12. Πάντες οἱ δαίμονες.] Cant. τὰ δαιμόνια, Syr. "Illi dæmones," quod idem valet; soli enim dæmones, qui tunc adfuerunt, hoc a Christo petere potuerunt: denique cum textu legunt Theophylactus et Arab.

Cap. vi. 11. Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν——ἢ τῇ πόλει ἐκείνῃ.] "Ex Vulgato, et Ammonii Monotessaro apud Zach. Chrysopolitanum recte notat Zegerus hæc Marci non esse, sed ex Matthæo huc transponi quemadmodum et alias alia;" ita Millius hic. Agnoscunt vero Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers. Æthiop. "Hæc periodus (inquit Betuleius) in omnibus nostris exemplaribus legitur, exceptis tantum duobus, et in vetustissimo meo apud Matt. x. 15 et Luc x. 12 occurrit" quidni apud Marcum?

V. 15. Ἢ ὡς εἷς τῶν προφητῶν.] Vide annotata nostra in hunc locum.

V. 16. Οὗτός ἐστιν.] Deest in Vulg. sed habent Theophylactus, et quoad sensum, omnes antiquæ versiones.

V. 28. Ὁ δὲ ἀπελθών.] Τὸ ἀπελθών omittit Vulg. Habent Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

V. 33. Προῆλθον αὐτούς.] Deest in MSS. binis, Cant. et Laud. sed retinetur apud Theophylactum: atque hæc lectio non est obscura, sed facilem explicatum habet: Christus, et discipuli ejus ascendentes in navim abierunt in desertum locum seorsim; sed multi viderunt eos abeuntes, et cognoverunt quo cursum tenebat navis, itaque pedestres prævenerunt eos, et accesserunt ad Christum. Clara hic, et perspicua omnia, neque quicquam mutandi causa levissima est: vult tamen Millius "τὸ καὶ προῆλθον αὐτοὺς scholion esse, καὶ συνῆλθον πρὸς αὐτὸν, veram lectionem;" quam queritur omissam fuisse, Proleg. p. 43, et ejus loco, καὶ προῆλθον πρὸς αὐτοὺς retentam esse.

V. 36. Ἀγοράσωσιν ἑαυτοῖς ἄρτους· τί γὰρ φάγωσιν μὴ ἔχουσι.] Contendit Millius, Proleg. p. 45, "veram lectionem hanc esse, ἀγοράσωσιν ἑαυτοῖς τί φάγωσιν· reliqua irrepsisse ex cap. viii. 2 hujus evangelii:" quod prima fronta est parum verosimile, præsertim cum textui consentiant Theophylactus, versiones orientales omnes, et Codex Alex.

V. 44. Καὶ ἦσαν οἱ φάγοντες τοὺς ἄρτους ὡσεὶ πεντακισχίλιοι.] Deest ἄρτους, sed habent Theophylactus, Syr. et Æthiop. Deest etiam ὡσεὶ in MSS. aliquot, Theophylacto, et versionibus: sed occurrit Luc. ix. 14 et Joh. vi. 10, ex quorum auctoritate vocem illam, utut parvi momenti, retinendam tamen quis non censet? Nota etiam quod licet Matt. xiv. 21, de variantibus lectionibus altum sit silentium illic, tamen perinde atque hic ὡσεὶ omittunt versiones omnes.

V. 51. Καὶ ἐθαύμαζον.] Irrepsit ex margine, ita Millius, Proleg. p. 43, ex fide Copt. Agnoscunt autem Codex Alex. Theophylactus, et versiones orientales universim.

Cap. vii. 2. Ἐμέμψαντο.] Deest apud solum Æthiop. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. id Millio frustra inficiante. "Importune tamen injecit quispiam in textum," Prol. p. 122, col. 1.

V. 31. Ὀπίσω μου ἐλθεῖν.] V. l. ἀκολουθεῖν. Nullo sensus discrimine.

Cap. ix. 10. Τί ἐστι τὸ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῆναι] Ita Theophylactus, Arab. Vulg. et Syr. "Quid esset cum e mortuis resurrexerit?" perperam haud dubito, nec enim quærunt τί εἴη, sed τί ἐστι, nec quid post mortem Christi esset futurum, non existimabant Christum moriturum: vide annotata nostra ad hunc locum.

V. 13. Καὶ πῶς γέγραπται.] Ita Theophylactus et Vulg. MSS. καθὼς, vide iterum annotata nostra.

V. 16. Καὶ ἐπηρώτησε τοὺς γραμματεῖς.] Ita Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Vulg. αὐτοὺς male iterum, nec enim turbæ, sed scribæ tantum cum iis disputabant: vide v. 17.

Cap. x. 2. Καὶ προελθόντες οἱ φαρισαῖοι.] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones omnes; sic vero Millius, Proleg. p. 133, col. 2, "Προελθόντες ante οἱ φαρισαῖοι, quod in nostris jam omnibus, Matthæi est." Quæro cur non et Marci?

V. 21. Ἆρας τὸν σταυρόν.] Deest Clem. Alex. Vulg. Augustino: retinent Theophylactus, et versiones orientales.

V. 47. Υἱὲ Δαβὶδ Ἰησοῦ.] Deest Ἰησοῦ, Syr. Pers. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. Luc. xviii. 38.

V. 32. Ὅτι εἷς ὁ Θεός.] Deest Θεός in MSS. retinent Vulg. Arab. et Theophylactus; addit eum etiam Syriaca versio tanquam necessario intelligendum. Rejicit tamen Millius, Prol. p. 109, col. 2.

SECTIO TERTIA—IN LUCAM.

Cap. i. 12. Καὶ ἐταράχθη, καὶ φόβος ἐπέπεσεν ἐπ' αὐτόν.] Vana est hic Millii suspicio (App. p. 20), "versum hunc fictum esse a quopiam," ob similia quæ ad Mariam dicuntur v. 29. Constat hoc ex Chrysostomo, ed. Mor. tom. v. p. 475, Theophylacto in locum, et versionibus omnibus excepta Æthiop., a quibus omnibus hic versus pro genuino habetur; constat insuper ex verbis sequentibus μὴ φοβοῦ, Ζαχαρία.

Cap. ii. 14. Ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία.] "Εὐδοκίας (inquit Millius), Alex. Cant. Vulg. Goth. Sax. Irenæus Lat. lib. iii. cap. 11, p. 216 (ubi Grabius, 'Multum vereor ne Græcus Irenæi textus habuerit εὐδοκία in nominativo'), Hieronymus, Ambrosius, Augustinus (quibus adde Cyrillum Hieros. Catech. 12, p. 120), sed codicibus MSS. ferme omnibus consentiunt Syr. Copt. Arab. Pers. Æthiop. Origenes (in Joh. p. 14, contra Cels. lib. i. p. 46), εὐδοκίας enim quod legunt Homiliis in Lucam interpretis est non Origenis; Eusebius, Chrysostomus (ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 261, 385, et tom. iii. p. 1044), Theophylactus, alii (nempe Epiphanius, Hær. Ebion. p. 154, Constit. Apost. lib. vii. cap. 47, p. 327. lib. viii. cap. 13, p. 352, Theodoretus in Deut. qu. 42, et in Psalmos p. 786), qui rectam lectionem amplectuntur;" ita Millius in locum. Nihilominus Proleg. p. 64, col. 2, "Ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας, ita legisse Origenem constat ex Latinis Hieronymianis, hom. 13 in Lucam, omnino recte; ἄνθρωποι εὐδοκίας Hebraismus est, significat homines erga quos Deus se insigniter benevolum ostendit, seu quos peculiari quadam graita complectitur, hic autem sensus cum latuerit veteres Græcos, factum est jam olim ut in codicibus εὐδοκίας mutaretur in εὐδοκία." Quis teneat semper mutantem Protea vultum?

V. 33. Καὶ ἦν Ἰωσὴφ.] Vulg. "pater ejus:" sed Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. textui patrocinantur.

V. 40. Ἐκραταιοῦτο πνεύματι.] "Πνεύματι adjectum est ex hujus evangelii cap. i. 80," sic Millius, Prol. p. 44, col. 1. Habent autem Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes.

Cap. iii. 19. Περὶ Ἡρῳδιάδος τῆς γυναικὸς Φιλίππου.] Deest Φιλίππου apud Theophylactum, et Vulg.: retinent versiones orientales omnes, et firmant hanc lectionem loca parallela, Matt. xiv. 3, et Marc. vi. 17.

V. 21. Ἐγένετο ἐν τῷ βαπτισθῆναι.] Deest ἐν τῷ in MSS. Habet Theophylactus, et versiones omnes legunt "Cum baptizaretur."

Cap. iv. 7. Ἔσται σου πάντα.] Ita Matt. iv. 9, Vulg. Syr. Theophylactus πᾶσα, nimirum gloria et potestas de quibus locutus est, v. 6, in idem recidit.

V. 8. Ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ.] Desunt hæc apud MSS

Origenem, Ambrosium. Beda notat, et Grotius, "neminem Græcorum Theophylacto antiquiorem ista verba hoc loco agnoscere, et quidem post additum ibi ὀπίσω μοῦ, quod in primis et vetustissimis codicibus, teste Origene, locum non habebat;" sic ille. Sed pace utriusque legimus apud Justinum Dialect. p. 331, hæc verba, ἐν τοῖς ἀπομνημονεύμασι τῶν ἀποστόλων γέγραπται, προσελθὼν αὐτῷ καὶ πειράζων μέχρι τοῦ εἰπεῖν· αὐτῷ προσκύνησόν μοι, καὶ ἀποκρίνεσθαι αὐτῷ τὸν Χριστόν, ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ· apud Athanasium, orat. 1, in Arian., ἤλεγξε αὐτὸν ὁ Κύριος ἐν τῷ λέγειν, ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ· p. 283, C, et or. 3, p. 440, ἀκούσας ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ, et or. 4, p. 492, αὐτὸς μὲν γὰρ ἐπετίμα δι' ἑαυτοῦ, Σατανᾶ, λέγων, ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, Σατανᾶ· apud Chrysostomum, Matt. iv. 10, et Theophylactum in locum: utrum hæc Matthæi solius fuerint an etiam Lucæ, operæ pretium non est investigare.

V. 18. Ἰάσασθαι τοὺς συντετριμμένους τὴν καρδίαν.] Desunt hæc verba in duobus MSS. Origene in Joh. p. 12, Copt. Æthiop. Augustino, Ambrosio. Fidem iis faciunt Irenæus lib. iv. cap. 40, p. 340, Theodoretus in Isa. lxi. v. 1. LXX. ib., Vulg. Syr. Arab. Pers. Porro evangelista dicente Christum aperuisse librum, et locum invenisse ubi hæc verba tam in Hebræo textu quam in LXX. Interpretibus scripta erant, multo magis verisimile est Christum hæc ipsissima verba legisse, quam alium nescio quem verbis evangelistæ ea adjecisse: quod ab Origene omittuntur tanti non est; omittit enim, pariter cum Irenæo, verba sequentia, ἀπεστάλαι τοὺς τεθραυσμένους ἐν ἀφέσει.

V. 33. Ἔχων πνεῦμα δαιμονίου ἀκαθάρτου, καὶ ἀνέκραξε φωνῇ.] Vulg. "dæmonium immundum," MSS. φωνῇ μεγάλῃ omittunt: utrumque agnoscunt autem Theophylactus, Syr. Origenes in Joh. p. 158. Irrepserunt tamen, judice Millio, Prol. p. 44.

Cap. v. 36. Οὐ συμφωνεῖ ἐπίβλημα.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes: et tamen Prol. p. 184, col. 1, "irrepsit ex priore parte hujus versiculi."

Cap. vi. 26. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν ὅταν καλῶς ὑμᾶς εἴπωσιν πάντες.] Deest hic ὑμῖν in Theophylacto; habent versiones omnes, sicut et versus præcedentes: πάντες deest in MSS. versionibusque multis; occurrit apud Theophylactum, Chrysostomum, hom. 23 in Gen. ed. Mor. tom. ii. p. 265, 266. tom. iii. p. 305. tom. iv. p. 575, atque hic ait Millius, "Omnino legendum arbitror, addendi causa nulla est, tollendi aliqua:" et tamen Prol. p. 126, col. 2, "ὑμῖν et πάντες irreptitia sunt."

V. 34. Ἵνα ἀπολάβωσι τὰ ἴσα.] Desunt τὰ ἴσα Cant. Agnoscunt Theophylactus et versiones antiquæ universim: nihilominus Prol. p. 133, col. 2, "τὰ ἴσα interpretamentum marginale videtur."

Cap. vii. 11. Οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἱκανοί.] Deest ἱκανοί, Vulg. Syr. Habent Theophylactus, et Arab. "Omissum hic primum ni fallor ex industria ab iis, qui per μαθηταὶ hic apostolos intellexere, non autem assiduos quosvis Christi sectatores:" at Prol. p. 44, col. 1, "ἱκανοὶ irrepsisse videtur ex v. 12: certe discipulos duodecim neutiquam μαθητὰς ἱκανοὺς vocasset hic evangelista, scriptor imprimis accuratus, qui nusquam voce ista utitur nisi de magna multitudine" (quasi non legisset in eodem de 120 discipulis, Act i. 15); "hos (inquit), duodecim discipulos intelligit D. Lucas, ut colligere est ex Matt. xi. 1; non autem, quod nos olim putavimus, Christi sectatores in genere." Est certe locus Matthæi ἀπροσδιόνυσος, loquitur enim D. Lucas de ingressu Christi in urbem Naim, de quo apud solum Lucam fit mentio, nec impedit aliquid quo minus Christus civitates Galilææ et Judæorum pertransiens, iisque evangelii doctrinam enuntians, sectatores multos, quales in Galilæa haud pauci, post se traheret: sed non est Millio insolitum levi de causa a se divorsum ire.

V. 24. Τῶν ἀγγέλων Ἰωάννου.] MSS. μαθητῶν, discipuli, nimirum quos misit, erant ipsius nuncii.

V. 28. Μείζων προφήτης.] Deest in MSS. male: vide v. 26.

V. 46. Ἤλειψέ μου τοὺς πόδας.] Desunt μου τοὺς πόδας in Cant. Ush. 2. Agnoscunt Theophylactus et versiones; ait tamen Millius, Prol. p. 156, col. 1, "Modo extitissent in Lucæ authentico, nemo sanus prætermiserit."

Cap. viii. 8. Ταῦτα λέγων ἐφώνει ὁ ἔχων ὦτα ἀκούειν, ἀκουέτω.] Agnoscunt hæc verba Theophylactus, et versiones antiquæ universim: et tamen dicente Millio, "in excusis ac MSS. fere adjecta sunt ista e Matthæo, aut Marco, e lectionariis, et posita sunt loco non suo, neque enim hic finitur lectio," Prol. p. 155, col. 2: finitur tamen hic parabola.

V. 34. Ἀπελθόντες.] Deest apud MSS. Theophylactum, versiones:—sed subaudiendum est hoc vocabulum; qui enim pastores factum hoc nunciasse poterant in civitatem et in villas, nisi paullo ante discessissent a monte, ubi grex porcorum pascebat?

V. 54. Ἐκβαλὼν ἔξω πάντας.] "Marci sunt;" agnoscunt autem Theophylactus, Cod. Alex. Syr. Arab. Pers.

Cap. ix. 1. Μαθητὰς αὐτοῦ.] Desunt apud MSS. Theophylactum, et Dial. contra Marcion. p. 58.—Theophylactus vero paullo post agnoscit hæc verba, sicut etiam dialogus iste in margine: Vulg. Arab. Syr. "duodecadem suam;" et cum οἱ δώδεκα essent Christi discipuli, deficientibus illis verbis non deficit sensus.

V. 3. Μήτε ῥάβδους.] V. l. ῥάβδον, ut Matthæus;—male. Marc. vi. 8, præcepit eis ne quid tolerent in viam εἰ μὴ ῥάβδον μόνον· vide de his ἐναντιοφάνεσι annotata nostra ad Matt. x. 10.

V. 10. Πόλεως καλουμένης Βηθσαϊδά.] Ita Theophylactus et Joh. i. 45, e versionibus non paucæ omittunt πόλεως καλουμένης, de veritate rei forsan sollicitæ; nam Chrysostomus in Orat. contra Gentiles, ed Mor. tom. i. p. 653, Petrum hujus urbis incolam vocat τὸν πόλεως ἀσήμου πολίτην, μᾶλλον δ' οὐδὲ πόλεως, ἀλλὰ τῆς κώμης τῆς ἐσχάτης· et teste Josepho, Philippus tetrarcha condidit muroque cinxit τὴν κώμην Βηθσαϊδάν, tribuens illi τῆς πόλεως ἀξίωμα, appellans simul nomen illius Julias, in honorem sc. Juliæ Augusti filiæ, Ant. lib. xviii. cap. 3.

V. 23. Καθ' ἡμέραν.] Desunt hæc in MSS. 25, Origenis Exhort. ad Martyr. p. 173.—Retinent Cyrillus Alex. tom. i. p. 597, Theophylactus, ed. Rom. 1542, versiones antiquæ omnes.

V. 54. Ὡς καὶ Ἠλίας ἐποίησε.] Hæc omittit Vulg.—Habent vero (fatente hic Millio) Græca exemplaria fere omnia, Syr. Arab. Pers. Æthiop. Theophylactus, Chrysostomus de Pœnit. hom. 1, ed Mor. p. 747. Nihilominus "irrepsisse ex margine" dicit Millius, Prol. p. 44.

Cap. xi. 13. Πνεῦμα ἅγιον.] Vulg. ἀγαθόν, repugnante Theophylacto, et versionibus omnibus.

V. 29. Ἰωνᾶ τοῦ προφήτου.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes:—sed Prol. p. 152, "τοῦ προφήτου Matthæi esse non est quod dubitemus."

V. 38. Ὁ δὲ φαρισαῖος ἰδὼν ἐθαύμασεν.] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones omnes orientales: Vulg. ὤρξατο διακρινόμενος ἐν ἑαυτῷ γέμειν· ὅτι οὐκ, et hanc lectionem esse germanam pronunciat Millius, Prol. p. 133, col. 2.

V. 44. Γραμματεῖς καὶ φαρισαῖοι, ὑποκριταί.] Desunt hæc in Vulg. et duobus MSS. addititia videntur, inquit Lucas Brugensis, id quod ex sequenti commate satis clare colligi posse putat Grotius: non esse adjectitia patet ex Theophylacto, Arab. Æthiop. Pers. ex commate 43, οὐαὶ ὑμῖν φαρισαῖοι, et ex commate 45, ἀποκριθεὶς τίς τῶν νομικῶν, est enim νομικὸς γραμματεύς (vide annotata nostra in Mar. xii. 28) et professione pharisæus.

Cap. xii. 14. Ἡ μεριστὴν.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones; hoc autem cum Marcione insititium esse vult Millius, Prol. p. 33, col. 2, p. 44, col. 1.

V. 18. Τὰ ἀγαθά μου.] "Sequentia καὶ τὰ ἀγαθά μου adscripta primum ad marginem e versu proxime sequente, irrepsere mox in contextum, et codices jam universim occupant;" hæc Millius Prol. p. 106, col. 2. Ex mero de Vulgato suo somnio, ut liquet ex his verbis ita simpliciter Lin. Cant. et Vulg. initio ut videtur. Agnoscunt enim hæc verba versiones omnes, C. Alex. Basil. tom. ii. p. 452, Euthym. Theophylact. Hieronymus, postulantque verba sequentia, v. 19, "Dicam animæ meæ, ἔχεις πολλὰ ἀγαθά" denique tripliciter peccasse hunc divitem volunt Basilius, Chrysostomus, alii; (1.) Quod vera bona divitias suas existimavit, (2.) Quod bona sua, (3.) Quod bona animæ, v. 19.

V. 31. Καὶ ταῦτα πάντα προστεθήσεται ὑμῖν.] Deest πάντα Tertulliano, Marcioni. Habent Theophylactus et versiones omnes; non videtur omittendum, inquit Lucas Brugensis; et tamen Prol. p. 33, "medium hoc πάντα Matthæi est."

V. 38. Ἐν τῇ τρίτῃ φυλακῇ.] Ἑσπερινῇ φυλακῇ posuit Marcion pro τρίτῃ, Epiphanius; et tamen ait Millius; "Hæc genuina esse Lucæ non dubito, Epiphanium in errorem, ut alia non semel, seduxit vitiosum exemplar," Prol. p. 33, col. 2. Seduxit cum eo Basilium, lib. ii. p. 44, Theophylactum, et versiones universim; unde quod Marcioni hic dicit Epiphanius, p. 335, Millio dictum putes, ἐλήλεγται μεταστρέψας τοὺς θείους λόγους ἀνοήτως πρὸς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ὑπονοίαν. 'Ἐσπερινὴ φυλακὴ in evangeliis nusquam occurrit, sed ἑωθινὴ, τρίτη, τετάρτη tantum.

V. 49. Εἰ ἤδη ἀνήμβη.] Origenes εἴτε δὲ ἐκάη, Philoc. p. 106, et Hom. in Ex. ed. Huetii, tom. i. p. 22. Cyrillus autem Hieros. Catech. 17, p. 195, Chrysostomus, ed Mor. tom. iii. p. 216, et Theophylactus, textum sequuntur.

Cap. xiii. 21. Εἰς ἀλεῖρου σάτα τρία.] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones omnes; "Ambrosius non legit sata tria, in Matthæo (inquit) legitur tribus mensuris."

V. 35. Ὁ οἶκος ὑμῶν ἔρημος.] "Deest ἔρημος apud MSS. codices, Euthymium, nec agnoscunt Latini quidam, teste Grotio; adjici videtur huc ex Matt. xxiii. 38," Lucas Brug. Ex quo loco potius stabilitur; habent enim hic Theophylactus, et versiones omnes, et ad sensum complendum est vox plane necessaria.

Cap. xiv. 5. Τίνος ὑμῶν ὁ ὄνος ἢ βοῦς.] Millius, Prol. p. 44, col. 2, "Οἷς ἢ Cant. ut liquet ex ejus Latinis, 'Cujus ex vobis ovis aut bos,' verum diu est cum originaria ista Græca perierunt, ex ὅς factum a posterioribus Græcis υἱὸς· ita quidem legunt C. Alex. Theophylact. Syr. tandem vero a quopiam mutatum υἱὸς in ὄνος, maxime quod alias in evangelio conjunctim legantur, cap. xii. 15." Quod quidem cum factum fuerit a Christo in priore capite, eademque instantia, satis ex eo liquet quod iisdem asini et bovis exemplis et hic usus sit. Porro asinum hic legunt Hieronymus, Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. Beda οἷς Cant. solus, patre nullo, versione nulla suffragantibus, immo utrum ipse οἷς legerit necne, vel Millio teste, incertum est, is enim notis in hunc locum sic, "Cant. πρόβατον ἢ, prout Christus ipse Matt. xii. 11."

Cap. xvi. 8. Ὅτι φρονίμως ἐποίησεν.] "Deest Theophylact.:" ita Millius festinanter; legit enim Theophylactus.

V. 12. Τὸ ὑμέτερον.] V. l. τὸ ἡμέτερον. Ita Theophylactus, et Origenes, hom. 7, in Jer. ed. Huetii, tom. i. p. 94; sed versiones omnes editis congruunt: plurimas variantes lectiones affert ex Dial. contra Marcion. p. 55, 56, quod si in editione Aldina oram libri inspexisset, plerasque earum cum textu convenientes reperisse potuit, speciatim v. 22 et 23. Variationes etiam quasdam minutulas profert ex Clemente Alex. Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 10, p. 199, sed omittit Millius posteriorem clausulam, ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν ἐκολάζετο ἐν ᾅδῃ ὁ πλούσιος μετέχων τοῦ πυρός, ὁ δὲ ἀνέβαλλεν ἐν κόλποις τοῦ πατρός· quæ clausula satis est argumenti quod Clemens Al. se illic textus verbis astringi noluerit. De Tertulliano, qui solus legit "Quod meum est," nihil dico.

Cap. xvii. 10. Δοῦλοι ἀχρεῖοί ἐσμεν.] Ita Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. et Lat. Origenes, Hom. in Jos. f. 163, D. "Servi supervacui," Cyprianus ad Quirin. lib. iii. §. 51, et ep. 33, Hieronymus, Epist. ad Ctesiph. contra Pelagium, tom. ii. f. 91, A, Chrysostomus de Pœnit. hom. 10, ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 636, hom. 4 in Gen. tom. ii. p. 39, tom. iii. p. 858, 872. tom. v. p. 378. Desunt tantum in vers. Æthiop. unde Millius ἀχρεῖοι, quod jam est in omnibus codicibus, "Vereor ne irrepsit e margine," Prol. p. 124, col. 1.

Cap. xviii. 14. Descendit hic justificatus in domum suam ἢ ἐκεῖνος.] Origenes in Cels. lib. iii. p. 150, legit ἢ γὰρ ἐκεῖνος, de qua lectione Erasmus ait, "In plerisque non invenio:" alii παρ' ἐκεῖνον, quod Grotio placet: Basilius, tom. ii. p. 461, et Chrysostomus, ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 349, ἤπερ ἐκεῖνοι, quod in omnibus ad idem recidit; mihi præ cæteris placet lectio textus ut Hellenistico idiomati magis consona, ubi ἤ pro μᾶλλον ἤ multoties occurrit: vide annotata nostra in locum, vide etiam Phavorinum et alios exempla ex Homero adducentes.

Cap. xix. 25.] Hunc versum agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones universim: "Lubens nisi repugnarent omnes fere codices pro irreptitio habuerim," ait Millius, Prol. p. 155.

Cap. xx. 1. Διδάσκοντος αὐτοῦ τὸν λαὸν ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ.] Deest ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ, Iren.—Habent omnes scholiastes, et versiones, nec invenio ubi desit apud Irenæum; codices tantum MSS. appellat Millius, Prol. p. 162, col. 2, quorum fide irreptitium esse putat.

V. 19. Ἐφοβήθησαν τὸν λαόν.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes: deest τὸν λαὸν tantum apud codices MSS. et tamen "τὸν λαὸν haud dubie adjectum est ex aliis locis evangelii," Prol. p. 33, col. 2, frustra Matt. xxi. 46, Mar. xii. 12, legunt τὸν ὄχλον.

Cap. xxi. 21. Ἄχρι πληρωθῶσι καιροὶ ἐθνῶν.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes: legendum simpliciter vult Millius ἄχρις οὗ πληρωθῶσι, "atque ita se habuisse arbitror αὐτόγραφον hujus evangelistæ; qui paullo clarius explicata hæc volebant, addebant in margine καιροὶ ἐθνῶν," Prol. p. 133, col. 2. —Vide locum, lector, ut scias quam precaria, quam ἀμάρτυρα sint omnia, et pene dixerim absurda, frigida, et jejuna.

Cap. xxii. 36. Καὶ ὁ μὴ ἔχων πωλησάτω τὸ ἱμάτιον αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀγορασάτω μάχαιραν.] MSS. quidam codices habent πωλήσει et ἀγορασει· atque ita lectum in multis ætatis suæ exemplaribus testatur Basilius: fidem textui faciunt Origenes Matt. p. 368, Theophylactus, versiones omnes; immo quod mireris, ipse Basilius in Asceticis de priori commate hæc habet, ὁ ἔχων βαλάντιον ἀράτω ἢ ἀρεῖ, οὕτω γὰρ τὰ πολλὰ τῶν ἀντιγράφων ἔχει· p. 510, πωλησάτω καὶ ἀγορασάτω cum textu legit: hoc tantum adjiciens quod ex multis locis constat κεχρῆσθαι τὸ προσταττικὸν εἶδος τοῦ λόγου ἀντὶ προφητικοῦ. Nihil hic verius quam quod a Grotio annotatum est; viz. imperativum hoc loco in futurum vertisse quosdam, qui offensi erant præcepti sibi non intellecti novitate: ἀπολεῖται μὲν inquit Origenes, qui horum verborum sensum non capiens emit sibi gladium; et Basilius in modo allatis respondet iis qui hæc pugnare existimabant cum hoc dicto Christi, "Omnes qui acceperint gladium, gladio peribunt."

V. 42. Εἰ βούλει παρενεγκεῖν τὸ ποτήριον τοῦτο ἀπ' ἐμοῦ.] MSS. codices legunt παρελθεῖν, παρανέγκη, παρανέγκαι, παρανέγκη· Origenes et Epiphanius παρελθέτω, hoc autem ab iis factum esse censet Grotius ob hoc loquendi genus, non intellectum est enim εἰ βούλει, &c., "Utinam velles auferre."

Cap. xxiii. 43. Λέγω σοι σήμερον μετ' ἐμοῦ ἔσῃ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ.] Millius hic Origenem citat, qui Com. in Joh. p. 421, quosdam ætatis suæ memorat adeo perturbatos dicto hoc (partim quia opinioni eorum de Christi in inferos descensu adversari, partim quia pœnitentiam quam quis ferme moriens ageret, nimium probare visum est) ut suspicarentur προσετέθεσθαι τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ.

V. 46. Εἰς χεῖράς σου παραθήσομαι τὸ πνεῦμά μου.] Hic Justinus, Dial. cum Tryph. p. 333, et Origenes in Matthæum, p. 422, legunt παρατίθεμαι voce media, alii παρατίθημι "commendo:" textus tamen convenit cum versione LXX. et voce Hebraica פקד. Sed parvi res, siquidem, ut notat Grotius, "futurum hic more Hebræo pro præsenti est." Sequitur καὶ ταῦτα εἰπὼν ἐξέπνευσεν. Hæc agnoscunt C. Al. Theophylact. versiones universim. Et tamen Millio suspecta sunt παρεμβλήσεως, Prol. p. 160, col. 2.

Cap. xxiv. 1. Καί τινες σὺν αὐταῖς.] "Commentarius est," Millius, Prol. p. 44. Retinent autem Codex Alex. Theophylactus, Syr. Arab. Pers.

V. 46. Καὶ οὕτως ἔδει.] "Sumpta sunt (inquit Millius ib.) ex v. 26." Agnoscunt tamen Codex Alex. Theophylactus, Vulg. Spr. Pers.

V. 47. Ἀρξάμενον.] Vulg. ἀρξαμένων, "recte" Millius, ibid. viz. ἀρξάμενόν ἐστι τὸ κήρυγμα, ἢ ἀρξαμένων τὴν κήρυξιν τῶν ἀποστόλων.

V. 52. Προσκυνήσαντες αὐτόν.] Ita Theophylactus et versiones omnes: nihilominus Prol. p. 44, col. 2, lector quispiam huc traduxit ex Matt. xxviii. 17.

SECTIO QUARTA—IN JOHANNEM.

Cap. i. 16. Καὶ ἐκ τοῦ πληρώματος αὐτοῦ.] MSS. ὅτι et Origenes in Joh. p. 82. Græca scholia, et versiones omnes textui consentiunt, contextu id exigente, nec enim rationem hæc verba exhibent prioris commatis, sed pergunt in beneficiis explicandis a Christo provenientibus: et tamen, Prol. p. 87, col. 1, "pro ὅτι notatum ab aliquo καὶ, quod mox transiit in contextum."

V. 18. Ὁ μονογενὴς υἱός.] Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 37, p. 355, legit "unigenitus Deus," et in eodem cap. p. 333, "unigenitus filius," et lib. iii. cap. 11, p. 219, "unigenitus filius Dei;" Origenes semper ὁ μονογενὴς Θεός, sc. Com. in Joh. p. 82, ὁ μοιογενὴς υἱὸς Θεός, p. 94, μονογενὴς γε ὢν Θεός, lib. ii. contra Cels. p. 104, Syr. "unigenitus ille Deus:" antiqua ergo fuit hæc lectio facili errore legentium Ῡc pro Θc: patres enim sequentium ætatum, contra Arium militantes, textum continuo sequuntur. Puta Athanasius, tom. i. p. 270, Epiphanius, Anchorat. p. 7, Eusebius de Eccles. Theol. lib. i. cap. 20, §. 7. lib. ii. cap. 23, p. 142, Basilius de Spiritu S. cap. 6, p 302.

V. 27. Ὃς ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν.] Ita Græca scholia, et versiones omnes; firmante hanc lectionem v. trigesimo et v. 15. Et tamen ex fide Nonni et Æthiop. "irrepsisse videntur ex v. 15, et v. trigesimo," Prol. p. 87, col. 1.

V. 28. Ταῦτα ἐν Βηθαβαρᾷ ἐγένετο.] Hanc lectionem firmant Epiphanius, Hær. li. p. 434, Origenes in Joh. p. 130, 131, Theophylactus, Chrysostomus, et Suidas; de quibus vide luculentam Millii annotationem, atque Prol. p. 101, col. 2.

V. 52. Ἀπ' ἄρτι.] Desunt hæc in Vulg. Copt. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, Chrysostomus, Syr. Arab. Pers.

Cap. ii. 16. Τοῖς τὰς περιστερὰς πωλοῦσι.] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones universim; Cod. Cyprius πωλοῦντι. "Factum jam olim videtur plurale ob sequentia ἄρατε, ποιεῖτε," Millius, Prol. p. 87, col. 1.

V. 17. Κατέφαγέ με.] Theophylactus, Chrysostomus, versiones omnes, p. 70. Inter Ps. lxix. 9. Καταφάγεται inquit Millius MSS. cod. Origenes in Joh. p. 183. Perfida fide, legendum ibi κατέφαγέ, ob sequentia, οὕτω γὰρ κεῖται ἐν τῷ προφήτῃ, καὶ οὐχὶ καταφάγεται, quo non obstante "genuinum Johannis est καταφάγεται," Prol. p. 127, col. 1.

V. 19. Λύσατε τὸν ναὸν τοῦτον.] Origenes addit Θεοῦ, in Joh. p. 149; τοῦτον autem legit, p. 183, 4, 6.

Cap. iii. 25. Facta est autem quæstio ex discipulis Johannis μετὰ Ἰουδαίων.] Ita Origenes in Joh. p. 151, MSS. cod. et Chrysostomus, μετὰ Ἰουδαίου, Theophylactus textu, μετὰ Ἰουδαίων, Com. πρὸς Ἰουδαῖόν τινα, plures nempe aderant, unus quæstionem movebat ventilabatque.

Cap. iv. 3. Ἀπῆλθε πάλιν.] Deest πάλιν in MSS. aliquot. Habent Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Cum vero Christus in Galilæa ante id tempus versatus fuerit, et ex ea Hierosolymam ascenderit ad celebrandum pascha, recte dicitur abiisse iterum in Galilæam.

V. 35. Τετράμηνον.] Origenes in Joh. p. 230, 232, legit τετράμηνος sub. χρόνος. Chrysostomus et Theophylactus τετράμηνον substantive. Vide Budæum.

Cap. v. 2. Ἐπὶ τῇ προβατικῇ κολυμβήθρᾳ.] Προβατικὴ κολ. Ita Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Theodorus Mopsuest. ac Ammonius in Catena, Hieronymus, Beda, perperam trahentes ad piscinam quod de urbis porta dicitur, cujus in s. literis mentio non semel: corrige ergo annotata nostra in hunc locum, nos enim cum iis erravimus.

V. 4.] Agnoscunt hunc versum Græca scholia et versiones omnes: C. Alex. Hieronymus, August. tom. viii. in Ps. lxxxiii. p. 922. "Veruntamen mihi (inquit Millius) vehemens suspicio est irrepisse jam olim Evangelio ad Hebræos," Prol. p. 45.

V. 9. Καὶ εὐθέως ἐγένετο ὑγιὴς ὁ ἄνθρωπος.] Agnoscunt etiam hæc Græca scholia, et versiones omnes. Nihilominus utcunque in plerisque al. cod. locum habent, quoniam in Codice Trit. desunt, "desumpta videntur ex v. 4 hujus cap. quem ὁσεύσεως suspectum habeo," Prol. p. 154, col. 2.

V. 16. Καὶ ἐζήτουν αὐτὸν ἀποκτεῖναι.] Desunt hæc Vulg. Habent Græca scholia, et versiones orientales, et v. 18 firmat hanc lectionem: "sunt tamen huc traducta ex v. 18," Prol. p. 45, col. 1; ita Millius.

V. 27. Κρίσιν ποιεῖν ὅτι υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου ἐστί. V. 28. Μὴ θαυμάζετε τοῦτο.] Theodoretus, orat. 11 adv. Gent. p. 657, hæc verba ita conjungit versu 27, ὅτι υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου ἐστὶ, μὴ θαυμάζετε τοῦτο. Chrysostomus et Theophylactus vulgatam lectionis distinctionem ceu Pauli Samosatensis commentum improbant, et locum hoc glossemate explicant, μὴ θαυμάζετε ὅτι υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου ἐστὶ, καὶ γὰρ καὶ υἱὸς Θεοῦ ἐστι· ita pariter Syr. Origenes autem in Joh. p. 334, Cyrillus, Augustinus hic, Vigilius contra Eutych. lib. v. et versiones reliquæ omnes, legunt cum textu: et hanc lectionem Maldonatus genuinam esse probat his verbis: "Si 'filius hominis est' et cum sequentibus jungenda essent, non dixisset Christus 'Quia filius hominis est nolite mirari,' perversa et inusitata verborum collocatione, sed 'Nolite mirari quia filius hominis est,' hic enim naturalis est verborum fluxus: præterea quid faceret pronomen illud τοῦτο additum ad finem? si enim superiora verba ad verbum 'mirari' referantur, jam verbum suum habebit accusativum, nec alterum poterat admittere."

Cap. vi. 11. Διέδωκε τοῖς μαθηταῖς, οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ τοῖς ἀνακειμένοις.] Ex aliis evangelistis adjecta esse ista, τοῖς μαθηταῖς, οἱ δὲ μαθηταὶ, notarunt jam olim, teste Millio, Erasmus, Zegerus, Grotius, viz. quia omittuntur a MSS. aliquot, versionibus, Nonno, et Augustino: sed occurrunt non modo apud Theophylactum, sed et apud Matt. xiv. 18, Mar. vi. 41, Luc. ix. 16. Verissimum igitur est Christum distribuisse panes discipulis, ut illi ponerent ante discumbentes; similiter se gessit Christus, cum pavisset quatuor millia hominum, Matt. xv. 36. Mar. viii. 1. Et receptam lectionem genuinam esse res ipsa indicat; Christum enim sua ipsius manu absque ulla discipulorum ope, panes et deinceps pisces distribuisse inter quinque millia hominum, totidemque forsan mulieres et parvulos, incredibile quidem videtur, et quod fere fieri non potuit.

V. 14. Οὗτός ἐστιν ἀληθῶς ὁ προφήτης.] Τὸ ἀληθῶς habent Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, veruntamen, dicente Millio, "interjectum est ἀληθῶς ex cap. vii. v. 40," Prol. p. 133, col. 2.

V. 32. Εὐχαριστήσαντος τοῦ Κυρίου.] Desunt hæc in Chrysostomo et Syr. Retinent Theophylactus et versiones reliquæ: "irrepserunt tamen e margine." Ibid.

V. 39.] Deest πατρὸς in MSS. et versionibus aliquot, Chrysostomo et Cyrillo. At cum pater miserit Christum, vox illa necessario subaudienda est.

V. 51. Σὰρξ ἡν ἐγὼ δώσω.] "Hæc verba irrepsere e margine ad supplendam sententiam," Millius, Prol. p. 45, col. 1. Agnoscunt autem Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, et versiones universim.

V. 55. Ἡ σάρξ μου ἀληθῶς ἐστι βρῶσις, καὶ τὸ αἷμά μου ἀληθῶς ἐστι πόσις.] MSS. aliquot, Arab. Chrysostomus, Cyrillus, et Origenes, in Joh. p. 164, legunt ἀληθής. Sed Origenes in Matt. p. 417, et Gregorius Nyss. hom. 8 in Eccl. p. 457, legunt ἀληθῶς, et sic Theophylactus, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop.

Ad finem v. 56, Stephanus et Cant. addunt καθὼς ἐν ἐμοὶ ὁ πατὴρ, κἀγὼ ἐν τῷ πατρί· ἀμὴν, ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐὰν μὴ λάβητε τὸ σῶμα τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ὡς τὸν ἄρτον τῆς ζωῆς, οὐκ ἔχετε ζωὴν ἐν αὐτῷ. "Hæc ipsius Johannis verba esse" asserit Millius in appendice, ex fide sc. Cant. (de quo tamen codice "mirum in modum interpolato" vide judicium Millii, Prol. p. 132, col. 2.) Agnoscit illa nullus pater, nulla versio, nullus commentator; atque iis omissis citat hoc caput a v. 53 ad v. 58 Origenes, περὶ Εὐχῆς, p. 88, 89. Nec Christus per totum hoc caput vocabulum σῶμα usurpat, nec loquitur de corpore suo sacramentaliter capiendo, ut alibi fusius ostensum est: nihilominus "restituta" vult Millius, Prol. p. 74.

V. 58.] Τὸ μάννα, et v. 64, οἱ μὴ πιστεύοντες, agnoscunt Græci reliquique interpretes omnes: omittit τοῦ ζῶντος, v. 69, unicus Vulg. Sed Prol. p. 164, col. 2, "expressum in margine τὸ μάννα in omnes mox codices manavit:" et Prol. p. 88, col. 1, "insertum in posterioribus μὴ ex priore parte versiculi:" et Prol. p. 45, col. 1, "τοῦ ζῶντος adjectum ex Matthæo."

Cap. vii. 1. Οὐ γὰρ ἤθελεν ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ περιπατεῖν.] Ita Theophylactus, et versiones, codicesque MSS. omnes, nec enim unum producere potuit Millius qui aliter legerit, ita Chrysostomus in textu, Comm. autem οὐ γὰρ εἶχεν ἐξουσίαν. Nihilo secius dicit Millius "οὐκ ἤθελεν insertum est in genuinæ (εἶχεν) locum ut congruentius," Prol. p. 84, col. 1. Millio nimirum ad novam lectionem in textum introducendam autor satis est unus, immo satis est nullus.

V. 8. Ἐγὼ οὔπω ἀναβαίνω.] Hanc lectionem satis stabilivi in annotatis meis, quibus subjunge (1.) Millius ait οὐκ ἀναβαίνω ex Chrysostomo, Cyrillo (Cyrillus ille est Clicthovæus quidam, homo nuperus) esse legendum; Chrysostomus tamen habet (quod Millium parum ingenue id celantem, non fugit) οὐκ ἀναβαίνω ἄρτι, et deinde addit, Christus non locutus est καθάπαξ οὐκ ἀναβαίνω, ἀλλὰ νῦν, τοῦτεστι μεθ' ὑμῶν, Ego jam non ascendo, i. e. non vobiscum. (2.) Porphyrius non calumniatus est Christum de mendacio, sicut Grotius et Millius opinantur, sed solummodo condemnavit eum inconstantiæ et mutationis: Hieronymus adv. Pelag. tom. i. f. 103, G.

V. 21. Καὶ πάντες θαυμάζετε διὰ τοῦτο. 22. Μωσῆς.] Ita Theophylactus. Sed versiones omnes, et Cyrillus Al. tom. iii. p. 521, ponunt stigma post θαυμάζετε. Corrige ergo annotata mea in hunc locum. Non enim interpunctionem hanc cum Millio genuinam existimo, Prol. p. 105, col. 2.

V. 26. Μήποτε ἀληθῶς ἔγνωσαν οἱ ἄρχοντες ὅτι οὗτός ἐστιν ἀληθῶς ὁ Χριστός.] MSS. plura, Syr. Copt. Pers. Æthiop. omittunt posterius ἀληθῶς, et sic Origenes in Joh. p. 161, 162. Retinent autem Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Cod. Alex. sensu quidem commodo: "Nunquid certis indiciis cognoverunt principes quia hic vere est Christus?"

V. 35. Ὅτι ἡμεῖς οὐκ εὑρήσομεν αὐτόν.] Desunt hæc apud

Chrysostomum et Nonnum. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones omnes; suntque plane necessaria ad complendum sensum.

V. 45. Καὶ φαρισαίους.] Ita Græca scholia, et versiones omnes. Nihilominus, Prol. p. 87, col. 1, "καὶ φαρισαίους, quod amplius in nostris, vix obstat codicum consensus quo minus translatum huc putem ex. v. 47 hujus capitis."

Cap. viii. 1—8.] Quod ad historiam de muliere in adulterio deprehensa attinet, vide annotationem Millii, ubi illam tuetur ac defendit. Vide etiam P. Simonii Crit. Hist. N. T. lib. i. cap. 13.

V. 14. Ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ οἴδατε πόθεν ἔρχομαι, καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes.

Ver. 34. Δοῦλός ἐστιν τῆς ἁμαρτίας.] Ἁμαρτίας agnoscunt Græca scholia, versiones omnes, et Origenes in Matt. p. 317. "Adjectum esse" censet Millius, Prol. p. 133.

V. 52. Εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.] Ita Origenes in Joh. p. 336, Theophylactus, et versiones universim.

V. 53. Μὴ σὺ μείζων εἶ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν Ἀβραάμ——Καὶ οἱ προφῆται ἀπέθανον.] Ita Origenes in Joh. p. 336, Theophylactus, versiones omnes. Nihilominus dicente Millio, τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν, Prol. p. 133, καὶ οἱ προφῆται ἀπέθανον, Prol. p. 162, irrepserunt ex præcedentibus.

V. 57. Πεντήκοντα ἔτη οὔπω ἔχεις.] Recepta est hæc lectio Nonni, Theophylacti, Irænei, omnium denique exemplarium: Chrysostomus tamen legit τεσσαράκοντα, tom. i. ed. Mor. p. 364, et in locum ἐγγὺς τεσσαράκοντα.

Cap. ix. 8. Ὅτι τυφλὸς ἦν.] Ita Theophylactus; προσαίτης, Chrysostomus, et versiones omnes, parvo discrimine, "mendicus" nimirum, quia cæcus.

V. 31. Τούτου ἀκούει.] "Addita hæc omnino videntur ad supplendam sententiam," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 154, col. 2. Sed agnoscunt hæc verba C. Alex. Theophylactus, et versiones omnes.

Cap. x. 8. Πάντες ὅσοι πρὸ ἐμοῦ ἦλθον.] Deest πρὸ ἐμοῦ Basilio, et Chrysostomo. Verum cum codices plurimi etiam Cant. Alex. Cypr. ac Clemens Alex. (adde Origenem in Matt. p. 220, in Joh. p. 41, Hieronymum, lib. ii. adv. Pelag. f. 103, I.) lectionem receptam præferant, "crediderim a librariis olim expuncta ista, seu auctoritati prophetarum adversantia, scilicet, certe Manichæos ex his verbis collegisse prophetas non esse missos a Deo, auctor est Theophylactus:" ita Millius; immo Chrysostomus iisdem respondens ait hæc non de prophetis, sed de Juda et Theuda intelligenda esse.

Cap. xii. 32. Πάντας ἑλκύσω πρὸς ἐμαυτόν.] Codices MSS. quidam, Vulg. Irenæus, Hieronymus, Augustinus, Justus Urgelit. Gaudentius legunt πάντα· Origenes autem Com. in Matt. p. 283, in Joh. p. 412, Chrysostomus, et Theophylactus legunt cum textu. Vid. plures apud Millium, Prol. p. 66, col. 1, suntque hæc verba de hominibus tantum intelligenda.

V. 42. Ἵνα μὴ ἀποσυνάγωγοι γένωνται.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes: omittit Nonnus, carminis forte gratia.

Cap. xiii. 19. Πρὸ τοῦ γενέσθαι.] Legunt hæc verba Origenes in Joh. p. 391, 395, 398, Theophylactus, antiquæ versiones universim: non obstante tamen codicum hodiernorum suffragio, "inter scholia marginalia omnino posuerim," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 160, col. 1.

V. 31. Ὅτε οὖν ἐξῆλθε.] Si subjungantur ista verba commati tricesimo, omittendum est οὖν, quod agnoscunt MSS. et textus. Quod si, pariter ac editio Oxoniensis ac versio Anglicana, claudas comma illud cum his verbis ἦν δὲ νύξ, recte legas in commate sequenti ὅτε οὖν ἐξῆλθε, λέγει, &c. et sic Origenes in Joh. p. 410, Vulg. aliique.

Cap. xiv. 30. Καὶ ἐν ἐμοὶ οὐκ ἔχει οὐδέν.] Epiphanius, Hær. Manich. p. 180, §. 64, legit οὐδὲν τοῦ αὐτοῦ εὑρίσκει, Gregorius Nyss. hom. 7 in Eccles. p. 444, εὑρίσκει τῶν ἰδίων οὐδέν· hæc autem παραφραστικῶς tantum ab iis dicta esse videantur; alibi enim Gregor. Nyss. legit cum textu: atque ita Chrysostomus et Theophylactus, Origenes in Joh. p. 330, et p. 323, et hom. 21 in Lucam, et versiones omnes: Athanasius, tom. i. p. 440, et Basilius, tom. ii. p. 106, legunt οὐδὲν εὑρίσκει ἐν ἐμοί· inter autem τοῦ ἔχειν et τοῦ εὑρίσκειν οὐδὲν scilicet, quod culpari possit, parum est discriminis.

Cap. xv. 11. Ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ.] Utrum hic legas ἦ cum versionibus, an μείνῃ cum scholiastis, nihil interest.

V. 21. Ταῦτα πάντα.] Græci, reliquique interpretes, legerunt vel ταῦτα, vel [illegible]: juniores tamen Millio, "ταῦτα irrepsit e margine," Prol. p. 162, col. 2.

Cap. xvii. 1. Ἐλήλυθεν ἡ ὥρα.] Ita Origenes in Joh. p. 21, Græca scholia, et versiones universim, et tamen Prol. p. 155, col. 2, medium, "ἐλήλυθεν ἡ ὥρα videtur aliunde irrepsisse ex cap. xii. 23."

V. 11. Καὶ τήρησον αὐτοὺς ἐν ὀνόματι σοῦ οἷς ἔδωκάς μοι.] Οἷς hic legunt Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Athanas. orat. 4, contra Arian. p. 470, Hær. 38, p. 279, Vulg. Æthiop. Et hanc lectionem certam reddunt verba sequentia, v. 12, quæ apud omnes versiones et scholiastas eadem sunt, viz. ἐγὼ ἐτήρουν αὐτοὺς· ἐν ὀνόματί σου οἷς ἔδωκάς μοι ἐφύλαξα. Millius tamen, Prol. p. 120, col. 1, "ἐν ὀνόματί σου ᾧ ἔδωκάς μοι, omnino recte; 'serva eos per nomen tuum,' sive potestatem qua dedisti ut eandem inter se, quam nos, habeant unionem."

V. 12. Ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ.] Desunt hæc in Vulg. Agnoscunt Græca scholia, et versiones omnes: et tamen Prol. p. 45, col. 1, "ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ accessit v. 11."

Cap. xviii. 29. Πίντοσεν.] V. l. πάντες, sine discrimine; ubi enim Judæi ab omni loco conveniunt, conveniunt omnes.

V. 23. Τί με δέρεις;] Δαίρεις, quomodo hic, et in similibus locis, legendum contendit Nansius in Nonnum; δέρω enim, inquit, est excorio, δαίρω cædo, verbero; ita etiam Suidas. Est tamen certum τὸ δέρειν tam apud sacros scriptores quam apud profanos, verberandi sensu aliquoties occurrere; ita Luc. xxii. 63, viri qui tenebant velaverunt eum, δέροντες, "in faciem percutientes;" ἄηρ δέρων, "aerem verberans," 1 Cor. ix. 26. Εἰς πρόσωπον δέρειν, "in faciem cædere;" ita δέρεσθαι καὶ δέρειν δι' ἡμέρας est "indies verbera dare, et pati," Aristoph. Vesp. p. 463.

Cap. xix. 31. Ἦν γὰρ μεγάλη ἡ ἡμέρα ἐκείνου τοῦ σαββάτου.] MSS. plurima, Cyrillus, Theophylactus, ἐκείνη, sic editio Oxon. i. e. "Dies ille sabbati erat magnus dies," vel dies istius sabbati, utpote triplici ex ratione festus, maximo in honore habendus fuit. Vide Lightfoot. in locum.

Cap. xx. 29. Dixit ei Jesus quia vidisti me Θωμᾶ.] Theophylactus, Cyrillus, Augustinus omittunt Θωμᾶ· Origenes autem legit Com. in Joh. p. 195, et verba præcedentia λέγει αὐτῷ Ἰησοῦς lectionem hanc certam reddunt.

Cap. xxi. 12. Οὐδεὶς δὲ ἐτόλμα τῶν μαθητῶν ἐξετάσαι αὐτόν.] Deest τῶν μαθητῶν apud Chrysostomum in textu, in Commentario tamen addit οὐκέτι γὰρ τὴν αὐτὴν παῤῥησίαν εἶχον. Agnoscunt Theophylactus, et versiones orientales omnes: Vulg. "discumbentium," quod in idem recidit. Et tamen Millius, "Commentarii loco fuisse probabile est τὸ τῶν μαθητῶν," Prol. p. 45, col. 1.

SECTIO QUINTA—IN ACTA APOSTOLORUM.

Cap. i. 16. Διὰ στόματος Δαβίδ.] Desunt hæc Vulg Æthiop. Origeni, Athanasio, Didymo de Spiritu Sancto. Sed contra habent Vulg. Origenes bis in Acta Apost. ed Huetii. to. ii. p. 422, 423, Œcumenius, Chrysostomus in Commentario, Syr. Arab. In genuinis Athanasii scriptis non invenio ubi desint. Didymum habemus tantum Latine ad Vulgati exemplar compositum.

V. 23. Ἔστησαν δύο.] "Augustinus et Arab. 'statuit' numero singulari contra omnium codicum fidem," inquit Millius, forte ob Petri prærogativam stabiliendam.

Cap. ii. 3. Ἐκάθισέ τε.] V. l. ἐκάθισάν τε, Cant. Syr. Arab. Athanasius, Cyrillus. Hic autem lectori fraudem fecit in utrusque; Athanasius enim in hom. de Hum. Nat. Suscepta, p. 606, legit ἐκάθισέ τε, in ep. dubiæ fidei ad Serap. p. 179, καὶ ἐκάθισαν· in Cyrillis sine discrimine et solo nomine citandis latere potuit, sed ita res evenit ut in utrisque fallat: Cyrillus enim Hieros. Catech. 17, p. 199, legit καὶ ἐκάθισεν, Cyrillus Alex. Glaph. in Gen. p. 45, ἐκάθισέ τε, quomodo legunt Chrysostomus et Œcumenius: Vulg. "sedit," sc. γλῶσσα, aut πῦρ.

V. 24. Λύσας τὰς ὠδῖνας τοῦ θανάτου.] V. l. αὐτοῦ· Vulg. Syr. Arab. Polycarpus, Irenæus; utroque modo Epiphanius; Chrysostomus et Œcumenius, θανάτου, quæ lectio est prorsus necessaria. Esto enim Christum in infernum descendisse; est tamen certissimum nullos illum cruciatus aut dolores ibi tulisse a quibus solvendus esset.

V. 30. Τὸ κατὰ σάρκα ἀναστήσειν Χριστόν.] Desunt hæc Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Irenæo, lib. iii. cap. 12. Agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Arab. et notante Lorino, nostri codices omnes ea habent.

V. 31. Οὐ κατελείφθη ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ εἰς ᾅδου.] Deest ψυχὴ αὐτοῦ, Iren. lib. iii. cap. 12, p. 229, Vulg. Syr. C. Alex. "Insertum (inquit Millius) haud dubito, ex v. 26," Prol. p. 122, col. 2. Sed agnoscunt hæc verba Arab. Chrysost. et Œcumen. in locum, Origen. in Reg. p. 32, ubi notat in Psalmis hæc legi, Ps. xv. (al. xvi.) 10, et ab apostolis in Actibus interpretata.

V. 47. Τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ.] "Irrepsisse e margine," Millius, Prol. p. 122, fide Vul. Æthiop. C. Alex. Agnoscunt autem Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab.

Cap. iii. 4. Σὺν τῷ Ἰωάννῃ.] Ita Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, versiones omnes. Nihilominus Prol. p. 163, col. 2, "Vix impedit summus codicum nostrorum consensus, quo minus sequens σὺν τῷ Ἰωάννῃ, licet in solo hoc codice, quod sciam, haud jam extet, e margine irrepsisse censeam."

V. 12. Ἰδίᾳ δυνάμει, ἢ εὐσεβείᾳ.] Ita Œcumenius, et Chrysostomus tam textu quam commentario; et tamen Millius, Prol. p. 45, col. 2, "Ἰδίᾳ δυνάμει, ἢ ἐξουσίᾳ, habet Chrysostomus non semel."

V. 20. Τὸν προκεκηρυγμένον Χριστόν.] MSS. plurima, Syr. Arab. Chrysostomus, Theophylactus, Tertullianus, Chron. Alex. legunt προχειρισμένον. Vulg. et Œcumenius textui assentiuntur. Inter utramque lectionem parvi interest, quicunque enim a propheta prædictus, et prædicatus fuit hominibus, idem certe prædestinatus fuit a Deo: verba autem προκατήγγειλε, v. 18, et προκατήγγειλαν, v. 24, receptæ lectioni favere videntur.

V. 22. Πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας.] "Translata huc videntur ex v. 25," Millius, p. 144, col. 1. Agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, C. Alex. Arabs.

Cap. iv. 12. Καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἄλλῳ οὐδενὶ ἡ σωτηρία.] Ita legunt Chrysostomus et Œcumenius in locum, Cypr. Test. lib. ii. n. 16, versiones antiquæ, Vulg. Syr. Arab.

V. 25. Ὁ διὰ στόματος Δαβὶδ τοῦ παιδός σου εἰπών.] MSS. aliquot et Latini patres addunt ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ· Vulg. Syr. Arab. "Spiritu Sancto," forte ex Mar. xii. 36. Nam neque Chrysostomus, aut Œcumenius, neque Arab. Grabioque teste in Irenæum, p. 226, hæc verba textus Actorum Apostolicorum agnoscit.

V. 27. Συνήχθησαν γὰρ ἐπ' ἀληθείας.] MSS. plurima, Chrysostomus, Cyrillus, Irenæus, et quidam e Latinis patribus, Vulg. et Syr. addunt ἐν τῇ πόλει ταύτῃ, quæ omittunt Œcumenius et Arabs; neque placent Millio, qui hic "Chrysostomum, et Vulg. interpolatos esse" dicit, Prol. p. 85, col. 2. Grabius in Irenæum, p. 226, inquit, "Glossema est, non ipsius Lucæ dictum."

V. 32. Ἦν ἡ καρδία καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ μία.] Cyprianus et bini codices MSS. addunt καὶ οὐκ ἦν ἐν αὐτοῖς διάκρισις οὐδεμία. Sed Origenes in Matt. p. 382, 383, editis congruit, et ex antiquis scholiastis atque interpretibus, qui hæc verba agnoscunt, hominem arbitror fuisse neminem.

Cap. v. 15. Κατὰ τὰς πλατείας.] Deest in Æthiop. Agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Veruntamen Prol. p. 124, col. 1, medium, "κατὰ τὰς πλατείας adnotatoris cujusdam est, non evangelistæ."

V. 34. Τοὺς ἀποστόλους ἔξω ποιῆσαι.] MSS. duo, Vulg. Chrysostomus, legunt ἀνθρώπους, "quam lectionem germanam arbitror," inquit Millius; at immerito. Nam tametsi Gamaliel jusserit foras homines secedere, Divus tamen Lucas, qui eos Christi apostolos esse probe novit, vocabulum illud recte usurpare potuit; perinde ac Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. et Æthiop.

Cap. vi. 8. Στέφανος δὲ πλήρης πίστεως.] Millius hic, Prol. p. 78, col. 1, hæc habet; "Χάριτος omnino recte, ita enim Vulg. Æthiop. Syr. Asterius, Proclus, Euthalius, Chrysostomus:" Œcumenius autem et Arab. immo Chrysostomus legunt πίστεως· doctorem fefellit in Chrysostomo, forte in aliis, mos apud scripturas et patres loquendi de fide miraculosa τῷ τῆς χάριτος ὀνόματι. Lectionem textus mihi firmam reddunt verba, com. 5, "Elegerunt Stephanum virum πλήρη πίστεως."

Cap. vii. 37. Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῶν—αὐτοῦ ἀκούσεσθε.] Desunt verba notata Arab. et Chrysostomo. Agnoscunt Œcumenius, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. evangelista, cap. iii. 22, 23. Millio tamen judice, "αὐτοῦ ἀκούσεσθε, addita ex Deut. xviii. 15, sunt verba Mosis, non evangelistæ," Prol. p. 110. Quasi religio esset Judæo verba Mosis citare prout in textu Hebræo et LXX. Interpretum inveniebantur.

Cap. viii. 10. Οὗτός ἐστιν ἡ δύναμις Θεοῦ ἡ μεγάλη.] Vulg. et Irenæus, lib. i. cap. 20, "Quæ vocatur magna:" Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. legunt cum textu: nec dicerent Samaritani eo cui fidem adhibebant ἡ καλουμένη, sed ἡ ὄντως μεγάλη.

V. 39. Πνεῦμα Κυρίου ἥρπασε τὸν Φίλιππον.] Hieronymus, Dial. adver. Lucifer. dicit codices quosdam legisse Πνεῦμα ἅγιον ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὸν εὐνοῦχον, καὶ ἄγγελος ἥρπασε τὸν Φίλιππον. Sed hanc lectionem Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et versiones antiquæ non agnoscunt.

Cap. ix. 5. Σκληρόν σοι πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν v. 6.—Καὶ ὁ Κύριος πρὸς αὐτόν.] "Hæc in contextum transtulisse librarios ex Act. xxii. 10, et xxvi. 14," vult Millius, atque hanc esse germanam lectionem, ἐγώ εἰμι Ἰησοῦς ὃν σὺ διώκεις· ἀλλ' ἀνάστηθι καὶ, &c. Sed in locis citatis non hæc verba αὐτολεξεὶ reperies; non enim occurrunt τρέμων καὶ θαμβῶν, neque τί με θέλεις ποιῆσαι; sed solummodo τί ποιήσω; præterea σκληρόν σοι πρὸς κέντρα λακτίζειν hic agnoscunt Œcumenius, Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. quorum auctoritas ad hanc lectionem probandam valet plurimum.

V. 20. Ἐκήρυσσε τὸν Χριστὸν, ὅτι οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Τὸν Χριστὸν, Chrysost. Œcumen. Arab. τὸν Ἰησοῦν, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. eodem sensu, idem nempe est in ore apostolorum κηρύττειν τὸν Χριστὸν, et dicere Jesum quem prædicabant esse Christum. Hoc sensu Philippus ἐκήρυσσεν τὸν Χριστὸν Samaritanis, Act. viii. 5; et falsi fratres ex invidia erga Paulum τὸν Χριστὸν κηρίσσουσιν, Phil. i. 15. Quod autem addit Millius, Prol. p. 93, col. 2, "Pauli scopo accommodatam magis esse vocem Ἰησοῦν, cujus non erat demonstrare Christum seu Messiam esse Dei filium (id enim Judæis maxime in confesso erat) sed probare Jesum Nazarenum fuisse Dei filium, sive Messiam," in eo longe fallitur. "Ego enim (inquit Origenes) cum multis Judæis, iisque sapientibus habitis, conflictatus, οὐδενὸς ἀκήκοα ἐπαινοῦντος τὸν Λόγον εἶναι τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ," lib. ii. contra Cels. p. 79. Et clarius adhuc, lib. iv. p. 162, "Illud quoque ignorat Celsus, Judæos non admodum hoc asserere Christum illum quem etiamnum expectant adventurum, Θεὸν ὄντα, ἢ Θεοῦ υἱόν, Deum esse, aut Dei filium." Hinc Hieronymus in hæc verba, Jer. xvii. 4, "Maledictus qui spem ponit in homine," maledictos pronunciat Judæos qui spem habent in homine Christo, viz. suo, quem non filium Dei, sed purum hominem putant esse venturum, unde Christum blasphemiæ reum pronunciant Judæi, quia dixit se filium Dei esse, Joh. v. 18. x. 34, 35.

V. 31. Αἱ μὲν οὖν ἐκκλησίαι καθ' ὅλης τῆς Ἰουδαίας, καὶ Γαλιλαίας καὶ Σαμαρείας, εἶχον εἰρήνην, οἰκοδομούμεναι.] V. I. ἡ ἐκκλησία, Vul. Syr. Æthiop. Sed Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et Arab. textum sequuntur, et mentio trium ecclesiarum sub diversis provinciis agentium firmat hanc lectionem.

Cap. x. 6. Οὗτος λαλήσει σοι τί σε δεῖ ποιεῖν.] Quod cum desit in MSS. pluribus, "glossema videtur additum ex Act. x. 32, et xxii. 10," Millius hic et Prol. p. 93, col. 1. Posterior locus nihil ad rem facit, et v. 32, repetit tantum quod hic dictum est, sic etiam cap. xi. 14, quod hanc lectionem satis firmat; præsertim cum hæc verba agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et Vulg. qui plerumque plus ponderis apud Millium habet quam codices MSS. universi.

V. 21. Τοὺς ἀπεσταλμένους ἀπὸ τοῦ Κορνηλίου πρὸς αὐτόν.] "Additum nullus dubito ex xi. 11, claritatis gratia," inquit Millius hic, nempe quia deest circiter in viginti MSS. et versionibus, sed (1.) si desumatur hoc ex cap. xi. 11, cur non hic etiam addatur ἀπὸ Καισαρείας, quod occurrit illuc? (2.) Extat apud exemplar Œcumenii, apud marginem Chrysostomi, atque apud comma 17 hujus capitis; itaque vero mihi similius videtur omisisse quosdam hæc verba ex eo quod post τοὺς ἄνδρας supervacanea ea esse existimarint.

V. 32. Ὃς παραγενόμενος λαλήσει σοι.] "Accessere commentarii loco ex v. 22." Sed agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcumen. C. Alex. Syr. Arab.

Cap. xi. 12. Μηδὲν διακρινόμενον.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes; nihilo secius hæc Millius, Prol. p. 45, col. 2, "Sequens μηδὲν διακρινόμενον nemo sustulerit, huc traductum est ex cap. x. 20." Hoc res omnino postulat ut vere Petrus repeteret quæ ei a Spiritu Sancto dicta esse refert ibi evangelista, suntque tanti ponderis ad Petrum a crimine ipsi imputato vindicandum, ut sine summa ἀβλεψίᾳ, in hac rerum gestarum enarratione omitti non potuerint.

V. 6. Εἶδον τὰ τετράποδα τῆς γῆς, καὶ τὰ θηρία.] "Omittunt Syrus et Epiphanius, Hær. Cerinth. p. 112, καὶ τὰ θηρία." Observasse autem debuit Millius omissa pariter ibi esse τὰ πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ· idem tamen Epiphanius disputando contra Ebionitas, p. 146, mentionem facit τῆς ὀδύνης τῆς ἐκούσης πάντα ἐν αὐτῇ θηρία τε, καὶ κτήνη, ἑρπετὰ καὶ πετεινά, unde certum est cum legisse id quod antea omisit.

Cap. xiii. 18. Ἐτροποφόρησεν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ.] "Ἐτροποφόρησεν errore scribarum manifestissime, pro ἐτροφοφόρησεν," inquit Millius: sed Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et Vulg. ab impressis non dissentiunt: ἐτροποφόρησεν vero "a librariis ex margine translatum fuisse in contextum" probare conatur Millius his argumentis. (1.) Quia desumpta sunt ista ex Deut. i. 31, ubi versio LXX. legit ἐτροφοφόρησεν. Sed quater citat hæc verba Origenes, sc. lib. iv. contra Cel. p. 210, hom. 18 in Jer. ed. Huetii, p. 169, Comm. in Matt. p. 459 et 475; et ubique habet ἐτροποφόρησεν. Sic etiam Athanasius, ut in contrariam partem trahatur a Millio; sic enim testimonium illius recte allegatur in Hæschelii notis in Origenem, tom. i. p. 977, ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον αὐτοὺς οὗτος ἤνεγκεν ὡς εἴ τις τροφὸς τροποφορήσειε τὸν ἑαυτῆς υἱόν, "Cum fecerint sibi Israelitæ vitulum ex auro conflatilem (ait Athanasius) cum pane et aqua delicientibus murmuraverint, mores eorum sustinuit Deus, pariter ac nutrix filiolo suo flenti aut leviter irascenti adblanditur; sed cum versa et mutata in pejorem partem essent omnia, supplicio eos allecit maximo." Legit etiam ἐτροποφόρησε Codex Vaticanus, teste Huetio. (2.) "Moses (inquit Millius) ad fortia quæque hortatur; quod facere non potuit ex eo quod Deus eorum mores in eremo per quadraginta ennos sustinuerit." Respondeo, potuisse tamen populum hunc ad fortiter agendum incitare ex eo quod idem Deus pro iis pugnaturus esset, de cujus potentia et voluntate singulari dubitare, tot conspicuis prodigiis ab eo in sui gratiam editis tum in Ægypto, tum etiam in Arabiæ desertis, ubi paterna benevolentia eos prosecutus erat, summum nefas esset; hoc autem plane est commatis 30 et 31 argumentum.—Pergit Millius dicere, "Deum eorum mores per quadraginta annos in eremo sustinuisse incongruum est, imprimis, ac fortasse ne verum quidem; quomodo enim eorum mores per annos quadraginta in deserto pertulit Deus, quos omnes præter unum, et alterum prostravit in deserto?" Respondeo, (1.) Si Mosi sit fides adhibenda, hæc verba dicta fuerunt ante hanc stragem; "Tum (enim inquit Moses) vobis dixi ne terreamini neve timeatis eos (v. 29). Jehova, Deus noster, qui nobis præit, is pugnabit pro vobis, pro omnibus quæ fecit erga vos in oculis vestris in Ægypto (v. 30). Et quæ vidistis in hoc deserto, ubi vos tulit Deus vester quemadmodum quisque filium suum bajulare solet, per omnem viam quam confecistis, donec ad hunc locum perveneritis." Resp. (2.) Argumentum hoc supponere τὸ τροποφορεῖν idem hic tantum valere quod "mores eorum ferre," hoc autem negant insignes critici, Gatakerus, Dousæus, Boisius. Audi Boisium, "ἐτροποφόρησεν αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, i. e. ἦρε καὶ ἐβάστασεν αὐτοὺς ὡσεὶ τροφὸς τὸν υἱόν· tulit labores, molestias populi hujus. Moses nimirum dixerat, v. 9, 'Non possum solus נשא ferre hunc populum;' et v. 12, 'Quomodo solus אשא ferrem molestiam quam creatis mihi?' et hic 'Jehovah נשאך tulit te:' in quibus locis Chaldæus utitur voce סבר 'bajulavit;' seu ergo legas ἐτροποφόρησεν sive ἐτροφοφόρησεν, utraque sensu βαστάζειν accipienda sunt, ut textui originali respondeant." Claudo hæc verbis Boisii; "Porro τροποφορέω multo magis mihi placeat quam τροφοφορέω, non modo euphoniæ gratia, sed etiam quia libri plerique omnes in ea consentiunt lectione."

V. 19. Κατακληροδότησεν αὐτοῖς τὴν γῆν.] MSS. plura, Chrysostomus et Œcumenius, habent κατακληρονόμησεν, et "sic legendum constat ex Deut. i. 38, ubi LXX., quos sequitur Lucas, voce hac utuntur," ita Millius: sed utram vocem legas, Grotio judice, nihil refert, nam נחל in Piel et הנחיל in Hiphel modo vertitur κατακληρονομεῖν, ut Deut. iii. 28. Josh. xiv. 2, et alibi κληροδοτεῖν, ut Deut. i. 38, apud Kircherum, sic Josh. xix. 51, edit. Complut.; et 1 Macc. iii. 36, κληροδοτεῖν est "terram sorte dividere."

V. 23. Ἤγειρε τῷ Ἰσραὴλ σωτῆρα Ἰησοῦν.] Codices plurimi, Œcumenius, Chrysostomus in Com. Athanasius, tom. i. p. 553, legunt ἤγαγε, et quidem σωτηρίαν vitio librarii. Quod vero ἤγειρε sit germana lectio, probabilis ratio reddi potest, viz. quod τὸ suscitare semen nunquam vertitur a LXX. ἄγειν σπέρμα, sed semper ἀναστήσειν σπέρμα· et in loco parallelo, Act. ii. 30, legitur ἀναστήσειν τὸν Χριστόν. Vide cap. iii. 26, et Luc. i. 69, καὶ ἤγειρε κέρας σωτηρίας ἡμῖν ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ τοῦ παιδὸς αὐτοῦ, et sic se habet Dei promissum, ἀναστήσω τῷ Δαβὶδ, Jer. xxiii. 5. xxx. 9.

V. 33. Ὡς καὶ ἐν τῷ ψαλμῷ τῷ δευτέρῳ γέγραπται.] Ἐν ψαλμῷ τῷ "πρώτῳ genuinam esse lectionem" acriter contendit Millius, ex auctoritate Œcumenii, Hilarii, et Origenis, Cat. in Ps. ii. 7, teste cl. Huetio. E contrario notatu dignum est, quod Tertullianus, contra Marcion. lib. iv. cap. 22, et Cyprianus, libro i. et Quir. §. 13, habent diserte "Psalmo secundo," et Chrysostomus, versionesque omnes, editis congruunt: in Hebræa, Chaldæa, et Græca lingua atque apud interpretes orientales hi psalmi in unum neutiquam confunduntur. S. Hilarius in Ps. ii. verbis luculentis declarat, quod regnante Ptolemæo LXX. senes psalmos in hunc ordinem redegerint, numerosque affixerunt spirituali et cœlesti scientia psalmorum virtutem intelligentes: ex Spiritu igitur, et mandato Dei secundum Hilarium, psalmus hic secundum locum longe ante obtinuit, dictusque fuit secundus, priusquam Acta Apostolorum literis a Luca consignata essent; Hieronymi testimonium hic allatum, ut subditivum, respuunt critici: idem autem Hieronymus, cum Hebraice psalmos in lucem ediderit, hæc verba a Luca allegata, sub secundo psalmo collocavit: major Origeni ex Catena adhibenda esset fides, nisi dixisset idem Huetius, sublata est Catenarum fides. Ad summam. Si psalmi ἀνεπίγραφοι fuerint, cur diceret Athanasius hæc verba desumpta esse ἐκ τοῦ δευτέρου ψαλμοῦ; ad argumentum* Millii (mutandi δευτέρῳ in πρώτῳ nulla omnino causa fuerit, legendi δευτέρῳ pro πρώτῳ longe maxima, ne discederet sc. Lucas a codicibus Hebraicis, ac Græcis Veteris Testamenti) respondeo, mutandi forte causam fuisse ut textus conformaretur exemplaribus illis Latinis quæ a Beda et Erasmo memorantur: quid multa? cum hæc locutus sit Paulus, apud psalterium vel numerorum erat distinctio aliqua, vel nulla; si nulla fuerit, cur psalmum Paulus aut primum aut secundum nominat? Sin autem reliqua, cur non ille Hebræus ex Hebræis receptum numerum et ordinem ampleeteretur?

V. 45. Ἀντιλέγοντες καί.] Deest in MSS. quibusdam, versionibusque: quod tamen agnoscunt Chrysostomus, et Œcumenius, atque idcirco solum omitti videtur, quia præcesserat ἀντίλεγον.

V. 48. Ἐδόξασαν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Κυρίου.] Sic Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Vulg. Arab. Sed "Syr. et Æthiop. τὸν Θεόν, recte," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 129, col. 2.

Cap. xv. 20 et 29. Καὶ τοῦ πνικτοῦ.] Πνικτοῦ omittunt, teste Millio, Irenæus, Cyprianus, Tertullianus, Hieronymus, Augustinus, Ambrosius, Eucherius, Latini omnes: cæterum retinent Græca quæ vidimus omnia (excepto uno Cant.) versiones omnes, etiam Vulgata, Origenes, lib. viii. contra Cels. p. 396, "patres ac tractores Græci universim, ut proinde minime sollicitandum arbitrer:" idem vero Millius, Proleg. p. 45, col. 2, "Iisdem Latinis patribus cum Paciano et Fulgentio in medium prolatis, hæc habet, certe medium καὶ τοῦ πνικτοῦ ipsius Lucæ non est, sed Christianorum veterum," &c. Agnoscunt τὸ πνικτὸν, ante Origenem, Clemens Alex. Pædag. lib. ii. p. 172; post Origenem, Cyrillus Hieros. Catech. 4, p. 34, Cyrillus Alex. tom. i. p. 153 et 575, Constit. Apost. lib. vi. cap. 12, Epiphanius Hær. Naz. §. 8, p. 124, Concilium Gangrense, can. 2. Quid ad hæc Millius? "Nempe ista καὶ τοῦ πνικτοῦ, quæ ipsius Lucæ non fuisse supra notavimus, introduxerunt ante Clementis tempora librarii in textum," Prol. p. 61, col. 2. Vulgatum cur hic respuit si quæras, "addidit ex Græcis suis quartum 'suffocati'" sc. Hieronymus, Prol. p. 82, col. 1. Et tamen, p. 61, col. 2, "Legebant exemplaria aliqua Italicæ versionis ante castigationem Hieronymi;" fefellit hominem mos Latinorum, immo Græcorum, suffocatum sub interdicto sanguinis contineri existimantium, adeoque tria tantum hic prohiberi putantium; ita Tertullianus, Apol. cap. 9, "Propterea quoque suffocatis et morticinis abstinemus, ne quo sanguine contaminemur vel intra viscera sepulto;" Chrysostomus, hom. 27 in Gen., τί ἐστι χρέας ἐν αἵματι ψυχῆς, τοῦτ' ἐστι πνικτόν, τοῦ γὰρ ἀλόγου ἡ ψυχὴ τὸ αἷμα τυγχάνει. Adjiciunt his Irenæus, lib. ii. cap. 12, Cyprianus ad Quir. lib. ii. cap. 119, MSS. codices quidam, hæc, καὶ ὅσα ἂν μὴ θέλωσιν ἑαυτοῖς γίνεσθαι ἑτέροις μὴ ποιεῖν. Quæ quoniam non agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Vulg. Syr. Arab. nec Clemens Alex., Origenes, nec Constitutiones Apostolicæ, nec patres reliqui ante citati, ea cum Spencero rejicienda esse, Millio non invito, existimo.

* Proleg.

Ver. 23. Οἱ πρεσβύτεροι καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοί.] Ita Chrysost. Œcum. Syr. Arab. πρεσβύτεροι ἀδελφοὶ, C. Alex. Vulg. Cant. Barb. 1.

Cap. xvi. 7. Καὶ οὐκ εἴασεν αὐτοὺς τὸ Πνεῦμα·] MSS. aliquot, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Cyrillus Alex. addunt Ἰησοῦ, sicut etiam Hieronymus, lib. iii. contra Pelag. cap. 6, qui et hæc addit; "nota (inquit) quod Spiritus Jesus Spiritus Sanctus sit;" et Cyrillus, Thes. p. 298, similem affert notam. Ἰησοῦ vero additamentum esse primo aspectu dignoscitur; nam licet dictiones hæ Πνεῦμα Κυρίου Χριστοῦ, τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ interdum usurpentur in N. T., dictio tamen Πνεῦμα Ἰησοῦ nunquam solitaria incedit; Epiphanius, Anchor. p. 72, Chrysostomus, et Œcumenius cum textu legunt; alteram lectionem natam suspicor ex controversia, quæ post exorta est de processione Sancti Spiritus a Filio. Millio tamen est "genuina lectio," Prol. p. 71, col. 1.

V. 14. Προσέχειν τοῖς λαλουμένοις ὑπὸ τοῦ Παύλου.] Hæc verba agnoscunt Chrysost. Œcum. C. Alex. versiones omnes, excepto unico Æthiope: et tamen, Prol. p. 124, col. 2, "scholion hoc adjecit librarius quispiam in corpus historiæ."

Cap. xvii. 23. Ὃν οὖν ἀγνοοῦντες εὐσεβεῖτε, τοῦτον.] Vulg. et Origenes in Joh. p. 155, legunt ὃ et τοῦτο· Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et Clem. Alex. Strom. i. p. 314, et Strom. v. p. 588, Syr. Arab. lectionem textus retinent: sensus in utrisque idem est.

V. 28. Τίνες τῶν καθ' ὑμᾶς ποιητῶν.] Deest ποιητῶν Irenæo, Lat. Augustino, Ambrosio, agnoscunt Clemens Alex. Strom. i. p. 415, Origenes, Com. in Joh. p. 155, Chrysost. Œcumenius: hinc observatio illa frequens Clementis, Origenis, Chrysostomi, Paulum prudenter et opportune, profanis verba facientem, poctarum testimonia laudasse.

Cap. xviii. 5. Συνείχετο τῷ πνεύματι ὁ Παῦλος.] V. l. τῷ λογῷ. Basilius, Theodoretus, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. "instabat sermoni:" sed Chrysost. Œcumenius et Arab. cum excusis consentiunt; neque enim recte vertitur συνείχετο active "instabat," sed passive "tenebatur," constrictus, coarctatus erat, Matt. iv. 24, Luc. iv. 38, viii. 37, xii. 50, Philip. i. 23.

V. 9. Ἐν νυκτί.] Ita Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Vulg. Arab. apud Syrum tantum deest; Millio tamen videtur "a librario aliquo additum de margine," Prol. p. 130, col. 1.

V. 10. Ἐγώ εἰμι μετὰ σοῦ, καὶ.] Desunt hæc tantum apud Æthiop. versionem nullius fidei: "Media tamen hæc suspecta habeo παρεμβλήσεως," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 124.

V. 17. Πάντες οἱ Ἕλληνες.] Desunt οἱ Ἕλληνες, Vulg. unde Millius, Proleg. p. 144, "Insertum est in nostris perperam:" agnoscunt autem Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, versiones orientales omnes.

V. 21. Δεῖ με πάντως τὴν ἑορτὴν τὴν ἐρχομένην ποιῆσαι εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ.] "Hæc (inquit Millius) aliunde sunt ex Act. xx. 6. Act. xix. 21." Habent autem Chrysostomus, Œcumen. Syr. Arab.

V. 27. Διὰ τῆς χάριτος.] Ita Chrysostomus, Œcum. versiones orientales omnes: desunt hæc apud Vulg. Bedam, Basilium Seleuc. forte quia non existimarunt dona eximia et divina in hunc hominem collata fuisse, qui sciebat tantum baptisma Johannis.

Cap. xix. 16. Κατακυριεύσας αὐτῶν.] Vulg. et codices MSS. quidam ἀμφοτέρων· cum textu legunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. sine discrepantia.

Cap. xx. 24. Μετὰ χαρᾶς.] Desunt hæc in MSS. quibusdam, Vulg. Syr. Retinent Chrysostomus, Œcum. Arab.

V. 28. Τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Lectionem hanc probat et egregie firmat Millius.

Cap. xxi. 7. Ἀπὸ Τύρου.] Ita omnes, excepto Cov. 3, sic tamen Millius, "ἀπὸ Τύρου licet jam in nostris omnibus locum habent, ex versiculo tertio hujus capitis initio huc traducta arbitror." Prol. p. 163, col. 2.

V. 8. Οἱ περὶ τὸν Παῦλον.] Desunt hæc Chrysostomo, Vulg. Syr. Agnoscunt Œcumenius et Arab.: et res ipsa postulat ut qui cum Paulo Ptolemaiada conveniebant, inde cum eo egrederentur.

V. 13. Εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ.] Omittunt hæc Basilius, tom. ii. p. 429, et Cyrillus, tanquam non ad eorum propositum: agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, et versiones omnes: et tamen Prol. p. 164, "medium εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ est insertum v. 12," cur non et 13?

V. 22. Δεῖ πλῆθος συνελθεῖν.] Desunt hæc apud Syrum solum: agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Vulg. Arab. "Introducta sunt (inquit Millius) ubi ipsa adscripserat scholiastes quispiam ex infra dictis v. 27. 30." Prol. p. 150, col. 1.

Cap. xxii. 12. Ἀνὴρ εὐσεβὴς vel εὐλαβὴς,] Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. Hæc tamen Millius, "Qui hic nescio quid deesse putarunt, interserebant alii εὐσεβὴς ex cap. x. 2, alii εὐλαβὴς," Prol. p. 144, col. 2.

V. 20. Τὸ αἷμα Στεφάνου τοῦ μαρτυρός σου.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes: deest Στεφάνου in Codice Alex.: unde "vix est, ut unius codicis hujus testimonio lectionem hanc germanam existimem, quis Στεφάνου vocabulum tam insigne prætermiserit?" Prol. p. 124.

V. 21. Καὶ συνευδοκῶν τῇ ἀναιρέσει αὐτοῦ.] Ita Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab., Vulg. solo renitente; et tamen Millius, "explicatoria τῇ ἀναιρέσει αὐτοῦ alterius loci sunt, nempe cap. viii. 1." Ibid.

V. 29. Καὶ ὅτι ἦν αὐτὸν δεδεκώς.] Ita omnes excepto Æthiop. Et tamen Prol. p. 124, col. 2, "Vereor ut hæc adjecerit scholiastes aliquis ad plenitudinem historiæ."

Cap. xxiii. 9. Si spiritus locutus est ei aut angelus, μὴ θεομαχῶμεν.] Illud μὴ θεομαχῶμεν adscriptum putat Erasmus ex cap. v. 39: et "quidni (inquit Millius hic) et hoc scholion adnotatum putemus ad marginem libri a studioso quopiam, ac cum sensum commodum efficeret, arreptum mox in contextum a librariis?" Habent tamen hæc verba Chrysostomus et Œcumenius, qui pharisæos introducit hæc loquentes, αὐτοῦ ἀποστῶμεν, μὴ αὐτοῦ πολεμοῦντες θεόμαχοι εὑρεθῶμεν, et Arab. et sensus iis sublatis deficit.

V. 30. Ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων——τὰ πρὸς αὐτόν.] Desunt hæc omnia apud Vulg.: agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. Nihilominus, Prol. p. 145, col. 1, "medium ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων, quod est in editis, irrepsit ex v. 27."

V. 35. Ἐκέλευσέ τε αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ πραιτωρίῳ τοῦ Ἡρώδου φυλάσσεσθαι.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes: et tamen Millius, Prol. p. 91, col. 2, "Ego quidem totum hoc pro scholio marginali habeo, quo lector quispiam adauctam voluit hanc historiam."

Cap. xxiv. 15. Ἀνάστασιν μέλλειν ἔσεσθαι νεκρῶν.] Deest νεκρῶν in Vulg. Agnoscunt Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, versiones reliquæ; at judice Millio, "insertum est in editis claritatis gratia," Prol. p. 94, col. 1.

V. 16. Ἀπρόσκοπον συνείδησιν ἔχειν——διαπαντὸς.] Habent τὸ διαπαντὸς Græca scholia et versiones omnes: et tamen Millius Prol. p. 110, col. 1, "Mihi fateor διαπαντός istud vehementer suspectum est παρεμβλήσεως, irrepsisse videtur e margine in locum non idoneum."

V. 18. Τίνες ἀπὸ τῆς Ἀσίας Ἰουδαῖοι.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones universim vel hoc versu vel initio sequentis; et tamen "adscripta fuerint ab aliquo ad marginem ex Act. xxi. 26. 37, explicationis causa, irrepsere demum in textum," Prol. p. 94, col. 2.

Cap. xxv. 16. Χαρίζεσθαί τινα ἄνθρωπον εἰς ἀπώλειαν.] Desunt hæc apud quosdam MSS. cod. Athanasium, Basilium, Theodoretum: "Adjectum jam olim arbitror interpretamenti gratia:" agnoscunt autem Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. respondentque egregie clamoribus Judæorum non oportere eum vivere amplius, cap. xxiv. 24.

Cap. xxvi. 7. Ἐν ἐκτενείᾳ.] Desunt hæc tantum in Vulg. et Æthiop. Nihilominus, Prol. p. 45, col. 2, "commentarius est, non textus, sed qui semel admissus, non mirum si in infinitos postea codices manarit."

Cap. xxvii. 28. Καὶ πάλιν βολίσαντες.] Desunt hæc Vulg. Syr. Habent Chrysostomus, Œcumenius, Arab. suntque necessario intelligenda.

Cap. xxviii. 1. Καὶ διασωθέντες.] Desunt Syr. agnoscunt reliqui omnes: et tamen "lectionarium est ex versu ultimo capitis præcedentis, non Divi Lucæ," Prol. p. 130, col. 1.

V. 16. Ὁ ἑκατόνταρχος παρέδωκε τοὺς δεσμίους τῷ στρατοπεδάρχῃ.] "Desunt hæc verba (ait Millius) Vulg. Syr. Chrysostomo, et tribus MSS." Ergo occurrunt apud reliqua exemplaria omnia, ut et apud Œcumenium et Arabem; "Recte viri docti interpretantur (inquit Grotius) 'præfectum prætorio,' nam a Tiberii temporibus prætorianus miles in castris habitus, teste Tacito Annal. 4: et sub ejus cura fuisse reorum custodias multis ejusdem Taciti locis evincitur;" quid ergo impedit, quo minus hæc Lucas referret, saltem ad indicandam singularem gratiam D. Paulo hic concessam?

V. 29.] Agnoscunt hunc versiculum Græci scholiastæ, interpretesque omnes, a Syro si discesseris. Prol. tamen p.

130, col. 1, "versiculum hunc injectitium videri supra notavimus, p. 91."

LIBRI SECUNDI CAPUT TERTIUM

Examen continet variantium lectionum in epistolas D. Pauli, et in epistolas catholicas.

SECTIO PRIMA—EPISTOLA AD ROMANOS.

Ut ratione, et methodo proposita, procedat susceptum opus, de variantibus in epistolis lectionibus jam dicendum est; et hic jucundum mihi et gratum est, quod exemplaria nostra ab illis Theodoreti, Œcumenii, Theophylacti raro, idque in rebus nullius fere momenti dissideant, neque etiam ab illis Chrysostomi quæ κατ' ἀκρίβειαν scripta sunt, et non κατὰ τὸ αὐτοσχέδιον τῆς λέξεως. Interea tamen mihi perquam molesta fuit frequens illa introductio patrum Latinorum, et versionum quorundam Græcorum patrum in Latinam linguam; quæ quidem parum ponderis et auctoritatis habent. Græcorum quidem testimonia apud Millium parum valent, nam si illi fides adhibenda sit, exemplaria eorum misere depravata erant, atque ipsius, tanquam Œdipodis, judicio opus est, ut a textu glossema, a vera lectione interpolatio, seu scholion marginale, a genuino irreptitium dignoscatur. Errare autem malumus cum Origene, Athanasio, Basilio, Theodoreto, et Œcumenio, quam cum Italis, et sede apostolica, pene dixeram, vera sentire.

In Græcis patribus pervolvandis quarundam ex epistolis tota pene capita totidem verbis quot in textu citata interdum reperimus. Ex. gr. a versu 1 capitis i. ad Rom. ad quam ita legit Origenes, Com. in Joh. p. 55 et p. 266, ita etiam ab 18 ad 24: similiter Greg. Nyssen, tom. ii. p. 734, Basil. tom. ii. p. 632, a 28 ad finem capitis. Non leve hoc indicium est, quod in his locis varians unaquæque lectio nihil aliud sit, quam textus genuini depravatio.

Cap. i. 16. Τὸ εὐαγγέλιον Χριστοῦ.] Deest Χριστοῦ Vulg. Tertul. Ruffino, Hilario Diac. Syr. Æthiop. Retinent Theodoretus, Œcumenius, Theophylactus, et licet a textu Chrysostomi exciderit, cum tamen ita legisse constat ex eo quod mirum illi sit visum apostolum qui alibi dixit, "Glorior in cruce Christi," hic solum dixisse "Non erubesco εὐαγγέλιον Χριστοῦ." Cumque evangelium, de quo loquitur apostolus, Christi pro certo evangelium fuerit, quidni hanc vocem hic adhibuisset pariter ac cap. xv. 19. 29, et ad eundem sensum hic v. 9? Ibid. Ἰουδαίῳ πρῶτον. Τὸ πρῶτον agnoscunt Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. et versiones omnes. Et tamen dicente Millio, ex fide unius Tertulliani, "irrepsit ex aliis locis hujus epistolæ," Prol. p. 46, col. 2.

V. 17. Ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.] Vulg. Hilarius Diac. aliique Latini legunt "vivit." Sed liquet Irenæum, lib. iv. cap. 37, p. 365, legisse "vivit," postquam enim hæc allegasset verba, addit, "Hoc autem quod justus ex fide vivet, per prophetas prædictum fuerat." Ipse Hieronymus, C. Alex. et omnia Gr. scholia legunt ζήσεται, Esthius etiam, spreto hic Vulgato interprete, ait "rectius in futuro vivet," sic enim multi iique meliores habent codices, Græcis etiam Syrisque adstipulantibus; nam et apud prophetam Hab. iii. 4, ipsum futuri temporis verbum habetur. Et LXX. quoque Interpretes futurum reddiderunt, eademque lectio est in Græcis, Gal. iii. 11, et ad Heb. x. 38, quibus locis eadem scriptura citatur.

V. 18. Τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐν ἀδικίᾳ κατεχόντων.] Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Orig. Lat. Pseud-Hieronymus, Latini alii, legunt "veritatem Dei," reclamantibus Græcis omnibus, versionibus orientalibus, et C. Alex. et vero Origene contr. Cels. lib. vi. p. 276. Hic autem nobis odiose obtrudit "Pseud. Hieronymum, sive Pelagium, opus, Usserio judice, posterioris ævi, quod a viro nullius judicii compaginatum fuit," et tamen gratum Millio, quia cum Vulgata, quæ ipsi est in deliciis, multoties consentit.

Cap. ii. 1. Πᾶς ὁ κρίνων.] Ita omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Rutlin. Arab. "πᾶς tamen (inquit Millius) explicatoris alicujus esse puto, non apostoli, ita Syr." Prol. p. 230, col. 1. Syr. autem ibi legit, "Omni excusatione cares, o homo."

V. 5. In die iræ καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως δικαιοκρισίας τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Iren. lib. iv. cap. 71, p. 375, et Syr. legunt cum textu. Omnia autem Gr. scholia cum aliis addunt καὶ ante δικαιοκρισίας· hoc tamen, juxta Grotium, est tantum ἓν διὰ δυοῖν, quod sensum non mutat.

V. 7. Καθ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ.] V. 1. δι' ἔργων ἀγαθῶν, Theophilus Antioc. ed. Paris. lib. i. p. 79. Millii hic me miseret; nam ex septem variantibus lectionibus unicam hanc in lucem profert, reliquas silentio premit, nempe pro κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ legit Theoph. καὶ ἀξίαν τῶν μισθῶν· post ἀγαθοῦ omittit δόξαν καὶ τιμὴν· ante ζωὴν αἰώνιον addit ἐωρήσεται· et denique χαρὰν, εἰρήνην, ἀνάπαυσιν, καὶ πλήθη ἀγαθῶν· pro τοῖς δὲ ἐξ ἐριθείας legit τοῖς δὲ ἀπίστοις, καὶ καταφρονηταῖς, ut reliqua missa faciam. Nec sane constat consilium ei fuisse ut certum aliquem locum allegaret, sed potius ut ex universa scriptura Autolyco statueret ante oculos præmia, quæ bonis tribuet Deus, et pœnas quibus improbos afficiet. Multæ ejusmodo variantes lectiones occurrunt, quæ nomen istud neutiquam merentur: Gr. scholiis omnibus, C. Alex. et Hilario Diac. hic repugnantibus.

V. 17. Ἰδέ.] "Ecce tu Judæus cognominaris," v. 1, εἰ δέ, "si autem," Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Clem. Alex. Stro. i. p. 353, Theophyl. Syr. Sed Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcum. C. Alex. textui adstipulantur; atque hæc, secundum Erasmum, est verior et antiquior lectio; alioquin non satis cohæret ordo: ex v. 31 confirmatur ὁ οὖν διδάσκων, nec enim τῷ οὖν εἰ δὲ, sed ἰδὲ apte respondet.

V. 26. Εἰς περιτομὴν λογισθήσεται.] Hic in textu Chrysostomus legit περιτραπήσεται, et deinde addit οὐκ εἶπε λογισθήσεται, ἀλλὰ τραπήσεται, ὅπερ ἐμφατικώτερον ἦν· aiunt autem Œcumenius et Theophylactus, οὐκ εἶπε τὴν περιτομὴν νικᾷ, ἀλλὰ εἰς περιτομὴν λογισθήσεται, ita enim legunt Theophylactus, Cyril. Alex. to. iii. p. 781, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. et omnes versiones quæ textum ab unico Chrysostomo, sibimetipsi parum constanti, abunde vindicant.

Cap. iii. 2. Πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ ὅτι ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Ita Theodoret. Œcumen. Theophyl. C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. versiones omnes. "Origenis tamen in Catena MSS. (ait Millius) istud perinde interpretatur ac si scriptum esset ὅτι πρῶτον." Idem innuit Com. in Matth. p. 209, dicendo hæc erant λόγια ἃ πρῶτον Ἰουδαίοι ἐπιστεύθησαν, et p. 462, "Vinea illis credita erat, lex et prophetæ προτέροις μὲν τῷ λαῷ ἐκείνῳ, primum quidem populo isti, καὶ γὰρ πρῶτοι ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ, iis enim primum commissa sunt eloquia Dei, δευτέροις δὲ τῇ ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνῶν ἐκκλησίᾳ" sed hinc non sequitur aliquid illum a textu diversum legisse, ut constat ex his verbis in locum, "Quid autem multo sit amplius subjungit:" "Primo, inquit, quia credita sunt illis eloquia Dei, quamvis enim et gentibus nunc creduntur eloquia Dei, sed illis, ait, primo sunt credita." Quod si μὲν γὰρ omittat Chrysost. id nullius momenti est, exhibent enim ea reliqui omnes citati.

V. 9. Προητιασάμεθα.] Ita Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. et versiones orientales: quibus posthabitis, "προητιασάμεθα (inquit Millius) alicujus scholiastæ est," Prol. p. 46, col. 2, αἰτιασάμεθα legendum vult cum Vulg. Hilario Diac. Ger. Clar.

V. 25. Διὰ τῆς πίστεως.] "Deest Alex. Chry. in Com." ita Millius; sed fallitur, Chrysost. ibi id solum dicit, "addidisse apostolum ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ, ut sanguis Christi hostiis Judaicis opponeretur." Cum textu legunt omnia Gr. scholia et versiones antiquæ, inter quas Vulg. Orig. Com. in Matt. p. 285, in Joh. p. 22, et in locum. Hanc ergo levem dissimili tudinem, ut et Θεοῦ pro Ἰησοῦ, commate sequenti, Milliique judicium hic parvi facio, qui Prol. p. 66, col. 1, ait "Illud διὰ πίστεως irrepsisse non dubito."

Cap. iv. 12. Τοῖς οὐκ ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνον.] Theodoret. hic legit οὐ τοῖς, sensu eodem; Chrysost. autem, Œcumenius, Cyril. Al. Glaph. in Gen. p. 66, et Theophyl. legunt cum textu: ex eo autem quod in commentario dicit Theophylact. οὕτως δεῖ ἀναγιῶναι, καὶ πατέρα τῆς περιτομῆς, οὐ τοῖς ἐκ περιτομῆς μόνης, ὁμοιωμένοις αὐτῷ, non magis sequitur eum in textu legisse οὐ τοῖς quam μόνης ὁμοιωμένοις.

V. 19. Οὐ κατενόησε.] "Non consideravit corpus suum emortuum;" vi. 1. d. οὐ, C. Alex. Chrysost. ed. Mor. tom. i. p. 311, Theodoret. ὡς κατενόησε, sed Chrysost. Œcum. Theophyl. in locum, Basil. to. ii. p. 418, Vulg. Hilarius Diac. retinent οὐ. Altera etiam lectio sensum non mutat, cum unicum hoc significet, quod licet Abraham consideravit corpus suum mortuum, et emortuam vulvam Saræ, non tamen infirmatus sit fide.

V. 20. Οὐ διεκρίθη τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ.] Ita legunt omnia Gr scholia, Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Syr. Arab. et C. Alex. Est, tamen, dicente Millio, ex fide Æthiop. τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ arreptum de margine, Prol. p. 124, col. 2.

Cap. v. 1. Εἰρήνην ἔχωμεν.] Agnosco hic omnia Gr. scholia legisse ἔχομεν, Vulg. Hilarium Diac. et quosdam Latinos "habeamus:" sed monente, Erasmo, in plerisque Græcorum codicibus scriptum habetur ἔχομεν, et sensus hic non patitur imperandi modum (nisi ἔχωμεν reddas, "retineamus," quam significationem obtinet, Hebr. xii. 28, aliisque in locis) apostolus siquidem loquitur de justificatis per fidem qui pacem jam habent cum Deo, et subsequentia "per Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum" eundem sensum plane indicant; "Justificatis enim ex fide in Christum," recte dicit apostolus, "pacem habemus per fidem in Christo," parum recte autem dixisset, "habeamus" per eum pacem illam, quæ iis a longo jam tempore acquisita fuit.

V. 2. Τῇ πίστει.] Deest Æth. MSS. quibusdam, Hilario D. Sed extant verba hæc in omnibus Gr. scholiis, Vulg. Arab. Syr.: "est tamen (judice Millio) commentarius importune satis intrusus in textum," Prol. p. 46, col. 1.

V. 5. Τοῦ δοθέντος ἡμῖν.] Ita Gr. scholia, versiones omnes, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac.: "et tamen (dicente Millio) τοῦ δοθέντος ἡμῖν assumentum ex fide Vulg. nescio cujus," Prol. p. 46, col. 2.

V. 12. Ὁ θάνατος διῆλθεν.] Ὁ θάνατος hic occurrit vel ante vel post διῆλθεν apud Gr. scholia, et versiones universim, et C. Alex.; ex fide tamen Ruffini, et Hilarii Diac. "irrepsit ex priore parte versiculi," Prol. p. 46, col. 1.

V. 17. Καὶ τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς δικαιοσύνης.] Deest τῆς δωρεᾶς, Iren. lib. iii. cap. 18, p. 242, Orig. Com. in Joh. p. 334, August. lib. i. de Bapt. cap. 13: sed omnes versiones, et Gr. scholia, C. Alex. et Hilarius Diac. hanc vocem retinent, quam tametsi Origenes loco dicto omittat, ait tamen p. 338, clam Judæos fuit, ὅτι οἱ τὴν περισσείαν τῆς χάριτος, καὶ τῆς δωρεᾶς λαμβάνοντες βασιλεύσουσι, διὰ τοῦ ἑνὸς Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Irenæum et Origenem non legisse, ait Grabius, forte quod hæ duæ voces ob recurrentem particulam τῆς per negligentiam scribæ omissæ essent. Asserit quidem Millius "Origenem legisse βασιλεύουσι," sed emendatur hæc lectio p. 338; et marg. 334, adscribitur γὰρ βασιλεύσουσι, quod in Chrysostomo etiam potuit reperire Millius, si commentarium illius diligentius excussisset, ubi in clausula ἐν ζωῇ βασιλεύσουσι, usque adeo in citationibus suis dormitat Millius, sicut etiam Prol. p. 46, ubi "τῆς δωρεᾶς irrepsisse" ait.

Cap. vi. 4. Διὰ τῆς δόξης τοῦ πατρός.] Desunt hæc Iren. lib. iii. cap. 18, Tertul. de Resur. 47. In textu autem retinent omnes cod. MSS. Gr. scholia, versiones, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac.: Prol. tamen p. 74, cap. 2, "διὰ δόξης τοῦ πατρὸς scholiastæ est, non apostoli."

V. 10. Ὁ γὰρ ἀπέθανε, τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἀπέθανε, et τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἡμῶν.] Orig. in Matt. p. 417: ita Millius; textum tamen ipsum exhibet Origenes, Com. in Joh. p. 11. Hypostigme postea ad vocem ἁμαρτίᾳ, et p. 204, et lib. ii. contra Cels. p. 102, immo eodem in loco et linea immediate sequenti rationem affert quare dum loqueretur de remissione peccatorum facta per Christi baptisma addidisset ἡμῶν, viz. διόπερ ὁ ἀπέθανε τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ ἡμῶν, ἐπεὶ αὐτὸς ἀπέθανε τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ οὐ τοῦ ἑαυτοῦ, ἀλλὰ τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ. Crebras ejusmodi a Millio citationes, ut res postulat, invitus refero. Porro Prol. p. 124, col. 2, hæc habet, "τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, quod in cæteris fere omnibus (excepta Æthiop.) irrepsisse ex hujus cap. v. 2, omnino suspicor:" ex suspicionibus tam iniquis tota scripturæ fides periclitatur.

V. 12. Non ergo regnet peccatum in vestro mortali corpore εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν αὐτῇ ἐν ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις αὐτοῦ.] Verba subnotata desunt Iren. lib. v. cap. 14, p. 421, Tertul. de Resur. cap. 47. Retinent autem ea Orig. περὶ Εὐχῆς, p. 79, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. Gr. scholia, versionesque ad unum omnes; perperam igitur Millius hæc veluti commentarium rejicit, non textum, Prol. p. 46, col. 2. p. 66, col. 1.

V. 16. Ἦτοι ἁμαρτίας εἰς θάνατον.] Εἰς θάνατον agnoscunt Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. D. Syr. Clar.: "unde adjectum videtur (inquit Millius) antitheseos causa," Prol. p. 46, col. 1.

V. 23. Ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν.] Ita Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Syr. Arab.; sed quoniam apud Æthiop. desunt hæc, Millio videntur esse veteris cujusdam adnotatoris: Prol. p. 124, col. 2.

Cap. vii. 2. Ἀνδρὶ δέδεται νόμῳ.] Fatemur Origenem, in Matt. p. 268, legisse ὅντι νόμῳ, sed Gr. scholia, et vetustæ versiones, C. Alex. Hilarius D. lectionem textus sequuntur.

Cap. viii. 1. Τοῖς μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσι ἀλλὰ κατὰ Πνεῦμα.] Desunt hæc Dial. contra Marcion. p. 146, Athanas. Ep. ad Serap. p. 18. Existimo autem verba ista eos missa fecisse ex more perusitato patrum, qui quicquid instituto suo alienum est, silentio transeunt; prima enim pars eorum occurrit apud omnia Gr. scholia, Hilarium D. et vetustissimas versiones, atque apud Cod. Alex. quocum Athanasius arch. Al. plerumque conspirat. Postrema pars etiam reperitur apud Theodoretum, Œcum. Theophylactum, et Arab. Retinendum esse autem constat ex mutua inter se verborum connexione ad hunc modum: "Nihil damnationis est iis qui ambulant κατὰ τὸ Πνεῦμα· ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ Πνεύματος liberavit me, et omnes qui sunt in Christo Jesu, a lege peccati, qua ad mortem fuimus damnati."

Cap. ix. 10. Ῥέβεκκα ἐξ ἑνὸς κοίτην ἔχουσα Ἰσαάκ.] "Ex uno concubitu," patres Latini aliqui. Hæc, et plura hujusmodi non tam dicenda sunt variantes lectiones, quam Græci sermonis interpretationes. Rectius reddas, "Ex uno Isaac concubitum habens," i. e. copulationem: κοίτη enim hoc sæpius significat, Lev. xviii. 20. xxx. 13. Numb. xxxi. 17, 18; vel "semen habens," adstipulantibus Œcumenio et Lev. xviii. 23. Numb. v. 2. 20: sæpissime autem occurrit κοίτη σπέρματος.

V. 18. Ὃν θέλει σκληρύνει.] Agnoscunt τὸ θέλει Gr. scholia omnia, Origenes in Ex. ed. Huet. p. 22, C. Alex. Hilarius Di. versiones omnes: censet tamen Millius irrepsisse ex margine explicationis gratia, Prol. p. 156, col. 2.

V. 24. Οὓς καὶ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς.] Τὸ ἡμᾶς habent C. Alex. Hilarius D. Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes. Male ergo Erasmus additum censet explicationis gratia.

V. 28. Λόγου γὰρ συντελῶν καὶ συντέμνων ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ ὅτι, λόγον συντετμένον ποιήσει ὁ Κύριος ἐπὶ γῆς.] Legendum vult Millius λόγων συντελῶν καὶ συντέμνων ποιῶσει ὁ Κύριος, mediis intermissis; quum vero textus exhibeat ipsissima verba τῶν LXX. Interpr., approbantibus Chrysostom. Œcum. Theophylacto, Vulg. Arab. Hieron. Hilario Di., ne uno commentatore, in quantum scio, partem adversam defendente, Millii sententia et lectio respuendæ jure optimo videntur.

Cap. x. 1. Ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ.] Chrysost. Vulg. Ruffin. Hilarius D. legunt αὐτῶν, quod idem significat ac τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ ratione sc. habita ad Israel, de quo mentio cap. ix. 31: unde Chrysostomus in Ps. xlviii. ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 270, ὁ Παῦλος περὶ Ἰουδαίων ἐδρήνει λέγων ἡ δέησις ἡ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν περὶ αὐτῶν ἐστιν εἰς σωτηρίαν. Sed Theodoretus et Œcumenius tum in textu, tum in commentario legunt ὑπὲρ Ἰσραήλ.

V. 5. Τὴν ἐκαιοσύνην τὴν ἐκ τοῦ νόμου.] Totum illud omittit Æthiop.: habent autem Gr. scholia Hilarius D. versiones, "sed inseruit quispiam," Prol. p. 141, col. 1. Mirum certe est, si in libros omnes istos inseruisset.

Ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς.] "Deest αὐτὰ Chrysost:" ita Millius; sed reperies tam in Chrysostomo quam in cæteris Gr. scholiis, et in Hilario Di., sicut etiam ἐν αὐτοῖς quæ desunt in solo Vulgato, iisque Latinis qui Vulgati vestigia premunt. Erratur etiam in testimonio Clem. Al.: non enim verba hujus epistolæ citat Stro. ii. p. 281, sed ille Lev. xviii. 5, ad hunc modum, ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς· non esse mutandum ἐν ἑαυτοῖς in ἐν ἑαυτῇ, suadent Clem. Al. versio τῶν LXX. omniaque Græcorum scholia, contra Millium, Prol. p. 129, col. 1.

Cap. xi. 13. Τὴν διακονίαν μου ἐοξάζω.] Vulg. Ruffin. Hilarius Diaconus, videntur legisse ἐοξάσω· sed omnia Gr. scholia, C. Al. legunt cum textu in præsenti tempore, quod est ad scopum apostoli accommodatius, Millio incassum renitente.

V. 21. Μήπως οὐδὲ σου φείσηται.] Non diffitemur Chrysostomum et Theodoretum legisse φείσεται. Vulg. "parcat." Sed Œcumenius, Theophylact, C. Alex. habent φείσηται pro σωθήσεται, v. 26. Vulg. Hilarius, et Arab. legunt "salvus fieret" σωθήσηται· sed Iren. lib. iv. cap. 5, p. 278, "salvabitur." Orig. in Matt. p. 360, in Jer. p. 74, et omnia Gr. scholia, legunt σωθήσηται.

V. 30. Ὥσπερ καὶ ὑμεῖς.] Deest καὶ apud Chrys. et Theophylact.; habent Theodoret. Œcum. C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab. atque hic καὶ ὑμεῖς proprie significat vox etiam Anglice, "even you," vel "you also."

V. 32. Conclusit Deus τοὺς πάντας.] Vulg. Ruffinus, Hilarius D. Hieron. legunt τὰ πάντα, forte quoniam ita se habet Gal. iii. 22. Sed Gr. scholia legunt τοὺς πάντας· utraque lectio eundem sensum exprimit, hominibus enim tantum hæc gratia concessa est.

Cap. xii. 3. Dico enim διὰ τῆς χάριτος τῆς δοθείσης μοι.] Ita legunt Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Syr. Arab. "Sed tamen quia in vers. Æthiopica desunt verba subnotata, τῆς δοθείσης μοι adjecta censuerim ex 1 Cor. iii. 10." Prol. p. 124, col. 2. Porro Millius hic verba Chrysostomi sic exhibet, οὐκ εἶπε, διὰ τῆς σοφίας, διὰ τῆς νομοθεσίας, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ, Chrysost. ut nempe faveret lectioni Æthiop. et Theophylacti διὰ τῆς χάριτος Θεοῦ· verba tamen Chrysostomi hæc sunt, οὐκ εἶπε λέγω γὰρ ὑμῖν διὰ τῆς σοφίας τοῦ Θεοῦ, διὰ τῆς νομοθεσίας τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς χάριτος, ubi Θεοῦ cum apostolo relinquit intelligendum; non prout Millius, apposuit.

Cap. xiii. 1, 2.] Omnes variantes lectiones ab A. ad I. refutantur a pleno consensu omnium Gr. scholiorum, et Origenis ipsissima textus verba exhibentium; quamvis enim Hilarius Diac. et Iren. Lat. legerint, "Omnibus potestatibus superioribus subditi estote," Grabius, not. in Iren. lib. v. cap. 24, hæc habet, "Non ab ipsius Irenæi manu, sed interpretis hæc lectio profluxisse videtur." Orig. C. Alex. August. tom. x. de Verbis Dom. serm. 6, Syr. Arab. Gr. scholia omnia legunt πᾶσα ψυχὴ ὑποτασσέσθω. (2.) Chrysostomus (inquit) et Œcum. legunt ὑπὸ, non ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ. Œcum. tamen, Origenes, Theodoret. Theophylact. omnes versiones, et Latini omnes legunt "a Deo." Chrysost. cum apostolo, aliquando ἀπὸ, aliquando ὑπὸ. (3.) Dicit "Origenem Com. in Rom. omisisse hæc verba, αἱ δὲ οὖσαι ἐξουσίαι ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι εἰσιν." Stat contra Orig. contra Cels. lib. viii. p. 421, ubi postquam citasset hæc ipsa verba, continuo addit, ἐν μὲν τοίγε τοῖς πρὸς τὴν εἰς Ῥωμαίους ἐξηγητικοῖς, ὡς δυνατὸν ἦν ὑμῖν ἐπὶ πλεῖον, καὶ ταῦτα τὰ ῥήματα ποικίλως ἐξετάσαμεν. Extant etiam apud Iren. C. Alex. apud Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes: nihil igitur est causæ, cur adjectum ab interprete quodam censeret Erasmus. Denique cum dicit "τὸ ἐξουσίαι deesse apud Vul. Hilarium D. August. Æthiop. Orig." in Origene fallitur. Retinent etiam Gr. scholia omnia, Syr. Arab. præponderant Latinis legentibus, "Quæ autem sunt, a Deo subordinatæ sunt," ubi vox "potestates," quæ in priori parte commatis agnoscitur, necessario subintelligenda est: tamen Prol. p. 134, col. 2, "medium ἐξουσίας irrepsit ex priori parte versiculi."

V. 9. Οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις.] Deest MSS. plurimis, Hilario Diac. C. Alex. Theodoreto, Basil. tom. ii. p. 471. Sed retinent Iren. lib. iv. cap. 26, p. 313, Chrysost. Œcum. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. Porro usitatissimum apud patres est in notissimis rebus, iis præsertim, quas verba sequentia (et si quod aliud mandatum est) satis indicant, mutila quædam exhibere, et quasi decurtata. V. g. Orig. in Matt. p. 380, Clem. Alex. Strom. p. 478, ita hunc textum citant, οὐ φονεύσεις, οὐ μοιχεύσεις, οὐ κλέψεις, cætera desunt. Et p. 381, Origenes allegat unicum hoc οὐ φονεύσεις, καὶ εἴ τις ἑτέρα ἐντολή, et Theodoretus in commentario prætermittit οὐκ ἐπισυμήσεις.

V. 13. Μὴ κώμοις.] Syr. Arab. "non cantu," quod non est varians lectio, sed explicatio vocis, ita enim Phavorinus et scholiastes Aristoph. κῶμοι, ἀσελγῆ ᾄσματα πορνικὰ, συμποσιακοὶ ᾠδαὶ, ὀργήσεις κατὰ μέθης· vide apud Aristoph. p. 162, 708, 772, ubi scholiastes observat hos cantus compositos fuisse εἰς δαιμόνων τιμήν.

Cap. xiv. 6. Καὶ ὁ μὴ φρονῶν τὴν ἡμέραν, Κυρίῳ οὐ φρονεῖ.] Parum refert Latinos omnes hæc omisisse, cum retineant Basil. tom. ii. p. 456, et Gr. scholia, vide Prol. p. 125, col. 1.

V. 9. Εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανε, καὶ ἀνέστη, καὶ ἀνέζησεν.] Ἀνέστη suspectum habet Esthius occupati loci alieni, sed immerito; reperias enim vocem illam apud Iren. lib. ii. cap. 20, p. 245, Orig. in Joh. p. 126, 317, et contra Cels. lib. ii. p. 110; apud Hilarium D. Gr. Arab. Gr. scholia omnia, ne Chrys. quidem excepto, apostolus addit vocem, ἀνέζησεν vel ἔζησεν, ut respondeat voci ζώντων, et vocem ἀπέθανε ut respondeat voci νεκρῶν, atque hinc fortasse fuit quod has solas explicavit Chrysost. Rejicit tamen hanc lectionem Mill. Proleg. p. 72, col. 1.

V. 21. Ἢ σκανδαλίζεται, ἢ ἀσθενεῖ.] Habent hæc Gr. scholia omnia, Hilarius D. Vulg. Arab. Est tamen, juxta Millium, hoc scholion marginale, quod scriba aliquis in corpus epistolæ transmisit: Prol. p. 123, col. 1.

V. 22. Ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Desunt hæc marg. Chrysost. Habent Theodoret. Œcum. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Hilarius Diac. C. Alex.

Cap. xv. 4. Ὅσα γὰρ προεγράφη.] Hanc lectionem retinent omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. et postulat ipsa mens sensusque apostoli; loquitur enim de s. scriptura Vet. Testamenti: dicente autem Millio, Prol. p. 135, col. 1, "mutavit quispiam simplex ἐγράφη in προεγράφη."

V. 12. Πάλιν.] Deest Æth. Chrysost. Habent reliquæ versiones, et scholia, et C. Alex.: et tamen Prol. p. 124, col. 1, medium "πάλιν insertum videtur ex superioribus."

V. 13. Ἐν τῷ πιστεύειν.] Desunt hæc Clar. Ger.: agnoscunt Gr. scholia omnia C. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Arab. "Vereor tamen (ait Millius, Prol. p. 135), ne sit scholion."

V. 14. Ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ μετοί ἐστε τῆς ἁγιωσύνης.] Ita Gr scholia omnia, Cod. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Syr.: sed quia καὶ αὐτοὶ deesse videntur Arab. Æthiop. "media καὶ αὐτοὶ (inquit Millius, Proleg. p. 135), adscripta puto ad marginem, indeque irrepsisse in corpus libri."

V. 19. Ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος Θεοῦ.] Millius, p. 46, "Θεοῦ studiosi alicujus est," sed agnoscunt Gr. scholia omnia, et versiones orientales.

V. 24. Ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς.] Desunt hæc Chrysost. Vulg. et Latinos qui Vulgatum sequuntur. Explicantur a Theodoreto, Œcum. Theophylacto, atque ideo solum omitti videntur, quia providentia Dei iter illud intervertit. Vide annotata nostra in locum.

V. 27. Εὐδόκησαν γάρ.] Desunt hæc apud Hilarium, et duo MSS. Agnoscunt Gr. scholia, Vulg. Syr. Arab.: ait tamen Millius, "Repetitum omnino fuisse suspicor ex versu præcedente," Prol. p. 135, col. 1.

V. 29. Τοῦ εὐαγγελίου.] Deest in Clem. Alex. Hilar. Diac. Cod. Alex.: interpretantur tamen hanc vocem, Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. Proleg. p. 60, "Commentarius est, non textus."

Cap. xvi. 5. Ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀσίας.] V. 1. τῆς Ἀχαΐας, recte. Vide com. nostra in locum.

V. 6. Quæ multum laboravit εἰς ἡμᾶς.] V. 1. ὑμᾶς, quam lectionem ut firmaret, adducit testimonium Chrysost. hic, et Prol. p. 104, Theophylacti, sed utriusque perperam: etsi enim Chrysost. in textu legit ὑμᾶς, in commentario habet ἡμᾶς, quam vocem exponit de labore a Maria suscepto πρὸς τοὺς ἀποστόλους· Theophylact. ed. Ox. non modo legit ἡμας in textu (sicut etiam Theodoretus et Œcum. sed etiam addit, laborasse illam εἰς ἡμᾶς ἀποστόλων πληροῦσα τάξιν.)

V. 16. Ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς αἱ ἐκκλησίαι.] V. 1. add. πᾶσαι, ita Theodoretus, Vulg. et e Latinis plurimi, sc. omnium illorum locorum ecclesiæ, i. e. paucæ ecclesiæ, vel fortasse unica: rectius ergo omittunt Chrysost. Œcum. Theophylactus.

V. 18. Καὶ εὐλογίας.] Desunt hæc in 4 MSS. Agnoscunt Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. et versiones omnes: habet tamen Millius, τὸ εὐλογίας pro interpretamento marginale τῆς χρηστολογίας, Prol. p. 135, col. 1.

SECTIO SECUNDA—EPISTOLA PRIMA AD CORINTHIOS.

Cap. i. 1. Παῦλος κλητός.] Deest κλητὸς in tribus MSS. Agnoscunt ergo reliqui, pariter ac Gr. scholia, Hilarius Diac. et versiones antiquæ: et licet non nominatim præfigitur cæteris epistolis, hunc tamen quasi proprium locum sibi vindicat, propterea quod scribit jam ad eos qui de ipsius apostolatu paululum dubitasse videbantur. Hinc est quod ipse ad hunc modum loquitur de seipso, "Ego plantavi vos," iii. 6, "In Christo Jesu per evangelium ego vos genui," iv. 15, "Nonne opus meum vos estis in Domino?" ix. 1. Præterea voce κλητὸς utitur Paulus ad Rom. i. 6, 7. Unde Millius, Prol. p. 135, "Medium κλητὸς insertum videtur jam olim ex primis verbis præcedentis epistolæ."

V. 18. Τοῖς μὲν ἀπολλυμένοις——σῳζομένοις δὲ ἡμῖν.] Ita Hilarius Diac. scholia Gr. et versiones omnes, et C. Alex.: Millio tamen μὲν et ἡμῖν videntur injectitia, fide nescio cujus Vulgati, Prol. p. 46, col. 2.

V. 28. Καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα.] V. 1. deest καὶ. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes, Orig. Com. in Matt. p. 258, 374. Contra Cels. lib. iii. p. 140. Quia tamen in Hilario Diac. deest, "lectoris alicujus esse videtur, non apostoli," Prol. p. 164, col. 2.

Cap. ii. 4. Καὶ δυνάμεως.] Omittit Æthiop. Agnoscunt Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, C. Alex. Hilarius Diac. Orig. lib. i. contra Cels. p. 5, in Joh. p. 10 et 88, in Matt. p. 354. Millio ergo dicenti, Prol. p. 124, "Adjectum credibilo est," deest parum.

V. 13. Ἐν διδακτοῖς Πνεύματος ἁγίου.] Deest ἁγίου apud Clem. Al. p. 557, Origenem in Matt. p. 353, 381, et Philoc. p. 27. Millio ergo adjectum videtur Prol. p. 60. Occurrit vero apud omnia Gr. scholia, et constat quod Spiritus quater in hoc capite vocatur Spiritus Dei, nempe com. 10—12. 14. Et tametsi dicat Millius defuisse τοῦ Θεοῦ apud Iren. p. 38, et Clem. Al. p. 557, et Chrysostomum, adeoque addititium esse, Prol. p. 70, lectoris alicujus esse, non apostoli, p. 46, legas tamen Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ hic in Clem. Al. Stro. i. p. 297, Orig. in Jer. hom. 12, p. 117, in Joh. p. 68, C. Alex. Hilario Diac. Theodoreto, Œcum. et Theophylacto, Vulg. Arab. atque adeo frustra rejicitur.

Cap. iii. 3. Καὶ διχοστασίαι.] Deest in 3 MSS. Vulg. Æthiop. Clem. Al. Stro. v. p. 558, add. Cod. Alex. Orig. in Cels. lib. iii. p. 140. Unde Millius dicit irrepsisse e margine, Prol. p. 94, col. 2. Agnoscunt tamen hanc vocem omnia Gr. scholia, Iren. Gr. lib. iv. cap. 75, p. 379, Basilius tom. ii. p. 395, Syr. et Arab.

Cap. iv. 14. Ὡς τέκνα μου ἀγαπητὰ νουθετῶ.] MSS. cod. quidam, C. Alex. νουθετῶν. "Recte (inquit Grotius) ut cohæreat cum illo ὡς," at male, si Hilario D. Gr. scholiis, et versionibus cunctis major sit adhibenda fides.

Cap. v. 1. Οὐκ ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσι ὀνομάζεται.] Deest ὀνομάζεται in sex MSS. Epiphanio, p. 706, Tertul. de Pud. cap. 14, Hilario D. cæterisque Latinis, qui Vulgatum præferunt. Agnoscunt autem C. Alex. Syr. Arab. omnia Gr. scholia, explicantque fusius tanquam verbum insigne et ἐμφατικώτατον. παρ' ἐκείνοις οὐ μόνον οὐ τολμᾶταί τι τοιοῦτο, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ὀνομάζεται.

V. 3. Τὸν οὕτω τοῦτο κατεργασάμενον ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου, &c.] Sic codices nonnulli testibus Chrysostomo et Œcumenio, ὑποστίξαντες ad vocem Χριστοῦ, ut intelligatur ὁ εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐνυβρίσας· sed sicut hanc expositionem improbat Chrysostomus, ita insulsum, et pene ridiculum est dicere aliquem aliquid operatum fuisse mali in nomine Domini nostri, Jesu Christi.

V. 4. Χριστοῦ.] Deest in Vulg. Æthiop. sed retinetur apud Græca scholia, Orig. in Jer. p. 119, Syr. Arab.—Prol. tamen p. 69, col. 2, "addititium est."

V. 6. Οὐ καλὸν τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν.] Ita uno ore omnia Gr. scholia, et versiones, C. Alex. et Hilarius Diac.: "Sicut autem omittunt negationem, et Latini quidam, sic nullus dubito apostoli ipsius exemplar." Ita Millius Prol. p. 46, col. 2, qui, argumento vix rationis speciem habente motus, hoc "frigidum" vocat.

Μικρὰ ζύμη ὅλον τὸ φύραμα ζυμοῖ.] V. l. φθείρει. Sed δολοῖ germanam esse lectionem acriter contendit Millius. Rectius autem Cotelerius de hoc textu sic: "Certum est antiquissima exemplaria cum ab interpretibus et patribus tractata, tum quæ ad nos usque pervenerunt, habuisse aut habere, aut φθείρει, aut ζυμοῖ, aut δολοῖ. Irenæus videtur legisse φθείρει, ait enim 'corrumpit,' lib. iv. cap. 46, sic Vulg. illiusque fautores Apostolicæ Constitutiones δολοῖ. Sed adnotatur in margine Anastasium legisse ζυμοῖ in locum. Lectiones posthac in usu quotidiano erant vel φθείρει, vel ζυμοῖ, ut apparet ex epistola Michaelis Cerul. ad Petrum Antioch. scripta postquam orta fuit controversia inter occidentalem et orientalem ecclesiam de pane fermentato, viz. καλῶς δὲ, καὶ τὸ ἀποστολικὸν ἐκεῖνο ῥητὸν λαμβάνοντες τὸ φασκόν, μικρὰ ζύμη ὅλον τὸ φύραμα ζυμοῖ, οὕτως ἐκεῖνο γεγραμμένον ἔχουσι——φθείρει. Illum vero ζυμοῖ jure optimo alteri eum anteposuisse exinde liquet, quod hæc sit lectio ipsius apostoli Gal. v. 9, atque hic et illic orientales versiones, C. Alex. et Gr. scholia omnia retinent τὸ ζυμοῖ, ne ulla quidem alterius cujuscunque lectionis mentione facta; præterea hæc lectio innititur testimonio Hieronymi, quod plus valet quam Latinorum, qui φθείρει potius quam δολοῖ interpretantur. Is enim non solum in versione suu utitur voce "fermentat," Gal. v. 9, sed etiam addit "Male in nostris codicibus habetur corrumpit, et sensum potius interpres suum quam apostoli verba transtulit." Non leve firmamentum lectioni huic addit Buxtorfius, qui apud Hebræos de originali corruptione loquens, vetus esse adagium ait "fermentum in massa," sicut enim parum fermenti fermentat ingentem massam, eamque corrumpit, ita concupiscentia mala totum corrumpit hominem: Floril. Hebr. p. 43, Notandum denique quod Prol. p. 46, 47, Iren. Tertul. Basil. M. nempe Lat. tom. ii. p. 631, Hilarius Diac. Lucifer Calarit. Pelagius, omnes Latini qui legunt "corrumpit" (i. e. φθείρει), producti sunt tamen ac si certo legissent δολοῖ.

V. 7. Ἐκκαθάρατε οὖν.] V. l. deest οὖν in MSS. multis, Vulg. et Hilario D. Chrysost. Œcum. Agnoscunt autem Theodoretus et Theophylactus: ita etiam, ait Esthius, quædam vetustissima Latina exemplaria plerisque Græcis suffragantibus, illationis omittendæ fuit causa quod sine ea legeretur hæc scriptura in s. paschali officio: cæterum optime quadrat hæc illativa particula.

Ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.] "Explicatio est," Mill. Prol. p. 72. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia omnia, Syr. Arab. Deest in Vulg. teste Erasmo, reclamantibus libris omnibus nostris, quibus in hac parte, ut dicam ingenue, magis accedo.

V. 8. Ἀλλ' ἐν ἀζύμοις εἰλικρινείας, καὶ ἀληθείας.] Desunt hæc apud Æthiop. Habent Hilarius Diac. Hieron. lib. i. contra Pelag. f. 97, Orig. in Jer. p. 143, in Matt. p. 270, in Joh. p. 163, 372, in Hom. in Num. decies, Græca scholia, et reliquæ versiones. Hac tamen sola auctoritate fretus, "adjecta (ait Millius) jam olim opinor quæ in nostris omnibus," Prol. p. 124, col. 2.

Cap. vi. 5. Οὐκ ἔστιν——σοφὸς, οὐδὲ εἷς.] Prol. p. 135, col. 1, "interjectum est οὐδὲ εἷς jam olim emphaseos causa," ex Æthiop. solius auctoritate, repugnantibus Gr. scholiis omnibus, et Cod. Alex. immo Vulgato, Hilario D. et Latinis omnibus legentibus "Nonne est inter vos sapiens quispiam?" Hac confidentia videtur mihi Millius labefactare loca pene omnia, in quibus divinitas Christi contra Photinianos adstruitur; ii enim, pari de causa, nempe codice uno vel altero aliud legente, dicere possunt "Hæc vel illa addita esse jam olim emphaseos causa."

V. 8. Καὶ ταῦτα ἀδελφοῦς.] C. Alex. cum aliis legit τοῦτο, ταῦτα omittit Clem. Al. (si Millio fides) scholia autem Græca universim, Vulg. Hilarius D. legunt cum textu; Prol. tamen p. 60, col. 2, hæc habet, "Vix aut ne vix est quin lectionem hanc genuinam esse censeam esse unius nostri, quod video Clementis." O quam pulchrum est habere nasum criticum! defuit is, Millio hic fatente, Græcis omnibus, et Latinis; nec minus absona sunt quæ sequuntur, "Eis verbis inserta est emphatica particula, varia tamen, quod indicium παρεμβλήσεως in al. τοῦτο, in aliis ταῦτα·" quorsum enim tot variantes lectiones congessit, si varia lectio sit certum παρεμβλήσεως indicium?

V. 19. Οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι τὸ σῶμα ὑμῶν.] V. l. τὰ σώματα, C. Alex. Vulg. Hilarius D. Theophylactus. Sed Origen. contra Cels. lib. iv. p. 177, Chrysostomus, Theodoretus, Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. legunt σῶμα. Et quanquam idem sit utriusque sensus, lectionem in textu lectioni Vulg. anteponit Esthius, "quod (inquit) in pluribus est Græcis τὸ σῶμα 'corpus,' congruit cum eo quod proxime præcessit, 'eum qui fornicatur, peccare in corpus suum.'"

V. 20. Δοξάσατε δὲ τὸν Θεὸν.] Vulg. Hilarius D. Tertullianus, Cyprianus, Chrysostom. August. legunt καὶ ἄρατε, "Glorificate, et portate Deum:" ita Millius. Sed observandum hic primo Vulg. Hilarium D. Tertullianum, Cyprianum hic legere, "Empti estis pretio magno," refragantibus Græcis scholiis, C. Alex. et versionibus orientalibus universis: Chrysostomus hic habet ἄρα τε· lege, ait Danæus, δὴ ἄρα. Idem ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 370, in Ps. cxii. et Ps. cxlv., legit δοξάσατε δὴ τὸν Θεόν. Irenæus, lib. v. cap. 13, p. 419, legit solummodo "Glorificate Deum in corpore vestro:" et similiter August. de Trin. lib. ii. cap. 13, tom. iii. p. 273. Quibuscum consentiunt Græca scholia, versiones orientales, C. Alex. Cyril. Al. de Recta Fide, p. 63. Pergit sic Millius, Prol. p. 153, col. 1, "Sequentia καὶ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι ὑμῶν ἅτινά ἐστι τοῦ Θεοῦ, non occurrunt in Alex. aliisque probatioribus cod. uti neque apud Epiphan. Euthal. Vulg. Æthiop." Ea tamen agnoscunt Græca scholia omnia, Syr. et Arab. et "sensum (inquit Esthius) clarum exhibent, iisque admonemur glorificare Deum in utroque et corpore et in spiritu, quia utrumque Dei est, atque proinde utrumque suo famulari debet auctori et Domino. Respicit enim ad illud, 'Pretio empti estis, et non estis vestri,' estque tacita probatio a partibus, 'Corpus vestrum, et spiritus vester Dei est, ergo non estis vestri; immo utrumque pretio emptum est, utroque igitur glorificandus est Deus.'"

Cap. vii. 3. Ὀφειλομένην εὐνοίαν.] V. l. ὀφειλομένην τιμὴν hic Chrysost.: sed tom. v. ed. Mor. p. 279, legit cum textu ὀφειλήν, Orig. in Matt. p. 363, Vulg. Hilarius D. e Latinis alii; sed Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylact. Syr. Arab. textui assentiunt. Utriusque lectionis eadem est interpretatio.

V. 5. Τῇ νηστείᾳ, καὶ προσευχῇ.] Desunt τῇ νηστείᾳ καὶ, in Orig. Clem. Al. Cyprian. Hieron.: sed agnoscunt Syr.

Arab. Gr. scholia, Cod. Alex.: et cum Chrysost. et Theophylact. de extraordinaria precatione in commentariis suis loquantur, aperte satis indicant jejunium simul adhibendum esse, quod plerumque talem precationem comitatur; idcirco ut probaret Chrysostomus quod διὰ τῆ νηστεία τὴν προσευχὴν συνέζευξεν ἡ γραφὴ, hæc ipsissima verba adducit, ἵνα σχολάζητε τῇ νηστείᾳ, καὶ τῇ προσευχῇ. Com. in Ps. cxlv. ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 829.

V. 34. Μεμέρισται ἡ γυνὴ, καὶ ἡ παρθένος.] Ita Græca scholia omnia, C. Alex. Basil. tom. i. p. 635, tom. ii. p. 499, Theodoret. Hær. Fab. p. 306. Nota etiam, Hieronymo adversarium pulsanti non esse nimium fidendum; in polemicis enim est magis sollicitus de victoria, quam de veritate: aliter enim in hoc loco legit, lib. i. contra Helvid. f. 6, ubi hæc habet, "'Divisa est mulier et virgo,' quid oblatras, quid repugnas? Vas electionis hæc loquitur, 'Divisa est (dicens) mulier, et virgo.'" Aliter autem lib. i. contra Jovin. f. 20, ubi sic legimus, "Nunc illud breviter admoneo in Latinis codicibus sic legi, 'Divisa est virgo et mulier,' quod non est apostolicæ veritatis; siquidem apostolus ita scripsit, 'Solicitus est vir quæ sunt mundi, quomodo placeat uxori, et divisus est,' et hac sententia definita, transgreditur ad virgines, et continentes, et ait 'Mulier innupta, et virgo.'"

V. 39. Γυνὴ δέδεται νόμῳ.] Orig. in Matt. 358, 363, 364, plurimique e Latinis omittunt νόμῳ. Sed Vulg. Hilarius D. Gr. scholia, et versiones, item Basil. de Virgin. tom. i. p. 650, habent νόμῳ (utut Millius ab Esthio deceptus, contrarium asserat) nec ulla alia hominis, quam ex lege oriturobligatio. Millius tamen fidentur "τῷ νόμῳ quod additum in nostris, haud dubio translatum ex Rom. vii. 2:" ita continuo confidentia supplet locum rationis.

Cap. viii.] Nota quod a versiculo 3 ad finem hujus capitis, licet afferantur viginti quatuor lectiones, et amplius, Basilius, tom. ii. p. 438, 439, textum presse et κατὰ πόδα insequitur, nisi quod ἕτεροι v. 4, omittat, et ἀπόλλυται legat, v. 11.

V. 4. Ἕτερος.] Habent Gr. scholia omnia, Syr. Arab.: juxta tamen Millium, irrepsit e marg. Prol. p. 95.

V. 10. Ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ γνώσει.] "Non agnoscunt Hilarius D. Pelag." Mill. p. 47, cap. 1. Agnoscunt autem Theodoret. Œcum. Theophyl. Cod. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab. et, quod mirum dictu, ἐπὶ τῇ σῇ γνώσει agnoscunt Hilarius D. et Pelagius.

Cap. ix. 2. Ἐν Κυρίῳ.] Ita Origen. in Joh. p. 399, Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylactus, Hilarius D.: et tamen, juxta Millium, Prol. p. 95, col. 1, irrepsit e margine.

V. 7. Καὶ ἐκ τοῦ γάλακτος τῆς ποίμνης οὐκ ἐσθίει.] Ita Theodoret. Œcum. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Chrysost. et Theophylact. mutant substantivum in relativum, legendo αὐτῆς loco ποίμνης, sensu eodem salvo; Millio tamen judice, Prol. p. 69, col. 2, "et ποίμνης et αὐτῆς adjectitia sunt," quanquam una earum vocum subaudiatur necesse est.

V. 18. Τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Ita Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab.: sed Vulg. et Hilarius D. omittant τοῦ Χριστοῦ· "accessit ergo in nostris ex interpretamento," Prol. p. 95, col. 1.

V. 20. Ὡς ὑπὸ νόμον.] Addunt cod. MSS. 7, Vulg. Chrysost. Hilarius D. August. μὴ ὢν αὐτὸς ὑπὸ τὸν νόμον, sed hoc additamentum agnoscunt neque Origen. in Joh. p. 155, neque aliquis alius e Græcis commentatoribus, nec versiones orientales; et cum scripta sit hæc epistola ad Corinthios, inter quos versabantur plurimi Judæorum fidelium, qui æmulatores fuerunt legis, hæc verba os eorum querelis implevisset, quod Paulus discessionem docuisset a Moyse; hoc enim leviori de causa factum vidimus, Act. xxi. 21, et falsi crimen illi impegissent, eo quod dixisset se neque in legem Judæorum peccasse, Act. xv. 8, nec adversus mores paternos, Act. xxviii. 17.

V. 22. Ἵνα πάντως τινὰς σώσω.] Hic Millius, Prol. p. 47, col. 1, ait "κερδήσω mutatum in σώσω ad evitandam ejusdem vocis crebram repetitionem," et p. 123, dicit "πάντως τινὰς irrepsisse, loco genuinæ lectionis πάντας." Sed omnia Gr. scholia legunt πάντως τινὰς, et miram simul Pauli caritatem laudant, qui se aliis dedidit, ἵνα καὶ τοὺς ὀλίγους σώσω· cum iis consentiunt C. Alex. Arab. immo Paulus ipse, Rom. xi. 14, εἴπως σώσω τινὰς ἐξ αὐτῶν. In Clemente Al. et Gregorio Naz. mire hallucinatur; uterque enim, in his verbis, ἵνα πάντας κερδήσω, respicit non hunc, sed v. 19, ubi apostolus legit ἵνα πλειόνας κερδήσω. Ita Elias Cretensis de Greg. Naz. "Quod si magnus hic vir omnes dixit, cum Paulus nullos dixit, haud mirum id videri debet; Paulus enim ad id quod eventurum erat orationem conformans, sic locutus est, 'ut multos lucrifacerem.' Hic autem divinus magister ad Pauli studium, animique promptitudinem." Com. in Orat. 1, p. 163; vide etiam Clem. Al. p. 177.

V. 23. Τοῦτο δὲ ποιῶ.] Τοῦτο legunt Theodoret. Œcum. Theophyl. Syr. Arab. πάντα Vulg. C. Alex. Hilarius D. Chrysost. unde mutatum πάντα in τοῦτο vult Millius, Prol. p. 77, "πάντα (inquit) in τοῦτο mutandi causa aliqua; nec enim omnia fecit, nec facere potuit Paulus propter evangelium (quidni facere potuit omnia hic loci memorata, eaque in hunc scopum dirigere?) mutandi autem τοῦτο in πάντα omnino causa nulla;" sic ille. Sed nec Millius in se reciperet onus reddendi rationem de unaquaque variante lectione per totum librum suum.

Cap. x. 5. Εὐδόκησεν ὁ Θεός.] Sic Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes. Sed Marcion omittit ὁ Θεὸς, "omnino recte," Millius, Prol. p. 34, col. 1,—"appositum erat in posterioris ævi libris," Prol. p. 47, col. 2.

V. 19. Ὅτι εἴδωλόν τί ἐστιν.] Ita Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes, et Hilarius D.: rejiciuntur tamen hæc fide C. Alex. Prol. p. 35, col. 1. Et v. 20, τὰ ἔθνη, quod agnoscunt Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, est "scholion marginale assumptum ex Ps. xcvi. 5," Prol. p. 47, col. 1.

V. 23, Ἕκαστος.] Habent Gr. scholia omnia, et versiones orientales, et C. Alex. D. Vulg. et MSS. quibusdam: "scholion ergo est," Prol. p. 60, col. 2.

V. 28. Τὸ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ, καὶ τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῆς.] Desunt hæc, secunda vice, Vulg. Hilarius D. Pseud-Hieronymus, Syr. Arab. "Vix est quam ut hoc transcriptum credamus ab oscitante quodam librario;" ita hic Millius; reperias tamen hæc verba apud Arab. C. Alex. et omnia Gr. scholia, adeoque causa major est cur retineantur. Ita providi olim et negligentes fuerint Christiani, si s. codices in omnibus ecclesiis publice recitatos repositosque in ecclesiis, ab oscitantibus librariis misere depravari passi fuissent. Quod tamen plusquam centies factum esse contendit Millius. Adde quod in his verbis, ἐὰν δέ τις εἴπῃ ὑμῖν, ὑμῖν "scribæ esse, (ait) non Pauli," fide Vulg. et Hilarii, contra Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Prol. p. 47.

V. 31. Πάντα.] Habent Gr. scholia, Vulg. Syr. Arab. D. Æthiop. ergo "vix est quin non obstante codicum consensu———censeam πάντα uberioris explicationis gratia insertum," Prol. p. 159, col. 1.

Cap. xi. 15. Ἡ κόμη ἀντὶ περιβολαίου δέδοται αὐτῇ.] Deest αὐτῇ in MSS. plurimis, Theodoreto, et Œcumenio. Quid istuc tam mirum voculam prætermitti, quam unusquisque lector subaudiendam esse continuo existimaret, vel enim mulieri dantur comæ ejus pro velamine, vel nemini præterea? Reperitur vox αὐτῇ apud Chrysostomum, Theophylactum, C. Alex. Hilarium D. et versiones omnes: adjectum est tamen, juxta Millium, ad absolvendam sententiam, Prol. p. 89, col. 1.

V. 19. Δεῖ γὰρ καὶ αἱρέσεις ἐν ὑμῖν εἶναι.] Deest ὑμῖν apud patres Latinos, atque adeo, juxta Millium, Prol. p. 47, "traductum est ex posteriori parte hujus versiculi." Atqui agnoscunt C. Alex. Gr. scholia omnia, et versiones orientales. Est etiam observatu non indignum, quod in citandis scripturis, patribus usitatum fuerit, ex præcepto aliquo demere particulam specialem, ut fiat præceptum generale: ex gr. in cap. xiv. 34, αἱ γυναῖκες ὑμῶν ἐν ἐκκλησίαις σιγάτωσαν, multi omittunt ὑμῶν, ut fiat mandatum generale.

V. 24. Λάβετε, φάγετε.] Desunt hæc in 5 MSS et in Hilario D. atque hinc Mill. Prol. p. 95, reclamantibus Gr. commentatoribus, Cod. Alex. et vetustissimis versionibus, dicit, "Hæc verba quæ jam in libris fere omnibus inserta sunt, provenire ex formula institutionis, Matt. xxvi. 26." At si hæc ibi sint verba Christi, sequitur ea hic loci genuina esse, et ex evangeliis ab apostolo desumpta, utpote qui diserte narrat se accepisse a Domino quod habiturus erat illis.

Cap. xii. 3. Οὐδεὶς ἐν Πνεύματι Θεοῦ λαλῶν λέγει ἀνάθεμα Ἰησοῦν.] "Ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, Orig. περὶ Εὐχῆς, et commentario in Joh. non semel," ita Millius, sed in utrisque peccat. Com. enim in Joh. p. 359, 390, 422, posterior pars hujus versus, in quo hæc verba ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, continuo citatur; prior in quo τὸ Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ nunquam, lib. περὶ Εὐχῆς, p. 66. Mirum est illum non vidisse σφάλμα γραφικὸν nempe legendum ibi secunda vice prout translatum est, non Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, sed Θεοῦ, quod ex verbis immediate sequentibus per modum illationis dictis τὸ αὐτο ὀνομάζων ἅγιον Πνεῦμα, καὶ Πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ luce clarius est.

V. 11. Διαιροῦν ἴδια ἑκάστῳ.] Deest ἴδια apud Vulg. Hilarium D. Syr. Epiphanium. Retinent Clem. Al. Strom. iv. p. 527, C. Alex. Gr. scholia omnia.

V. 26. Καὶ μέλη ἐκ μέρους.] "Membra de membro," ἐκ μέλους, Vulg. Hilarius D. Clar. Ger. Epiph. Hær. Manich. §. 86, p. 707; pro qua lectione contendit Mill. Prol. p. 47, col. 1. At Orig. in Matt. p. 357, Basil. tom. ii. p. 305, Syr. Arab. C. Alex. et Gr. scholia legunt cum textu. Nec multum discriminis est inter membra particularia ejusdem mystici corporis, et membra inter se pendentia. Quod in patribus hic Millius pronunciat "frigidum, et extra scopum apostoli," nempe Corinthios qui partem ecclesiæ tantum constituebant, eam reliquis Christi ecclesiis concordare debere, est ipsius apostoli argumentum, cap. xi. 16. cap. xiv. 33, et post multa vix aliud dicit ab his verbis Chrysostomi, τοσαύτην ἀπὸ γνώμης ὀφείλομεν ἔχειν ὁμόνοιαν, ὅσην ἀπὸ φύσεως ἐκεῖνα.

Cap. xiii. 2. Καὶ ἐὰν ἔχω πᾶσαν πίστιν.] "Medium πᾶσαν irrepsit ex priore parte vers.:" Ita Mill. Prol. p. 47, col. 1. Agnoscunt tamen Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab.

Cap. xiv. 9. Ἔσεσθε γὰρ εἰς ἀέρα λαλοῦντες.] Deest γὰρ apud Syrum. At habent Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. Hilarius D. Et tamen fide Millii "interjectum est a lectore aliquo connexionis causa," Prol. p. 130, col. 1.

V. 16. Ἐπεὶ ἐὰν εὐλογήσῃς τῷ Πνεύματι.] Ita Græca scholia, versiones omnes, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Deest Πνεύματι in com. 3, "nec dubium (inquit Millius) quin ita apostolus," Prol. p. 163, col. 2.

V. 25. Καὶ οὕτω.] Omittunt hæc verba MSS. cod. quidam, Vulg. Hilarius D. Junilius. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Arab. ait Millius, "Desumptum nemo non videt ex posteriori parte versiculi."

V. 32. Καὶ πνεύματα προφητῶν.] V. l ψυχαὶ, Orig. Hom. in Matt. p. 306. Hæc sunt Origenis verba, πνεύματα προφητῶν προφήταις ὑποτάσσεται, οὐχὶ καὶ αἱ ψυχαί· sed Millius crebro oscitanter legit.

V. 33. Οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἀκαταστασίας ὁ Θεὸς.] Sic Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versiones omnes, sed placet Millio lectio Hilarii D. "non enim dissensionis res, sed pacis," Prol. p. 47, col. 2.

V. 37. Ὅτι τοῦ Κυρίου εἰσὶν ἐντολαί.] "Scholion est ἐντολαί," Prol. p. 47. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes, C. Al. Θεοῦ ἐντολή.

Cap. xv. 10. Εἰμὶ ὅ εἰμι.] Ex Æthiop. solius auctoritate rejicitur ὅ εἰμι, contra Vulgat. Hilarium D. Syr. Arab. C. Alex. et Gr. scholia omnia.

V. 15. Εἴπερ νεκροὶ οὐκ ἐγείρονται.] Hæc verba omittunt Iren. lib. v. cap. 13, Hilarius D. Syr. Theodoret. Retinent autem Chrysost. Œcum. Theophylact. Vulg. Arab. C. Alex. "et si non exprimerentur, debent intelligi, (ait Esthius) quod subsequentia indicant, per modum illationis, εἰ γὰρ νεκροὶ, &c."

V. 20. Ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων ἐγένετο.] Ita Syr. Arab. Theodoret. Theophyl. Sed deest ἐγένετο, Iren. lib. v. cap. 13, p. 420, Chrysost. Vulg. Orig. in Matt. p. 284, sine sensus discrimine.

V. 28.] "Omittit ὁ υἱὸς Irenæus," ita Millius. Sed pace Millii retinet Iren. lib. v. cap. 36, p. 461, Orig. etiam in Joh. p. 146, Athanas. de Hum. Nat. p. 600, bis, Cod. Alex. Ambros. verus, lib. v. de Fide, cap. 7, Basil. adv. Eunom. lib. iv. tom. i. p. 769, Greg. Nyssen. orat. in hæc verba, tom. i. p. 838, Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes: atqui non obstante hac nube testium, fidenter pronunciat Mill. Prol. p. 47, "medium ὁ υἱὸς irrepsisse ex margine."

V. 29. Ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν.] V. l. ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν, MSS. Dial. contra Marcion. p. 124, Orig. in Matt. p. 487, qui idcirco solum habet αὐτῶν, quia præcessit τῶν νεκρῶν, quæ retinent omnia Gr. scholia, et versiones, ipso Vulgato legente, (quod Millius negat) "pro mortuis;" "irrepsit tamen ex priore parte versiculi," Mill. Prol. p. 65.

V. 31. Ἣν ἔχω ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν.] Hæc pro assumento habet Mill., fide Ger. Clar. Hilarii D. p. 47. Agnoscunt autem Theodoret. Œcumenius, Theophylact. C. Alex. versiones omnes. Chrysost. legit ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

V 44. Ἔστι σῶμα ψυχικὸν, καὶ ἔστι σῶμα πνευματικόν.] Habent hæc verba omnia Gr. scholia. C. Alex. omnesque versiones, cum levi discrimine MSS. quædam addunt εἰ, Vulg. et Latini si. "Hæc tamen (inquit ille) a quodam scholiasta adnotata ad oram libri, retulere scribæ in contextum." Prol. p. 95.

V. 47. Ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ.] V. l. ὁ Κύριος omittunt Origen. Hippolytus, Athan.: est Athanasius ibi spurius, Hippolytus, Lat. Agnoscunt omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Dial. contra Marcion. p. 150. Et cum primus homo de terra terrenus, secundus homo quidni sit Dominus de cœlo cœlestis? sed cum ex fide Tertulliani et Epiphanii Marcion substituisset Κύριος, quid mirum si illam ob rationem quidam omiserint? Vide Mill. p. 47.

V. 54. Τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο ἐνδύσεται ἀφθαρσίαν.] Retinentur hæc apud omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Asserit tamen Millius "huc translata esse ex versiculo proxime præcedente," Prol. p. 47.

Cap. xvi. 1. Περὶ δὲ τῆς λογίας.] Sic non solum legunt Græca scholia, sed λογίαν uno ore interpretantur τὴν συλλογὴν τῶν χρημάτων, et Phavorinus ait, λογία, ἡ συλλογὴ, παρὰ τῷ ἀποστόλῳ, καὶ τὸ ἐκ πυλλῶν συνεισφέρομενον, λέγει δὲ ἐλεημοσύνην.

SECTIO TERTIA—EPISTOLA SECUNDA AD CORINTHIOS.

Cap. i. 2. Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Agnoscunt hæc verba Gr. scholia omnia et versiones, C. Alex. et Orig. in Matt. p. 500. "Irrepsere tamen ex aliis epistolis," Mill. Prol. p. 47, col. 2.

V. 10. Καὶ ῥύεται.] Desunt Chrysostom. Hilario Diac. Syr. sed extant apud reliqua Gr. scholia et versiones. Et tamen "hæc ad marginem adscripta scriba textus partem esse putans, transtulit in corpus epistolæ," in Mill. Prol. p. 129, col. 1.

Cap. ii. 16. Καὶ πρὸς ταῦτά τις ἱκανός.] Ita Græca scholia omnia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Syr. Arab. Observant autem Gr. scholia Paulum hic μετριάζειν agnoscere "τὸ ὅλον τῆς χάριτος, totum gratia esse, et imbecillitatem humanam ad hæc minime sufficere, εἰ μὴ ἦν ἡ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐύναμις· ἐκείνου γὰρ τὸ πᾶν, καὶ οὐδὲν τὸ ἡμέτερον, illius enim est totum hoc quod agimus nihilque nostrum." Sed Vulgati absurdam lectionem, viz. "Ad hæc quis tam idoneus?" (i. e. quam ego) hic probat Millius, Prol. p. 47, 48, meris somniis, et vitilitigationibus fidens, quibus responsum e patrum scholiis adduximus. Objicit (1.) "Apostolos qui evangelium per totum orbem prædicassent, non potuisse vere dicere, se huic quod tam præclare obiissent muneri, inidoneos fuisse." Respondeo, ex seipsis inidoneos se fuisse disertim asserunt, cap. iii. 5. (2.) "Quomodo, (inquit) speciatim D. Paulo quadraret, 'Ad hæc quis idoneus?' qui aperte hic asserit se, cæterosque apostolos idoneos fuisse ministros N. Testamenti," cap. iii. 6. Quis hic satis mirari potest hominis confidentiam, qui verba hæc, "Non quod sumus sufficientes ex nobis ipsis, sed sufficientia nostra ex Deo est, qui idoneos nos fecit ministros N. Test.," in subsidium causæ quam plane destruit, adducit, quæque insuper ostendunt D. Paulum non dicere cum Millio, "se fuisse idoneos," sed tantum "a Deo factos esse idoneos ministros N. Testamenti?"

V. 17. Οὐ γάρ ἐσμεν ὡς οἱ πολλοί.] Chrysost. et Theodoret. et Syr. legunt οἱ λοιποί. Sed Vulg. Hilarius D. Œcumenius, Theophylactus textum firmant. Irenæus hæc habet, οὕτω Παῦλος, οὐ γάρ ἐσμεν ὡς οἱ πολλοί, lib. iv. cap. 44. Et quanquam Esthius dicat "dictionem, οἱ πολλοὶ, nec veritati congruere, nec modestiæ Pauli," id hic nullius momenti est; alibi enim apostolis de Judaicis zelotis et pseud-apostolis ait πολλοὶ περιπατοῦσιν, "Multi ambulant, &c. de quibus dixi vobis inimicos eos esse crucis Christi," Phil. iii. 19. Est tamen hoc apud Millium, Prol. p. 139, "marginale scholion," ob rationem plane frigidam et ineptam.

Cap. iii. 1. Ἢ ἐξ ἡμῶν συστατικῶν.] Ita Chrysost. Œcum. Theophylact. Syr. Arab. Deest συστατικῶν Vulg. Hilarius Diac. Theodoret.: hoc tamen ex eo accidit, quod hæc verba συστατικῶν πρὸς ἡμᾶς immediate præcesserint: ideoque posterius συστατικῶν utpote necessario intelligendum, superfluum videretur.

V. 17. Οὗ δὲ τὸ Πνεῦμα Κυρίου.] "Κυρίου quod insertum est in reliquis jam omnibus, irrepsisse videtur ex proxime sequenti versiculo," ita Millius, Prol. p. 166, col. 2. Agnoscunt tamen Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, C. Alex. et Hilarius D.

Cap. iv. 6. Τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Ita Orig. in Matt. p. 252, Græca scholia universa, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Atqui "τοῦ Θεοῦ explicatio est," Prol. p. 31, ex auctoritate Æthiop. Tertull. Clar. Vulg. apud quem legimus "claritatis Dei," apud Hilar. D. "gloriæ suæ."

Cap. v. 3. Εἴγε καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι.] Legendum hic vult Millius ἐκδυσάμενοι, reclamantibus Græcis scholiis, quæ legunt ἐνδυσόμενοι. Ita etiam Macarius, hom. 5, p. 35, 36, Chrysost. ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 340, tom. v. p. 520; neque in commentario notat exemplaria hic variare, sed ejusdem verbi variam esse expositionem. Ita etiam Clemens Al. Stro. iv. p. 541, Vulg. Hilarius D. C. Alex. Atque hæc interpretatio, "siquidem induti, non nudi reperiemur," clara, et perspicua est, viz. "In hoc ingemiscimus, habitationem nostram quæ de cœlo est superindui, siquidem eo tempore induti inveniamur immortali corpore, et non nudi, sicut alii qui vestitu carebunt."

V. 10. Τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος.] Agnoscunt hæc verba omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Athanas. de Incarn. tom. i. p. 110, Cyril. Al. de Rect. Fide, p. 66, et Thesaur. p. 276, de Ador. p. 494. Origenes semel quidem legit τὰ ἴδια, Hom. in Jer. p. 187, sed Philac. p. 65, in Matt. p. 291, 335, 316, τὰ διὰ, Theodoret. τὰ ἴδια, ep. 91, et serm. 12 adv. Gr. 601, sed Com. in Ps. xcvii. p. 791, et Hær. Fab. lib. v. cap. 30, p. 297, τὰ διὰ, quod potiori auctoritati innititur.

V. 15. Εἰ εἷς ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀπέθανεν.] Retinent εἰ Chrysost. Œcumen. Theophylact. C. Alex. Hilarius D. Vulg. Arab. Rejicit τὸ εἰ Millius, Prol. p. 71, col. 1, fide Theodoreti, Theophylacti, Œcumenii, et Hilarii in commentaris (quos si inspicias, ne verbum quo id probetur, invenies) Clar. adeoque Vulg. initio (nulla prorsus consequentia) his artibus variantes suas lectiones stabilire solet Millius: magis ingenua est Esthii sententia, viz. "Verisimile est a Paulo scriptam fuisse particulam εἰ, quod et sermonis connexioni inseruit, et in plurimis legitur MSS. qui hodie extant: ansam prætermittendi incauto lectori dedisse potuit similitudo dictionum εἰ et εἷς, ut in hujusmodi contingit."

V. 17. Καινὰ τὰ πάντα.] Ita Hilarius D. C. Alex. Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes; et tamen "τὰ πάντα vix puto esse ipsius apostoli," Prol. p. 135.

V. 20. Ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ οὖν πρεσβεύομεν.] "Valebat in omnibus sed perperam οὖν, οὗ ὑπὲρ πρεσβεύομεν, Ambrosiast. omnino recte," Prol. p. 48, col. 1.

Cap. vi. 16. Καθὼς εἶπεν ὁ Θεός.] Deest ὁ Θεὸς unico interprete Syro, et necessario subauditur; at Prol. p. 130, col. 1, "lectoris est, non D. Pauli."

Cap. vii. 12. Τὴν σπουδὴν ὑμῶν τὴν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.] V. l. ἡμῶν τὴν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, quæ quidem lectio mihi genuina videtur, auctoritate Vulg. Chrysost. Theodoreti, Theophylacti confirmata, et tum πρὸς ὑμᾶς, quod Græca scholia omnia agnoscunt, minime insulsum erit. Vide hic Millium nobis consentientem.

Cap. viii. 12. Καθὸ ἐὰν ἔχῃ τις.] Deest τὶς, inquit Mill. in MSS. 8, Vulg. Ambrosiast. Clar. Ger. Lat. Cyprian. ad Quirin. lib. iii. §. 2, Clem. Al. nescio ubi, Theodoreto, Chrysost. textu et comment. Agnoscunt autem Œcum. Theophylact. C. Alex. Arab. et tam in textu quam in commentariis Chrysost. (ubi deesse hanc vocem dicit Millius) expressim adhibetur. "Mandat (inquit) Deus, ut caritatem exerceamus κατὰ δύναμιν καὶ καθὸ ἔχῃ τις," tanta est Millio circa citationem suam incuria. Porro, "οὐ καθὸ οὐκ ἔχει adjecta videntur explicationis gratia," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 124, col. 2, repugnantibus omnibus Græcis scholiis, C. Alex. et versionibus, excepta Æthiopica.

Cap. ix. 10. Χορηγήσαι, καὶ πληθύναι τὸν σπόρον ὑμῶν.] Millius, Prol. p. 88, col. 1, "χορηγήσει, καὶ πληθυνεῖ, καὶ αὐξήσει, Clar. Cod. Al. Œcumen. Syr. Vulg. et Latini recte, et apostoli scopum accommodatæ." Sed C. Alex. scholia Gr. omnia, et præcipue Œcumenius, non retinent tantum, sed simul notant, ut cum Œcumenio loquar, ἐν εὐχῆς τάξει αἰτίττεσθαι, "ad modum voti innuere, apostolum nullo modo metuendum esse, ne indigens inveniretur qui caritate abundaret," πῶς ἂν ἀμελήσειε τοῦ τὸν πνευματικὸν σπείροντος σπόρον ὁ Θεὸς χορηγῆσαι, πληθῦναι, αὐξῆσαι τὰ γεννήματα, tam levis in plerisque est Millii fides.

V. 12. Διὰ πολλῶν εὐχαριστιῶν τῷ Θεῷ.] Mill. Prol. p. 48, "Ambrosiast. ἐν Θεῷ omnino recte," repugnantibus Gr. scholiis, et versionibus orientali. et C. Alex.

Cap. x. 7. Ὅτι καθὼς αὐτὸς Χριστοῦ, οὕτω καὶ ἡμεῖς Χριστοῦ.] Posterius Χριστοῦ deest in MSS. et versionibus aliquibus, Chrysostomo, textu et comment. juxta Millium, Theodoreto, Theophylacto, retinentibus solum C. Alex. Arab. Œcumenio: sed hoc nullius momenti est, nihil enim frequentius, quam omittere vocem, quæ in una periodi parte expressa, in altera subaudienda est. Et nota insuper quod hi tres commentatores hanc vocem in commentariis suis vel exprimunt ut Chrysost.; sic ὥσπερ ἐκεῖνος Χριστοῦ, οὕτω καὶ ἐγὼ Χριστοῦ, vel intelligenda esse indicant.

Cap. xi. 8. Καὶ ὑστερηθείς.] V. 9, "καὶ τηρήσω irrepsere in textum," Prol. p. 124, col. 2, 130, col. 1. Agnoscunt autem Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versiones omnes.

Cap. xii. 19. Ἐν Χριστῷ.] Interpretantur versiones omnes, Theodoretus, Theophyl. retinentur in textu Œcumen.: sed adjectitium esse vult Millius, Prol. p. 48, col. 2.

Cap. xiii. 2. Γράφω.] Agnoscunt Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. Sed quia omittunt Vulg. Hilar. D. C. Alex. Clar. "insertum est ad absolvendum sententiam," Prol. p. 123, col. 1. 135, col. 2.

V. 4. Εἰς ὑμᾶς.] "Irrepsit (inquit Millius) explicationis gratia ex v. 3." Agnoscunt autem Theodoret. Theophylact. Œcum. C. Alex. Hilarius D. et versiones omnes. Vide Prol. p. 48, col. 2, ubi deest in Clar. Ger. Chrysost.

SECTIO QUARTA—EPISTOLA AD GALATAS.

Cap. i. 4. Qui dedit scipsum ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν.] MSS. Orig. περὶ Εὐχῆς, et Œcumen. in textu legunt περὶ, quæ tamen duo unum sonant, nam sicut LXX. interpr. cum loquuntur de sacrificiis Vet. Test., modo περὶ ἁμαρτίας, seu ἁμαρτιῶν, modo ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτίας seu ἁμαρτιῶν indiscriminatim utuntur, ita scriptores etiam N. Fœderis, 1 Pet. iii. 18, "Christus mortuus est περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν," et Rom. viii. 3, sed hic et 2 Cor. v. 21, ὑπέρ. Hinc est quod licet Œcumenius habeat περὶ in textu in commentario legit ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, pariter ac cætera Gr. scholia. Vide com. nostr. in 2 Cor. v. 21. 1 Pet. iii. 18.

V. 6. Ἐν χάριτι τοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Theodoret. et Œcumen. in textu legunt Θεοῦ· Chrysost. et Theophylact. omnesque versiones antiquæ Χριστοῦ, et Œcumen. in Com. τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, et tamen Prol. p. 48, "Χριστοῦ post additum videtur."

V. 10. Ἢ ζητῶ ἀνθρώποις ἀρέσκειν.] "Hæc (inquit Millius) ad marginem adscripta, mox irrepsere in textum," p. 124, col. 2. Habent autem Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Hieronymus, Vulg.

V. 15. Ὅτι εὐδόκησεν ὁ Θεός.] Deest ὁ Θεὸς apud Theodoret. in Isa. xi. Hilarius D. Vulg. Hieronymus. "Accessit ex margine," p. 48. Sed agnoscunt omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Arab. Iren. lib. v. cap. 12, p. 417, "Cum autem placuit Deo" (et tamen p. 423, "Cum autem placuit ei"), Auctor Dial. in Marcion. p. 108, Orig. in Joh. p. 123, in textu ὅτι δὲ εὐδόκησεν, in marg. ὁ Θεός, cum igitur Deus separavit Paulum ex utero matris, constat eos qui legunt, "Cum autem placuit ei," cum textu sentire.

V. 23. Ἦν ποτε ἐπόρθει.] Desunt Æthiop. Habent Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilar. D. Hieronymus, versiones reliquæ; ast, Mil. judice, Prol. p. 124, col. 2, "traducta sunt ex superioribus."

Cap. ii. 1. Πάλιν ἀνέβην.] Deest πάλιν Iren. lib. iii. cap. 13, p. 234, et "in textu Chrysost. irrepsit ex prædictis," ait Millius, Prol. p. 48, sed ascensionem hanc τὴν δευτέραν ἀνάβασιν vocat Chrysost. Reliquaque Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hilarius D. Hieronymus, cunctæque versiones habent πάλιν.

V. 6.] Omittunt οἱ δοκοῦντες cod. aliqui apud Curcellæum. Agnoscunt Gr. scholia omnia, C. Alex. Hilar. D. Vulg. Hieronym. "Irrepsit tamen ex vers. 2," Prol. p. 130.

V. 9. Ἰάκωβος καὶ Πέτρος.] Hilar. D. ponit Πέτρος ante Ἰάκωβος, sed Gr. scholia C. Alex. versionesque omnes, ne Vulgata quidem excepta, primum locum tribuunt Jacobo.

Cap. iii. 1. Τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι.] "Videtur omnino (ait Millius) huc adscriptum ad supplendum sensum ex cap. v. 7 hujus epistolæ," nimirum, quia "apparet ex Chrysost. Theophyl. et Œcum. commentariis defuisse illis hæc verba, quæ August. Ambrosiast. Sedulius, et Primasius non agnoscunt, et quæ ideo prætermittenda duxit Hieronymus, quod in exemplaribus Adamantii non haberentur." At extant in Vulg. Hilario D. Arab. Theodoreto, et in textu Œcumenii et Theophylacti: quod si non attingunt in commentario, non hinc sequitur eos hæc verba non legisse. Et cum rei pro positæ apta sint, et concinna, et absque illis sensus claudicaret, hoc satis argumenti est, cur sint retinenda

V. 12. Ἀλλ' ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος.] Omittunt ἄνθρωπος MSS. plur. Chrysostom. Vulg. Hilar. D. Hieronymus: rejicit ergo hanc vocem Mill. Prol. p. 84. Sed habent Theodoret. Œcumen. Theophylact. et C. Alex.: et cum necessario subaudiatur et extet tum in Hebræo sermone, tum in versione τῶν LXX., et sic citetur, Rom. x. 5, quin hic etiam retinendum sit nemini dubium esse potest.

V. 14. Ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.] Non legebat Chrysostomus, ut liquet ex Comment. sed legebant scholia Gr. reliqua, C. Alex. Hilar. D. et versiones omnes.

V. 17. Διαθήκην προκεκυρωμένην ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς Χριστόν.] Omittunt εἰς Χριστόν, C. Alex. Vulg. Hieron. MSS. quædam exempl.; unde inter scholia docti alicujus a Millio numeratur: sed reperitur apud omnia Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. et Hilarium D.: nec omittendum censeo, siquidem sensum commodum parit, nempe "testamentum factum in Christo, et confirmatum a Deo, irritum a lege fieri non posse."

Cap. iv. 26. Ἥτις ἐστὶ μήτηρ πάντων ἡμῶν.] Deest πάντων Vulg. Syr. Origen. in Jer. p. 84, contra Cels. lib. iv. p. 193, Com. in Matt. p. 432, Euseb. de Martyr. Palest. hb. viii. cap. 11, p. 337, Chrysostom. ed. Mor. tom. iii. p. 747: sed idem, p. 886, legit πάντων ἡμῶν. Iren. lib. v. cap. 35, p. 459, "omnium nostrorum," Euseb. contra Marcel. lib. i. cap. 2, p. 10, ἡμῶν ἁπάντων. Ita etiam Theodoret. Œcumen. Hieronym. in locum, et Orig. in Num. ho. 8. f. 102, H. ho. 26, f. 143, F. Et siquidem omnibus veris Christi discipulis congruat æque ac Galatis, ratio est cur retinenda sit vox πάντων.

V. 31. Non sumus ancillæ filii, ἀλλὰ τῆς ἐλευθέρας.] Quidam fini hujus capitis adnectunt τῇ ἐλευθερίᾳ ᾗ ὁ Χριστὸς ἡμᾶς ἠλευθέρωσε, et exorditur subsequens caput sic, στήκετε οὖν· ita Tertullianus Hieron. Hilar. D. August. Sed omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. legunt cum textu. Argumentum Esthii subaudiendo ἐν ante τῇ ἐλευθερίᾳ, facile diluitur. "Male in quibusdam (inquit Grotius) hæc sunt divulsa, ita ut pars horum capiti præcedenti adhæreat," Com. in Gal. v. 1.

Cap. v. 3. Μαρτύρομαι δὲ πάλιν.] Deest πάλιν Arab. Chrysost. Hilar. D. Hieron.; sed Theodoret. Œcumen. C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. retinent πάλιν. Ansam omittendi fortasse præbuit quod quibusdam videretur ad prius aliquod testimonium, quod illos fugit, apostolum respexisse, cum revera ad solum versiculum proxime præcedentem respiciat, "Ego Paulus dico vobis." "'Testificor autem rursus,' est tamen cujusdam studiosi additamentum," Prol. p. 48, col. 2.

V. 14. Ἐν ἑνὶ λόγῳ.] Epiphanius, Tertul. Hilar. D. legunt ἐν ὑμῖν πληροῦται. Sed omnia Gr. scholia, Hieron. Vulg. C. Alex. Syr. Arab. ἐν ἑνὶ λόγῳ, sed dicit Mill. Prol. p. 34, col. 1, "ἐν ὑμῖν veram esse lectionem, et apostoli genuinam," additque, "certe D. Pauli est, Ep. ad Rom. xiii. 9;" cum tamen ibi apostolus legat, ἐν τούτῳ λόγῳ, nulla mentione habita τοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν. Nota etiam quod μοιχεία et φόνοι retineantur apud Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes.

Cap. vi. 15. Ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομή τι ἰσχύει.] Desunt priora apud Hilar. D. legendumque vult Millius οὔτε γὰρ περιτομή τί ἐστιν· cum vero ipsissima textus verba habeantur cap. v. 6, hoc unicum ad priorem lectionem firmandam satis est. Lectiones pro quibus Millius contendit, profluxisse videntur ex 1 Cor. vii. 19, ubi sine clausula hic præmissa legimus ἡ περιτομὴ οὐδέν ἐστιν, est tamen ἰσχύει juxta Millium interpretatio, Prol. p. 135, et "prior clausula irrepsit ex cap. v. 6," Prol. p. 48. Porro extant hæc verba in Vulgato, Arab. Theodoreto, Œcumenio, Theophylacto.

SECTIO QUINTA—EPISTOLA AD EPHESIOS.

Cap. i. 10. Ἐν Χριστῷ.] "'In Christo per Deum,' Iren. (v. p. 18)" ita Millius; sed ibi solam nobis lectionem Valentinianorum exhibet, ipse autem legit simpliciter "in Christo," lib. v. cap. 20, p. 431.

V. 18. Τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς τῆς διανοίας ἡμῶν.] Ita juxta Theodoret. Œcumen. et vetustissimas versiones; sed MSS. quamplurima Chrysost. et Theophyl. τῆς καρδίας nullo sensus discrimine. Nam s. scriptura alibi habet διάνοιαν τῆς καρδίας et Hebraicum לֵב sæpius idem valet ac φρὴν, νοῦς, διάνοια.

Cap. iii. 1. Ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν.] Τῶν ἐθνῶν desunt apud Tertullian. "scholiastarum esse" dicit Millius, Prol. p. 110, 139, repugnantibus C. Alex. versionibus universim, et scholiis Gr. omnibus, quorum judicio πολλὴ ἡ ἔμφασις τοῦ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν· τοῦτο γὰρ ἐνέφηνεν ὅτι οὐ μόνον ὑμᾶς οὐ βελλυντρόμεθα, ἀλλὰ καὶ δεσμούμεθα δι' ὑμᾶς.

V. 8. Ἐμοὶ τῷ ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων.] Ita Græca scholia et versiones omnes, Orig. in Matt. 333, C. Alex. et Hilar. D. "Ἐλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων scripsisse apostolum non dubito. Emolliens illud τῶν ἁγίων ut et τῶν ἀποστόλων scholiastarum sunt de veritate, et congruentia sermonis Paulini solicitorum," Prol. p. 139, col. 2, et p. 110.

V. 9. Τίς ἡ κοινωνία.] V. l. οἰκονομία, quam genuinam esse lectionem a Gr. scholiis et versionibus confirmatam agnosco, sed parum interest inter communicationem et dispensationem mysterii de vocandis gentibus, ejusdem κοινωνίᾳ factum.

Τῷ Θεῷ τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσαντι διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Hæc ultima verba non solum agnoscunt Gr. scholia omnia, sed etiam notant ὅτι καλῶς ἐμνημόνευσε τῆς κτίσεως διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· sunt tamen "commentarius sumptus ex Col. i. 16," Prol. p. 123, col. 1; eadem licet habeamus, cap. ii. 10, his verbis, αὐτοῦ γάρ ἐσμεν ποίημα κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

Cap. iv. 9. Τὸ δὲ ἀνέβη, τί ἐστι εἰ μὴ ὅτι καὶ κατέβη πρῶτον εἰς τὰ κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς.] "Deest hic καὶ Iren. lib. v. cap. 31;" ita Mill. sed fallitur. Ibi enim sc. p. 451, legit "et descendit," sicut etiam omnia Gr. scholia. Deest πρῶτον, Œcum. sed non deest reliquis omnibus Gr. scholiis et versionibus. Deest etiam μέρη apud quosdam, unde Mill. "medium μέρη lectoris est, ad supplendam sententiam," Prol. p. 41. Agnoscunt autem Græca scholia omnia, et C. Alex. nec usitatius quicquam quam omittere verbum aliquod, quod unusquisque lector adjiciendum esse ex se agnoscit.

V. 17. Καθὼς καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ ἔθνη.] Desunt τὰ λοιπὰ, Clem. Al. Protrept. p. 54, Vulg. Hilar. D. Hieronym.: unde, dicente Millio, Prol. p. 60, col. 2, "medium λοιπὰ irrepsit ex cap. ii. 3 hujus epistolæ." Agnoscitur tamen ab omnibus Gr. scholiis, Syro, Arabe.

V. 23. Ἀνανεοῦσθαι. 24. Ἐνδύσασθαι.] V. l. ἀνανεοῦσθε, ἐνδύσασθε. "Sic Chrysost. Theophyl. Vulg. Hieronym. Hilarius D. infinitiva hæc postea facta sunt ob præcedens ἀποθέσθαι," Prol. p. 84, col. 2. Sed Clem. Alex. p. 437, C. Alex. Theodoret. et Œcumen. legunt cum textu, et ἀποθέσθαι, "deponere," Latini retinent, quod hanc lectionem satis adstruit.

V. 28.] Agnoscunt hic τὸ ἀγαθὸν Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, C. Alex. et Hilar. D.: et tamen Prol. p. 160, col. 1, "vix est quin medium ἀγαθὸν pro scholio marginali habuerim, sumpto ex Gal. vi. 10."

V. 29. Πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν τῆς χρείας.] V. l. τῆς πίστεως, quam lectionem interpretamenti causa additam hic censet Mill. et in Prol. p. 55, col. 1, propugnat, sed repugnantibus Gr. scholiis universim, C. Alex. Hilario D. et Hieronymo his verbis; "Pro eo autem quod nos posuimus 'ad ædificationem opportunitatis,' hoc est quod dicitur Græce τῆς χρείας 'in Latinis codicibus propter euphoniam mutavit interpres et posuit ad ædificationem fidei.'"

V. 32. Καθὼς καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐν Χριστῷ ἐχαρίσατο ὑμῖν.] "Ἐν Χριστῷ (inquit Millius, Prol. p. 89, col. 1) irrepsit e margine ex Col. iii. 13, raro enim patitur apostolum bis idem de eodem dicere." Agnoscunt autem versiones omnes, Chrysost. Œcumen. C. Alex. Hilar. D.: et quanquam dicat Mill. "deesse Theodoreto et Theophylacto," Theophylactus tantum ordinem verborum invertit, legendo ἐχαρίσατο ὑμῖν ἐν Χριστῷ, Theodoretus sic, ὁ τῶν ὅλων Θεὸς ἐχαρίσατο ἡμῖν διὰ τοῦ Δεσπότου Χριστοῦ.

Cap. v. 5. Τοῦτο γάρ ἐστε γινώσκοντες.] Plurimi cod. MSS. Clem. Al. p. 437, Chrysost. Œcum. legunt ἔστε· ad eandem interpretationem afferunt ac illam Theodoreti et Theophylacti, qui habent ἔστε, ita etiam Hieron. et omnes Latini, qui legunt "scitote," lectio Vulg. "scitote intelligentes," absona est, et absurda.

V. 9. Ὁ γὰρ καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύματος.] "V. l. τοῦ φωτὸς, Vulg. Hilar. D. e Latinis multi, Theophylacti:" ita Millius. Sed Theophylactus et Gr. scholia non modo legunt, sed fusius explicant vocem "spiritus," quibuscum consentit Arabs.

V. 21. Ἐν φόβῳ Θεοῦ.] V. l. Χριστοῦ, Chrysost. Vulg. Syr. Ambrosiast. sed Θεοῦ Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylact. Arab. Nota quod v. 20 καὶ πατρὶ omittatur ab unico Æthiope, et tamen Prol. p. 124, "irrepsit e margine."

V. 27. Ἵνα παραστήσῃ αὐτὴν.] V. l. αὐτὸς, Theophylact. Vulg. Hilar. D. Hieronymus. Sed Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. Arab. αὐτὴν, quam lectionem etiam sensus postulat. Nota autem quod licet in omnibus legatur vel αὐτὴν vel αὐτὸ, Millius tam αὐτὴν quam αὐτὸ pro injectitiis habeat, Prol. p. 105, col. 1.

V. 31. Καὶ προσκολληθήσεται πρὸς τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ.] Habent hæc verba scholia Gr. omnia, C. Alex. Hilar. D. versiones omnes, aliunde assumpta tamen disertim asserit Hieronymus. Ratio in promptu est; iniquus conjugio fuit Hieronymus.

Cap. vi. 1. Ἐν Κυρίῳ.] Sic omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Hieron. et versiones antiquæ. "Est tamen commentarius," Prol. p. 48, col. 1.

V. 10. Ἀδελφοί μου.] Desunt tantum Æthiop. habent Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes: at Prol. p. 48, col. 2, "irrepsisse videtur ex lectionariis."

V. 18. Εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἀγρυπνοῦντες.] Deest τοῦτο Vulg. Arab. Hilar. D. Hieron. Basil. Sed agnoscunt τοῦτο omnia Gr. scholia, et δέξασθε Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. Vulg. Syr. Arab. "Utraque tamen τὸ τοῦτο et δέξασθε non sunt D. Pauli sed lectoris," Prol. p. 135, col. 2.

SECTIO SEXTA—EPISTOLA AD PHILIPPENSES.

Cap. i. 1. Σὺν ἐπισκόποις.] V. l. συνεπισκόποις, "co-episcopis," Hilarius D.: sed quanquam præpositio σὺν adjungatur ἐπισκόποις secundum veterem scribendi consuetudinem, constat tamen Græcos omnes cum textu concordare: non enim notarunt quod Paulus apud Philippenses mentionem fecerit co-episcoporum nec quærunt quamobrem id fecerit, sed cum Hieronymo dicunt eos, qui hic dicti sunt episcopi, presbyteros fuisse. Denique nec id dicit Hilarius, sed hoc tantum, "Cum episcopis et diaconis, hoc est, cum Paulo et Timotheo, qui episcopi erant," mirum quam frigide et incepte.

V. 18. Χριστὸς καταγγέλλεται.] V. l. καταγγελλέσθω, Euseb.; non Eccl. Hist., ut Millius hic hallucinatur, sed de Vita Const. lib. iii. cap. 58, et Prol. p. 102, col. 2. In utrisque autem lectori imposuit Millius, nam εἴτε προφάσει εἴτε ἀληθείᾳ Χριστὸς καταγγελλέσθω, sunt ibi verba imperatoris, μονονουχί, καὶ παραπλησίως fere inquit Eusebius, propemodum aut tantum non cum Paulo loquentis. Adde quod Gr. scholia et versiones omnes legant cum textu.

Cap. ii. 4. Μὴ τὰ ἑαυτῶν ἕκαστος σκοπεῖτε.] Cod. plur. Basilius, Hilar. D. legunt σκοποῦντες, Vulg. "considerantes:" ast omnia Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. σκοπεῖτε, "quod scholiastæ est," Prol. p. 71.

V. 11. Πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξομολογήσηται.] MSS. quædam, Orig. in Joh. p. 131, et Theophylactus, ἐξομολογήσεται, "unde mutavit quispiam (inquit Mill. Prol. p. 160), futurum im aoristum ob præcedens κάμψῃ." Sed Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcum. C. Alex. Hilarius D. Iren. lib. i. cap. 2, p. 45, Gr. legit ἐξομολογήσηται et Athanas. orat. 2 contra Ar. p. 346, et hanc lectionem firmant primo, τὸ ἵνα, 2, τὸ κάμψῃ præcedentia, nam ubi occurrit, Rom. xiv. 11, ἐξομολογήσεται sine ἵνα præcedente sequitur κάμψει.

V. 15. Ἐν μέσῳ.] Ita omnia Gr. scholia, Vulg. Hilar. D. præfert ἀνὰ μέσον Millius, Prol. p. 163, col. 2.

V. 30. Παραβουλευσάμενος τῇ ψυχῇ.] V. l. παραβολευσάμενος, Vulg. Hilar. D. Pseud-Hieron. Sed omnia Gr. scholia, C. Al. et Photius legunt παραβουλευσάμενος, i. e. ut aiunt Phavorinus, et Hesychius, εἰς θάνατον ἑαυτὸν διδούς· male igitur Mill. ait Prol. p. 48, "Ignoratio sensus τοῦ παραβουλευσάμενος occasionem dedit huic mutationi."

Cap. iii. 9. Ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει.] Deest unico Syro. Sed Prol. p. 130, col. 1, "vix quidem obstat summus codicum, quos jam habemus, consensus, quo minus ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει pro interpretamento, eoque minus opportune hic injecto, habeam."

V. 11. Εἰς τὴν ἀνάστασιν τῶν νεκρῶν.] V. l. τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν, nullo sensus discrimine.

V. 15. Τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν καιόνι.] Agnoscunt vocem καιόνι Græci scholiastæ interpretesque omnes, ne hodierno quidem Vulgato excepto; sed rejicitur tanquam "interpolatio," Prol. p. 55, col. 2, et p. 135, col. 2, "irrepsit ex Gal. vi. 16."

V. 21. Qui transformabit corpus humilitatis nostræ, εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ σύμμορφον.] Εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ desunt Vulg. Hilar. D. Iren. lib. v. cap. 13, p. 419, Tertulliano. At retinent ea Græca scholia omnia, Syr. Arab.

Cap. iv. 3.] Legas καὶ ἐρωτῷ vel ναὶ ἐρωτῷ nihil interest.

V. 4. Χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίῳ πάντοτε.] Τὸ πάντοτε deest in solo Æthiope. Agnoscunt omnes scholiastæ, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab.: sed Prol. p. 124, col. 2, "irrepsit ex 1 Thess. v. 16."

V. 13. Ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με Χριστῷ.] Deest Χριστῷ in MSS. quibusdam, Vulg. Hilar. D. Æthiop.: ergo Prol. p. 123, "adjectitium est:" sed habent Syr. Arab. Græci scholiastæ omnes.

V. 18. Παρὰ Ἐπαφρόδιτου.] Sic Gr. scholia, Hilar. D. versionesque omnes: dicente tamen Millio, Prol. p. 145, col. 1, "παρὰ Ἐπαφρόδιτου, quod habent jam omnes, scholion initio erat sumptum ex cap. ii. 25."

V. 23. Μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν.] Ita omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Sed MSS. quædam, Vulg. Hilar. D. Pseud-Hieronymus legunt μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν. "Recte," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 123.

SECTIO SEPTIMA—EPISTOLA AD COLOSSENSES.

Cap. i. 2. Καὶ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Omittunt hæc verba 4 MSS. Hilar. D. Syr. et Theophylact. et licet reperias in textu Chrysostomi in Com. tum ille, tum Theophylactus, ait ἐν ταύτῃ τοῦ Χριστοῦ οὐ τίθησι ὄνομα, "lectoris ergo sunt, non D. Pauli," Mill. Prol. p. 84. Sed agnoscunt C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. Œcumen. Theodoretus; solum enim inspexerat Millius versionem Latinam, cum hæc verba Theodoreto defuisse affirmavit. Et siquidem in reliquis epistolis omnibus Paulus eadem loquendi formula utitur cum ad has vel illas ecclesias, tum ad hos vel illos homines, quid obstat quo minus hæc verba hic etiam usurpasse videntur? non ille Colossis error obtinuit ut putarent Christo supplicandum esse mediantibus angelis, sed ὅτι δι' ἀγγέλων προσάγεσθαι ὤρισε τῷ Θεῷ, οὐ διὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ, quod rationem omittendi hæc verba a Theophylacto allatam prorsus evertit; cum enim apostolus Deum patrem nullo internuncio comparato precetur his verbis, χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρός, hæ preces falsam istam ex animis hominum satis evellunt opinionem.

V. 6. Καί ἐστι καρποφορούμενον.] MSS. plur. Vulg. Hilar. D. Syr. Chrysost. Theodoret. et Theophylact. addunt καὶ αὐξανόμενον (quod tamen, pace Milli dicam, deest Œcumen. textu et com.): in Græcis non legi, ait Erasmus, illud αὐξανόμενον; non adesse in MSS. ait Grotius. Desumptum videtur ex his verbis, v. 10 hujus cap. καρποφοροῦντες καὶ αὐξανόμενοι.

V. 10. Ut ambuletis ἀξίως τοῦ Κυρίου.] Vulg. Lat. Didymus, Hilar. D. Pseud-Hieron. Θεοῦ· sed omnia Gr. scholia, Clem. Al. p. 576, C. Alex. textui assentiuntur.

V. 14. Τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ.] Omittunt hæc postrema verba Syr. Chrysost. Theophylact. Athanas. tom. i. p. 466: sed agnoscunt Arab. Œcum. Theodoret. Iren. lib. v. cap. 2, p. 395, Paulus ipse, Eph. i. 7.

V. 18. Τοῦ σώματος τῆς ἐκκλησίας.] Retinent τοῦ σώματος Græci scholiaste, C. Alex. interpretesque omnes, dempto Æthiope, qui tamen reliquis omnibus anteponitur, Prol. p. 124, col. 2.

V. 24. Nunc gaudeo ἐν παθήμασί μου.] In MSS. Vulg. Hilar. D. Syr. Theodoreto, deest μου. Habent Chrysost. Œcumen. Theophylact.: et cum loquatur apostolus de afflictionibus quas in carne sua passus est, vox μου vel legatur, vel subaudiatur necesse est: tamen est "addititium," Prol. p. 89.

Cap. ii. 4. Μή τις.] "V. l. μηδείς, Clem. Al." sed falli hic Millium patet; vide Stro. vi. p. 645.

V. 7. Καθὼς ἐδιδάχθητε περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ.] Καὶ additur post καθὼς, et ἐν αὐτῇ desunt in quibusdam MSS. sed Græci scholiastæ textui consentiunt.

V. 9. Plenitudo divinitatis σωματικῶς.] "Deest σωματικῶς, Iren. lib. i. cap. 1, Cyprian. lib. de Bono Patientiæ;" ita Millius, sed reperies verbum illud apud Orig. in Jer. p. 56, Hilar. D. Græca scholia, et versiones omnes. Quod ad Irenæum attinet loco citato, p. 18, ex Grabii sententia non habemus verba Irenæi, sed Valentinianorum; legerunt tamen (ait ille) σωματικῶς Græci patres omnes, et de Latinis, Hilarius, Augustinus, pluresque alii.

V. 11. Ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τῆς σαρκός.] Omittunt τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν MSS. aliqua, Hilar. Diac. Clem. Al. Stro. iii. p. 444, Pseud-Hieron. (de quo vix unquam sum adeo solicitus ut quæram quid dixerit, senseritve): sed Basil. Prol. p. 61, tom. ii. p. 447, et Græca scholia textus lectionem exhibent, et contra Millii, "de schelio in textum introducto" sententiam corroborant.

V. 18. Ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων.] Deest μὴ in MSS. quibusdam, Orig. contra Cels. p. 236. Sunt Calar. Hilario D. et cod. Lat. teste Augustino Ep. ad Paulinum: sed Græca scholia, versiones omnes, et teste Esthio, Græca omnia, et Latina quæ nunc extant, negationem habent, et in margine Origenis adnotatur μὴ. Habent libri editi.

V. 20. Εἰ οὖν ἀπεθάνετε.] Deest οὖν in MSS. Theophylacto, Cypriano, quod retinent Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcum. Vulg. Hilarius D. Syr.

Cap. iii. 12. Σπλάγχνα οἰκτιρμῶν.] Origen. in Matt. 473, Clem. Alex. Chrysost. Vulg. legunt οἰκτιρμοῦ, nullo sensus discrimine, sed ad oram Origenis adscribitur. Cod. Reg. οἰκτιρμῶν, et sic Theodoret. Œcumen. et Theophyl. "Mutatum tamen οἰκτιρμοῦ in οἰκτιρμῶν" ait Mill. Prol. p. 61, col. 1.

V. 18. Τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν.] Deest ἰδίοις in cunctis versionibus, Clem. Al. Stro. iv. p. 499, Hilar. D. Pseud-Hieron.: Theophylactus legit ἀνδράσιν ὑμῶν. Vel legendum vel intelligendum esse constat, pro certo enim monentur hic uxores et suis, non aliarum mulierum maritis, subditi sint. Vide Paulum Eph. v. 24.

V. 20. Hoc est εὐάρεστον τῷ Κυρίῳ.] MSS. exempla plurima, Theodoret. Theoph. et Vulg. legunt ἐν Κυρίῳ. Atqui Clem. Al. Stro. iv. p. 499, Chrysost. Œcum. multi Græci Latinique codices, teste Esthio, sine præpositione, atque eo modo plenior est sermo.

V. 22. Οἱ δοῦλοι ὑπακούετε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς κατὰ σάρκα κυρίοις.] Ita Græca scholia, versionesque, dempto Æthiope, omnes. Sed Millio, Prol. p. 124, col. 2, "intermedium κατὰ πάντα, ut et κατὰ σάρκα, videtur marginalis explicatio ex Eph. vi. 5." Consultius esset receptæ potius lectioni acquiescere, quam Æthiope duce ab aliis omnibus deviare.

Cap. iv. 2. Ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ.] Sic Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versionesque omnes. Sed Prol. p. 49, col. 1, "irrepsit ex cap. ii. 7, aut etiam ex Phil. iv. 6."

V. 3. Θύραν τοῦ λόγου.] Hic iterum Millius Σύραν simpliciter (utcumque Σύραν τοῦ λόγου, sit jam in omnibus codicibus), pro genuina vix est quin habeat, Prol. p. 61, col. 1.

V. 10. Ἀρίσταρχος ὁ συναιχμάλωτός μου.] "Ὁ συναιχμάλωτός μου, irrepsisse videntur ex Ep. ad Philem. v. 23, 24;" ita Millius Prol. p. 124, col. 1. Agnoscunt tamen Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. Hilarius D. interpretesque omnes præterquam unus Æthiops.

V. 13. Ζῆλον πολὺν.] V. l. πόθον πολὺν, πολὺν κόπον, ἀγῶνα πολὺν, "multum laborem," Vulg. Hilar. D. Sed Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab. textui consentiunt.

SECTIO OCTAVA—EPISTOLÆ AD THESSALONICENSES.

1 Thess. i. 1. Ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Desunt hæc verba in Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Hilario D. Pseud-Hieron. Retinentur autem Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. C. Alex. et ob id solum omitti videntur, quod præcesserint ἐν Θεῷ πατρὶ, καὶ Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ.

V. 7.] Parvi refert utrum legas τόπον, an cum textu τόπους, quam lectionem amplectuntur Græci scholiastæ omnes.

Cap. ii. 7. Ἀλλ' ἐγενήθημεν ἤπιοι.] V. l. νήπιοι Vulg. Hilarius D. Œcumen. in textu ἤπιος, in com. ἢ νήπιος. Orig. Com. in Matt. p. 375, νήπιος, sed ἤπιος, p. 421. Syr. et Arab. "mitis, mansuetus," Chrysost. C. Alex. Cl. Al. Pæd. lib. i. p. 84, Stro. i. p. 272, Basil. tom. ii. p. 462 et 570, legunt ἤπιος, quod simillimum veri videtur. Apostolus enim in hac similitudine non infantis, sed nutricis personam sustinet, quæ puerorum leves iras et infirmitates placide fert.

V. 8. Ἱμειρόμενοι ὑμῶν.] Decem MSS. et Theophylactus in textu legunt ὁμειρόμενοι, "constricti vobis:" unde Millius Prol. p. 95, col. 1, "Usitatius ἱμειρόμενοι in alterius locum suffecerunt scribæ;" sed versiones omnes, Chrysost. Theodoret. C. Alex. Hilar. D. Œcumenius, legunt cum textu, quam lectionem interpretatur Theophylactus, utraque vox idem valet ὁμειρόμενοι ὁμείρονται, i. e. ἐπιθυμοῦσιν, Hesychius et Phavorinus.

V. 15. Τοὺς ἰδίους προφήτας.] Deest ἰδίους in MSS. quibusdam, Vulg. Hilario D. Pseud-Hieron. Orig. de Mart. p. 224, adde et Com. in Matt. p. 224. "Scholiastæ cujusdam est," Mill. Prol. p. 65, col. 2. Sed omnia Græca scholia, Basil. tom. ii. p. 429, Syr. Arab. retinent ἰδίους, vide Act. vii. 52; et quosnam quæso alios prophetas occidissent Judæi circa annum æræ Christianæ 51?

Cap. iii. 2. Καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν.] "Recte hic omnia, nihil mutandum," Mill. in locum: sed Prol. p. 123, col. 2, "Media καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν irrepsere e margine," contra fidem omnium Græcorum scholiorum, Syr. et Arab.

Cap. iv. 11. Καὶ ἐργάζεσθαι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσίν.] Ita Theodoretus, Œcumenius, Theophylactus; "manibus vestris," Vulg. et Hilar. D.: et cujusnam manibus operari potuerunt nisi suis, at Prol. p. 84, "irrepsit ex 1 Cor. iv. 12."

V. 13. Οὐ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν.] Sc. "Ego Paulus nolo," v. l. Θέλομεν, "Nos Paulus, Sylvanus, et Timotheus nolumus:" plurali etiam numero sæpe utitur Paulus, cum solam sui ipsius mentionem faciat.

Nota insuper quod licet in versiculis 15—17 afferantur decem variantes lectiones, Orig. in Joh. p. 317 a textu in nihilo discedit, et legit φθάσωμεν non φθάσυμεν, prout Millius hic lapsus est per errorem.

Cap. v. 13. Εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς.] MSS. Vulg. Æthiop. Chrysostomus, et Theodoretus, legunt ἐν αὐτοῖς, τουτέστι διδασκάλοις. Sed Hilarius D. C. Alex. Œcumenius, Theophylactus, ἐν ἑαυτοῖς. Et hanc lectionem, quam posteriorem vocat, ita firmat Esthius: "Posterior lectio quæ admonet Thessalonicenses ut inter se pacem habeant, magis genuina videtur, tum quia novum præceptum est nulla conjunctione et cum præcedentibus cohærens; tum quia prioris lectionis sensus in superioribus satis includitur, velut minus in majore, ne dicam quod nec Græca, nec Hebraicæ proprietatis est, ita loqui ἐν αὐτοῖς, i. e. σὺν αὐτοῖς, cum iis, sed inter illos, ut Marc. ix. 50, εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἀλλήλοις, 'Pacem habete inter vos.'"

V. 15. Καὶ εἰς ἀλλήλους, καὶ εἰς πάντας.] Deest καὶ in Vulg. Arab. Sed retinent prius καὶ Græca scholia omnia, atque eam Græci sermonis elegantia postulat. "Sc. quod bonum est, scetemini tam erga Christianos, quam extraneos, seu non modo inter vos ipsos, sed in omnes."

V. 27. Πᾶσι τοῖς ἁγίοις ἀδελφοῖς.] Agnoscunt ἁγίοις Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. interpretesque, dempto Æthiope, omnes. Millius tamen ait Prol. p. 150, col. 2, "Nisi obstaret codicum consensus, medium ἁγίοις pro insititiis haberem."

In Secundæ Epistolæ ad Thessalonicenses capite primo vix aliqua varians lectio expectatione aliorum digna occurrit. V. 8 et 12, d. Χριστοῦ post "Jesum" apud codices aliquos et Græcos scholiastes, cujus quidem vocis subductione sive additamento nihil usitatius est; et cum Ἰησοῦ vel Κυρίου retineatur, si subducas vel addas nomen Χριστοῦ, nullo modo in sensum peccatur. Similiter loco πιστεύουσιν cod. MSS. plur. et omnia Græca scholia legunt πιστεύσασιν, i. e. non iis qui credunt, sed qui crediderunt. At grammatici sciunt quam frequentur omnis sermo utatur aoristo loco temporis præsentis, et vice versa. Vide Glass. lib. iii. tract. 3, can. 46, 47.

Cap. ii. 2.] Œcumenius Χριστοῦ, i. e. Κυρίου, cui lectioni cum patrocinantur Græci patres omnes, Vulg. et Syr. quin genuina sit nullus dubito: cum autem utriusque vocis eadem sit compendiosa scriptio Χοῦ, atque ambæ eandem personam denotent, quid istuc tam mirum si promiscue usurpentur?

V. 3. Ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῆς ἁμαρτίας.] Cyril. Hieros. p. 161, Orig. MSS. contra Cels. p. 89, legunt ἀνομίας, sed scholiastæ Græci, C. Alex. interpretesque veteres, Iren. lib. v. cap. 25, p. 438, Orig. ibid. in textu, et contra Cels. p. 307, in Matt. p. 347, in Joh. p. 76, legunt ἁμαρτίας, Hilarius D. "peccati:" quæ huic lectioni satis firmamenti addunt, nec re dissident hæc verba ἁμαρτία γάρ ἐστιν ἀνομία, Joh. iii. 4.

V. 4.] "Omittit λεγόμενον Origenes," ita Mill. festinanter: habent enim πάντα λεγόμενον Θεὸν non modo Cyril. Hieros. p. 161, Cyril. Alex. de Ador. Sp. p. 309, Græci scholiastæ omnes et Hilarius D.; sed Orig. etiam contra Cels. p. 89 et 307, in Matt. p. 242.

Ὡς Θεόν.] Deest MSS. quibusdam, Iren. lib. v. cap. 25. Orig. contra Cels. locis jam dictis, Cyril. Hieros. C. Alex. Vulg. "Insertum in contextum nullus dubito," ait Millius Prol. p. 65, col. 2. Sed agnoscunt ὡς Θεὸν omnia Græca scholia, Cyril. Alex. Glaph. in Gen. p. 178, Theodoret. Hær. Fab. lib. v. cap. 23, Syr. Arab. Ita eorum qui huic dictioni suffragantur major est numerus, quam qui adversantur.

V. 8. Ὃν ὁ Κύριος ἀνελώσει.] Orig. Cyril. Hieros. Constit. Apost. lib. vii. cap. 72, legunt ἀνελεῖ, fortasse ex eo quod versio τῶν LXX. ita se habeat Isa. xi. 4. Utram harum vocum legerint patres Latini nemo pronunciare potest, sed lucem his dabunt Chrysostomi hæc verba in Psal. xliv., καὶ ἄλλος προφήτης φησὶ, παράξει τὴν γῆν λόγῳ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, καὶ πνεύματι χειλέων ἀνελεῖ ἀσεβῆ, τὰ αὐτὰ τῷ Παύλῳ φθεγγόμενος· λέγουτι ὃν Κύριος ἀνελώσει τῷ πνεύματι στόματος αὐτοῦ, tom. iii. ed. Mor. p. 214; ita legunt reliqui Græci scholiastæ.

V. 11. Διὰ τοῦτο πέμψει.] Orig. contra Cels. p. 307, Iren. Cyril. Hieros. p. 166, legunt πέμπει, sed Græca scholia, Orig. ibid. p. 90, Iren. lib. v. cap. 28, legunt πέμψει, et Cyrillus ait, τὸ δὲ πέμπει ἀντὶ τοῦ συγχωρεῖ γίνεσθαι.

V. 13.] Omnia Græca scholia, et C. Alex. legunt, non εἶλαο, sed εἵλετο, pariter ac textus.

Cap. iii. 4. Ἃ παραγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν.] Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. interpretesque omnes, si a Vulgato discesseris, agnoscunt ὑμῖν at Prol. p. 49, "accessit ad absolvendam sententiam."

SECTIO NONA—EPISTOLA AD TIMOTHEUM.

Cap. i. 4. Οἰκοδομίαν Θεοῦ.] Ita Vulg. Hilarius D. patres Latini, Syrus. Irenæus his verbis, αἵτινες ζητήσεις μᾶλλον παρέχουσι, καθὼς ὁ ἀπόστολός φησιν, ἢ οἰκοδομὴν Θεοῦ τὴν ἐν πίστει, Lat. "quam ædificationem Dei quæ est in fide," p. 1; sed Græca scholia, et codices MSS. habent οἰκονομίαν, nec ab hac mutatione sensus multum patitur, cum ædificatio sit hujus οἰκονομίας fructus genuinus.

V. 14. Ὑπερπλεόνασε, et 16, πρώτῳ.] Τὸ πρώτῳ habent Græca scholia, C. Alex. versionesque Vulgata et Arab. et v. 18, ἐν αὐταῖς, agnoscunt Græca scholia omnia, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Hilar. D. et tamen Millius, "ὑπὲρ pro more e margine transtulerunt librarii in textum," Prol. p. 160, et "πρώτῳ valde suspectum est παρεμβλήσεως," p. 49, et rejicitur p. 139, col. 2, et "ἐν αὐταῖς scholiastæ cujusdam est, non apostoli," Prol. p. 124, nimirum Æthiops hic "archetypum textum retinet, licet ab ipso cæteri, quod video, abierint," Ibid. col. 1.

V. 17. Μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ.] Deest σοφῷ in C. Alex. Clar. Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Tertulliano, Novatian, Hilario D. August. Pseud-Hieron. nec attingunt in Com. Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. "Suspicatur Estbius, id quod res est, ex Rom. xvi. 27 hoc a Græcis quibusdam, diversa loca confundentibus, adscriptum esse, sicut et in Epistola Judæ:" Hæc Millius. Atqui non Arabs modo, sed omnia Græca scholia habent σοφῷ in textu, et satis attingunt in commentariis. Nempe secundum Theodoretum hæc exclamatio est ὕμνος τῇ τριάδι, secundum Chrysostomum et Œcumenium ταῦτα περὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, rationemque reddit Theophylactus αὐτὸς γάρ ἐστι ἡ σοφία τοῦ πατρός, Theodoretus in lib. v. de Hær. Fab. cap. 1, p. 251, hæc habet verba, βοᾷ δὲ καὶ ὁ ἀπόστολος ἀφθάρτῳ, ἀοράτῳ, μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ, et in dial. 2 de Trinit. quem illi attribuit Garnerius, eadem reperias, tom. v. p. 300. Maximus confessor in eodem dialogo illa ipsa verba bis recitat, p. 410, 422.

Cap. ii. 7. Ἀλήθειαν λέγω ἐν Χριστῷ.] Desunt ἐν Χριστῷ MSS. plur. vetustis versionibus, Chrysost. Theophyl. Habent autem Theodoret. et Œcumen.

Cap. iii. 3. Μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ.] Non habent cod. MSS. multi, Vulg. Hilarius D. Syr. Arab. Theodoret. et Theophylact. "Irrepsit ex Ep. ad Tit." Prol. p. 89. Habent autem Chrysostomus, Œcumen. C. Alex. S. Basil. tom. ii. p. 476, 477. Et vocem hanc postulant sequentia διακόνους ὡσαύτως, N. B. μὴ αἰσχροκερδεῖς, et Tit. i. 7, ubi eadem res agitur.

V. 6. Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκί.] Hanc lectionem contra Vulgatam suam et Hilar. D. pulcherrime propugnat Mill., in eo solo lapsus quod ait "Greg. Nyssenum primum fuisse omnium luculentum hoc apostoli testimonium usurpasse video." Eodem enim antea usi sunt Athanas. de Incarn. Verbi, tom. i. p. 592, atque Orig. contra Cels. lib. iii. p. 129.

Cap. iv. 16. Ἐπίμενε αὐτοῖς.] Ita Græca scholia, Vulg. Hilar. D. Syr.: dicente autem Millio, Prol. p. 124, col. 2, "medium ἐπίμενε αὐτοῖς, adscripsit jam olim ad marginem scholiastes aliquis, unde irrepsit in textum."

Cap. v. 4. Καλὸν καί.] Desunt in MSS. plurimis, Græcis scholiis, et versionibus cunctis; fortasse, eo quod supervacanea hæc verba putarint: quod enim acceptum est coram Deo, id non potest non esse bonum et honestum. Similiter v. 5, καὶ ταῖς προσευχαῖς omittunt, ut superfluum credo, cod. Latini plurimi,

V. 16. Εἴ τις πιστὸς ἢ πιστή.] Sic Græca scholia omnia, Hilar. D. Syr. Arab. sed "præfixit πιστὸς lector quispiam," ita Mill. Prol. p. 71.

V. 19. Ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ δύο ἢ τριῶν μαρτύρων.] Ita versiones omnes, C. Alex. Theodoret. Œcum. et Theophylact. Ait tamen Millius, Prol. p. 49, "Vulg. Hilarii lectio, quæ est simpliciter μὴ παραδέχου, omnino genuina est, qui expressiora et clariora hic volebat, adjecit ad marginem ἔκτὸς εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ δύο ἢ τριῶν μαρτύρων· quod quidem mox ut in textum irrepserit, nil mirum si in omnes demum codices invaserit."

V. 21. Μηδὲν ποιῶν κατὰ πρόσκλισιν.] Quædam exempla MSS. Chrysost. et Œcum. legunt πρόσκλησιν, Basilius et Theodoretus πρόσκλισιν, sicut etiam Theophylactus, hac simul adhibita observatione, κἂν διὰ τοῦ ῆ γράφεται, τὸν αὐτὸν ἰοῦν σημαίνει.

Cap. vi. 5. Ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων.] Agnoscunt hæc verba omnia Græca scholia, Hilarius D. Syr. Arab. et sensus sine his non plenus est: male igitur putat Grotius ob hanc solam rationem ea addita fuisse, et post illum Millius, "a lectore addita ad complendum sensum," Prol. p. 123, præsertim cum Græci scholiastæ et patres diserte notent quod apostoli mandatum non sit, "Disputa cum," sed "Segrega te ab illis."

V. 9. Εἰς ἐπιθυμίας ἀνοήτους.] Ita Syr. C. Alex. et omnia Græca scholia in textu, Chrysost. in margine commentarii, Basilius, tom. ii. p. 450; sed Vulg. &c. ἀνωφέλους, quod fere idem sonat; quæcunque enim cupiditas stulta et temeraria est, eam quoque inutilem et nocivam esse, quis dubitat?

V. 20.] Chrysostomus et Theophylactus hic παρακαταθήκην legunt, sed Theodoretus et Œcumenius, παραθήκην, sine discrimine, teste Phavorino, παραθήκη λέγε καὶ παρακαταθήκη, οὕτω γὰρ καὶ ἀρχαιοὶ λέγουσι· παραθήκη, παρακαταθήκη. Hesychius.

SECTIO DECIMA—EPISTOLA SECUNDA AD TIMOTHEUM.

Cap. i. 11. Ἐθνῶν.] Habent Gr. scholia, versiones, Hilarius D. exemplaria, si bina excipias, omnia, sed Prol. p. 145, col. 1, "ἐθνῶν est Ep. ad Timotheum prioris;" cur non eadem sententia etiam posterioris?

Cap. ii. 19. Τὸ ὄνομα Χριστοῦ.] MSS. plurimi, scholiastæ, interpretesque omnes legunt Κυρίου, hæc ergo est germana lectio: cum vero eadem persona sit tum Christus, tum Dominus, idem utriusque sensus est.

V. 21. Ἀπὸ τούτων.] Occurrunt hæc verba apud Orig. contra Cels. lib. iv. p. 210, in uncis. Desunt Philoc. p. 65, 66, idque ob rationem non cognitu difficilem; verba enim hæc vel referuntur ad profana, et inaniloquia Hymenæi et Phileti, vel ad vasa in contumeliam facta; ideoque, detractis iis, fit sententia generalis, "Si quis emundaverit se, erit vas in honorem," sed retinent Græci scholiastæ, C. Alex. Hilar. D. et versiones omnes.

Cap. iii. 3. Ἄστοργοι, ἄσπονδοι.] Agnoscunt hæc verba C. Alex. scholiastæ, et versiones. Grotius autem, "Forte huc inserta sunt ex Rom. i. 31." Cum vero desint in unico Syro, si conjecturis et suspicionibus hujusmodi coarguantur tot testimonia, quid certi de textu habere possumus?

V. 16. Θεόπνευστος, καὶ ὠφέλιμος.] Ita scholiastæ, C. Alex.: Hilarius autem D. et versiones omittunt καί.

Cap. iv. 8. Πᾶσι τοῖς ἠγαπηκόσι.] Omnia Græca scholia, et C. Alex. legunt πᾶσι, quod satis est ad firmandam hanc lectionem. Deest πᾶσι apud Ger. Vulg. Hilarium D. Pseud-Hieron.: unde Millio "injectum in nostris πᾶσι explicatio est," Prol. p. 49.

SECTIO UNDECIMA—EPISTOLA AD TITUM.

Cap. i. 4. Χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη.] Deest ἔλεος apud Latinos, Syr. Chrysost. Orig. (seu Ruffinum) ad Rom. cujus hæc sunt verba ad Titum, "Vero gratia et pax a Deo patre." Sed Arab. C. Alex. Theodoretus, textui assentiuntur. Œcumenius et Theophylactus rationem afferunt quare apostolus voce ἔλεος hic utitur. Millius tamen ait, "Medium ἔλεος assutum huc haud dubito ex Epist. ad Timotheum," p. 84.

Versum quintum pariter ac in textu recitat Orig. in Matt. p. 362: sic etiam Græci scholiastæ omnes, nisi quod Theophylactus legat non λείποντα sed ἐλλείποντα: unde de quatuor variis lectionibus, quas hic congessit Millius, fiat judicium.

Cap. ii. 7. Ἀφθαρσίαν.] Deest Vulg. Chrysost. Theophylact. "Explicatorium erat (inquit Millius Prol. p. 123) τοῦ ἀδιαφθορίαν, ac postea irrepsit e margine in contextum." Agnoscunt Theodoret. Œcumen. C. Alex. Arab.

Cap. iii. 3. Ἦμεν γάρ ποτε.] Clem. Alex. p. 3, ἦμεν γὰρ ἦμέν ποτε, more sc. rhetorum, Orig. lib. i. contra Celsum, p. 50, in Jer. hom. 5, p. 75, Græca scholia, et versiones omnes legunt cum textu.

V. 10. Κατὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν.] Iren. lib. iii. cap. 3, Tertull. de Præscript. cap. vi. 16, Cyprian. Ep. 59, et ad Quirin. lib. iii. §. 78, Ambrosiaster et Ambros. lib. ii. de Abrahamo, cap. 6, et teste Hieronymo, quidam Græci codices, omittunt καὶ δευτέραν. Sed agnoscunt hæc verba Gr. scholia, et versiones omnes, Cod. Alex. et ipse Hieronymus, Orig. in Cels. lib. v. p. 273, Athanas. ad Adelph. p. 156, ad Maximum, p. 163, Basil. tom. p. 491, Cyril. Alex. de Ador. Sp. p. 486. Porro hic loci plura sunt testimonia incaute, pene dixerim falso, citata. Nam Iren. lib. iii. cap. 3, ed. Ox. p. 204, habet μετὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν παραιτοῦ. At, lib. iii. cap. 13, p. 78, οὗς ὁ Παῦλος ἐγκελεύεται μετὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν παραιτεῖσθαι, Lat. "post primam et secundam correptionem devitare," Cypr. ad Quirin. lib. ii. §. 78, ad hunc modum legit ad Titum, "Hæreticum hominem post primam aut secundam correptionem devita." Et Hieronymus non asserit Gr. codices omisisse, καὶ δευτέραν, sed loco correptionis, rectius legendum esse νουθεσίαν "commonitionem."

Ver. 15. Χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν.] "Gratia Dei," ita Vulg. Hilar. D. Pseud-Hieronym. "Gratia Domini nostri," Clar. Ger. Lat. sed Græca scholia, Syr. et Arab. textum sequuntur, et monente hic Hieronymo, "nec nostri," in libris feruntur authenticis.

SECTIO DUODECIMA—EPISTOLA AD PHILEMONEM.

V. 2. Ἀπφίᾳ τῇ ἀγαπητῇ.] Sic Gr. scholiastæ, Syr. Arab. Sed Millius ex nimia in Vulgatum indulgentia, magis probat ἀδελφῇ, quam, inquit, mutavit quispiam in ἀγαπητῇ, Prol. p. 135.

V. 6. Ἐνεργής.] V. l. ἐναργὴς evidens, cui astipulantis Esthii testimonium profert, reclamantibus non tantum omnibus Gr. scholiis, C. Alex. Syro, et Arabe, sed etiam Hilario D. et Hieronymo qui ait in Græco melius ἐνεργὴς efficax, unde a Vulgato suo invitissimus dissentit.

Τοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν.] Sic Vulg. Hieron. Theophyl. Esthiusque ait, "Hanc esse veram lectionem ipse orationis contextus ostendit." Sed Chrysostom. Theodoret. Œcum. legunt ἐν ἡμῖν, "in nobis Christianis," omni in sensu discrimine remoto.

V. 20. Τὰ σπλάγχνα ἐν Κυρίῳ.] V. l. ἐν Χριστῷ, Syr. Hilar. D. Chrysost. Theophylact. Sed Theodoret. Œcumen. Arab. ἐν Κυρίῳ, atque "hæc (ait Esthius) est verior lectio," quanquam in sensu non est diversitas.

SECTIO DECIMA TERTIA—EPISTOLA AD HEBRÆOS.

Cap. i. 1. Ἐπ' ἐσχάτων τῶν ἡμερῶν τούτων.] MSS. quidam Orig. in Joh. p. 56, Theodoret. in Isa. ii. et. Hær. Fab. lib. v. cap. 2, et Athanas. legunt ἐπ' ἐσχάτου. Sed Græci scholiastæ omnes textum præferunt, et in synopsi quadam, quam spuriam esse omnes fatentur, ac in Disp. de Nicen. Concil. Decretis, de qua critici certant, Athanasius legit ἐσχάτου· sed orat. 2 contra Arian. p. 36, et de Hum. Nat. Suscept. p. 605, bis legit ἐσχάτων, quam genuinam esse lectionem nullus dubito; his enim verbis LXX. Interpr. fere semper Hebraica illa באחרית הימים interpretantur.

V. 3. Δι' ἑαυτοῦ καθαρισμὸν ποιησάμενος.] Agnoscunt δι' ἑαυτοῦ Gr. scholiastæ omnes, præterquam Theodoretus, qui tamen habet αὐτοῦ cum spiritu aspero, quod in idem recidit. Frustra igitur dicit Mill. Prol. p. 95, "δι' ἑαυτοῦ insertum esse claritatis gratia." Iidem etiam scholiastæ retinent hic ἡμῶν, quamquam forte desit apud Cyril. Al. Apostolus enim Hebræos alloquitur, ille autem neminem; at Prol. p. 49, "ἡμῶν injectitium est."

V. 12. Ὡσεὶ περιβόλαιον ἑλίξεις αὐτούς, καὶ ἀλλαγήσονται.] Bina exampl. Gr. et Vulg. legunt ἀλλάξεις, sed Gr. scholiastæ C. Alex. Syr. Arab. et versio τῶν LXX. Ps. cii. 26, ἑλίξεις. Vulg. "Mutabis eos," non ex Græco, sed Hebræo תחליפם.

Cap. ii. 7. Καὶ κατέστησας αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὰ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου.] Desunt hæc verba in MSS. plurimis, adde in Œcumenio et Theophylacto. Sed retinentur apud C. Alex. Chrysost. Theodoret. et versiones antiquas omnes.

V. 9. Χάριτι Θεοῦ.] Quidam codices, teste Orig. in Joh. p. 38, et 362, et Theodoret. in locum legebant χωρὶς Θεοῦ, sed, teste Millio, editis certe congruit quicquid uspiam est hodie librorum MSS. Gr. et Lat. Vide præfationem nostram in hoc opus.

Cap. iii. 6. Μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν.] Agnoscunt hæc verba Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versiones omnes, uno excepto Æthiope, quem sequens Mill. ait "Hæc ad marginem adposita in textum posuit scriba perperam, et eadem verba, v. 14, irrepsere ex vers. 6," Prol. p. 124, col. 1.

V. 9. Οὗ ἐπείρασάν με.] Deest με in 4 MSS., sed adest in versionibus, et Gr. scholiis omnibus, in Cyril. Al. Glaph. in Num. p. 393, ubi a v. 7 usque ad finem hujus capitis editis congruit, nisi quod v. 11, pro ὡς legit οἷς, et v. 16, pro οὐ, οὐχί.

Cap. iv. 2. Μὴ συγκεκραμένος τῇ πίστει τοῖς ἀκούσασιν.] MSS. plurima, Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylact. legunt συγκεκραμένους. Sed Vulg. Syr. Cyril. Al. Glaph. in Num. p. 394, textum ipsum exhibent, atque hanc lectionem verborum constructio videtur postulare. Præbent enim sensum planum, viz. Et sermo Moysis de promissione a Deo facta introducendi eos in terram Canaan iis non profuit, quia fidem ei non dabant; altera lectio difficilis, et subobscura est, nimirum, Sermo additus iis non profuit, quia Calebo et Joshuæ ei auscultantibus admixti nun erant.

V. 15. Πεπειρασμένον.] Sic Œcumen. Orig. in Joh. p. 37, 38, et 323, et Theodoretus. Sed Chrysost. Theophylact. et Orig. περὶ Εὐχῆς, p. 50, cum textu πεπειραμένον, eodem sensu.

Cap. v. 12. Διδάσκειν ὑμᾶς τίνα τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Chrysost. ho. 17 in Matt. et Vulg. legunt διδάσκεσθαι, sed Orig. in Joh. p. 18, C. Alex. Gr. scholia, ab excusis non recedunt, et legunt etiam λογίων pariter ac Euseb. contra Marcel. lib. i. cap. 1, p. 3, Cyril. Al. de Ador. Sp. p. 359.

Cap. vi. 3. Καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν.] MSS. quidam et Œcum. legunt ποιήσωμεν· reliqui scholiastæ et versiones cum textu.

V. 10. Καὶ τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης.] Deest κόπου in MSS. Vulg. et Syr. sed quicquid Millius in contrarium dicat occurrit apud Chrysost. in Comment. et apud reliquos interpretes Græcos: ait tamen Mill. Prol. p. 84, col. 1, "τοῦ κόπου irrepsere ex 1 Thess. i. 3," quasi non potuerit apostolus bis idem dicere de eadem re.

Cap. vii. 11. Καὶ οὐ κατὰ τάξιν Ἀαρὼν λέγεσθαι.] Sic omnia Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. Arab. At quoniam hæc verba desunt apud Æthiop. ita Mill. "Commentarium marginalem primitus fuisse puta, non textum," Prol. p. 84, col. 2.

V. 17. Μαρτυρεῖ γάρ.] Ita Theodoret. Œcumenius; μαρτυρεῖται Chrysost. Theophyl.

Cap. viii. 4. Τῶν ἱερέων.] Sic omnia Gr. scholia, Syr. Arab.: sed quia deest in 3 MSS. et Vulg. "adscripsit quispiam ad oram libri, unde mox irrepsit in contextum," ita Mill. Prol. p. 145, col. 1.

V. 9. Οὐ κατὰ τὴν διαθήκην ἣν ἐποίησα.] Chrysost. Theodoret. Theophyl. legunt ἣν διεθέμην, ex vers. τῶν LXX. Jer. xxxi. 32, sed Œcum. C. Alex. Cyril. Al. de Ador. Sp. p. 3, Vulg. Syr. Arab. ἐποίησα.

V. 11. Καὶ οὐ μὴ διδάξωσι ἕκαστος τὸν πλησίον.] Triginta fere MSS. Theodoret. August. Syr. Arab. legunt πολίτην, ex vers. LXX. Interpr.: sed Vulg. Chrysost. Œcum. Theophylact. πλησίον.

V. 12. Καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν αὐτῶν.] Desunt in Vulg. Syr. "Videri possunt irrepsisse ex glossemate," inquit Grotius, reclamantibus C. Alex. Arab. Græcis scholiis omnibus; apostolus ipse etiam iisdem verbis utitur infra cap. x. 17, ubi nulla varians occurrit lectio.

Cap. ix 2. Ἥτις λέγεται ἁγία.] Quanquam omnia Græca scholia legunt ἁγία προπαροξυτόνως, danda illis venia est qui nec linguam Hebraicam, nec tabernaculi structuram recte intelligebant: asserit Capellus ἁγία cum acuto in penultima veriorem esse lectionem (cui fidem adstruit vox ἥτις), propterea quod ἅγια plurali numero dicitur potius de intimo sanctuario: pluralis enim numerus apud Hebræos sæpe vim habet superlativi.

V. 9. Ἥτις παραβολὴ εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστηκότα, καθ' ὃν.] V. l. καθέστηκε· nulla scholia Græca agnoscunt καθ' ἣν adest in solo Vulg. et Œcumenio. Reliqui interpretes, et scholiastæ, habent καθ' ὃν, sub. καιρὸν, sicut Cyril. Alex. de Ador. Sp. p. 347, qui et ibi retinet κατὰ συνείδησιν, una cum Græcis scholiis omnibus, Syro, Vulg. et Arabe. Millio tamen judice, Prol. p. 102, col. 2, "καθ' ἣν omnino recte," et p. 124, col. 2, "κατὰ συνείδησιν accessit aliunde."

V. 10. Δικαιώμασι.] Est lectio illa quam probant omnia Græca scholia, Vulg. Arab.

V. 14. Διὰ Πνεύματος αἰωνίου.] Vulg. Chrysost. Cyril. Al.

de Recta Fide, p. 73, legunt ἁγίου. Syr. Arab. C. Alex. Theodoret. Œcum. Theophylact. Athanas. Ep. ad Serap. p. 180, Ambros. de Sp. Sanc. cap. 8, αἰωνίου.

V. 22.] Agnoscunt σχεδὸν Vulg. Arab. C. Alex. Græca scholia omnia. Deest tantum in Syro, et Æthiope. "Nec dubito (inquit Millius) quin hæc sit genuina lectio, σχεδὸν insertum erat postea ab aliquo lectore de apostolicæ sententiæ veritate sollicito si placet," Prol. p. 130, col. 1. Vide rationem τοῦ σχεδὸν in annotatis nostris ad locum.

Cap. x. 1. Οὐδέποτε δύναται.] Sic Chrysost. Vulg. C. Alex. Arab. respectu habito ad vocem νόμος· reliqui autem Græci scholiastæ et Syrus legunt δύνανται, respicientes ad vocem θυσίας quod verisimilius est, quanquam nulla sit in sensu diversitas.

V. 6. Καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας οὐκ εὐδόκησας.] Sic Græca scholia omnia, quæ satis firmant hanc lectionem.

V. 9.] Retinent ὁ Θεός C. Alex. Græci, cæterique interpretes omnes, si Æthiopem excipias: sed Prol. p. 139, col. 2, "accessit ex v. 7 hujus cap."

V. 11. Καὶ πᾶς μὲν ἱερεύς.] MSS. Syr. Æthiop. Theodoret. Cyril. Al. de Ador. Sp. p. 348, legunt ἀρχιερεύς· sed Chrysostom. Œcumen. Theophylact. Vulg. et Arab. ἱερεύς.

V. 29. Ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη.] Desunt hæc in C. Alex. Chrysost. Habent Orig. hom. 13 in Jer. p. 130, contra Cels. p. 385, Athanas. ad Serap. p. 180, Cyril. Al. de Recta Fide, p. 74, de Ador. Sp. p. 196, Græca scholia, et versiones omnes.

V. 34. Γινώσκοντες ἔχειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς κρείττονα ὕπαρξιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς.] Quoniam Clemens Al. 4 MSS. et Vulg. omittunt τὸ ἐν οὐρανοῖς, "irrepsisse puto hæc (ait Millius) e margine in contextum," sed retinentur apud Syrum, Arab. Græca scholia omnia, Orig. Exhort. ad Martyr. p. 210: quod si una cum C. Alex. MSS. aliquibus, Vulg. Syr. Arab. et Clem. Al. legendum censeamus ἑαυτούς, quis est cui hæc sententia non sit clara et perspicua?

V. 38. Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.] Cl. Al. et Vulg. hic legunt δίκαιός μου· colligit hinc Esthius additum hic olim fuisse pronomen μου post δίκαιος. Eusebius Demonst. Evang. lib. vi. cap. 14, tres affert lectiones, unam sc. editorum; alteram cum μου post δίκαιος, quæ est lectio τῶν LXX. Hab. ii. 4, et Theodoreti, Ep. 122; tertiam μου post πίστεως, quæ, juxta Millium, est lectio Cypriani ad Quirin. lib. i. §. 5, et lib. iii. §. 42, ubi Cyprian. non citat Epistolam ad Hebræos, sed prophetam Habbacuc: aitque Millius, Prol. p. 89, col. 2, "Perperam μου additur post δίκαιος, recte post πίστεως." Sed cum apostolus citet hæc ipsa verba absque μου, Rom. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11, cur sententiam suam hic variarit causa nulla est, præsertim cum lectionem in textu firment omnia Græca scholia.

Cap. xi. 4. Ἀποθανὼν λαλεῖται.] Chrysostom. in textu, Photius, et Œcumenius. Sed λαλεῖ, Chrysost. in Comment. Theodoret. Theophylact. qui diserte ait τίνα τῶν ἀντιγράφων λαλεῖται ἔχουσιν, οὐ καλῶς οἶμαι. Sed hæc est vocum discrepantia sine sensus discrimine; sciebant enim, ait Capellus, λαλεῖσθαι pro λαλεῖν sumi posse: hinc Beza reddit λαλεῖται, "adhuc loquitur." Et Anglicana versio, "yet speaketh."

V. 9. Πίστει παρῴκησεν.] MSS. aliqui habent καὶ παρῴκησεν, omissa πίστει, repugnantibus vero Græcis scholiis et versionibus universis. Sed Prol. p. 160, col. 1, "vercor ut illud πίστει jam olim irrepserit ex albo libri."

V. 31. Ἔτεκεν.] Omittunt Vulg. Æthiop. Agnoscunt Syr. Arab. Gr. scholia universim.

V. 13. Καὶ πεισθέντες.] Hoc licet in se certum fuerit, et teste Erasmo, in cod. Gr. inventum, textui additum esse probant Græca scholia, et versiones omnes, sed sine textus præjudicio; quod enim fide videbant et salutabant, de eo certe persuasi fuerint, necesse est.

V. 23.] Versum inter hunc et sequentem, a Latinis quibusdam interjectum (sc. "Fide magnus factus Moses occidit Ægyptium, considerans dolorem fratrum suorum") nulla agnoscunt Græca scholia, versiones nullæ. Sed Prol. p. 49, col. 2, "vix est quam ut cum Zegero sententiam ipsius apostoli fuisse, lapsa ab initio fere e codicibus."

V. 29. Κατεκόθησαν.] Sic C. Alex. Œcumen. et Theophylact.: κατεποντίσησαν alii, eodem sensu: καταπίνω enim, teste Grotio, pluribus in locis valet et vertitur καταποντίζω.

V. 40. Προβλεψαμένου.] Ita C. Alex. Orig. in Matt. p. 405, Gr. scholia omnia: quod vero apud Clem. Al. p. 515, d. οὗτοι, v. 39, et προειδομένου legitur, nullius momenti est; omittit enim ibi ἐπῃνέθησαν, v. 37, addit de suo, v. 39, post ἐπαγγελίαν, τοῦ Θεοῦ, post προειδομένου, ἀγαθὸς γὰρ ἦν, et cap. xii. 1, post νέφος, ἅγιον καὶ διειδές· "est tamen Clemens ille (Millii judicio, Prol. p. 60, col. 2) in adducendis N. T. locis castus, raro quidpiam ingerens, seu etiam prætermittens:" quod quidem falsissimum esse multis indiciis libro primo probavimus.

Cap. xii. 10.] Addunt hic Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. ἡμᾶς· sed non agnoscunt Gr. scholia, nec Arabs: Vulg. et Æthiop. legunt τὸν Θεὸν, sed Gr. scholia, Syr. et Arabs, τὸν Κύριον cum textu.

V. 15. Ἐνοχλῇ.] Ita MSS. cod. summo consensu; hic Millius, ita etiam Gr. scholia, C. Alex. Clem. Alex. Stro. iv. p. 525, Cyril. Hieros. p. 2, Vulg. Syr. Arab. sed, dicente Millio, "hic vetustissimo certe, et ab ipsis rei Christianæ primordiis inolito errore vera lectio est apud LXX. Interpretes, Deut. xxix. 18, ἐν χολῇ." Hi tamen ibi habent ἔστιν, et καὶ πικρίᾳ, quæ verba apostolus hic omittit.

V. 20. Ἢ βολίδι κατατοξευθήσεται.] Cum desint hæc verba in MSS. plurimis, Græcis scholiastis, excepto Œcumenio, versionibusque cunctis, probabile est ea addita fuisse ex Exod. xix. 13, a quodam, qui extra culpam se esse arbitrabatur, licet expleverit quod, loco e s. scriptura desumpto, defuit.

V. 28. Ἔχωμεν, λατρεύωμεν.] Sic legunt omnia Græca scholia, et C. Alex. ἔχωμεν, unde constat quod apostolus non hic laudet Hebræos, sed moneat, et terreat, cui voci optime respondet λατρεύωμεν, licet Arabs et Theophylactus legunt λατρεύομεν, repugnantibus cæteris interpretibus: sed Prol. p. 71, "indicative ἔσχομεν et λατρεύομεν recte."

Cap. xiii. 9. Μὴ περιφέρεσθε.] V. l. MSS. aliqui, Chrysost. Theodoret. Œcumen. legunt παραφέρεσθε· utrumque vocabulum satis quadrat, inquit Erasmus.

V. 10. Οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν.] Gr. scholia, C. Alex. versiones omnes habent ἐξουσίαν. Sed tamen "Cod. Clar. Ger. Cod. Al. teste Esthio, omittunt ἐξουσίαν, omnino recte; in cæteris plerisque omnibus accessit explicationis gratia," Prol. p. 135, col. 3.

V. 20. Ἐκ νεκρῶν.] V. l. ἐκ τῆς γῆς, Chrysost. Cyril. Hier. Catech. 14, p. 152, Didymus Lat.: reliqui autem interpretes et C. Alex. editis congruunt. Cyril. citat Isa. xl. 11, et Chrysost. ait παρὰ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τοῦτο εἴρηται. Vide Prol. p. 73.

V. 21. Ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ.] Sic Græci omnes, et interpretes orientales; Vulg. solus "in omni bono," unde Millius, Prol. p. 135, col. 2, "medium ἔργῳ irrepsit ex 2 Thess. ii. 17."

SECTIO DECIMA QUARTA—EPISTOLA JACOBI.

Cap. i. 3.] Desunt in Barb. 1 τῆς πίστεως, habent autem Œcumenius, C. Alex. et versiones omnes: "nihilominus (dicente Millio, Prol. p. 49, col. 2) lectioni huic simplici (sc. absque τῆς πίστεως) favet v. 12." Inspice quæso, lector, locum, ut scias viri acumen, et nasum criticum.

V. 19. Ὥστε ἀδελφοί μου.] Vulg. Beda, August. ἴστε, "Scitis, fratres mei." Sed Syr. et Œcumenius, legunt cum textu; "ἴστε (inquit Erasmus) in Gr. codicibus non reperio:" huic loco non admodum congruit juxta Esthium. Hic tamen Millius, Vulgati in gratiam, "Qui sensum apostoli non capiebant, rem expedisse putabant mutando ἴστε in ὥστε," Prol. p. 145, col. 1.

V. 25. Οὗτος οὐκ ἀκροατὴς ἐπιλησμονῆς γενόμενος——οὗτος μακάριος.] Deest hic οὗτος primus apud Vulg. et Syr. secundus apud Cant. ob pleonasmum Hebraicum non intellectum. Sunt autem in Arabe, et Œcumenio, estque, dicente Grotio, pulchra ἀναφορὰ in pronomine οὗτος· et tamen, Prol. p. 129, col. 1, "οὗτος primum insertum puto ex posteriori parte versiculi hujus."

V. 26. Εἴ τις δοκεῖ θρῆσκος εἶναι ἐν ὑμῖν.] "Duo MSS. legunt θρησκὸς, nescio an rectius," Millius. Œcumenius autem θρῆσκος, quod etiam agnoscunt Hesychius et Budæus: "ἐν ὑμῖν quod deest Vulg. Syr. merito videtur adjectum," ita Millius hic, et Prol. p. 123, col. 1: est tamen in Œcumenio, et, teste Erasmo, in Græcis.

Cap. ii. 24. Ὁρᾶτε τοίνυν.] Vulg. et Syr. "vides," omittentes τοίνυν, et mutantes numerum verbi: cum textu legunt Œcumenius, et Arab.; et conclusio ab exemplo Abrahami ducta postulare videtur τοίνυν, "igitur."

Cap. iii. 3. Ἰδοὺ.] V. l. Œcumenius, et Vulg. εἰ δὲ "si autem;" cod. MSS. quidam ἰδέ. Syr. autem "ecce," et ἰδοὺ subsequens, v. 4, 5, lectionem textus adstruit.

V. 5. Ὀλίγον πῦρ.] V. l. Alex. Vulg. Œcumen. ἡλίκον πῦρ. Sed versiones orientales omnes textum sequuntur, et similitudo ducta a nave quæ circumfertur ὑπὸ ἐλαχίστου πεδαλίου, et μικρὸν μέλος, quod hic de lingua dicitur, et Hebraicum adagium a Ben Syra ad hunc modum allatum, "ut parvus ignis magnum rogum conficit, ita mundum nihil æque vastat ac lingua," lectionem textus firmare videantur. Vid. Floril. Hebr. voce Lingua.

Cap. iv. 4. Μοιχοὶ καὶ μοιχαλίδες.] Ita Œcumenius, C. Alex. Arab: sed Vulg. et Syr. omittunt καὶ μοιχαλίδες, et "sic absque dubio apostolus," Mill. p. 49, col. 2: sequitur ἔχθρα, "inimicitia," sic Œcumenius, Syr. Arab. Sed Vulg. et Beda legunt ἐχθρὰ, "inimica:" vide Rom. viii. 7.

V. 12. Εἷς ἐστιν ὁ νομοθέτης.] Addunt καὶ κριτὴς, MSS. quidam, Vulg. Syr. Cyril. Alex. de Recta Fide, p. 57; sed juxta Esthium, et Erasmum, illud non agnoscunt Græca exemplaria: "irrepsit e margine," Mill. p. 145. Non agnoscit Œcumenius.

V. 17.] Deest ποιεῖν in Syr. sed habent Œcumenius, Vulg. C. Alex. Arab. Æthiop.: at "accessit forsan e margine," Prol. p. 164, col. 1.

Cap. v. 5. Ὡς ἐν ἡμέρᾳ σφαγῆς.] Desunt hæc Æthiop. Agnoscunt Œcumenius, Cl. Al. Vulg. Syr. Arab. dicente tamen Millio, "commentarius est, non textus," Prol. p. 124, col. 2.

V. 7. Ἕως ἂν λαβῃ ὑετὸν πρώϊμον καὶ ὄψιμον.] Ita Œcumenius, C. Alex. versiones orientales omnes. Deest ὑετὸν apud Vulg. solum, "omnino recte," Millius: en rationem plane commentitiam; "πρώϊμον καὶ ὄψιμον in s. scripturis etiam de fructu terræ dicitur; id in hoc loco lector quispiam hoc ignorans, ne sententia laboraret, adjecit ὑετὸν," Prol. p. 123, col. 2. Locum scripturæ postulo. Adducit hic Mill. Deut. xi. 14. Jer. v. 24. Hos. vi. 3. Joel. ii. 23. Zech. x. 1, in quibus omnibus de pluvia matutina et serotina disertim sit mentio. Ad textum hunc provocando petit id quod probandum est; contrarium potius suadet hic locus, nempe fructus terræ messemque a pluvia matutina et serotina pendere, Deut. xi. 14. Jer. v. 25, adeoque agricolam hanc pluviam patienter expectare, ut fructus terræ colligat:—sed aliquid dicendum erat in gratiam Vulg.

V. 20. Σώσει ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ.] Vulg. Syr. Arab. Cyril. Al. de Recta Fide, p. 63. Sed "αὐτοῦ occurrit in paucis exemplaribus," inquit Esthius, neque vera lectio est, plurimi enim ad aliorum salutem multum conferunt, qui ipsi nequaquam salutem obtinebunt.

SECTIO DECIMA QUINTA—EPISTOLA PRIMA PETRI.

Cap. i. 8. Ὃν οὐκ εἰδότες.] V. l. ἰδόντες, quod etiamsi verbo discrepet, re tamen idem est; sed in citando Polycarpo labitur hic Millius, non enim ait Polycarpus ὃν οὐκ ἰδόντες ἀγαπᾶτε, sed εἰς ὃν οὐκ ἰδόντες (text, ὁρῶντες) πιστεύετε, lectionis varietate facta in voce ὁρῶντες, in vocem εἰδότες. Nota insuper quod non modo Œcumen. C. Alex. sed. Clem. Al. Stro. iv. p. 575, per totum hoc comma editis congruant.

V. 16. Ἅγιοι γένεσθε.] Ita Œcum. Syr. Arab. "estote," sed MSS. quidam, Vulg. Clem. Al. Stro, p. 473, LXX. Interp. Lev. xi. 44. xix. 2, legunt ἔσεσθε levi discrimine, sive enim dicat Deus "Sancti estote," vel "eritis," utraque lectio mandati vim habet. Vide præcipue Orig. in hom. 11 in Num. f. 111, C, D.

V. 22. Διὰ Πνεύματος.] Desunt in 3 MSS. Vulg. Syr. Hieron.: sed reperias in Œcumenio, Arab. et, teste Erasmo, in Græcis. Sequitur εἰς φιλαδελφίαν ἀνυπόκριτον, ita C. Alex. Œcumenius, versiones orientales omnes. Sed desunt in Vulg. et idcirco "commentarius est." Prol. p. 49, et 124, col. 2.

V. 24. Πᾶσα δόξα ἀνθρώπου.] Syr. Vulg. et (ait ille) Orig. legunt αὐτῆς, unde "ἀνθρώπου pro αὐτῆς est explicatio marginalis," Prol. p. 123, col. 2; sed Œcum. Arab. et versio τῶν LXX. Isa. xl. 7, ab excusis non discedunt.

Cap. ii. 5. Πνευματικὰς θυσίας.] Sic Œcumen. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. nec ulla hic varians lectio: at Prol. p. 130, col. 1, ex fide Syri, ait Millius, "πνευματικὰς, quod est in Græcis omnibus nostris, e margine omnino videtur irrepsisse."

V. 7. Λίθον ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασαν οἱ οἰκοδομοῦντες, οὗτος ἐγενήθη εἰς κεφαλὴν γωνίας.] Quanquam agnoscunt hæc verba Vulg. C. Alex. Œcumenius textu et commentario, Grotio tamen adstipulatur Millius, atque ait, "Traducta sunt huc ex Matt. xxi. 42. Consule Œcumenium in locum:" en ergo Œcumenii verba, ἔσται οὖν ὅλον οὕτως, ἰδοὺ τίθημι ἐν Σιὼν λίθον ἀκρογωνιαῖον——καὶ ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ οὐ μὴ καταισχυνθῇ, ἔντιμον ὑμῖν τοῖς πιστεύουσιν, ἀπωθοῦσι δὲ, λίθον προσκόμματος, ὃν λίθον ἀπεδοκίμασαν μὲν οἱ οἰκοδομοῦντες, οὗτος ἐγενήθη εἰς κεφαλὴν τῆς γωνίας· συνάγων μὲν τοὺς πιστεύοντας εἰς αὐτὸν· imo textum ipsum διαῤῥήδην legit cum editis.

V. 18. Ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς σκολιοῖς.] Ita Œcumenius, et C. Alex. sed δυσκόλοις dyscolis, Vulg.: unde "hanc lectionem genuinam esse arbitror, utut e MSS. omnibus libris sit jam extrusum," Prol. p. 49, reclamantibus Esthio et Erasmo, porro Hesychius et Phavorinus σκόλια interpretantur δυσχερῆ, δύσκολα· sed Mill. pro Vulgato stat.

V. 24. Οὗ τῷ μώλωπι αὐτοῦ.] Pleonasmus est Hebræis familiaris, ac proinde noster interpres neglexit:" Esthius in locum.

Cap. iii. 5. Αἱ ἐλπίζουσαι ἐπὶ τὸν Θεόν.] Omittit hæc Æthiops. Habent Œcumen. Vulg. Syr. Arab. "Suspectum habeo παρεμβλήσεως. Quis talia prætermiserit?" Ita Mill. Prol. p. 124, col. 1. Respondeo, Turbida versio Æthiopica, ut cam vocat Mill., in qua apparet immanis nonnunquam a litera textus aberratio, Prol. p. 121, col. 1.

V. 7. Εἰς τὸ μὴ ἐκκόπτεσθαι.] V. l. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. legunt ἐγκόπτεσθαι, "quæ videtur vera lectio," ita Millius hic. Sed pace illius dicam, Œcumenius legit ἐκκόπτεσθαι, nec cognitu facile est quid Græce legerint Syr. et Arab.: cum enim de junctis precibus habeatur oratio, utrum dicas "impediatur," an "intercidatur," parvi refert.

V. 15. Αἰτοῦντι ὑμᾶς λόγον περὶ τῆς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐλπίδος.] Orig. contra Cels. lib. vii. p. 339, legit ἡμᾶς et ἡμῖν, sed antiqui omnes interpretes, Basil. tom. i. p. 549, et Chrysost. ed. Mor. tom. iv. p. 70, editi congruunt.

V. 16. Ὡς κακοποιῶν.] Desunt hæc apud Vulg.: habent Œcumen. C. Alex. versiones orientales omnes: atqui Prol. p. 49, col. 2, "accedunt hæc commentarii loco, ex cap. ii. 12."

V. 18. Περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν ἔπαθε.] V. l. ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν ἀπέθανε, absque sensus discrimine: quod autem ἔπαθε, in quo Œcumenius et Arab. textui conveniunt, sit vera lectio apparet ex illatione facta, cap. iv. 1, Χριστοῦ οὖν παθόντος. Nota etiam quod Orig. in Joh. p. 126, et Œcumen. legunt v. 18, ζωοποιηθεὶς Πνεύματι, et v. 19, τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασιν, et v. 20, ἅπαξ ἐξεδέχετο, ut et Cyril. Alex. de Recta Fide, p. 20, quorum auctoritas contrariarum hic lectionum idonea confutatio est.

Cap. iv. 1. Ὁ παθὼν ἐν σαρκὶ.] Præpositio ἐν quæ deest in 5 MSS. retinetur apud Œcumenium, versionesque omnes: male ergo rejicitur a Grotio, et Millio, Prol. p. 94.

V. 3. Ἀρκετὸς γὰρ ἡμῖν ὁ παρεληλυθὼς χρόνος τοῦ βίου.] Desunt ἡμῖν et τοῦ βίου, Vulg. et Clem. Al. Pæd. lib. iii. cap. 17, p. 258. "Injectæ sunt claritatis gratia," inquit Millius, Prol. p. 123, col. 2: sed Œcumen. legit, et agnoscunt Erasmus et Esthius hanc esse lectionem Græcorum codicum, eamque lectioni Vulgatæ anteponunt.

V. 14. Κατὰ μὲν αὐτοὺς βλασφημεῖται, κατὰ δὲ ὑμᾶς δοξάζεται.] Desunt hæc verba in 4 MSS. Vulg. et Syr. sed extant apud Œcumen. C. Alex. Cyprian. Ep. ad Martyr. Ed. Ox. p. 175: et tamen Prol. p. 67, col. 2, "injecta videntur ex scholio quopiam."

V. 16. Ἐν τῷ μέρει τούτῳ.] Œcumen. Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τούτῳ, quod si dicas "in hac parte," vel "eo nomine," idem valet ac "ea gratia."

Cap. v. 2. Ἐπισκοποῦντες.] Ita Œcumenius, C. Alex. interpretes omnes: sed Prol. p. 166, col. 1, "unus obstat codicum consensus, et vix quidem obstat quo minus intermedium ἐπισκοποῦντες marginale scholion ob pleniorem loci explicationem esse censeam."

Οὐκ ἀναγκαστῶς ἀλλ' ἑκουσίως.] Vulg. Hieronym. et MSS aliqui, addunt κατὰ Θεὸν, sed verba ista non reperiuntur in Œcumenio, Syro, Arabe, nec, teste Erasmo, in codicibus Græcis.

V. 5. Ὑποτασσόμενοι.] Deest Syr.: habent Œcumenius, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop.: quod si Millium auscultes, Prol. p. 166, col. 1, "lector quispiam adjecit ὑποτασσόμενοι ad marginem, in sententiæ supplementum, quod irrepsit postea in textum."

SECTIO DECIMA SEXTA—EPISTOLA SECUNDA PETRI.

Cap. i. 3. Διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς.] V. l. ἰδίᾳ δόξῃ καὶ ἀρετῇ, Vulg. Cyril. Al. de Trin. p. 604: sed Œcum. Syr. Arab. cum textu legunt.

V. 9. Καὶ πλεονάζοντα.] Desunt hæc in unico Æthiop. Agnoscunt Œcum. C. Alex. versiones: "addita tamen sunt a quopiam adnotatore," Prol. p. 125, col. 1.

Cap. ii. 11. Οὐ φέρουσι κατ' αὐτῶν παρὰ Κυρίῳ βλάσφημον κρίσιν.] Desunt παρὰ Κυρίῳ, in Vulg. Syr.: "unde scholion est non textus," Prol. p. 76. Habent autem Œcum. Arab. et teste Esthio, quidam e vetustioribus codicibus, recte; boni enim et mali angeli adstant coram Domino, et ab eo mandata recipiunt, Job. i. 6. ii. 1.

V. 12. Γεγεννημένα.] Agnoscunt hanc vocem Œcum. C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. Cur autem pro additamento habeatur, causa nulla est.

V. 17. Οἷς ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους εἰς αἰῶνα τετήρηται.] Desunt εἰς αἰῶνα in Vulg. Syr. Sed habent Œcum. C. Alex. Arab. et Jud. v. 13. "Insertum esse," hariolatur Mill. Prol. p. 50, col. 1.

V. 18. Τοὺς ὄντως ἀποφυγόντας.] MSS. quidam, Vulg. Syr. legisse videntur ὀλίγου, vel ὀλίγως, sed Œcum. Arab. et major pars Gr. codicum, teste Esthio, textui assentiuntur.

V. 20. Εἰ γὰρ ἀποφυγόντες.] Οἱ γὰρ 3 MSS. vera lectio, inquit Grotius, ut series sequentium indicat, sed Œcumen. C. Alex. versiones omnes editis congruunt, et pace Grotii, ipsa apostoli verba.

Cap. iii. 2. Ὑπὸ τῶν ἁγίων προφητῶν.] Medium ἁγίων, quod jam locum habet in codicibus fere omnibus "initio scholion marginale fuisse suspicor, ex cap. iv. lib. i.) 21 hujus ep." Mill. p. 156, col. 2.

Καὶ τῆς τῶν ἀποστόλων ἡμῶν ἐντολῆς τοῦ Κυρίου.] Non video, cur constructio vers. Angl. i. e. τῆς ἐντολῆς ἡμῶν τῶν ἀποστόλων τοῦ Κυρίου, Millio displiceat; quid enim huic loco magis aptum quam certiores facere Judæos, quod qui hæc illis mandata tradiderunt, apostoli fuere Domini nostri et salvatoris. Vide 1 Pet. i. 12.

V. 6. Δι' ὧν.] Arab. legit, δι' ὅ, "per quam aquam," δι' ὅν, August. nempe, λόγον· sed Œcumen. C. Alex. Vulg. Syr. δι' ὧν, sc. ὑδάτων, per aquas illas quæ ex cœlo et terra provenerant: atque hanc esse veram lectionem liquet, non tantum ex eo quod rei gestæ respondeat, sed etiam ex igne ei opposito, quo mundus demum conflagrabit.

V. 11. Ὡς κλέπτης ἐν νυκτί.] Desunt ἐν νυκτὶ in Vulg. et Syr. sed Œcum. et Arab. retinent hæc verba: et cum adjungantur hæc voci κλέπτης omnibus aliis in locis, in quibus istius diei fit mentio, viz. Matt. xxiv. 23. Luc. xii. 39. 1 Thess. v. 3, cur hic a se invicem separentur, causa nulla est.

V. 12. Παρουσίαν τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμέρας.] Vulg. Arab. August. τοῦ Κυρίου· Œcum. C. Alex. Syr. Θεοῦ. "Dei dies eadem quæ Christi," Grot. in locum.

SECTIO DECIMA SEPTIMA—EPISTOLÆ JOHANNIS.

1 Ep. cap. i. 7. Τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ.] Omittit unicus Æthiops, reclamantibus Œcumenio, C. Alex. et reliquis Græcis Latinisque omnibus: "additi tamen videtur," Prol. p. 125.

Cap. ii. 5. Αὐτοῦ τὸν λόγον.] "Verbum ejus," Vulg.: ex hac autem non dicenda est lectio varians, sed Gr. sermonis vera interpretatio.

V. 7. Ἀδελφοί.] V. l. ἀγαπητοί, hæc vocum harum variatio sæpius accidit in scholiis tam Græcis quam Latinis, ex eo, ni fallor, quod sancti patres in suis homiliis posterius vocabulum priori anteposuerunt ἀπ' ἀρχῆς. Deest hic in Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Sed retinetur apud Arab. et Œcumenium.

V. 18. Καὶ καθὼς ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται.] Deest ὅτι in C. Alex. Æthiop. "non male," Grotius: immo male; habent enim Iren. lib. iii. cap. 18, p. 241, Orig. in Matt. p. 402, Œcum. Vulg. Arab.

V. 19. Οὐκ εἰσὶ πάντες ἐξ ἡμῶν.] Deest πάντες in Syr. Iren. lib. iii. cap. 18, habent Œcum. C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. "Ex memoria videtur allegasse Irenæus:" Grabius in locum.

V. 23. Πᾶς ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν υἱὸν, οὐδὲ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει.] Addunt cod. MSS. multi, Vulg. Syr. Orig. de Martyr. p. 206, Cyril. lib. ix. in Joh. cap. 40, Cyprian. Hilar. August. hæc verba, καὶ ὁ ὁμολογῶν τὸν υἱὸν, καὶ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει. Hæc autem non agnoscunt Œcumenius, aut Arab. "In Græcis non reperio," inquit Erasmus. Et quod huc transferuntur ex Evang. Joh. cap. viii. 19, εἰ ἐμὲ ᾔδειτε, καὶ τὸν πατέρα μου ᾔδειτε ἄν, conjectura colligo, primo, quia Origenes in Joh. p. 261, citat verba ex Johan. Evangelio jam allata, et deinde hæc verba ex ep. cath. et ex utrisque concludit, εἰ γὰρ ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν πατέρα, καὶ τὸν υἱὸν (sup. ἀρνεῖται) καὶ ὁ ὁμολογῶν τὸν υἱὸν καὶ τὸν πατέρα ἔχει, δῆλον ὅτι Ἰησοῦ λεγομένου—— ἀρνούμενοι τὸν πατέρα, ἀρνοῦνται τὸν υἱόν. Secundo, quia in his verbis citandis multum a se invicem discrepant patres. De Augustino hoc testatur Millius hic. Hilarius de Trin. lib. vi. p. 124 sic legit, "Qui confitetur filium habet et patrem." Cyprianus de Exhort. ad Mart. p. 173, "et filium et patrem habet:" Cyril. Alex. Thes. 301, ante hæc verba addit, ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν πατέρα, καὶ τὸν υἱὸν ἀρνεῖται.

Cap. iii. 2.] Octo hic variantes lectiones habemus: sed versionibus prætermissis, Orig. in Matt. p. 476, et Œcumenius impressis congruunt, nisi quod Origenes omittit δέ, et Œcumen. legit ὅτι ταύτῃ. Sic etiam v. 8—10, licet sex afferantur variæ lectiones, Œcum. et Origen. Joh. p. 299, nullibi discedunt, nisi ubi loco ὁ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην, Orig. legit ὁ ὢν δίκαιος, quod idem valet.

V. 14. Ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφόν.] Deest ἀδελφὸν in Vulg. et 4 MSS.: unde "lectoris est, non apostoli," Mill. Prol. p. 145, col. 2, sed habent Œcum. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. apostolus, cap. ii. 10.

V. 20. Ὅτι ἐὰν ——ὅτι μείζων ἐστὶν ὁ Θεὸς.] Deest ὅτι in 2 MSS. Vulg. Arab.: "ἔτι legi vult Stephan." sic Mill. Sed ὅτι agnoscunt cod. plurimi: Arab. reddit "profecto," quam interpretationem veram esse existimo; Hebraicum enim כי, quod primario significat nam et exponitur a LXX. per ὅτι, alio sensu significat certe, et in versione Anglicana exponitur per voces quæ idem valent, "surely, certainly:" ita Gen. xliii. 10, "Si non intercessisset dilatio, כי, ἤδη ἄν, sane, jam vice latera venissemus;" Ex. iii. 10, ὅτι, "Certo ego ero tecum;" 1 Reg. i. 13, ὅτι, "Procul dubio Solomon regnabit post me;" Josh. ii. 24, ὅτι, "Profecto tradidit Dominus omnem terram hanc in manus nostras:" ita Ps. lxxvii. 12. cxii. 6. Ex. iv. 25. Numb. xxii. 23. Jud. vi. 16. Ruth i. 10. Isa. vii. 9.

Cap. iv. 3. Πᾶν πνεῦμα ἃ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ τὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα.] "Pro istis codices antiqui (inquit Socrates, H. Eccl. lib. vii. cap. 32), habebant ὃ λύει τὸν Ἰησοῦν." Sed, Millio teste, in hodierna lectione conveniunt exemplaria Græca omnino omnia, ita etiam omnes Græca patres; nam utcunque Millius, Cyril. Al. in contrariam partem adducat, lapsus est in hoc, dum Latinæ interpretationi, "solvit Jesum," nimium credidit: nam tom. i. p. 397, et de Recta Fide, p. 8 et 91, Græca Cyrilli cum textu consentiunt. Porro, "Non dubito (inquit Mill.) quin autographum ipsius Johannis habuerit ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθέναι, sc. ex fide Polycarpi, et Vulg." Prol. p. 33. Sed Cyril. de Recta Fide, ibid. et Œcumen. legunt ἐληλυθότα, quod si Vulg. habeat, "in carne venisse," non inde sequitur illius Græca ab hodierna lectione discrepasse. Siquidem Beza per eadem verba Latine reddidit ἐληλυθότα, et cum, ex sententia Millii, citationes Polycarpi, pro more istorum temporum, negligentius sint prolatæ, quidni in hac etiam citatione Polycarpus eadem incuria laborasse censeatur?

Ver. 3. Καὶ νενικήκατε αὐτούς.] Vulg. Æthiop. et August. αὐτὸν, "omnino recte," Mill. Prol. p. 50. Sed cum textu legunt Œcumen. C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Nec obstat Millii ratio, quod "de Antichristo loquatur;" sunt enim πολλοὶ ἀντίχριστοι. (2.) Sequuntur commate proximo hæc verba in plurali, αὐτοὶ ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου εἰσὶ, quæ textus lectionem corroborant.

V. 16. Μένει ἐν τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐν αὐτῷ.] Posterior hujus periodi pars retinetur apud Œcum. C. Alex. Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. et ver. 15. Sed "absque Græcorum unanimi consensu foret crediderim huc traductum ex v. 15," Mill. Prol. p. 130, col. 1.

Cap. v. 10. Ὁ μὴ πιστεύων τῷ Θεῷ.] MSS. aliqui, Vulg. et Arab. τῷ υἱῷ, rectius, inquit Grotius. Sed Œcumen. et Syrus textui assentiuntur, et sequentia, "Quia non credidit in testimonium quod testificatus est ὁ Θεὸς περὶ τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ," hanc lectionem firmant. Sed Prol. p. 125, col. 1, "ὁ Θεὸς, quod in nostris omnibus adscriptum est, claritatis gratia a lectore quopiam indeque irrepsit in contextum." Mirum est ineptias hasce placere potuisse viro sano! quis ergo de FILIO suo testimonium perhibere, nisi ὁ Θεὸς potuit?

V. 12. Ὁ μὴ ἔχων τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Mill. p. 50, col. 1,

"τοῦ Θεοῦ repetitum est e superioribus." Vane iterum. Agnoscunt Œcumen. C. Alex. Syr. Arab. Æthiop.

V. 13. Ἵνα εἰδῆτε ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον, καὶ ἵνα πιστεύητε.] C. Alex. sic legit, αἰώνιον οἱ πιστεύοντες εἰς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ. Ita etiam Vulg. Syr. Arab. sic, "Hæc scripsi vobis, o qui creditis in nomen filii Dei, ut sciatis quod vitam habetis æternam, quamdiu creditis in nomen filii Dei."

Ver. 20. Ἐν τῷ υἱῷ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ.] Millius l. "Χριστῷ scribarum est, non apostoli; non habet Vulg." Prol. p. 72, col. 1, quod ei certum est indicium παρεμβλήσεως. Habent nihilominus Œcum. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Cyril. Al. de Tr. p. 484.

Cap. ii. 8. Ἵνα μὴ ἀπολέσωμεν ἃ ἠργασάμεθα——ἀπολάβωμεν.] Sic Arab. et Œcumenius, qui alterius cujuspiam lectionis nullam facit mentionem, nisi quod in commentario mutat personam, ut verba ejus melius cohæreant cum præcedentibus. Sed Vulg. Syr. Iren. Lat. p. 242, et C. Alex. legunt ἀπολέσητε, ἐργάσησθε, ἀπολάβητε, nullo sensus discrimine.

Cap. iii. 7. Ὑπὲρ γὰρ τοῦ ὀνόματος.] Omittunt pronomen αὐτοῦ Œcum. et MSS. quidam. Sed agnoscunt illud versiones antiquæ omnes.

SECTIO DECIMA OCTAVA—JUDÆ EPISTOLA.

V. 1. Ἐν Θεῷ πατρὶ ἡγιασμένοις.] V. l. ἠγαπημένοις, Orig. in Matt. p. 332, Œcumen. Vulg. Syr. sine magno discrimine, sanctificatos enim solos Deus diligit.

V. 6. Ὑπὸ ζόφον τετήρηκεν.] Clem. Al. Pæd. lib. iii. cap. 8, p. 239, post ζόφον addit ἀγρίων ἀγγέλων, reclamantibus MSS. versionibus, et patribus. Lucifer Calaritanus, teste Millio, legit ἀγίων.

V. 14. Ἐν ἁγγελιάσει.] Sic Œcumenius et versiones omnes.

V. 25. Μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ.] Ita Œcumenius, Syr. Desunt in Vulg. Arab. Æthiop. "Irrepserunt ut videtur ex Rom. xvi. 27," Prol. p. 94, col. 2. Vide hic annotata in 1 Tim. i. 17.

LIBER TERTIUS.

§. 1. Continet specimen variantium lectionum parvi momenti, puta additionem aut subtractionem articuli. §. 2. Permutationem nominis unius pro altero ejusdem significationis, vel pronominis relativi in nomen substantivum, vel vocum Θεοῦ, Χριστοῦ. §. 3. Adjectivorum permutationem, sine sensus discrimine. §. 4. Pronominum ἡμεῖς, ἡμῶν, ἡμῖν, ἡμᾶς, in ὑμεῖς, ὑμῶν, ὑμῖν, ὑμᾶς, permutationem, et defectus eorundem, ubi si revera deessent, sunt necessario intelligenda: pronominis etiam αὐτὸς defectum, vel additamentum ubi est intellectu necessarium; mutationem denique pronominis αὐτὸς in οὗτος et αὐτὸς cum aspirato in ἑαυτὸς. §. 5. Verborum et præpositionis verbi mutationem sine sensus discrimine, item verbi simplicis in compositum, et vice versa; mutationem etiam personæ, numeri, temporis, modi, conjugationis, vocis. §. 6. Participiorum ejusdem sensus invicem permutationem, simplicis pro composito, et eorundem tempore discrepantium sine sensus discrimine. §. 7. Adverbiorum defectum ubi sunt plane necessaria, aut permutationem, sensu non variato. §. 8. Præpositionum permutationem. §. 9. Conjunctionum mutationem, et defectum. §. 10. Porro multa quæ inter lectionis variantes N. Test. recensentur, sunt tantum patrum citationes ex versione τῶν LXX. §. 11. Multa etiam quæ in alio evangelio, aliave epistola, verbis diversis exprimuntur, variantem lectionem constituunt. §. 12. Objectionibus Romanensium et scepticorum contra textus Græci αὐθεντίαν respondetur.

SECTIO PRIMA—DE ARTICULIS.

Accedo jam ad ultimum, longeque facillimum laboris nostri pensum; nempe ad reducendum sub propriis quibusdam capitibus lectiones variantes parvi momenti, ut ex instantiis paucis sub capite quolibet assignatis, lector intelligat, quam operose nihil egisse videatur Millius in hisce minutiis, quæ sensum verborum neutiquam afficiunt, coacervandis. Hæc quidem omnia sigillatim enumerare idem pene esset ac Millii varias lectiones transcribere; breviter ergo quædam carpendo, lectori reliqua relinquo ex ingenti hoc penu colligenda. Et,

1. Plus centum ex variis hisce lectionibus id tantum monent articulum quendam deesse, vel superaddi, quo tamen addito, idem adhuc manet sensus, eandemque versionem verba exigunt.

Ab additione articuli incipio, ita Matt. i. 17, ἕως Δαβίδ, v. l. τοῦ Δαβίδ. Rom. xiv. 7, Θεοῦ, v. l. τοῦ Θεοῦ. 1 Cor. vii. 34, σώματι καὶ πνεύματι, v. l. τῷ σώματι καὶ τῷ πνεύματι. 1 Cor. xi. 3, κεφαλὴ δὲ Χριστοῦ, v. l. τοῦ Χριστοῦ· ita etiam cap. xv. 24. 1 Cor. xi. 23, ἄρτον, v. l. τὸν ἄρτον. V. 27, αἵματος, v. l. τοῦ αἵματος. 1 Cor. xii. 21, ὀφθαλμὸς, v. l. ὁ ὀφθαλμός.

2. Sæpius indicat varia lectio articulum deesse in codice aut patre quodam, v. g. Matt. xxv. 2, "Quinque autem ex iis erant prudentes," καὶ αἱ πέντε μωραὶ, v. l. d. αἱ Chrysost. Basil. MSS. (in Basilio tamen falli Millium, vide tom. ii. p. 425). Marc. v. 13, ἡ ἀγέλη, v. l. deest ἡ in Pers. Syr. (habet vero Syrus "ille grex). Matt. iv. 21, τὰ δίκτυα, v. l. deest τὰ. Luc. vi. 45, ἐκ τοῦ περισσεύματος τῆς καρδίας, v. l. desunt τοῦ et τῆς. Act. v. 24, ὁ τε ἱερεὺς,, deest ὁ. Rom. iv. 4, κατὰ τὸ ὀφείλημα, deest τὸ. Rom. xiii. 2, ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, deest τοῦ. Rom. xiv. 15, τὰ ἔθνη, deest τὰ. 1 Cor. iii. 11, ὁ Χριστὸς, deest ὁ. V. 19, παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, deest τῷ. Cap. iv. 15, ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, deest τοῦ. vii. 24, παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, deest τῷ. 1 Thess. iv. 1, τὸ λοιπὸν, deest τὸ. Jud. 13, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, deest τὸν, Œcumen.

SECTIO SECUNDA—DE NOMINIBUS.

Plus centies varia lectio exhibet tantum mutationem nominis unius substantivi pro altero ejusdem significationis, eandemque versionem in alias linguas postulante. Ita Matt. ii. 11, τὸ παιδίον, v. l. τὸν παῖδα· et similiter, v. 13, 14. V. 16, πάντας τοὺς παῖδας, v. l. πάντα τὰ παιδία. Ita enim cap. ii. 14. Marc. i. 16, ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, v. l. Σίμωνος. Sexcenties permutantur vocabula Θεοῦ, Κυρίου, Χριστοῦ, quoniam, notante P. Simonio, contractim in antiquis MSS. scripta inveniuntur ad hunc modum, Θοῦ, Κοῦ, Χοῦ. Exempli gratia, Act. xvi. 10, ὁ Κύριος, v. l. ὁ Θεός. Act. xxi. 20, ἐδόξασαν τὸν Κύριον, v. l. Θεόν. Rom. i. 4, τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, v. l. τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Nec rarius inveniatur horum vocabulorum Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, Κυρίου ἡμῶν omissio, cum enim de eadem persona dicta essent, uno eorum posito, reliqua superflua videbantur. 2. Additio, utpote quæ alibi simul occurrebant; vel permutatio, utpote quibus mutatis persona adhuc eadem intelligebatur.

1. Omissio sive defectus, v. g. Matt. xvi. 20, αὐτός ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστός, v. l. d. Ἰησοῦς. Act. xix. 10, τὸν λόγον Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, d. Ἰησοῦ. 2 Cor. xiii. 5, Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, d. 2. Additio. Act. xxiv. 24, περὶ τῆς εἰς Χριστὸν πίστεως, v. l. εἰς Ἰησοῦν, Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. 1 Cor. i. 24, κηρύσσομεν Χριστόν, v. l. Denique sexcenties, Millio judice, ex evangeliis tollenda est vox Ἰησοῦς, cum sit vox plane necessaria, et nominandi casum supplere debeat. Matt. iv. 18, περιπατῶν δὲ Ἰησοῦς, deest Ἰησοῦς. cap. viii. 3, ἥψατο αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦς, d. Ἰησοῦς. Marc. i. 17, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ Ἰησοῦς, d. SECTIO TERTIA—DE ADJECTIVIS.

Adjectiva sæpius permutantur, sine ulla mutatione sensus. Exempli gratia, Matt. vi. 25, πλεῖον, v. l. πλείων, ut conveniat genere cum ψυχὴ. cap. ix. 17, ἀμφότερα, v. l. ἀμφότεροι, nempe ἀσκοὶ καὶ οἶνος. cap. x. 32, τῶν μικρῶν τούτων, v. l. τῶν ἐλαχίστων. cap. xi. 29, πρᾶος, v. l. πραΰς. Marc. v. 40, ἅπαντας, v. l. πάντας. Ita etiam Luc. vii. 16. Luc. xix. 7, ἅπαντες, v. l. πάντες. cap. xxi. 3, πάντων, v. l. ἁπάντων. Vide etiam v. 12. Act. xxii. 12, ἀνὴρ εὐσεβής, v. l. εὐλαβής.

SECTIO QUARTA—DE PRONOMINIBUS.

Notandum primo de pronominibus primitivis ἡμεῖς, ἡμῶν, ἡμῖν, ἡμᾶς, ea sexcenties mutari in ὑμεῖς, ὑμῶν, ὑμῖν, ὑμᾶς, et vice versa,—librariorum, inquit P. Simonius, sive vitio, sive incuria. Hoc autem fere continuo accidit, sensu haud alicubi mutato: cum enim de re omnibus communi sive Christianis, sive ethnicis agitur, vix aliquod discrimen intercedit inter "nos Christianos," et "vos Christianos," "vos gentiles," et "nos de gentibus." Exempli gratia, Luc. xii. 32, "Nolite timere, pusillus grex; qui complacuit patri vestro δοῦναι ὑμῖν τὴν βασιλείαν," v. l. ἡμῖν, i. e. nobis qui sumus, aut vobis qui estis, de hoc pusillo grege. Act. iii. 25, "Vos estis filii prophetarum, et testamenti quod disposuit Deus, πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας ὑμῶν," v. l. ἡμῶν, ubi Judæus Judæos alloquitur. Sic v. 23, ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῶν, v. l. ἡμῶν. cap. xiv. 17, "Implens cibo et lætitia τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν," v. l. ὑμῶν, nimirum omnibus dat cibum. Et rursus eodem commate. Cap. xv. 7. ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν ἐξελέξατο, v. l. ὑμῖν, i. e. in vobis, aut nobis apostolis. Cap. xvi. 17, "Isti homines καταγγέλλουσιν ἡμῖν viam salutis" v. l. ὑμῖν, i. e. vobis aut nobis apud Philippos agentibus. Cap. xxviii. 25, "Bene locutus est Spiritus sanctus πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας ἡμῶν," v. l. ὑμῶν. Ita Paulus Judæus Judæis. 1 Pet. i. 4, εἰς ἡμᾶς, v. l. ὑμᾶς, et v. 12, ἡμῖν, v. l. ὑμῖν, i. e. nobis, aut vobis Christianis:—plura exempla dabunt annotata libro secundo passim.

Porro deficiunt juxta varias lectiones hæc pronomina, ubi si revera abfuissent, necessario intelligenda essent. Ita v. g. ἀφίεται ὑμῖν, "Reliquitur vobis domus vestra deserta," v. l. d. ὑμῖν. Iis tamen solis relinqui potuit hæc domus desolata. Luc. vi. 25, οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, "Væ vobis qui saturati estis," v. l. deest ὑμῖν. Male procul dubio, eo enim desiderato sensus deficit. Joh. iii. 12, ἐὰν εἶπω ὑμῖν τὰ ἐπουράνια, v. l. deest ὑμῖν. Quis autem non videt pronomen ibi prorsus necessarium esse! Joh. xvi. 4, ὅτι ἐγὼ εἶπον ὑμῖν ταῦτα, deest ὑμῖν. Male; præcedunt enim ταῦτα λελάληκα ὑμῖν. Luc. xii. 22, μὴ μεριμνᾶτε τῇ ψυχῇ ὑμῶν, v. l. d. ὑμῶν.

Adduntur insuper, ubi sunt plane superflua.—Ita Luc. xxiii. 2, "Invenimus hunc hominem διαστρέφοντα τὸ ἔθνος," add. v. l. ἡμῶν, nec enim de alia natione loqui potuerunt. Joh. viii. 5, ἐν τῷ νόμῳ, add. v. l. ἡμῶν· non enim de alia lege loqui potuissent scribæ et pharisæi. Act. xxvi. 6, πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας, v. l. ἡμῶν.

2. Pronomen relativum αὐτός in his variis lectionibus sæpe deesse dicitur, cum plane necessarium sit. Ex. gr. Matt. vi. 4, "Pater meus videns in occulto αὐτὸς ἀποδώσει σοι," d. αὐτός. Cap. viii. 21, ἕτερος δὲ τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, v. l. d. αὐτοῦ. Cap. xii. 3. ὅτι ἐπείνασεν αὐτὸς, v. l. d. αὐτός. Matt. xviii. 32, προσκαλεσάμενος αὐτὸν ὁ Κύριος αὐτοῦ, λέγει αὐτῷ, d. αὐτόν et αὐτῷ. V. 34, πᾶν τὸ ὀφειλόμειον αὐτῷ. d. αὐτῷ. Luc. xiv. 16, ὁ δὲ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, v. l. d. αὐτῷ. xv. 26, τὸν παῖδα αὐτοῦ, deest αὐτοῦ. xvii. 9, τὰ διαταχθέντα αὐτῷ, d. αὐτῷ. xxii. 57, ὁ δὲ ἠρνήσατο αὐτόν, deest αὐτόν.—Ita sexcenties.

Sæpe etiam in variis hisce lectionibus adjicitur, ubi est pariter intellectu necessarium. Luc. xviii. 1, ἔλεγε δὲ καὶ παραβολὴν αὐτοῖς παρὰ τὸ δεῖν πάντοτε (v. l. add, αὐτοὺς) προσεύχεσθαι, quod tamen satis comprehenditur in αὐτοῖς. xxiii. 35, ἐξεμυκτήριζον, v. l. αὐτόν. Joh. iv. 17, ἡ γυνὴ εἶπεν, v. l. add. αὐτῷ. xi. 8, λέγουσιν αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταί, v. l. add. αὐτοῦ. Et v. 12, εἶπον οὖν, v. l. add. αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ. Act. ii. 40, παρεκάλει, add. αὐτούς. Marc. ii. 8, ἐπιγνοὺς Ἰησοῦς ὅτι οὕτως διελογίζοντο ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, v. l. ὅτι αὐτοὶ οὕτως.

Idem obtinet in pronominibus possessivis: ita Matt. xx. 21, εἷς ἐκ δεξιῶν σου, καὶ εἷς ἐξ εὐωνύμων, MSS. 25 add. σου Mar. x. 37, εὐωνύμων μου. d. σου. V. 40, εὐωνύμων μου, d. μου. Matt. xv. 4, τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου, v. l. d. σου. Marc. vii. 10, καὶ τὴν μητέρα σου, v. l. d. σου. Vid. Joh. xiv. 12. xvi. 10. xviii. 11. Act. xx. 23, 24.

Porro nihil frequentius est quam permutatio horum pronominum sensu non permutato; ita Matt. iii. 3, οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ῥηθεὶς ὑπὸ Ἡσαΐου, v. l. αὐτός. v. 4, αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Ἰωάννης, v. l. οὗτος. 1 Cor. vii. 13, καὶ αὐτὸς συνευδοκεῖ οἰκεῖν μετ' αὐτῆς, v. l. οὗτος. cap. xvi. 17, ὅτι τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα οὗτοι ἀνεπλήρωσαν, v. l. αὐτοὶ· est enim αὐτὸς juxta grammaticos modo relativum, modo demonstrativum, idemque περὶ τοῦ οὗτος pronunciant.

Invicem pariter mutantur αὐτὸς et ἑαυτός. Ita Matt. vi. 16, ἀφανίζουσι τὰ πρόσωπα αὐτῶν, v. l. ἑαυτῶν. Marc. i. 27, ὥστε συζητεῖν πρὸς αὐτοὺς, v. l. πρὸς ἑαυτούς. v. 26, διαπαήσασα τὰ παρ' ἑαυτῆς πάντα, v. l. παρ' αὐτῆς· cum enim reperiantur αὐτὸς, αὐτοῦ, αὐτό, aspirata, aphæresis est τοῦ ἑ juxta grammaticos.

SECTIO QUINTA—DE VERBIS.

Ter mille hic veniunt adnotanda, ubi

1. Verba mutantur sine ullo fere sensus discrimine. V. g. Matt. ii. 13, futurum est ut Herodes quærat puerum ἀπολέσαι αὐτόν, v. l. ἀποκτεῖναι αὐτόν. Pariter viii. 34, ὃς γὰρ ἂν θέλει ὀπίσω μου ἐλθεῖν, v. l. ἀκολουθεῖν. iii. 4, ψυχὴν σῶσαι, ἢ ἀποκτεῖναι, v. l. ἀπολέσαι. 4. In verbis sæpenumero contingit, primo, mutatio numeri. Matt. i. 21, καλέσεις, v. l. καλέσουσι. (1.) Contingit hoc plus centies ubi nomina multitudinis, aut neutrius generis occurrunt, quæ utrumque numerum admittunt. Ita Matt. x. 21, παραδώσει δὲ ἀδελφὸς, v. l. παραδώσουσι. Rom. iii. 3, τὴν πίστιν τοῦ Θεοῦ καταργήσει, ita Chrysost. Theodoret. Photius, Œcum. Theophylact. MSS. καταργεῖ, καταργήσῃ. vi. 1, ἐπιμενοῦμεν τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ, v. l. ἐπιμένωμεν. Rom. x. 11, πῶς δὲ πιστεύσουσιν—ἀκούσουσι, v. l. πιστεύσωσι — ἀκούσωσιν.

Est denique notandum verbum substantivum in lingua Hebraica præsens tempus non admittere, unde in versione nostra Anglicana τὸ "is," in versione LXX. τὸ ἔστι, sæpissime additur: hinc fere centies notatur τὸ ἔστι apud Novi Fœderis scriptores, quibus Hellenistica lingua in usi fuit: v. g. 1 Thess. ii. 10, ὑμεῖς μάρτυρες, v. l. ἐστέ. Vide 1 Cor. vii. 16. viii. 7. xi. 11. xiv. 10.

SECTIO SEXTA—DE PARTICIPIIS.

1. Participia ejusdem sensus sæpe invicem permutantur: v. g. Matt. iv. 18, τὸν λεγόμενον Πέτρον, v. l. τὸν καλούμενον. ix. 18, ταῦτα αὐτοῦ λαλοῦντος, v. l. λέγοντος. Joh. xix. 28, εἰδὼς Ἰησοῦς, ὅτι πάντα ἤδη τετέλεσται, v. l. ἰδών. Act. xviii. 8, θεασάμενος, v. l. ἰδών. xvii. 13, σαλεύοντες τοὺς ὄχλους, v. l. ταράσσοντες. 1 Cor. v. 2, ὁ τὸ ἔργον τοῦτο ποιήσας, v. l. πράξας. 2 Cor. iii. 7, ἐν γράμμασιν ἐντετυπωμένη, v. l. ἐγγεγραμμένη.

2. Centies tempore differunt sine sensus discrimine: ex gr. Matt. x. 28, μὴ φοβηθῆτε ἀπὸ τῶν ἀποκτεινόντων τὸ σῶμα, v. l. ἀποκτενόντων. xiii. 24, σπείροντι, σπείραντι. xvii. 27, τὸν ἀναβάντα, v. l. ἀναβαίνοντα. Joh. vi. 45, πᾶς ἀκούσας, v. l. ἀκούων. Act. ii. 44, πάντες οἱ πιστεύοντες, v. l. πιστεύσαντες. xxviii. 5, ἀποτινάξας τὸ θηρίον εἰς τὸ πῦρ, v. l. ἀποτινασσόμενος, ἀποτιναξάμενος. 2 Cor. i. 17, τοῦτο οὖν βουλευόμενος, v. l. βουλόμενος, βουλευσάμενος. V. 5, κατεργασάμενος, κατεργαζόμενος,—ἐγείροντι, ἐγείραντι, 2 Cor. i. 9.

3. Multoties participium simplex occurrit pro composito, et vice versa, v. g. Matt. vii. 13, πολλοί εἰσιν οἱ εἰσερχόμενοι δι' αὐτῆς, v. l. ἐρχόμενοι. Luc. xvii. 7, εἰσελθόντι, ἐλθόντι. Joh. xii. 2, εἷς τῶν συνανακειμένων αὐτῷ. v. l. ἀνακειμένων σὺν αὐτῷ. Act. xxi. 4, καὶ ἀνευρόντες, v. l. καὶ εὑρόντες. 2 Cor. iv. 9, ἐγκαταλειπόμενοι, v. l. λιμπανόμενοι, λιπόμενοι.

SECTIO SEPTIMA—DE ADVERBIIS.

Notant, primo, variæ lectiones deesse multoties adverbia, ubi sunt plane vel intellectu necessaria, vel sensu non læso deesse possunt. Luc. vi. 10, ἔκτεινον τὴν χεῖρά σου—ὁ ἐποίησεν οὕτω. v. l. d. οὕτω. Marc. i. 13, τὸ πνεῦμα ἐκβάλλει αὐτὸν εἰς τὴν ἔρημον καὶ ἦν ἐκεῖ ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ, deest ἐκεῖ. Et Act. xiv. 28, "Navigarunt Antiochiam" διέτριβον δὲ ἐκεῖ, d. ἐκεῖ, male procul dubio. Joh. iv. 3, ἀπῆλθε πάλιν εἰς τὴν Γαλιλαίαν, recte: nam e Galilæa ascendit Jesus Hierosolymam ad pascha, ii. 11. 13. At v. l. d. πάλιν. Joh. xviii. 33, εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὸ πραιτώριον πάλιν ὁ Πιλάτος, d. πάλιν, male, egressus enim est e prætorio ad Judæos, ver. 29. V. 38, πάλιν ἐξῆλθε ὁ Πιλάτος πρὸς τοὺς Ἰουδαίους, v. l. d. πάλιν, male iterum. Vide v. 29. Act. v. 23, εὕρομεν τοὺς φύλακας ἔξω ἑστῶτας πρὸ θυρῶν. MSS. 30 deest ἔξω, qui tamen præ foribus stabant, ii certe extra stabant.

Speciatim observandum est de εὐθύς, et εὐθέως, quod quadragies inveniuntur in uno Marci Evangelio, adeo ut mirum non sit ea multoties ibi deesse, in MSS. exemplis; puta i. 10. 29, 30. ii. 2. viii. 14. xliii. 45. Ubi Millius, "Deest Cant. Vulg. Syr. ut fere semper." Matt. iv. 20, οἱ δὲ εὐθέως ἀφέντες τὰ δίκτυα, ubi "εὐθέως insertum est ex evangeliis aliis;" ita Millius, Prol. p. 64, col. 2. Habent autem Chrysost. in Com. Theophylact. versiones omnes, Origenes in Matt. p. 389.

2. Mutantur invicem sæpius adverbia sensu minime mutato. Luc. v. 35. τότε νηστεύσουσιν, v. l. ἀπὸ τότε. xvi. 26, οἱ θέλοντες διαβῆναι ἐντεῦθεν, v. l. MSS. 23, ἐκεῖθεν. Joh. xviii. 20, πάντοτε ἐδίδαξα ἐν τῇ συναγωγῇ ὅπου πάντοτε οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι συνέρχονται, v. l. παντοθέν, omnes nimirum in solennitatibus ex lege adire Hierosolymam tenebantur, adeoque undique convenire illic. xix. 27, ἰδοὺ ὁ υἱός σου, v. l. ἴδε. Act. xxii. 1, νῦν, v. l. νυνί. 2 Cor. ii. 47, κατενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. κατέναντι. iii. 10, ἕνεκεν v. l. εἵνεκεν. iv. 16, ὁ ἔξω ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος, v. l. ἔξωθεν.

SECTIO OCTAVA—DE PRÆPOSITIONIBUS.

Infinitum esset observare loca omnia ubi præpositiones ejusdem potestatis, eundemque sensum exhibentes, inter se permutantur.

Ut, primo, διὰ pro ὑπὸ, et vice versa. Matt. ii. 23, τὸ ῥηθὲν διὰ τῶν προφητῶν, v. l. ὑπὸ. iii. 3, "Hic est qui dictus est" ὑπὸ Ἠσαίου, v. l. διὰ, Vulg. et Iren. In utrisque autem invenimus per. Act. xii. 9, τὸ γενόμενον διὰ τοῦ ἀγγέλου, v. l. ὑπό.

2. Ἀπό, pro ὑπό, et contra. Rom. xiii. 1, οὐκ ἔστιν ἐξουσία εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, v. l. ὑπὸ. Gal. v. 18, οὐκ ἐστὲ ὑπὸ νόμου, v. l. ἀπὸ νόμου.

Ἀπό pro παρὰ, et contra. Act. xxvi. 22, ἐπικουρίας τυχὼν τῆς παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. ἀπό. 1 Cor. xi. 13, ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, v. l. παρὰ τοῦ.

Ἀπό pro ἐκ, et ἐν, ἐκ pro ἀπό. Matt. viii. 34, ἀπὸ τῶν ὁρίων αὐτῶν, v. l. ἐκ. 1 Cor. vii. 7, ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, v. l. ἀπό. Matt. viii. 13, "Sanatus est" ἐν τῇ ὥρα ἐκείνῃ. v. l. ἀπὸ τῆς, &c.

2. Ὑπὲρ pro περὶ, et contra. Rom. i. 5, ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, v. l. περὶ. V. 8. ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, v. l. περὶ. 2 Cor. i. 8, ὑπὲρ τῆς θλίψεως ἡμῶν, v. l. περὶ. xii. 5, ὑπὲρ ἐμαυτοῦ, v. l. περὶ. 2 Cor. i. 13, ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, v. l. περὶ. Gal. i. 4, ὑπὲρ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, v. l. περί. Pro παρὰ, 2 Cor. i. 1, ὑπὲρ ἐνίαμιν, v. l. παρὰ. 2 Cor. xii. 13, "Quid est enim quod minus habuistis" ὑπὲρ λοιτὰς ἐκκλησίας, v. l. παρά.

Sexcenties ἐπὶ pro εἰς, aut ἐν, vice versa: Matt. iii. 13, ἐπὶ τὸν Ἰορδάνην, v. l. εἰς. xviii. 6, ἐπὶ τὸν τράχηλον αὐτοῦ, v. l. εἰς, et περὶ. Luc. viii. 8, ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν τὴν ἀγαθὴν, v. l. εἰς. Joh. vi. 16, κατέβησαν ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, v. l. εἰς. Act. iv. 5, συναχθῆναι τοὺς ἄρχοντας εἰς Ἱερουσαλήμ, v. l. ἐν. Rom. x. 11, ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ, v. l. εἰς αὐτόν. Gal. v. 13, ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ.

Item ἐπὶ, εἰς, pro πρὸς, et vice versa. Act. xvi. 40, εἰς τὴν Λυδίαν, v. l. πρὸς. Rom. x. 21, πρὸς λαὸν ἀπειθοῦντα, v. l. ἐπὶ. Gal. i. 12, πρὸς τοὺς πρὸ ἐμοῦ ἀποστόλους, v. l. εἰς.

1. Aliquoties mutatur tantum casus quem regit præpositio, sensu minime mutato. Ex. gr. Marc. v. 11, "Erat ibi grex porcorum πρὸς τῷ ὄρει, circa montem," Vulg. πρὸς τῷ ὄρει, "apud montem," MSS. 40, Euthym. Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. Joh. xx. 11, Μαρία δὲ εἱστήκει πρὸς τὸ μνημεῖον, v. l. τῷ μνημείῳ. Gal. iv. 12, ἐπ' ἐλευθερίᾳ, v. l. ἐπ' ἐλευθερίαν. Matt. iii. 7, ἐπὶ τὸ βάπτισμα αὐτοῦ, v. l. ἐπὶ τῷ βαπτίσματι.

5. Sæpius deficiunt aut adjiciuntur sensu adhuc salvo. V. g. Marc. v. 6, ἀπὸ μακρόθεν, v. l. d. ἀπό. Luc. xxii. 30, ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ μου, v. l. d. ἐν. xxiv. 18, σὺ μόνος παροικεῖς ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ, MSS. 32 d. ἐν. Joh. xiii. 23, εἷς τῶν μαθητῶν αὐτοῦ, v. l. εἷς ἐκ τῶν. xix. 36, ὀστοῦν οὐ συντριβήσεται αὐτοῦ, v. l. ἀπ' αὐτοῦ. V. 40. ἔδησαν τὸ αὐτὸ ὀθονίοις, MSS. ἐν ὀθονίοις.

SECTIO NONA—DE CONJUNCTIONIBUS.

Parcius hic agendum: bis millies in variis lectionibus hisce occurrunt, sive mutatio conjunctionum idem valentium, vel earundem defectus ubi in textu adsunt, vel additio ubi librariis deesse videbantur, id autem fit sensu vel semper salvo, vel leviter tantum immutato.

1. Observat imprimis P. Simonius multitoties accidere permutationem particularum γὰρ et δὲ, tam in Græcis exemplaribus quam in antiquis versionibus. Rom. xiv. 15, εἰ δὲ διὰ βρῶμα, v. l. γὰρ. V. 23, ὁ δὲ διακρινόμενος, v. l. γὰρ. Vid. Rom. viii. 28. 1 Cor. ii. 10. vii. 40. ix. 16. x. 1. xi. 3. xv. 1. xiii. 50. xvi. 7. 8.

1 Cor. x. 26, τοῦ γὰρ Κυρίου ἡ γῆ, v. l. δὲ. xi. 23, ἐγὼ γὰρ παρέλαβον, v. l. δὲ. V. 31, εἰ γὰρ ἑαυτοὺς διεκρίνομεν, v. l. δὲ. xiv. 5, μείζων γὰρ ὁ προφητεύων, v. l. δὲ. V. 14, ἐὰν γὰρ προσεύχωμαι, v. l. δέ.

2. Notat secundo idem Simonius frequentem esse mutationem conjunctionis copulativæ καὶ in disjunctivam ἢ, et vice versa. Ita Joh. viii. 14, καὶ ποῦ ὑπάγω, v. l. ἢ. 1 Cor. xiii. 1, ἢ κύμβαλον ἀλαλάζον, v. l. καὶ. xi. 27, ὃς ἂν ἐσθίῃ τὸν ἄρτον τοῦτον, ἢ πίνῃ τὸ ποτήριον, v. l. καὶ. Exempla multa congessimus annotatis in hunc locum.

3. Sexcenties occurrit mutatio καὶ in δὲ, et vice versa, præsertim vero in evangeliis. Ita Matt. xx. 2, συμφωνήσας δὲ, v. l. καὶ συμφωνήσας. V. 10, ἐλθόντες δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἐλθόντες. xxi. 30, καὶ προσελθὼν, v. l. προσελθὼν δὲ. xxii. 7, ἀκούσας δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἀκούσας. Marc. i. 6, ἦν δὲ Ἰωάννης, v. l. καὶ ἦν. V. 16, περιπατῶν δὲ, v. l. καὶ παράγων. V. 28, ἐξῆλθε δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἐξῆλθεν. ii. 5, ἰδὼν δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἰδὼν. iii. 7, καὶ ὁ Ἰησοῦς, v. l. ὁ δὲ. iv. 10, ὅτε δὲ, v. l. καὶ ὅτε. v. 14, οἱ δὲ βόσκοντες, v. l. καὶ οἱ. Ita v. 19. 40. vi. 3, ἀδελφὸς δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἀδελφός. V. 4, ἔλεγε δὲ, v. l. καὶ ἔλεγε. Ita v. 21, 22. 24. 29. 35. 37, 38.

Est autem frequens mutatio τοῦ καὶ ἐγὼ, in κἀγὼ. 1 Cor. ii. 3. iii. 1. xvi. 10. 2 Cor. ii. 10, ᾧ δέ τι χαρίζεσθε, καὶ ἐγὼ, v. l. κἀγὼ. (2.) ὡς, et ὅσπερ, seu ὥσπερ, sæpe inter se invicem permutantur. 2 Cor. ix. 5, μὴ ὥσπερ πλεονεξίαν, v. l. ὡς. 1 Cor. x. 7, ὡς γέγραπται, v. l. ὥσπερ. Ita 2 Cor. ii. 17. iii. 1.

Porro innumeris in locis varia lectio exhibet tantum defectum, aut redundantiam δὲ vel καὶ sensu vix ullibi mutato. Et 1mo, deest δὲ, v. g. ἐν δὲ ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις, v. l. d. δὲ. Luc. xix. 22, λέγει δε αὐτῷ, v. l. d. δὲ. Joh. i. 40, ὥρα δὲ ἦν ὡς δεκάτη, d. δὲ in MSS. 35, et v. 43. Ita Joh. vii. 9. 12. 19. 38. Acts xi. 17, ἐγὼ δὲ τίς ἤμην, v. l. d. δὲ. Ita xiii. 1. xxiv. 26. Alias additur ubi deest. Luc. xi. 24, ὅταν τὸ ἀκάθαρτον πνεῦμα, v. l. ὅταν δὲ. Joh. ix. 9, ἐκεῖνος ἔλεγεν, v. l. ἐκεῖνος δὲ. Act. xvi. 7, ἐλθόντες κατὰ τὴν Μυσίαν, v. l. ἐλθόντες δέ.

Frequentius accidit defectus τοῦ καὶ, ubi vel etiam denotat, vel ad connexionem videtur plane necessarium. Matt. xiv. 19, "Et jubens turbam discumbere super gramen, καὶ λαβὼν, et accipiens quinque panes——benedixit eis," v. l. d. καὶ. Luc. xv. 19, "Peccavi in cœlum, et coram te, καὶ οὐκέτι εἰμὶ ἄξιος," &c. v. l. d. καὶ, et V. 21, et cap. xix. 15. cap. xxiii. 24, "Et dies erat parasceues καὶ σαββάτων," d. καὶ, MSS. 32, et V. 52. 55. Joh. xx. 14, καὶ ταῦτα εἰποῦσα, d. καὶ. Ita cap. xi. 57. cap. xix. 35. Act. xiv. 3, "Domino testimonium perhibente verbo gratiæ καὶ ὁδόντι σημεῖα," d. καὶ. Ita cap. xiii. 9, et 1 Cor. x. 9, et x. 12. xii. 14. 19. Adjicitur sine causa: Rom. xiv. 6, ὁ ἐσθίων, v. l. καὶ ὁ,—in evangeliis passim.

Ὅτι sæpissime in his variis lectionibus deest, ubi denotat quod, v. g. Matt. ix. 33, λέγοντες ὅτι, d. ὅτι. Luc. iv. 11, καὶ ὅτι ἐπὶ χειρῶν αἴρουσί σε, v. l. d. ὅτι. Ita cap. xvii. 10. xix. 9. Joh. vii. 31, ἔλεγον ὅτι. x. 7, λέγω ὑμῖν ὅτι, d. ὅτι. cap. xii. 34. 1 Cor. iv. 9. Quandoque adjicitur: ita, Luc. xix. 34, οἱ δὲ εἶπαν ὁ Κύριος, v. l. ὅτι ὁ Κύριος. V. 46, γέγραπται, ὁ οἶκός μου, v. l. ὅτι ὁ. 1 Cor. vii. 29, ὁ καιρὸς συνεσταλμένος, v. l. ὅτι ὁ.

Deest denique γὰρ, Luc. iv. 8. Act. xviii. 15. οὖν, Joh. viii. 42. ix. 25. Act. xviii. 14. xx. 28, et in multis aliis.

Insigne hujus rei exemplum exhibet Basilius, is enim post hæc verba Dom. Joh. xii. 39, "Propterea non poterant credere, quia iterum dixit Isaias," ea quæ sequuntur allegat non prout apud Johannem extant, active τετύφλωκεν καὶ πεπώρωκεν, sed passive τετύφλωνται αὐτῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ καὶ πεπώρωται ἡ καρδία, ex Isa. vi. 9, tom. i. contra Eunom. lib. v. p. 782.

SECTIO UNDECIMA.

In quod, in alio evangelista, aliis verbis exprimitur, sexcenties in locis pro varianti lectione proponitur: hic autem observatu dignum videatur,

1. Multoties rem plane incertam esse, nulloque niti solido fundamento Millii de hisce conjecturam, v. g. Marci vi. 12. Sed apud Millium legimus "Ex Ammonii Monotessaro apud Zacharium Chrysopol. (seculi 12mi monachum, potius quam episcopum, recte notat Zegerus) hæc Marci non esse, sed ex Matthæo huc transponi, quemadmodum alias alia;" quo Monotessaro non obstante, agnoscunt hæc verba Hieronymus, Theophylactus, versiones ad unam omnes. Et quanquam Millius bis centies pronuntiaverit "hæc et illa alterius esse, non ergo hujus evangelii, non tamen video quid impediat quo minus eadem in duobus aut tribus evangeliis obtineant, immo ex Eusebii canone id usitatius contigisse certissimum est.

2. Observandum id quod patres, librarii, ac scriptores, ex aliis evangeliis adjecerunt, sæpius additamenti potius quam variæ lectionis speciem adhibere.

Observandum, tertio, hæc, si ex aliis evangeliis certo certius adjecta essent, nihil de s. scripturis inde minui, nec iis quicquam adjicere, sed tantum ea quæ in evangeliis certo certius conscripta sunt, eundemque plerumque sensum exigunt, locis non suis apponere; quibus præmissis, exemplum unum aut alterum in medium adducam.

Matt. iii. 11. Οὗ οὐκ εἰμὶ ἱκανὸς τὰ ὑποδήματα βαστάσαι, v. l. ἄξιος τὸν ἱμάντα τοῦ ὑποδήματος λῦσαι. "E reliquis evangeliis," hic Millius: in quorum tamen nullo hæc verba ῥήτως inveniuntur. Vide Marc. i. 7. Luc. iii. 16. Joh. i. 27.

V. 17. Φωνὴ—λέγουσα οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ υἱός, v. l. λέγουσα πρὸς αὐτὸν, σὺ εἶ ὁ υἱός, Marc. i. 12. Luc. iii. 22.

Sed non est cur in hisce immoremur, in quibus ipse Millius, in capite fere quolibet, exempla perhibet.

Porro permulta inter variantes lectiones congessit Millius, quæ tantum unius epistolæ verba ad alteram adjiciunt, adeoque assumenta verius quam variæ lectiones dici possint. Ostensum enim est libri primi sectione sexta, familiare nimis patribus fuisse loca multa, præsertim sensu et scopo convenientia, in unum congere: v. g.

SECTIO DUODECIMA.

Unicum jam superest quod me ad operis hujus finem perducet, nempe ut respondeam objectionibus pseudo-catholicorum textus Græci αὐθεντίαν ex variis hisce lectionibus impugnantium, et scepticorum qui s. scripturæ certitudinem eadem de causa diminutam, et pene nullam esse pronunciant.

Decrevit Synodus Tridentina, ut ea ipse vetus et Vulgata editio, quæ longo tot seculorum usu in ipsa ecclesia probata est, in publicis lectionibus, disputationibus, prædicationibus, et expositionibus, pro authentica habeatur, et ut nemo illam rejicere quovis prætextu audeat, vel præsumat. In hujus decreti subsidium, longo agmine procedunt pontificii, pro editionis Vulgatæ præ Græcis N. Fœderis codicibus authentia, tanquam pro aris et focis, militantes (quod tamen hoc synodi decretum minime postulare discernunt peritiores pontificii). Palmam cæteris præripuit Morinus, is enim Exercitationum Biblicarum parte secunda, summa contentione, omnibusque ingenii viribus illud molitur, ut labefactata N. Fœderis originalis textus auctoritate, sola versio Vulgata, utpote ad codices Græcos hodiernis nostris meliores composita, pro vera et authentica habeatur. Huic Millius, qui in priore Prolegomenωn parte Morini causam adstruxisse videatur, hic strenue eidem semet opponit.

Argumento etenim primo Morini ex patrum Latinorum et Græcorum testimoniis deducto, accurate Millius respondet, testimonia in medium producta non tantum diligenter expendit, iisque responsum plenum justumque adhibet; sed etiam insuper agnoscit, Prol. p. 139, se, cum Morino, olim errasse; et p. 140, Morino deducto, hallucinatum esse: "verum in aliam sententiam (inquit) me duxit longior dies, eamque plane contrariam."

Secundum argumentum depravationis Græci textus colligit Morinus ex magna lectionum varietate, quam in exemplaribus Græcis observarunt H. Stephanus aliique hæretici, quas ad bis mille sexcentum sexaginta, iniquo calculo, extendit. Respondet Millius: "Varietates hasce lectionum, quibus auctoritatem Græci textus tantopere labefactatam ait, istas, inquam, quas ex sexdecim exemplaribus extraxit H. Stephanus, aliasque multo adhuc plures, quas alii post eum ex impressis pariter, et MSS. libris coacervarunt, adeo non eripere Græco textui suam certitudinem, ut contra, haud certius ad genuinam et archetypam apostolorum dictionem perveneris, quam ex hujusmodi collationum συλλογαῖς sive collationibus Græcorum codicum." His autem pro instituti sui ratione prælibatis, sic pergit; "Providentia Dei hactenus invigilatum est, ne in articulis fidei, aliisque ad summam fidei facientibus laberentur librarii. In his enim codices omnes conveniunt, et si forte locus aliquis, qui summi momenti esse videtur, uni, alteri, seu etiam pluribus codicibus exciderit (id quod non nisi in uno loco factum est quod viderim) idem tamen quoad sensum alibi inculcatus occurrit; ut proinde nusquam inde periclitetur Christiana veritas: in locis autem, qui in articulis fidei omnibus plene conveniunt, certe ex qua de iisdem articulis judicetur, regula deesse non potest."

Porro de variantibus hisce Stephani Bezæque lectionibus, id imprimis notatu dignum est, eas fere omnes ex Græcis occidentalis ecclesiæ codicibus depromptas esse, quos quidem a scriptoribus linguæ originalis insciis conscriptos fuisse, et juxta versionem veterem Vulgatam emendatos, seu verius mutatos, fuisse ex Simonio didicimus, eosque adeo inidoneos prorsus esse ex quibus codices primævi, Adamantii, Pierii, Pamphili, Eusebii, cura ad codicum probatissimorum et forte originalium textum emendati, et in bibliothecis diligenter custoditi, ut textus hodiernus cum iis codicibus potissimum consentiens corrigeretur.

3. Ex argumentis hisce aliisque pontificiorum mediis, quibus Vulgatam versionem integritati suæ restituere Sixti Quinti, Clementis Octavi, Lovaniensium, Lucæ Brugensis, et aliorum opera aggressi sunt, de codicum multorum collatione, multa,—de ecclesiæ testimonio ne verbum quidem occurrit; unde pronum est colligere haud alia media ad Vulgatæ versionis αὐθεντίαν stabiliendam pontificiis superesse, quam quæ nobis pariter cum illis conveniunt ad textus originalis integritatem stabiliendam, nullumque in his emendationibus ecclesiæ sive testimonio sive judicio locum esse posse, sed criticorum studio, et industriæ in codicibus comparendis, in versionum collatione, patrumque scriptis evolvendis, rem totam committendam esse.

Denique argumentum Morini bene impugnat Millius, comparatione adhibita inter textum Græcum et versionem Vulgatam. "Cum enim ob lectionum varietatem, textum Græcum incertitudinis postulaverit Morinus, annon expectares (inquit) jure merito ut versionem, quam in hujus locum substituit, ab eadem lectionum varietate, pura, et integra conservata esset? et tamen eadem illa in exemplaribus Vulgatæ, quæ in Græcis nostris apparet lectionum varietas, ut liquet ex Stephanicis et Plantinianis Latinorum Bibliorum editionibus, immo etiam post recognitam jussu Sixti Quinti, et Clementis Octavi, versionem hanc, Lucos Brugensis conscripsit libellum variantium ejus lectionum. Hinc autem manifesto sequitur Vulgatam versionem pro authentica haberi non posse, nisi textui Græco eadem authentia concedatur.

"Ex iis insuper quæ in secundo libro scripsimus, et quæ non modo ab evangelicis, sed etiam a pontificiorum doctissimis, et in his rebus maxime versatis, in confesso sunt, nempe in hoc variantium lectionum cumulo inveniri nihil, quod vel articuli ullius fidem, vel morum regulam corrumpat mutetve, certum atque exploratum est, contra scepticorum strepitus, lectiones hasce variantes non posse s. scripturæ regulam vel imperfectam relinquere, vel dubiam. Rem paucis expediam lectiones hasce, quæ etiam levioris momenti esse videbantur, ea, qua potui, diligentia excussi, et examini subjeci: ostendant, si possint, aliquid, quod hanc fidei nostræ normam, aut dubiam, aut suspectam reddat: hoc autem si fieri nequeat, desinant tandem apertæ, et præ oculis eorum positæ, veritati repugnare, et vanis clamoribus aures nostras obtundere."

Continens:

1. Catalogum variantium locorum ipsius Millii.
2. Specimen Italicæ versionis, qualis, ante Hieronymo castigationem, extabat, ex lectionibus spuriis, deficientibus, aut redundantibus, quæ in Hilarii Diac. commentariis in epistolas D. Pauli adhuc reperiuntur.

Millius ἑαυτὸν τιμωρούμενος· sive specimen quorundam locorum, in quibus Millius sententiam suam mutat, et sibi ipse contradicit.

"Matt. iii. 11, καὶ τῷ πυρὶ, constat patres Hieronymum, Hilarium, Cyprianum, Theodorum Heracleot. Macarium Ægyptium, Cyrillum, Origenem, Justinum M. (adde Athanasium, tom. i. p. 606, Basilium, tom. i. p. 790, Cyrill. Alex. tom. i. p. 197), interpretes Arab. Pers. Æthiop. etiam vetustiss. Copt. ac Syr. exemplaria quamplurima MSS. antiquiss. Cant. Vulg. denique versionem, sub apostolicis fere temporibus concinnatam, agnovisse καὶ πυρὶ, ut de recepta lectione minime dubitandum sit:" ita Millius hic. Atqui Prol. p. 65, col. 2, "Illud καὶ πυρὶ utcunque lectum in Vulg. jam olim ante tempora Cypriani, Syri, item nescio an (et fere ab initio) et citatum ab Origene, tanquam Matthæi, irrepsit ex evangelio Lucæ, seu etiam in textum tam Lucæ, quam Matthæi."

"Matt. v. 4, εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς καταρωμένους ὑμᾶς, καλῶς ποιεῖτε τοὺς μισοῦντας ὑμᾶς, ista omissa initio forte quod superflua visa sunt." Ita Millius in locum, ergo Matthæi verba hic omissa sunt. Sed Prol. p. 42, col. 1, "Lucæ sunt non ergo Matthæi." Vide Append. p. 2, col. 2.

Matt. xiv. 3. Διὰ Ἡρωδιάδα τὴν γυναῖκα Φιλίππου.] Decst Φιλίππου, Cant. Vulg. "Sed cum hic exemplaria MSS. universim (una cum versionibus vetust. Syr. et Copt.) probatiora pleraque apud Lucam, apud Marcum omnia (immo ipsum Cant. ut et Vulg. Goth. Copt. Syr.) nomen hoc retineant, non est quod expungatur." Ita Millius hic. At Prol. p. 42, col. 2, "Interjectum Φιλίππου Marci est, cui moris, in historiolis ipsi cum Matthæo communibus, circumstantias quasdam insigniores, ab altero isto haud memoratas, adjicere, quomodo hic nomen mariti Herodiadis."

Cap. xv. 4. Ἐνετείλατο λέγων.] V. l. εἶπε, Cant. Copt. Syr. Æthiop. Vulg. Iren. e Marco. Ita hic Millius.—Sed Prol. p. 42, col. 1, "Scholion ἐνετείλατο λέγων εἶπε, diu est cum genuinam extrusit lectionem suspectamque ipsam reddidit, seu ex Marco sumptam, quod et nos olim putavimus."

Cap. xviii. 35. Τὰ παραπτώματα αὐτῶν.] Desunt in Cant. Barb. Vulg. Hieron. Arab. Æthiop. "Sed cum plerique omnes cod. Græci, Chrysost. Theophylact. Syr. Pers. retineant, non est quod omittatur." Ita Millius hic. Sed Prol. p. 121, seq. "τὰ παραπτώματα αὐτῶν irrepserunt e margine," fide Æthiop. Cant. Arab. Vulg. Hieron. Luciferi Calarit.

Cap. xxv. 1. Εἰς ἀπάντησιν τοῦ νυμφίου.] V. l. τοῦ νυμφίου, καὶ τῆς νύμφης, Cant. Vulg. Syr. Pers. "Sed cum nec exemplaria MSS. nec e patribus Hieronymus, Hilarius, Chrysost. aut Orig. quantum ex commentariis assequi licet, agnoscant, pro additamento plane habendum est."—Ita hic Millius. Sed Prol. p. 133, col. 2, "τοῦ νυμφίου καὶ τῆς νύμφης, Cant. sic et Vulg. Syr. ac Latini (N. B.). Nec dubito quin ita Matthæi interpres. Sed quod infra de sponsi solius accursu fit mentio, neque nisi sponsi duntaxat occursus memoretur, in posterioribus cod. delebant illud καὶ τῆς νύμφης Græci ceu perperam ab antiquis additum."

Ibid. cap. xxviii. 9. Ὡς δὲ ἐπορεύοντο ἀπαγγεῖλαι τοῖς μαθηταῖς αὐτοῦ.] "Desunt hæc Vulg. Chrysost. Hieron. August. incuria scribarum, inquit Erasmus, sed eorum licentiæ potius dandum forte, quod cum sequentia a conjunctione incipiant, totum hoc quod interjicitur, ceu non necessarium prætermiserint." Sunt ergo hæc Matthæi sive incuria sive licentia scribarum prætermissa. Sed Prol. p. 83, col. 2, "Hæc omnia scholiastæ alicujus sunt de sermonis cohærentia plus satis soliciti."

Marc. ii. 1. Δι' ἡμερῶν.] "Octo legunt Latini codices aliqui, citra non Græcorum modo codicum fidem, sed et Latinorum plerumque omnium." Ita Millius hic. Sed Prol. p. 44, col. 1, "Græca procul dubio erant δι' ἡμερῶν, et sic evangelista."

Marc. v. 1. Εἰς τὴν χώραν τῶν Γαδαρηνῶν.] v. l. Γερασηνῶν. "Sed cum Cod. Alexandrinus et Syr. receptam lectionem retineant, et Lucas, cui in describendis historiis noster evangelista fere consonat, Gadarenos vocet, Γαδαρηνῶν hic omnino legendum arbitror." Sed Prol. p. 95, col. 1, inter genuinas lectiones Γεργεσηνῶν enumeratur.

Marc. xi. 10. Ὡσαννὰ ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις.] "Orig. εἰρήνη, memoriæ lapsu, ut opinor, et cum Marci verbis Lucæ ista confundens, cap. xix. 38, εἰρήνη ἐν οὐρανῷ, καὶ δόξα ἐν ὑψίστοις." Ita hic Millius. Sed Prol. p. 101, col. 2, "Apud Marcum εἰρήνη ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις, legebat Origenes, idque non ex lapsu memoriæ, quod nos olim putavimus, sed ad fidem codicis probi: hinc Lucam, qui ad Marci verba se fere accommodat, traduxisse puto suum illud εἰρήνη ἐν οὐρανῷ.

Luc. ii. 14. Ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκία.] "Qui sic legunt, rectam lectionem amplectuntur." Ita hic Millius. Sed Prol. p. 64, col. 2, "ἐν ἀνθρώποις εὐδοκίας omnino recte." Vide annotata nostra in Millium hic.

Cap. vi. 26. Οὐαὶ ὑμῖν ὅταν καλῶς ὑμᾶς εἴπωσιν πάντες.] "Τὸ πάντες omnino legendum arbitror, addendi causa nulla est, tollendi aliqua:" et tamen prol. p. 126, col. 2, "ὑμᾶς et πάντες irreptitia sunt." Vide hic etiam annotata nostra in Millium.

Luc. vii. 11. Καὶ συνεπορεύοντο αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταὶ αὐτοῦ ἱκανοί.] "Deest ἱκανοὶ Vulg. Syr. omissum primum, de industria, ni fallor, ab iis qui per μαθητὰς hic apostolos intellexere, non item assiduos quosvis Christi sectatores." Ita hic. Sed Prol. p. 44, col. 1, "ἱκανοὶ irrepsisse videtur ex v. 12, certe discipulos duodecim neutiquam μαθητὰς ἱκανοὺς vocasset evangelista, scriptor imprimis accuratus." Vide reliqua annotatis nostris hic ad Millium.

Cap. ix. 54. Ὡς καὶ Ἠλίας ἐποίησε.] Desunt hæc in Barb. 1, Eph. Vulg. "sed habent, præter exemplaria Græca fere omnia, Syr. Arab. Pers. Æthiop. Goth. et Tertull. (N. B.) ut credibile sit in Latinis ab aliquo expunctum, qui verebatur ne locus hic Marcioni faveret, inquit Grotius." Ita Millius hic. Sed Prol. p. 44, col. 1, "Sequentia ὡς καὶ Ἠλίας ἐποίησε, quæ sententiam Jacobi et Johannis tam insigniter illustrant, ad marginem libri a studioso quopiam adscripta fuisse commentarii loco, indeque transisse in corpus textus, res ipsa clamat——Cæterum a Tertulliano lecta fuisse hæc, quod olim in notis nostris affirmavimus, non ita liquidum."

Cap. xix. 41. Ἐκλαυσεν ἐπ' αὐτῇ.] "Non extitisse verba ista suo tempore in publice receptis exemplaribus testatur Epiphanius. Verba ejus digna sunt quæ notentur, ait Grotius," &c. Ita hic. Sed Prol. p. 146, col. 2, "ἔκλαυσεν ἐπ' αὐτῇ notat (Grotius) (quod et nos in editione nostra ipsius vestigia intrepide secuti) Epiphanii tempore comma hoc haud extitisse in publice receptis exemplaribus, verum ad pericopen de sudore sanguineo, cap. xxii. 43, 44, respicit Epiphanius." Vide de his plura, Prol. p. 76, col. 1, "Act. ii. 47, ὁ δὲ Κύριος προσετίθει τοὺς σωζομένους καθ' ἡμέραν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, sic Alex. Barb. 1, Vulg. et certe D. Lucas supra dicit πιστεύοντας fuisse ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, hic Dominum addidisse quotidie σωζομένους ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό," Prol. p. 158, col. 2. At vero Append. p. 37, col. 2, "Illud ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ δὲ (quod revera capitis sequentis est) capiti huic adnexum arbitror, quod in plurimis MSS. libris post verba ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ δὲ notetur minio ἀρχή, seu principium lectionis: hac enim de causa factum videtur, quod ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, quod initium lectionis præcedebat, in capitis præcedentis finem conjecerint scribæ, dele ergo Alex. Barb. 1, Vulg." Vide etiam annotata Millii in locum.

Act. viii. 37.] "Deest comma 37 in MSS. fere viginti, ——certe prætermissum in exemplaribus tot MSS. probatis ac vetustissimis ex incuria vel etiam fraude scribarum, plane incredibile est: dicendum potius in supplementum historiæ adnotatum primum hoc, ut et alia in libro Act. Apost. haud pauca, a studioso quopiam ad marginem libri, ac assumptum mox in contextum a librariis, idque sane a primis Christianismi seculis, legant siquidem Vulg. Iren. Cyprian." &c. Ita hic Millius. Sed Prol. p. 40, col. 2, "etiam hunc versiculum pro injectitio olim a nobis habitum, lectum ab Irenæo constat, lib. iii. cap. 12, et ad αὐθεντίαν ejus stabiliendam haud parum conferunt Vulg. Tertull. (nam et hunc, contra quam antehac sentiebam pericopen hanc legisse) Cyprian." quibus antea non obstantibus, comma hoc pro injectitio habuit.

Cap. v. 36. Ὣι προσεκολλήθη.] "V. l. προσεκλίθη, Alex. Pet. Cyril. προσεκλήθη, quod ex priore lectione natum suspicor, librariis, quod passim fit, η pro ι scribentibus." Sed Prol. p. 120, col. 1, ᾧ προσεκλήθη inter genuinas lectiones ponitur, cujus explicatio est προσεκολλήθη.

Cap. xv. 20. Τοῦ πνικτοῦ.] "Desunt Iren. Tertull. Cyprian. Hieron. August. Ambros. Eucherio: cæterum retinent Græca quæ viderimus omnia, excepto uno Cant., versiones omnes, etiam Vulg. Origenes, patres, ac tractatores Græci universim, ac proinde minime solicitandum arbitror." Idem vero Millius, Prol. p. 45, col. 2, iisdem Latinis Pacatiano et Fulgentio in medium prolatis, hæc habet, "certe medium καὶ τοῦ πνικτοῦ ipsius Lucæ non est, sed Christianorum vetorum," &c.

Cap. xviii. 7. Εἰς οἰκίαν τινὸς ὀνόματι Ἰοῦστου.] V. l. Τίτου. App. p. 42, "Lectionem istam quod attinet Τίτου genuinam esse arbitror, Ἰοῦστου vero additum ex interpolatis Latinis interpretis Vulg." Sed Prol. p. 44, col. 2, "Studiosus aliquis ex fide, vel traditione istius seculi viri hujus cognomento, indeque enim aliud Ἰοῦστος nomen ipsum adposuit ad marginem, nempe Titum, quod quidem admisit haud ægre interpres in suam versionem."

Rom. i. 31. Ἀσπόνδους.] "Deest Clar. Ger. Colb. 7, Lucifer Calarit. Hilar. Gildæ, prætermissum ideo putarim, quod præcedat vox ejusdem, ut putabant, significationis ἀσυνθέτους." Sed Prol. p. 46, col. 1, "intrusum videtur in hunc locum ex 2 Tim. iii. 3."

1 Cor. xv. 47. Ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ.] "Imprudentes librarii vocem hanc ὁ Κύριος, e codice Marcionitarum in exemplarium aliquorum marginem clam transfusam, in contextum admisere, idque jam olim ante tempora Tertulliani tum enim manavit, uti videtur, corruptela hæc passim in cod. Græcos." Sed Prol. p. 139, col. 2, hæc habet, "Auctoritate Tertulliani, probat Morinus in Græcis nostris, 1 Cor. xv. 47, irrepsisse vocem Κύριος, ex Marcionis hæretici ἀποστολικῷ, quod idem et nos affirmavimus in adnotatis in hunc locum. Verum in aliam sententiam traxit longior dies, eamque plane contrariam, nempe in ἀποστολικὸν illud introductum fuisse Κύριος ex libris catholicorum." Vide supra, p. 36.

2 Cor. ix. 4. Ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ τῆς καυχήσεως.] "Ἐν τῇ ὑποστ. ταύτῃ, codex mendosus quem secutus est Æthiops, omisso τῆς καυχήσεως." Sed Prol. p. 48, fide mendosi hujus cod. inter alios hic memoratos "τῆς καυχήσεως, accessit commentarii loco ex cap. xi. 17 hujus epistolæ."

Gal. iv. 14. Καὶ τὴν πειρασμόν μου.] "Latini omnes, teste Esthio, legunt ὑμῶν, quod sane sensum parit duriusculum ac coactum nimis quam ut probem." Ita hic Millius. Sed Append. p. 53, col. 1. "Pro istis lege atque hanc lectionem (ut et duriusculas, et in speciem absurdas, plerasque omnes N. B.) genuinam esse censeo."

Eph. iii. 14. Πρὸς τὸν πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Rejicit hic Millius testimonium Hieronymi dicentis "hæc subnotata esse additamentum codicum Latinorum." "Nimirum cum a patre denominatam velint interpretes fere omnes πατριὰν istam ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς, de qua apostolus in versu prox. hinc omittendi ista τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, arreptam primam occasionem arbitror, ne sc. admissis iis, ad Christum πατριὰ ista, seu ad originem referri forte intelligeretur." Sed idem Millius, Prol. p. 84, col. 2, inter genuinas Chrysost. lectiones recenset πρὸς τὸν πατέρα simpliciter, reliqua habet pro additamentis ex fide Hieronymi, Hilarii D. Æthiopis, Chrysost. Theophylacti, quos omnes hic rejicit.

Cap. v. 30. Ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ.] "Desunt in Alex. Æthiop. At vero cum in aliis omnibus extent, non est quod de textus sinceritate hoc loco dubitemus." Ita hic. Sed Prol. p. 69, col. 2, "Methodius qui codice usus est probo, hæc omittit. Ita Alex. Æthiop. Quæ ad marg. adscripta, ut videtur, ex Gen. ii. 23, in textum intruserunt scribæ."

1 Thess. iii. 2. Καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν.] "Recte hic omnia, nihil mutandum." Ita hic Millius. Sed Prol. p. 123, col. 2, "Media καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν irrepsere e margine, ubi posuerat ista adnotator quispiam, ex Rom. xvi. 21, Vulg. Alex." quos utrosque antea rejecit.

1 Tim. vi. 5. Παραδιατριβαί.] "Cod. plurimi, C. Alex. Clem. Al. Gr. scholia omnia legunt διαπαρατριβαί. Sed placet Vulgatam παραδιατριβαὶ," et in Append. p. 54, col. 2, lege quod "omnino placet, non aliter legebat in codice suo Vulg. interpres." Sed Prol. p. 61, col. 1, "placet διαπαρατριβαί," ob eosdem auctores, et παραδιατριβαί, inquit "notatum forte ab aliquo ad marg. animi causa, ceu elegantius transiit in alterius locum."

19. Τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς.] "V. l. τῆς ὄντως, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Hilarius D. Hieron. G. Nyssen. interpretamentum vetus," quo vita æterna describitur, sed Prol. p. 77, col. 1, eosdem auctores allegans, ait "αἰωνίου in editis irrepsit ex v. 12 hujus cap."

2 Tim. ii. 10.] "Μετὰ δόξης αἰωνίου, cœlesti, Vulg. et ex eo Latini, ex errore Gr. exemplaris cujusdam, ut videtur, in quo pro αἰωνίου scriptum erat contractim οὐνίου." Sed Prol. p. 49, col. 1, "μετὰ δόξης οὐρανίου, nescio an recte, contra quam olim putaveram facili mutatione οὐρανίου, quod in MSS. libris contractim fere scriptum οὐνίου, sciolus fecerit quispiam αἰωνίου."

Heb. x. 2. Ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἄν.] "V. l. ἐπεὶ ἄν, Vulg. Syr. Æthiop. Theodoret. Photius: mihi quidem illud ἐπεὶ ἄν maxime arridet, tanquam apostoli scopo omnino congruum." Sed Prol. p. 131, col. 2, "ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἄν utpote obscurum maxime probo."

Cap. xii. 18. Ψηλαφομένῳ ὄρει.] "Omittunt ὄρει Syr. Æthiop. Clar. Ger. Sed cum retineant plerique omnes codices Græci, et vero antithesin quæ accedit inter montem Sina et montem Sion, hic præ oculis habeat apostolus, necesse est legamus." Sed Prol. p. 105, col. 2, "Desunt Alex. Syr. Æthiop. Chrys. et Vulg, et certe ὄρει quod positum est jam post ψηλαφομένῳ, in plerisque cod. vix est ut olim prætermiserint scribæ; longe magis suspectum, immo probabile videtur, lectorem quempiam maxime cum hic agatur de sensibili, ac ardenti igne, qui visus erat in monte Sina, posuisse ad oram codicis, seu inter lineas ὄρει, ut esset quod alteri ὄρει, v. 22, responderet."

2 Pet. i. 12. Διὸ οὐκ ἀμελήσω.] "V. l. μελλήσω οὐ μελλήσω, mihi omnino placet lectio quæ in impressis." Ita hic. Sed Prol. p. 101, "διὸ μελλήσω, ita Suidas, codices probi aliqui: fecit phrasis paullo durior, ut a nonnullis mutaretur in οὐ μελλήσω, ab aliis in οὐκ ἀμελήσω, quod jam locum habet in longe majori parte codicum."

Cap. iii. 3. Ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τῶν ἡμερῶν ἐμπαῖκται.] "V. l. ἐμπαιγμονῇ ἐμπαῖκται. Ita MSS. multi, Vulg. Syr. Arab. Æthiop. August. Hieron. et quidem omnino Esthio assentior ita a Petro scriptum esse." Sed Prol. p. 88, col. 2, "Mihi quidem ipsius Petri fuisse videtur ἐν ἐμπαιγμονῇ, simpliciter; quod autem hiare videretur oratio, additum a quopiam, ex Epistola Judæ ἐμπαῖκται."

Jud. 6. Ὑπὸ ζόφον.] "Clem. Al. Pæd. lib. iii. cap. 8, add. ἀγρίων ἀγγέλων, codex quem secutus est Lucifer Calaritanus pro ἀγρίων corrupte legit ἁγίων." Sed Prol. p. 62, col. 1, "ἀγρίων perperam pro ἁγίων."

Unicum addo in quo ipsa Millii interpretatio contradictionem involvit, viz. in hæc verba συνήχθησαν Ἡρῴδης τε, καὶ Πόντιος Πιλάτος σὺν ἔθνεσι καὶ λαοῖς Ἰσραὴλ. Act. iv. 27. Inter alia plane ridicula, hæc habet Millius, Prol. p. 104, col. 2, "Certe per ἔθνη hic intelligi Judæos (i. e. populum Israeliticum, quibuscum hæ gentes consilium inibant de morte Christi) constat ex v. 25. Nempe respondet hoc loco ἔθνεσι καὶ λαοῖς ad illud Davidis supra citatum ἐφρύαξαν ἔθνη, καὶ λαοὶ ἐμελέτησαν κενὰ, Psal. ii. 1." Hic autem observandum,

1. Millium fere continuo sententiam suam mutasse Vulgatæ versionis gratia.

2. Non multum tribuendum esse judicio viri adeo a semetipso dissidentis, et de his ipsis variantibus lectionibus sententiam suam postea mutantis, idque aliquoties ob ipsissima illa testimonia, et rationes, quibus antea non obstantibus, se ita sensisse indicaverat.

De lectionibus Hilarii Diaconi in Epistolas Paulinas Romæ receptas, et primo de lectionibus variantibus.

Ep. ad Rom. Observandum hic proœmii loco notasse Erasmum "scribam pro suo arbitratu lusisse, non tantum in argumentis epistolarum exhibendis; sed, uti suspicatur, in ipsis commentariis;" additque Simonius eos qui Latinos patres, qui ante Novi Fœderis librorum emendationem ab Hieronymo adornatam vixerunt, typis mandarunt, scripturas ab iis citatas sæpius editione Hieronymiana adaptasse, nec in hac parte Hilario Diacono pepercisse; unde haud raro contingit ut commentario textus adversetur: cujus indicium sentire mihi videor in capitis hujus primi commate ultimo, ubi textus ita se habet, prout in Vulgato Hieronymi, "Qui cum justitiam Dei cognovissent, non intellexerunt, quoniam qui talia agunt, digni sunt morte;" commentarius vero sequitur in hunc modum, "Usque adeo justitiam Dei cognoverunt, ut non negent hæc omnia quæ faciunt, pœna digna et morte."

Videbit sedulus lector nos in collectanes hisce multa, minoris momenti, prætermisisse, ex iis autem quæ hic congessimus, constat, Vulgatam versionem Italicam ante Hieronymi castigationem, lectionibus a textu originali multum variantibus, additamentis, et defectibus pene innumeris abundasse, adeoque verissimam fuisse Hieronymi de versionis hujus corruptelis ad Damasum Papam sub quo hæc scripsit Hilarius, querelam.

2. Codices Cant. Ger. Clar. eodem fere tempore conscriptos iisdem vitiis et corruptelis obnoxios fuisse, nec enim existimandum est Latinos eorum codices versionem hanc Italicam fidelius exhibuisse, quam hunc Romanæ ecclesiæ diaconum.

3. Hinc sequitur Millii conatus de versione Italica ad textum originalem Græcum ex hisce potissimum scriptis reducenda, frustraneos plane fuisse.

		The fourth passover, in which Christ our passover was sacrificed, 1 Cor. v. 7, and so an end put to legal sacrifices prefiguring this great expiation: the fourth or middle year of Daniel's week begins, Dan. ix. 27.
	Matt. xxvi.	On the first day of unleavened bread, when the passover of the Jews was to be
	Mark xiv.	slain (April 2), in the evening, Jesus eateth the passover with his disciples, and insti-
	Luke xxii.	tutes the sacrament of his body and blood in bread and wine.
	John xii.	Christ washeth his disciples' feet, and exhorteth them to humility and charity.
	xviii.	In the selfsame night Christ is betrayed by Judas, mocked, buffeted, and spit upon by the soldiers.
	Matt. xxvii. Mark xv.	Next day he is condemned by Pilate, and crucified: the sun, during the crucifixion,
	Luke xxiii. John xix.	is darkened, and the veil of the temple rent in the midst. Christ, praying for his ene-
	Ps. xxii.	mies, gives up the ghost. Joseph of Arimathea begs the body, and lays it in a new sepulchre.
	Matt. xxviii.	On the third day, the next after the Jewish sabbath (April 5), Christ riseth from
	Mark xvi.	the dead: his resurrection is declared by angels to the women that came to the sepul-
	Luke xxiv. John xx.	chre. Christ first appeareth to Mary Magdalene, and afterward to his disciples, and dineth with them.
	Acts i.	Christ bringeth his apostles to mount Olivet, commanding them to expect in Jeru- salem the sending down of the Holy Ghost.
	Matt. xxviii.	Sends them to teach and baptize all nations, and blesses them; and while they behold, he is taken up, and a cloud receives him out of their sight. After his ascen- sion, the disciples are warned by two angels to depart, and to set their minds upon his second coming: they accordingly return, and, giving themselves to prayer, choose Matthias to be an apostle in the place of Judas.
	Acts ii.	On the day of Pentecost (May 4), the Holy Ghost descendeth on the apostles, in the form of cloven tongues, like as of fire, and enableth them to speak all languages. Peter, the same day, preacheth Christ and the resurrection, and about three thousand believers are added to the church.
	Acts iii.	Peter, by faith in Christ's name, healeth a lame man.
	iv.	The rulers of the Jews, offended at Peter's sermon, and his miraculous cure of the lame man, cast both him and John into prison: upon their examination, they boldly avouch the lame man to be healed by the name of Jesus, and that by the same Jesus we must be eternally saved. After this, the Jews forbid them to speak any more in that name: but the apostles answer, that it is fit they should obey God, rather than men. They are threatened, and let go.
	v. 1.	Ananias and Sapphira, for their hypocrisy, are suddenly struck dead.
	17.	The apostles are again cast into prison by the high-priest; but an angel sets them at liberty, and bids them preach the gospel to the people without fear: being taken again teaching in the temple, they are brought before the council, where, by the advice of Gamaliel, a pharisee and doctor of the law, they are delivered.
	vi.	The number of believers increasing at Jerusalem, the apostles ordain seven deacons, who should distribute the alms of the whole church to the widows and poorer sort of believers.
34.	vii.	Stephen, one of these deacons, having confounded some that disputed with him, is by them falsely accused of blasphemy, and brought before the council, where he repre- hends their rebellion, and murdering of Christ: whereupon they cast him out of the city, and stone him; he, in the meantime, praying for them.
	Acts viii.	A great persecution of the church at Jerusalem follows after the death of the first martyr Stephen.
	5.	Philip, one of the seven deacons, preacheth at Samaria, and converteth many; working miracles, and healing the sick.
		Simon the sorcerer, seeing the wonders that are done by Philip, believeth, and is baptized.

The year after Christ.
	15.	The apostles at Jerusalem, hearing that Samaria had received the faith, send thither Peter and John to confirm and enlarge the church. The apostles, by prayer and imposition of hands, confer the Holy Ghost on all believers. Simon Magus offers them money, that he may receive power of conferring the same; whose impiety is sharply reproved by Peter.
34.		Having completed their ministry in those parts, they return to Jerusalem.
	26.	An angel sendeth Philip to teach and baptize the Ethiopian eunuch.
35.	ix. 1.	Saul, a violent persecutor of all that call on the name of Jesus, and one who consented to the death of Stephen, goes now towards Damascus, with commission from the high-priest and the council, to apprehend all Christians in those parts, and to bring them bound to Jerusalem; on the way he is miraculously converted, by a voice from heaven; and three days after, baptized by Ananias at Damascus, where he preacheth the gospel of Christ with great boldness, to the astonishment of those that knew upon what design he was sent thither.
	23.	Saul, having preached the gospel at Damascus a long time, the Jews lay wait to kill
38.	2 Cor. xi. 32.	him; but he escapeth from thence, and comes to Jerusalem; there he sees Peter, and
	Gal. i. 28.	James the brother of our Lord, and abides with them fifteen days: here he speaks boldly in the name of Jesus, and disputes with the Grecians, or rather Jews that used the Greek tongue. These also consult how they may kill him.
38.	Acts xxii. 17.	While Saul prays in the temple he is in a trance, and the Lord appears unto him, and bids him depart from Jerusalem, because they will not receive his testimony; adding, that he will send him to the gentiles.
	Acts ix. 30.	Saul, leaving Jerusalem, goes to his own country Tarsus, and from thence travels
	Gal. i. 21.	into Syria and Cilicia.
	Acts ix. 32. 36.	Peter visits the churches of Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, &c. At Lydda he cureth
41.	x.	Æneas of the palsy, and at Joppa restoreth Tabitha to life. At Cæsarea, Cornelius, a centurion, by prayer and alms finds favour in the sight of God, and is commanded by an angel to send for Peter now at Joppa. God, by a vision, teacheth Peter not to despise the gentiles; and being sent for by Cornelius, he goes and preacheth Christ to him, and a great company that were met at his house: while Peter preacheth, the Holy Ghost falls upon them all, and immediately the apostle baptizeth them.
	xi.	Peter, at his return to Jerusalem, is accused by those of the circumcision for conversing with the gentiles; but he declares to them his vision, and the whole matter concerning Cornelius; and they glorify God, for granting to the gentiles also repentance unto life.
		The believers, who, ever since the martyrdom of Stephen and the persecution thereupon ensuing, had been dispersed throughout all Phœnice and Cyprus, come now to Antioch, and preach the gospel to the Grecks there, having before preached to none but the Jews. The church at Jerusalem understanding this, and that the number of believers increased exceedingly, sends Barnabas thither to confirm them: he goes to Tarsus, and takes Saul along with him to Antioch, where they continue a whole year, converting multitudes to the faith. Here the disciples were first called Christians.
44.	xii.	About this time, James the brother of John is beheaded, by the command of Herod Agrippa: he also imprisoneth Peter, whom an angel delivers, upon the prayers of the church. This same Herod not long after speaking to the people at Cæsarea, some of them cry out, "It is the voice of God, and not of man;" and immediately an angel of the Lord smites him, because he gave not the glory to God, and he is eaten of worms and dieth.
45.	xiii.	Barnabas and Saul set forward in their preaching of the gospel: they plant the Christian faith in Seleucia, Cyprus, and other places. At Paphos they preach the gospel to Sergius Paulus, governor of that country; Elymas the sorcerer withstanding them, and endeavouring to turn away Sergius from the faith, is, at Saul's rebuke, struck blind. From this time Saul is always called by his new name, Paul: he preacheth at Antioch; the gentiles believe, but the Jews gainsay and blaspheme; whereupon he and his assistants turn to the gentiles, and come to Iconium.
46.	xiv.	At Iconium they are persecuted, and ready to be stoned: from hence they fly to Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia. At Lystra, Paul healing a cripple, the multitude cry out, that the gods are come down; and call Barnabas, Jupiter, and Paul, Mercurius: and would have sacrificed to them, had not the apostles, with clothes rent, run in amongst them, and assured them, that they were men like themselves. Soon after there came Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who excite the people against them. Paul is by the furious multitude stoned, and drawn out of the city as dead; but whilst the
	2 Cor. xi. 5.	disciples stand about him, he riseth up, and the next day departs with Barnabas to Derbe.
	2 Cor. xii.	In this year, perhaps at this very time, Paul was caught up into the third heaven, and heard unspeakable words, fourteen years before he wrote his second epistle to the Corinthians.
	2 Tim. i. 2. 5.	About this time Timothy, though a child, with his mother Eunice, and his grandmother Lois, embrace the Christian faith preached by Paul.
52.	Acts xv.	Certain Judaizing Christians come from Judea to Antioch, and teach, that the gentiles ought to be circumcised, and observe the law of Moses: these Paul and Barnabas oppose; and a council is held by the apostles and others at Jerusalem to determine this controversy. The decrees of the synod are sent to the churches.
53.	36.	Paul and Barnabas, thinking to visit the churches together, fall at strife, and part asunder: Barnabas and Mark go into Cyprus; Paul and Silas into Syria and Cilicia.
	xvi.	Paul coming to Derbe, finds there Timothy, whom (because his mother was a believing Jew, though his father a gentile,) he caused to be circumcised, and takes along with him.
		He is, by a vision, admonished to go into Macedonia: coming to Philippi, the chief city of that part of Macedonia, he converts Lydia; casteth out of a certain maid-servant a spirit of divination, whose master, losing a considerable gain thereby, brings Paul and Silas before the magistrates: these cause them to be whipped, and imprisoned; but at midnight, Paul and Silas singing psalms, the doors of the prison fly open, and their bonds are loosed: the jailor, ready to kill himself, is converted to the faith and baptized the same night, with his whole family. Next day the magistrates come themselves, and pray them to depart the city.

54.	Acts xvii.	From Philippi, Paul takes his journey through Amphipolis and Apollonia, and comes to Thessalonica, where he finds a synagogue of the Jews; there he preacheth three sabbath-days; some believe, others persecute him: leaving Thessalonica, he comes to Berea, and soon after arrives at Athens, disputes with the philosophers, and declares unto them, that "unknown God" whom they had ignorantly worshipped. He converts Dionysius the Areopagite, and thence passeth to Corinth.
55.	xviii.	Paul at Corinth meets with Aquila and Priscilla, not long before banished from Rome by the decree of Claudius. Here he continues a year and six months, and thence writes to the Thessalonians.
56.	18.	Paul is accused by the Jews, and brought before Gallio, proconsul of Achaia, who refuseth to be a judge in a controversy about religion, and so drives them away from the judgment-seat.
		Paul departs from Corinth, and passeth to Ephesus; thence he sets out towards Jerusalem, that he may be at the feast; he lands at Cæsarea, goes down to Antioch, and comes into the regions of Galatia and Phrygia, confirming the disciples in all those places.
57.	xix.	Paul returns to Ephesus, disputes daily in the school of Tyrannus, and continues
58.		preaching there, and in the parts thereabouts. He writes his Epistle to the Galatians.
59.		At Ephesus, Demetrius, a silversmith, jealous of his gain, raiseth a tumult against Paul, which is appeased by the town-clerk.
	1 Cor. i. 11. xvi. 8.	About this time a schism ariseth in the church of Corinth, which causeth Paul (now in or about Ephesus) to write his First Epistle to the Corinthians.
60.	Acts xx.	Paul departs from Ephesus, and comes into Macedonia, and gathers a contribution
	2 Cor. viii. 1, 2. 6. 19.	for the relief of the saints at Jerusalem.
	1 Cor. xvi. 5.	The apostle, having learned from Titus the success of his First, writes now his Second Epistle to the Corinthians: out of Macedonia he goes into Greece, and comes to Corinth, where he writes his Epistle to the Romans.
	Acts xx. 3, 4.	Paul purposing to go directly from thence into Syria, that he may carry the collections to Jerusalem, the Jews lay wait for him: he, understanding this, thinks it best to return into Macedonia the same way he came, and thence to pass into Asia.
	6.	After the days of unleavened bread, Paul sails from Philippi, and comes to Troas; there he restores Eutychus to life. Having passed through several cities of Greece, he arrives at Miletus; from thence he sends to call the elders of the church of Ephesus, whom he earnestly exhorts to the performance of their duty.
61.	xxi.	Paul comes to Jerusalem, is apprehended in the temple, and secured in the castle; he claimeth the privilege of a Roman, and escapeth scourging.
	xxii. xxiii.	Paul pleads his cause before Ananias the high-priest. The chief captain, understanding that above forty Jews had bound themselves under a curse neither to eat nor drink till they had killed him, sends him to Felix the governor of the province, by whom he is imprisoned at Cæsarea.
62.	xxiv.	Paul is accused before Felix, by Tertullus the orator. Felix goes out of his office, and, to gratify the Jews, leaves Paul in prison. Portius Festus succeeds him in the government.
	xxv.	The Jews come to Cæsarea, and accuse Paul before Festus. He answers for himself, and appeals to Cæsar. King Agrippa comes to Cæsarea, and Festus opens the matter to him.
63.	xxvi.	Paul makes his defence in the presence of Agrippa, who thereby is almost persuaded to be a Christian; and the whole company pronounce him innocent.
	xxviii.	Paul comes to Rome, is a prisoner at large, and preacheth there two years.
		Here ends the history of the Acts of the Apostles, written by St. Luke, St. Paul's beloved companion in his travels.
		St. Paul, from Rome, writes his Epistles, To the Philippians; To Philemon; To the Colossians; To the Ephesians.
65.	Heb. xiii. 24.	About the latter end of this year, St. Paul is set at liberty; and a little before his departure out of Italy into Asia he writes his Epistle to the Hebrews.
		He preacheth the gospel in the isle of Crete, and leaves Titus there, to set things in order, and ordain elders in every city.
	Tit. i. 5.	St. Paul writes his Epistle, To Timothy I.; To Titus;
66.		To Timothy II.
		About this time, the Epistles of St. Peter, St. John, and St. Jude, seem to be written
67.	Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 24.	St. Peter and St. Paul are said to have suffered martyrdom at Rome, towards the latter end of Nero's reign.
70.	Luke xix. 43, 44.	This year, Jerusalem (according to Christ's prophecy) is besieged, taken, sacked, and burnt by Titus, eleven hundred thousand of Jews perish, ninety-seven thousand are taken prisoners, besides an innumerable company that in other places of Judea killed themselves, or perished through famine, banishment, and other miseries.
96.		St. John is banished into the isle of Patmos, by Domitian, and there receives and writes his Revelation.
		After the death of Domitian, St. John returns to Ephesus, and at the request of the church writes his Gospel.

AN ALPHABETICAL TABLE

OF

ALL THE PLACES

MENTIONED IN THE GOSPELS, ACTS, OR THE EPISTLES.

ABILENE is one of the four tetrarchies, mentioned Luke iii. 1. It fell, say St. Luke and Josephus,* to the share of Lysanias: it was so named from the city Abila in Cœlosyria, mentioned by Pliny,† and from the tetrarch of it bore his name; for, saith Ptolemy, Ἄβιλα ἐπικληθεῖσα Λυσανίου, "Abila bears the name of Lysanias."

ACHAIA, in the largest sense, comprehends Greece properly so called, and so is bounded on the west by Epirus, on the east by the Ægean Sea, on the north by Macedonia, on the south by Peloponnesus; and so it seems to signify, when St. Paul, according to the Roman acceptation, mentions "all the regions of Achaia," and directs his Second Epistle "to all the saints in Achaia," 2 Cor. xi. 10. Thus what is "Achaia," Acts xix. 21, is "Hellas," i. e. Greece, Acts xx. 2, and so Mela speaks of it. Secondly, Achaia, strictly so called, is the northern region of Peloponnesus, bounded on the north by the gulf of Corinth, on the south with Arcadia, on the east with Sicyonia, on the west with the Ionian sea.

ACELDAMA was a place without the south wall of Jerusalem, beyond the river of Siloam, and was called "the potter's field," Matt. xxvii. 7. 10, because they dug thence the earth of which they made their pots; and "the fuller's field," because they dried their cloth there; but being afterward bought, by that money by which the high-priest and rulers of the Jews purchased the blood of the holy Jesus, it was, by the providence of God so ordering it, called Aceldama, that is, "the field of blood," Acts i. 19, Matt. xxvii. 7, 8.

ADRAMYTTIUM (mentioned Acts xxvii. 2, where it is said, that St. Paul entered into a ship of Adramyttium) is, by St. Jerome‡ and others, said to be a city of Egypt, built by Alexander as a monument of his triumphs, at the Canopic mouth of the river Nile, from which it received its water, and is by Livy, the old Etymologus, and Phavorinus, made to be§ the same with Thebes; but it was rather Adramyttium in Mysia, mentioned by Strabo, lib. xiii. p. 417, by Pliny, lib. v. cap. 30, p. 298, and by Mela, lib. i. cap. 18. lib. xvii. For in this ship, St. Paul and his company sailed from Cæsarea to Myra in Lycia, the direct way to Adramyttium in Mysia, ver. 5, whither she being bound, and not to Italy, they there quit her, and "finding a ship of Alexandria sailing to Italy," went aboard her, ver. 6.

ADRIA is mentioned Acts, xxvii. 27, where St. Paul saith, that they were tossed in Adria: he saith, not in the Adriatic gulf, which ends with the Illyrican sea, but in the Adriatic sea, which, saith Hesychius, is the same with the Ionian sea. And therefore to the question, How St. Paul's ship, which was near Malta, and so either in the Libyan or Sicilian sea, could be in the Adriatic? it is well answered, That not only the Ionian, but even the Sicilian sea, and part of that which washeth upon Crete, was called the Adriatic. Thus Ptolemy saith, that Sicily was bounded on the east,‖ ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἀδρίου, "by the Adriatic;" and that Crete was compassed on the west,¶ ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἀδριατικοῦ πελάγους, "by the Adriatic sea;" and Strabo saith, that the Ionian gulf, μέρος ἐστὶ τοῦ νῦν Ἀδρίου λεγομένου, "is a part of that which in his time was called the Adriatic sea."

ÆNON, or ENON, signifies the place of springs, which made it a convenient place for St. John's baptism, John iii. 23; it is uncertain where it was, whether in Galilee, or Judea, or Samaria, where Lubin places it, viz. in the half tribe of Manasseh, within Jordan.

ALEXANDRIA, that noble mart, whence merchandises were carried through all the world, was, after the destruction of Carthage, the chief city in the world, next to Rome, and was therefore called emphatically,* πολίς, as that was called urbs; and Athens, ἄστυ. The Ptolemies of Egypt, choosing it as their seat, beautified it to that degree, that it gave place to Rome only; and the Romans, when they had taken it, were careful to preserve its splendour, divers emperors adding new ornaments to it, and confirming its privileges. It was a large city, saith Josephus,† in length thirty furlongs, in breadth ten, which provided Rome with four months' corn; and paid as much tribute to it in a month, as Jerusalem did in a year. Here was a celebrated academy, which bred famous physicians and philosophers, as Philo the Jew, and historians; and a great library, collected by Ptolemy Philadelphus, containing five hundred thousand volumes, and consumed in the wars betwixt Cæsar and Pompey: near to it is the island of Pharos, where some deceitful Jews showed Justin Martyr the remains of the cells, where the the Seventy-two interpreters translated the Hebrew Bible into Greek, apart, and yet in the same words; of which see the preface to St. Matthew. Here dwelt the Jews in vast numbers; Alexander, for the service they did him in his wars, permitting them to dwell there, and giving them equal privileges with the gentiles; here they had many synagogues, a famous cathedral of seventy stalls, and afterward a temple built by Onias; but they found the Alexandrians their constant enemies, they cruelly murdering many thousand of them in the time of Caius, of which Philo gives a large account in his embassy to him; and fifty thousand of them in the time of Nero, saith Josephus de Bell. Jud. lib. ii. cap. 36.

ÆTHIOPIA is only mentioned in the history of the baptism of the eunuch, Acts viii. 27, where I have shown, the evangelist speaks not of Æthiopia in Arabia, where the queen of Sheba dwelt, but of Æthiopia in Africa, under Egypt, where Candace had been long the name of their queen; whence Strabo‡ makes mention of a Candace, ἡ καθ' ἡμᾶς ἦρξε τῶν Αἰθιόπων, "who in his time was queen of Æthiopia," and Dio§ of the same Candace living in Æthiopia under Egypt. See the note on Acts viii. 27.

AMPHIPOLIS, mentioned Acts xvii. 1, is a city of Macedonia, in the confines of Thrace, so called, saith Thucydides,‖ because the river compasseth it about. Suidas, who places it, as others do, in Thracia, says it was also formerly called "the nine ways." See Mr. Well's Geogr. p. 134, and Stephanus de Urbibus.

ANTIOCHIA, the metropolis of Syria, was built, say some, by Antiochus Epiphanes; say others, by Seleucus Nicanor, the first king of Syria after Alexander M., in memory of his father Antiochus, and was¶ the royal seat of the kings of Syria, or the place where the palace was; for power and dignity, saith Strabo,* it is not much inferior to Seleucia, or Alexandria: it was, saith Josephus,† the third great city of all that belonged to the Roman provinces; it was called Antiochia apud Daphnem, near Daphne, i. e. the village where her temple was, to distinguish it from the other fourteen mentioned by Stephanus de Urbibus, and by Eustathius in Dionys. p. 170, or, as others, and among them Appianus in Syriacis, sixteen cities in Syria, and elsewhere, which bore that name. It was celebrated among the Jews for the jus civitatis, which Seleucus Nicanor had given to them in that city with the Grecians and Macedonians, and which, saith Josephus,‡ they still retained; and for the wars of the Maccabeans with those kings: among Christians, for being the place where they first received that name, and where both St. Luke and Theophilus were born, and inhabited. There was also another Antioch in Pisidia, mentioned Acts xiii. 14.

Antipatris; this place was formerly called Capharsalama, 1 Macc. vii. 31, and was of little repute till it was rebuilt by Herod in the plain of Capharzaba, which, saith Josephus,§ was watery, and fit for plants, with a river, and a grove compassing the city; it was eighteen miles from Jerusalem, and in the way to Cæsarea Palestine, Acts xxiii. 31, and within the borders of Samaria, and the half tribe of Manasseh.

Apollonia was a city of Macedonia, lying betwixt Amphipolis and Thessalonica: for, saith Luke, "When we had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, we came to Thessalonica." Geographers say there were fourteen cities, and two islands of that name, and Stephanus reckons twenty-five.

Arabia is only mentioned by Paul, saying, that after his conversion he went first in Arabia, Gal. i. 17, where some make him to have staid three years, without any business he did there that they knew of, and without any ground; for both the design of Paul, which was to prove that he received not his gospel from man, but from the immediate revelation of Jesus Christ, and his declaration, that he preached first at Damascus, and then at Jerusalem, Acts xxvi. 20, seem to make it no improbable conjecture, that as Christ, after his baptism, went immediately into the wilderness of Judea, so did Paul, after his baptism, go into Arabia Deserta, where he received his knowledge of that gospel which he preached by revelation from Christ Jesus, and thence returning to Damascus, Gal. i. 17, he straightway preached Christ at Damascus, Acts ix. 20, and so continued to do many days, or a considerable time, ver. 23. We read also of Cretes and Arabians, Acts ii. 11, where by Cretes some think we are not to understand the inhabitants of Crete, that island being far from Arabia, but the Cherithim, a Philistine nation and country, rendered Κρῆτες by the Septuagint, Ezek. xxv. 16, Zeph. ii. 5, 6. But Libya and Rome, mentioned ver. 10, were at a greater distance. The Arabians were anciently called Ishmaelites and Hagarenes, the first from Ishmael the son of Hagar, the second from mount Hagar in Arabia (see note on Gal. iv. 25). This large country, reaching from Euphrates to Egypt, was divided into three parts; Arabia Deserta, so called probably from the word Araba, which signifies desert, which lay full east of Judea, and is called by Strabo‖ Schenitis, by reason of the tents in which that wandering nation dwelt; and the inhabitants of it are in scripture called the men of the east, Gen. xxv. 6, Judg. vi. 3, having Syria on the west, Mesopotamia on the north, Arabia Felix on the east, and Petræa on the south. 2. Petræa, so called from the rockiness of it, or from the strong city Petra, built on a rock, whence the Soldans keep their treasure in it; and in this Arabia was mount Sinai, where the law was given. 2dly, It hath Palestine and Arabia Deserta on the north, on the east and south Arabia Felix, on the west part of Egypt and the Arabian gulf. 3dly, Arabia Felix, lying betwixt the Persian gulf and the Red sea, a fertile country, producing laudanum, myrrh, cassia, and many other drugs and spices, celebrated on that account not only by the poets (see Lloyd's Dictionary), but by Dionysius P. and Eustathius¶ upon him, by Strabo, Pliny, Herodotus, and Q. Curtius; and that part of it especially, saith Strabo, p. 535, which is the most happy nation of the Sabeans, and where is gold, which the Arabian magi brought with them when they came to Christ. See the note on Matt. ii. 1.

Asia, as it is mentioned by ancient geographers, is one of the largest divisions of the world into three parts; but in the New Testament it is taken for Asia Minor only, as it contains the Proconsular Asia, consisting of four regions, of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, and Lydia, saith Cicero:* of which see Bishop Usher in his treatise of the Lesser Asia. In this Proconsular Asia were the seven churches mentioned in the Revelation, ch. ii. iii.

Assos, Acts xx. 13, is a town in Troas; for Paul went from Troas to it. It is memorable, saith Pliny,† for the lapis sarcophagus, which burns up and consumes flesh; of which see Vossius in P. Melam, p. 88, 89. Besides this, there seems to have been another Assos, in Crete, of which see the note on Acts xxvii. 13.

Athens was a city of Greece properly so called, and of the subdivision of it named Achaia; it was so called from Ἀθήνη, i. e. Minerva, to whom it was consecrated. In it was a celebrated academy, which, saith Cornelius Nepos,‡ for antiquity, humanity, and learning, made it excel all the cities of the world; whose inhabitants, saith Cicero,§ were the inventors of all learning, the men who invented and perfected eloquence, and from whom humanity, learning, religion, and laws were dispersed through the whole world; but then to qualify these commendations, he adds, they only knew what was right, but would not do it; they were, saith Plutarch,‖ suspicious and vain-glorious; they were, saith the apostle, δεισιδαιμονέστεροι, "very superstitious," and great worshippers of idols, and so were vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. See the note on Acts xvii. 16. 22, and Dr. Hammond there, and Lloyd in voce.

Attalia was a city of Pamphylia, built by king Attalus, whence St. Paul goes from Perga in Pamphylia to it, Acts xiv. 25. It was a sea-port, and the chief residence of the prefect. Strabo, lib. xiv. p. 459.

Azotus, the Ashdod of the Philistines, where the ark of God triumphed over their Dagon, 1 Sam. v. 2, and where Jonathan,¶ having routed the army of Apollonius, burnt both their god and their temple, and all who fled to it for refuge. It lay about thirty miles distant from Gaza towards Joppa, so that the angel, when he caught up Philip, Acts viii. 40, carried him so many miles. It was in the tribe of Dan, and lay in the middle between Acaron and Geth.

Babylon. By Babylon, the Jews understand not only Chaldea, but also Mesopotamia, Assyria, and even all those kingdoms to which they were carried in the Babylonian captivity: and for this they have ground from the scriptures of the Old Testament, which extend that name to the whole empire of Babylon; as when the destruction of Babylon is represented as the destruction, ὅλης τῆς οἰκουμένης, "of the whole empire," Isa. xii. 9. 11, and from the use of the word among the heathens: for Pliny saith, Babylon, of the Chaldaic nation, had long the eminency over the whole world, on which account the rest of Mesopotamia and Assyria was reckoned a part of it. I have shown, note on 1 Pet. v. 13, that, according to the fathers, the name of Babylon was given to Rome by Peter, and, according to the same fathers, the name of mystical Babylon†† was given to her also, partly for her greatness, pride, and oppression of God's people, and partly for her resemblance of it in idolatry, that kingdom so fully representing the idolatry of the church of Rome, in the description given of it in the sixth chapter of Baruch, that scarce any real difference betwixt them can be observed.

Berea, mentioned Acts xvii. 10, is a city of Macedonia;* a great and populous city, saith Lucian. This was the city to which Paul and Silas fled from Thessalonica, and where they found a synagogue of the best-natured Jews and proselytes they met with; for they received the word with all readiness, and examined it by the best test of truth, the scriptures; and so the converts there were many of both sorts, ver. 11, 12.

Bithynia is a region of Asia Minor,† bounded on the north with the Euxine sea, on the south with Phrygia, on the west with the Propontis, on the east with Galatia. It was anciently called Bebraica and Mygdonia, say Servius,‡ Solinus, and Mart. Capella, and afterward Bithynia, from Bithynus, the king of it, say most geographers; from בטן. the belly or interior parts, saith Bochart; both Pliny§ and Mela representing them as possessing the inward parts of that region only. The old Geographer, published by Gothofred, styles them‖ "the greatest and most happy nation," in which the first general council of Nice was held.

Bethabara signifies a place or passage. It was a water distinct from Jordan, and removed somewhat from it, John i. 28, x. 40, to which men passed over Jordan; the town was out of the precincts of Judea, in the Scythopolitan country, where the Jews dwelt among the Syro-Grecians, and was over against Galilee: so Dr. Lightfoot; over against Jericho, Josh. iii. 16.

Bethany took its name from a tract of ground so called from Athene, which signifies the dates of palm-trees, which grew there plentifully: the town of Bethany where Lazarus dwelt, and where he was raised from the dead, was fifteen furlongs from Jerusalem, John xi. 8, but the tract of ground that bore that name reached within eight furlongs of Jerusalem, it being only a sabbath-day's journey from it, Luke xxiv. 50, Acts i. 12, and then began the tract called Bethpage, from the phagi; i. e. the green figs which grew upon it, which ran along so near to Jerusalem, that the outmost street within the walls was called by that name. St. Jerome saith there was villula, a little village there, of the same name.

Beth-lehem, "the house of bread," was the place where Christ, "the bread of life," was born, as the Jerusalem Gemarists confess: it was a city in the time of Boaz, for he styles it "the city of his people," Ruth iii. 11, and goes up to the gates of it, iv. 1. It was a city fortified by Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xi. 6. It is called David's city, 1 Sam. xx. 6. 29; and therefore when every tribe and family went up to their respective cities to be taxed, Luke ii. 3, Joseph goes up to this city of David, ver. 4. Though therefore it be called by the Jews κώμη, a "town," or "village," John vii. 42, that only signifies, that, being one of the least cities, it might comparatively be called so, as Nain is by Josephus, vide Nain; and the Hebrew עיר, a city, is often rendered by the Seventy κώμη, where our translation speaks of cities, as Joshua x. 37, xv. 9, 1 Chron. xxvii. 25, Isa. xlii. 11. It might be, after the destruction of Jerusalem, a village, as it is twice called by Justin Martyr.¶ In St. Jerome it is sometimes a city, and sometimes a village, but then, that he styles it only comparatively a village, may be gathered from his own words on Micah v. 2.

Bethesda. The pool of Bethesda is the same with the pool of Siloam, of which see there, and notes on John v. 1 2 It was a pool in Jerusalem, saith Jerome, and had the name of προβατικὴ, "the sheep-pool," from the sacrifices washed there by the priests; he adds, that there is yet a lake there,* whose waters are very red, as if mixed with blood, giving testimony of what was done there of old. Dr. Lightfoot saith these sacrifices were washed elsewhere, and that the unclean washed in this pool, and whilst they did so, laid up their clothes in one of the porches. Of the miracles wrought there by the angel descending, and of the miracle wrought by our Lord, see the note there.

Bethsaida, saith Bochart, is a place of fishing, as it might be called, because situated, saith Pliny,† on the east of the lake Gennesareth; in Batanea, and the lower Gaulonitis, saith Josephus,‡ at the beginning of the mountainous country. It is a place of hunting, saith Dr. Lightfoot, so called because it stood near Naphtali, where there were store of deer, Naphtali abounding in venison, Gen. xlix. 21. It was raised by Philip from a village to the honour of a city, and called Julia, in honour of the emperor's daughter. It was one of the cities against which Christ denounced a woe, Matt. xi. 21, for her impenitence and infidelity, after the mighty works he had done in her: it also was the city where three apostles dwelt; viz. Philip, Andrew, and Peter, John i. 45.

Cana. There were two Canas besides Galilee; one in the tribe of Asher, Josh. xix. 28, called by Jerome, "Cana the great;" another in the tribe of Ephraim, Josh. xvi. 8, xvii. 9, and two in Galilee, the one in the north part of the lower Galilee, and dividing it from the upper; and Cana of Galilee, or the less, situated over against Julius Betharampta, on the west of Capernaum, whence Christ, after he had wrought his first miracle there, went down to Capernaum, John ii. 12, and when he was returned thither, the nobleman comes from Capernaum to him there, John iv. 46, 47. Of this Cana Josephus speaks, saying, ἐν κώμῃ τῆς Γαλιλαίας ᾗ προσαγορεύεται Κάνα,§ "In a village of Galilee which was called Cana."

Canaan was twofold; the larger terminated on the south part with the desert of Sin or Cades, on the north with mount Libanus and Antilibanus, on the east with the river Euphrates, and with the Mediterranean sea on the west: so Deut. xi. 24, Josh. i. 3, 4, "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given you: from the wilderness (of Paran) and (or, even to) Libanus, and to the great river Euphrates, and to the great sea shall your coast be;" accordingly Joshua saith, "God gave to Israel all the land which he sware to give to their fathers, and they possessed it and dwelt in it," Josh. xxi. 43. 45, and xxiii. 14, "There failed not any good thing which the Lord had spoken to the house of Israel; all came to pass." How this could be said by him who had left so much of the seven nations unsubdued, Judg. i., and who divided not to them the whole land of Canaan, but only that part of it which was possessed by the seven nations, is a great question; to which the usual answer is, that he gave them a right to the whole country, dividing it among them by a lot ordered and directed by him, and he gave them the actual possession of the greatest part of it, with power to subdue the rest if they continued obedient; and more was not intended presently, the Lord not having promised to give them the whole land at once, they being not sufficient to people the whole country, but by degrees, as their increase should make them ready for, and their obedience should continue their right to it: for thus saith God by Moses, Exod. xxiii. 29, "I will not drive them out before thee in one year, lest the land become desolate, and the beasts of the field multiply against thee; but by little and little I will drive them out before thee, until thou be increased to inherit the land." To which may be added, that Joshua gave them all the land their feet had trod on, and more God did not promise to them in the words cited from him.

Canaan the less is extended from the wilderness in the south to Libanus in the north, and from Jordan on the east to the Midland sea on the west, the length of it being one hundred and sixty miles, the breadth of it only fifty; and it is thus described, Gen. x. 19, "The borders of the Canaanites (i. e. the seven nations of them voted to destruction) were from Sidon (i. e. the country of Sidon, which extendeth itself east as far as Jordan), as thou comest to Gerar unto Gaza; and (the southern border is) as thou goest to Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, even unto Lasha," i. e. the Ἀάσσα in Josephus,* towards Arabia Petræa. See Bochart. Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 37.

Capernaum was a city seated near to the sea of Galilee at the bottom of the lake of Gennesareth; for Christ's disciples came from the wilderness of Bethsaida over the lake to the land of Gennesareth, Matt. xiv. 31, Mark. vi. 46, and yet to Capernaum, John vi. 16. 24. It was in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim, Matt. iv. 13, renowned on the account of Christ's habitation and his many miracles, which brought woe upon them for their infidelity, Matt. xi. 23. Near this town was the mountain where Christ preached his excellent sermon, for coming down thence he went to Capernaum, Matt. viii. 5, i. e. a journey of ten miles, if Thabor was that mount, as it is conjectured by Jerome on the place; and near it also was the custom-house, at which Matthew the publican sat when Christ called him, for he called him "as he passed from his own city," Matt. ix. 1. 9.

Cappadocia was a kingdom bounded on the† east with Armenia, on the west with Paphlagonia and Galatia, on the north with the Euxine sea, on the south with that part of mount Taurus which looks towards Cilicia: it was famed for‡ mules and horses, of which it gave yearly to the Persians, horses one thousand five hundred, mules two thousand. It was a nation so servile, saith Strabo,§ that when the Romans offered them their freedom to live by their own laws, they said they could not endure liberty: they were, saith Cicero, de grege venalium. Orat. post Red. in Senat. n. 12.

Cæsarea Palestine, so called, as being the metropolis of Palestine and the seat of the Roman proconsul, was formerly named the Tower of Strato; but being a mart-town, whose haven was very incommodious, Herod the Great built there a large city with many‖ stately marble buildings, a theatre of stone, and a most capacious amphitheatre (where Herod Antipas was smitten by an angel of God; see the note on Acts xii. 23), and an admirable haven, with marble edifices and towers, the greatest of which he called Drusus, in honour of the emperor's son; the city Cæsarea, in honour of Cæsar; it was situated between Doron and Joppa, thirty-five miles from Jerusalem, and was inhabited¶ partly by the Jews, who had their schools there; but chiefly by the Greeks or Syrians, betwixt whom there were feuds, περὶ τῆς ἰσοπολιτείας, "concerning equal privileges," the Cæsareans killing about one thousand two hundred Jews, when Florus was procurator of Judea. Here Peter converted Cornelius and his kinsmen, the first-fruits of the gentiles, Acts x.; here lived Philip the evangelist, Acts xxi. 8; and here Paul defended himself against the Jews and their orator Tertullus, Acts xxiv.

Cæsarea Philippi, mentioned Matt. xvi. 13, Mark viii. 27, was first called Lais or Lashem, Judg. xviii. 7, and when subdued by the Danites, Dan, v. 29. It was built by Philip the tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis, Luke iii. 1, who made it the place of his residence, as being conveniently seated between both. He built it, saith Josephus, at Paneas, by the springs of Jordan, and called it Cæsarea Philippi, and also Nerodiada in honour of Nero. It was seated at the springs of Jordan the less, not far from Libanus in the midland Phœnicia, saith Ptolemy, and was a Decapolitan city called Cæsarea-Panias, or Sub-Panio; not because of the worship of Panius Philostorgius, or by reason of the springs of Pancas, as Pliny,* but by reason of the mountain Panius mentioned by Josephus and Eusebius, under which it lies. What Eusebius saith of the two statues of Corinthian brass, erected here by the woman cured at Capernaum of the bloody flux, see confuted in the note on Mark v. 26.

Cedron. Of the brook Cedron, which our Lord passed over to go into the garden where he was betrayed, John xviii. 1, mention is made when David fled from Absalom, for he passed over the brook Kidron, 2 Sam. xv. 23, and when king Solomon saith to Shimei, "In the day that thou passest over the brook Kidron thou shalt surely die." See also Jer. xxxi. 40, where the Septuagint always speaks of Κέδρων, or τῶν Κέδρων, in the plural; it was, saith Jerome,† a torrent or valley near to Jerusalem, on the east side betwixt it and mount Olivet; a deep valley, saith Josephus:‡ and into this valley was conveyed the blood poured out at the foot of the altar, which because it made the river look black, some think it was called Cedron from the word kiddar, which signifies blackness; others from the cedar-trees planted on each side, whence, say they, it is still named in the plural, τῶν Κέδρων, from these cedar-trees.

Chaldea is only mentioned in these words, Acts vii. 4, "And Abraham came out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran," where, by the land of the Chaldeans, we are not to understand the country so named in Asia Major, which was in the plain, but a mountainous country, which is part of Mesopotamia, as appears from these words; "God appeared to Abraham while he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran." That both this Charran and Chaldea lay in Mesopotamia, see Bochart, Phaleg, lib. ii. cap. 6, and the note on Acts vii. 4.

Cenchrea was the isthmus of Corinth, distant seventy furlongs from it, where were celebrated the Isthmian games; whence the apostle, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, speaks so oft in allusion to these games: see notes on 1 Epist. ix. 8 9 10 2 Epist. iv. 7—9. Hence he tells them of a corruptible crown for which they wrestled, their coronets being either of the σέλινον, "parsley," which quickly withered, or of πίτυς, "the pine-tree," which soon decayed.

Clauda, Acts xxvii. 16, was an island near Crete, situated at the meeting of the southern and the western sea, of which geographers say nothing, unless it be the Gaudus mentioned by Pliny, lib. iv. cap. 12, and by Mela, lib. ii. cap. 7.

Chios, Acts x. 15, is an island of the Ægean sea, betwixt Lesbos and Samos, celebrated by Horace§ and Martial‖ for the wine and figs that came from thence, and also by Pliny, lib. v. cap. 31, and Strabo, lib. xiv. p. 444, for its marble and white earth.

Cilicia, a country of Asia Minor, betwixt Pamphylia on the west and Pieria on the east, the mount Taurus on the north, and the Cilician sea on the south, celebrated on the account of Cicero, proconsul there, but more on the account of St. Paul's birth at Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, Acts xxi. 15.

Colosse was a city of Phrygia Major, built by the river Lycus, near the place, saith Herodotus,¶ where it begins to run under ground, as it doth for five furlongs before it rises again, and slides into Meander. To this city, situated at an equal distance betwixt Laodicea and Hierapolis, mentioned Col. ii. 1, came Xerxes in his expedition against Greece, and to this city Paul writ an epistle. All these three cities perished by an earthquake, saith Eusebius, in the tenth of Nero, that is, but two years after St. Paul's epistle was sent to them.

Coos, Acts xxi. 1, was an island in the Ægean or Icarian sea, near Mindus or Cnidus, which had a city of the same name, from which Hippocrates the celebrated physician, and Apelles the famous limner, were called Coi; here was a large temple of Æsculapius, and another of Juno: it abounded in rich wines, and here were made those Coæ vestes which were transparent, and are so often mentioned by the poets.

Chorazin, saith Jerome, is a town in Galilee, which our Lord deplores for her incredulity, Matt. xii. 22. Dr. Lightfoot wonders how such a woe should be denounced against it, when we read not, in the whole New Testament, that our Lord had ever been there; but that our Lord was frequently at Bethsaida and Capernaum, copartners in that woe, we read: now Chorazin being by Dr. Lightfoot placed betwixt them, and being, saith Jerome,* but two miles distant from Capernaum, and in many maps but little distant from Bethsaida, and it being said expressly, that "mighty works were done in her," doubtless Christ must have been often there.

Cnidus, mentioned Acts xxvii. 7, was a city and promontory in the peninsula of Paria, celebrated for the worship of Venus, hence called Venus Cnidia; whence Horace† sings thus, O Venus regina Cnidi; and for the statue of Venus made by Praxiteles, and by Pliny‡ reckoned among the admirable works of that artificer.

Corinth was a most noble city of Achaia Propria, called anciently Ephire, saith Pliny;§ and after Corinth, from one Corinthus, who took and rebuilt it. It was considerable among heathen authors for its citadel Acro-Corinthus, built on a very high mountain, and for its‖ insolence against the Roman legates, which caused L. Mummius, thence styled Achaicus, to destroy it; in the conflagration of which city so many statues were melted down, that the remains of them made that famous Corinthian brass which was esteemed above gold or silver; and of which, saith Josephus, the Beautiful gate of the temple of Jerusalem was made (see the note on Acts iii. 2). The Corinthians were noted for their wisdom, hence styled by Cicero,¶ "the light of all Greece;" by Florus, decus Græciæ, "the glory of Greece;" and for their riches, for, saith Strabo πλουσία διαπαντὸς ὑπῆρξεν, "it was always rich." They were filled with orators and philosophers; and from them, say the fathers, came the contentions and false doctrines which sprang up in that church, on the account of which Paul speaks thus to them, "Ye are rich, ye are wise, ye are honourable," 1 Cor. iv. 9, 10. They also had a temple of Venus, to whom, saith Strabo,†† "one thousand whores were consecrated," whence they became infamous to a proverb for that vice, and for all kind of lasciviousness, which caused the apostle in his epistles to them to speak so much against it: see the preface to the First Epistle. Lastly, there was a great resort of the Jews to this city, who, saith Philo, "inhabited Κορίνθου, καὶ πλεῖστα καὶ ἄριστα Πελοποννήσου, Corinth, and the chiefest and best parts of Peloponnesus," and had one or more synagogues there, Acts xviii. 8, whence came those Judaizers and false apostles, so often mentioned in the epistles to those churches.

Cyprus, so called from the flower of the cypress-trees growing there, as Pliny‡‡ speaking of the kinds of cypress, and Eustathius§§ say, was an island, having on the east the Syrian, on the west the Pamphylian, on the south the Phœnician, on the north the Cilician sea: it was celebrated among the heathens for its fertility, as being, say Strabo‖‖ and Ammianus Marcellinus, sufficiently provided of all things within itself, et nullius externi indigens; whence it was also called the rich and happy island, but was very* infamous for the worship of Venus, who had thence her name Κύπρις, and her title Venus Cypria; that demon, saith Eustathius, delighting in that island for their adultery and proneness to venery, they consecrating their women to whoredom, and by a law compelling them to lie with strangers, as the Babylonians did. It was memorable among the Jews for being an island in which they so abounded, that at one time they slew, saith Dio,† two hundred and forty thousand of the inhabitants, and were on that account forbid to come afterward to that island; and among Christians for being the place where Joses, called Barnabas, had the land he sold, Acts iv. 36, and where Mnason an old disciple lived, Acts xxi. 16.

Dalmanutha, vide Magdala.

Damascus, a most ancient city, where Eliezer, the servant of Abraham, dwelt; built, saith Josephus,‡ by Uz the son of Aram, mentioned Gen. x. 23, and situate in the valley betwixt Libanus and Antilibanus, watered by the rivers Abana and Pharphar, 2 Kings v. 12, one of which is by Pliny,§ Strabo,‖ and others, called Chrysorrhoas, by reason of its golden sands: it was made tributary to David, 2 Sam. viii. 6, afterward it was the capital city of the kings of Syria, Isa. vii. 8. It is a city famous for its antiquity, and for being still one of the richest and most magnificent cities of the Levant, but most of all for being the place of the miraculous conversion of Paul. Here the Jews had their synagogues, and converted to their religion¶ most of the women of the place, but the men entirely hated them, and killed at one time twelve, at another eighteen thousand of them, and their families.

Decapolis, saith Jerome, was a country of ten cities, beyond Jordan, which all do not reckon alike, saith Pliny, who places them all beyond Jordan, except Scythopolis: Josephus†† saith, that Justus of Tiberias τὰς ἐν τῇ Συρίᾳ Δεκαπόλεις ἐπολεμεῖτο, "fought against the cities of Decapolis in Syria," and that when Vespasian came to Ptolemais,‡‡ οἱ πρῶτοι τῶν τῆς Συρίας Δεκαπόλεων, "the chief men of the cities of Decapolis in Syria" complained to him against Justus upon that account; and of these cities§§ he saith, that Hippo and Gadara were two: whence it is evident Bochartus must mistake, when he places all these cities in Galilee, and makes Tiberias to be one of them, it being Justus of Tiberias that fought against them. They were all cities inhabited chiefly by the gentiles, though some of them might be within the region of Judea.

Derbe was a city of Lycaonia near Isauria, mentioned Acts xiv. 6. It was the seat of Antipater Derbæus, and the country of Timothy.

Egypt was bounded on the north with the Mediterranean; on the east by Arabia Petræa, and the Red sea: on the south by Ethiopia and Nubia; on the west by Libya, and the desert of Barca. It is divided into the upper Egypt, through which Nile runneth with a single stream; and into lower Egyt, which begins where Nile divides, and so makes the island, from its resemblance of the Greek Δ, called Delta, and then runs down to the Mediterranean shore, whence it is also called Ægyptus Maritima. Of the river Nile, the pyramids, their mummies, cities, customs, see geographers. Of the names it hath in the Old Testament, see Bochart. For explication of some passages in the New, consider, 1st, The Egyptian language, which differed from the Greek, as Bochart* proves against Kircher, and from the Hebrew, whence the Jews in it are said to have "heard a strange language," Ps. lxxxi. 6, and coming from it, to have come "from a barbarous people," Ps. cxiv. 1 (see the note on 1 Cor. xiv. 11). Hence Joseph, representing an Egyptian, speaks to his brethren by an interpreter, Gen. xlii. 23, and it is prophesied by Isaiah, xix. 18, that five Egyptian cities should speak the language of Canaan, i. e. of those who lived there. Hence Chiun, which in the Hebrew is put for Saturn (as also it signifies among the Persians and Ishmaelites), is, by the Septuagint, who made their translation in Egypt, turned into Ῥαιφὰν, Amos v. 26, which in the Egyptian language is put for Saturn, and is cited by Stephen, Ῥεμφὰν, Acts vii. 43 (see the note there).

2ndly, The Egyptian learning, which, had it not been considerable, sure we should not have heard of Homer, Solon, Musæus, Dædalus, Pythagoras, Plato, Democritus, and others, going thither to learn wisdom, and bringing to their respective countries the learning they had there acquired. Egypt would not have been called by Horus in Macrobius,† "the mother of arts:" nor the inhabitants, "the parents of all philosophy:" nor would Athenæus‡ have told us, that both the Greeks and barbarians had all their learning from the Alexandrians. But of this see more in the commentary upon these words, "And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," Acts vii. 22.

3dly, Egypt is by profane authors, as well as by the fathers, said to be guilty of most vile idolatry. Herodotus§ informs us, they first made altars, images, and temples for the gods, and that almost all the names of the gods came from Egypt‖ into Greece. And Jupiter in Lucian¶ confesses, that the Egyptian gods were αἰσχρὰ καὶ γελαιότερα, "filthy and more ridiculous" than those of other nations: their gods were called, not only by the fathers, but even by the poets,†† portenta magis quam numina. They are also noted in scripture for afflicting, persecuting, and destroying the people of God; upon both these accounts the great city Rome is by John styled spiritually Egypt, Rev. xi. 8.

4thly, That Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt, is attested by many profane authors;‡‡ and that he led them through the sea, and that the Egyptians following after them were drowned, is owned by Artabanus;§§ Diodorus Siculus adds, that the fame of this drying up of the Red sea was preserved till his time among the Ichthyophagi,‖‖ who lived near to it: and Origen* informs us, that it was common among the heathens, "to exorcise demons by that God who did καταποντίσαι ἐν τῇ ἐρυθρᾷ θαλάσσῃ τὸν Αἰγυπτίων βασιλέα, καὶ τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους, overthrow the Egyptians and their king in the Red sea," according to these words of Paul, "By faith they passed through the Red sea as by dry land: which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned," Heb. xi. 29.

Elamites are only mentioned in these words, Acts ii. 9, "Parthians, Medes, and Elamites;" where Luke goes from east to west, the Elamites lying west of the Medes; for the Susians are joined to the Elamites, saith Strabo, and to them the Medes. Elam and Madai are also mentioned in scripture together, Isa. xxi. 2, Jer. xxv. 25. They were so called from Elam the Son of Sem, Gen. x. 22, and their capital city was Elymais: they were a warlike people living by rapine, and fighting with bows and arrows, Isa. xxii. 6, Jer. xlix. 35, as the Susians and Persians did, but were a different people from them; for they were joined to Susia, saith Strabo,† and there was an ingress to them from Persia, and the Susians and Elamites are mentioned apart, Ezra iv. 9, though they are both comprehended sometimes under the name of Elam. See Dan. viii. 2.

Emmaus, saith Luke, xxiv. 15, and Josephus,‡ in his book of the Wars of the Jews, was a village distant sixty furlongs from Jerusalem; it was after made a city, and a Roman colony, and called Nicopolis.

Ephesus, the metropolis and noble mart of the Proconsular Asia, situated upon the river Cayster, was famous for the temple of Diana, one of the stateliest structures in the world: it was, as Pliny§ saith, the wonder of magnificence, built at the common charge of all Asia, properly so called, and was two hundred and twenty years in building; it was four hundred and twenty-five feet long, two hundred and twenty broad, and supported by one hundred and twenty-seven pillars sixty feet high, and was generally accounted one of the seven wonders of the world: it was burnt the same day that Socrates was poisoned, four hundred years before Christ; and again, the same night that Alexander the Great was born, but rebuilt and adorned by the Ephesians, whence that city is styled νεωκόρος, Acts xix. 35, "an adorner of the temple of the goddess Diana," which, say the scholiasts upon Aristophanes, and Suidas, signifies‖ to adorn and beautify (see note there). The Ephesians were noted for their skill in the art of magic: see the note on Acts xix. 19, and for their luxury and lasciviousness: see the note on Eph. v. 5. The Jews dwelt here in abundance, having obtained the privilege of citizens, saith Josephus:¶ but this city was chiefly celebrated among Christians for Paul's stay here almost three years, Acts xx. 31, his mighty miracles done there, Acts xix. 11, 1 Cor. xvi. 9, and the opposition he met with from the Jews, Acts xx. 19; for Timothy, made bishop there; for the beloved apostle who governed the Asiatic churches; and for being one of the seven churches to which Christ sent instructions, Rev. ii. 1.

Ephraim. We read in John xi. 54, that Christ went from Jerusalem to a country near the wilderness, and to a city named Ephraim: now Ephraim and Bethel, saith Josephus, were πολίχνια, "little cities" situated in the land of Benjamin, near the wilderness of Judea, in the way from Jerusalem to Jericho.

Gadara was, according to Josephus,†† the metropolis of Perea, or the region beyond Jordan: it is now called Hippodion, saith Pliny,‡‡ and hath the river Hieramax, or Jarmoc, flowing by it; both make it a Decapolitan city,§§ and so of heathen jurisdiction, whence perhaps it was destroyed by the Jews, but was rebuilt by Pompey in favour of Demetrius Gadarensis, his manumitted servant, saith Josephus.* The inhabitants of this city, being rich, sent legates to Vespasian coming against Judea, and gave up this strong city to him; both the city and villages belonging to it lay within the region of the Gergesenes, whence Christ going into the country of the Gadarenes, Mark v. 1, is said to go into the region of the Gergesenes, Matt. viii. 28.

Galatia is a province of the lesser Asia, so called from the Gauls, who, saith Strabo,† seated themselves there under their captain Leonorius; it was bounded on the west by Phrygia, on the east by the river Halys, on the north by Paphlagonia, and on the south by Lycaonia; its chief cities were Ancyra, Tavium, and Pessinuntum, whence Grotius saith Paul, writing to the churches of Galatia, writ to these. They worshipped the mother of the gods, and especially they of Pessinuntum, and so, as Paul saith, Gal. iv. 8, "they knew not God." Callimachus in his Hymns, and Hilary, who was himself a Gaul, represent them as‡ a very foolish people; whence Paul saith, iii. 1, "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched?" This church was so dangerously perverted, and almost overturned by the Judaizers there, that the apostle, in his epistle to them, doth not call them saints.

Galilee contained the tribes of Issachar, Zabulon, Naphthali, Asher, with part of Dan, and Perea, beyond the river; it was bounded on the north by Lebanon and Syria, on the west by Phœnicia, on the south by Samaria, on the east mostly by the river Jordan, and the sea of Galilee. It is divided, by Josephus,§ into the upper and the lower Galilee: but Dr. Lightfoot divides it into three parts; the upper Galilee, so called, because it abounded in mountains; it was eminently called "Galilee of the gentiles," Matt. iv. 15, because it abounded with them, being partly inhabited, saith Strabo,‖ by Egyptians, Arabians, and Phœnicians; this contained the tribes of Asher and Naphthali: the lower, which contained the tribes of Zabulon and Issachar, because it was champaign, was called "the great field;" and, thirdly, the vale, which is the border of Tiberias. It was, saith Josephus,¶ very populous, containing two hundred and four cities and towns, the least of which towns had πεντακισχιλίους ὑπὲρ τοῖς μυρίοις οἰκήτορας, "above fifteen thousand inhabitants." It was also a very rich country, as paying for its tribute, saith he, two hundred talents: they were, saith he, a warlike people, defending themselves against all the assaults of their enemies round about; and their wealth and prowess made them a seditious people, and prone to rebel against the Romans.

Gaza, or Azza, was a city in the tribe of Judah: it was taken by Judah, Judg. i. 18; but because they destroyed not the inhabitants, as they should have done, but only made them tributaries, ver. 28, it was regained by them, after the time of Jephthah, when "the children of Israel did evil again, and the Lord delivered them into the hands of the Philistines," xiii. 1. It was one of the five satrapies of the Philistines, which offered their golden emerods to the God of Israel for a trespass-offering, 1 Sam. vi. 17, and the city whose gates Samson took away, Judg. xvi. 2, and whither he was carried when taken, ver. 22, and where he pulled down the house of their god Dagon upon the lords of the Philistines, ver. 30. This old town was destroyed by Alexander, and so "made desolate," as the prophet had foretold, Zeph. ii. 4, and is therefore called, saith Strabo, a continued desert (see the note on Acts viii. 26). For whereas this old city was seven furlongs from the bay, the new, built by Constantine, was, saith Jerome,†† in another place near to it.

Gennesaret was a region thirty furlongs in length, and in breadth twenty; a very pleasant and fruitful place, abounding in the gardens of great men, whence it had its name from גן and שׂר, as being the garden of princes; it lay at the bottom of the lake of Gennesaret, and gave that name to it, Luke v. 1. The celebrated city of Tiberias was built close by it on the east, and gave it the name of "the sea of Tiberias," John xxi. 1. And it was called "the sea of Galilee," John vi. 1, as being situated in Galilee, in the tribe of Naphthali, saith Dr. Lightfoot; of Zabulon, say others: it was, saith Josephus,* forty furlongs in breadth, and a hundred in length; saith Pliny,† sixteen miles long, and six in breadth: its waters were sweet and pleasant; and, as the Jews say, that God loved this more than all the other seas, so did our Saviour much frequent it, and after his resurrection appeared to his disciples at it, John xxi. 1.

Gergesa was a town near Gadara, so called either from the Gergesites, the posterity of Canaan; for neither did Zabulon nor Naphthali drive out all the Canaanites, Judg. i. 30. 33, or from Gergishta, signifying clay, the soil being clay: it gave name to a region so called, which comprehended in it Gadara, Hippo, and Magdala. See Gadara.

Gethsemane was a garden beyond Kedron, at the foot of mount Olivet, so called from the wine-presses in it.

Golgotha signifies a skull, from the rolling of it; as we read, Luke xxiii. 33, "The place was called the place of a skull," Matt. xxvii. 33, Mark xv. 32, John xix. 17, of which St. Cyril‡ gives this very improbable reason, that it was called so prophetically, because Christ, our head, was crucified there; he being not κράνιον, our "skull," but ἡ κεφαλὴ, our "head:" others think it was so called, from the head of Adam, buried there; this we have received by tradition, say Origen,§ Cyprian, Athanasius, St. Basil, Epiphanius, Ambrose, Chrysostom, Augustine: whereas they could receive no such tradition from the Jews, who taught, that Adam was buried at Kiriath-Arbe, or Hebron; whence Jerome, on the place, says, this tradition is pleasing, but not true: he therefore saith, it was so called, as being a place full of skulls, by reason of the malefactors executed and buried there. Against which opinion it may be objected, that it is never called "the place of skulls," but, "of a skull:" others therefore say, it was so called, because it was a little hill in form like to a man's skull.

Greece, called also Hellas, was celebrated throughout the world for learning and wisdom: it was that little part of Europe, saith Cicero,‖ "which flourished in fame, glory, learning, and in most arts." Hence Tatian¶ saith, "They divided wisdom among themselves," and said, "it belonged to them alone;" and to this the apostle seemeth to refer, when he saith, "I am debtor to the Greek and to the barbarian, to the wise and to the unwise," Rom. i. 14, they calling all other nations barbarians (see the note on 1 Cor. xiv. 11): because, saith Strabo, τὸ παιδείας καὶ λόγων οἰκεῖον, "learning and reason obtained among them, but was neglected by other nations,†† who the more they were distant from them, the more they were ignorant:" but when the apostle also adds, that which all the apologists‡‡ for the Christian faith observe, that, "professing themselves wise they became fools," by their idolatry, Rom. i. 21, 22; none being more addicted to it than the Grecians and the Athenians (see there), who were esteemed as the eye of Greece; Tatian saith,§§ "They rather chose to have more demons than one God." Their gods, saith Cicero,‖‖ "were first men," and with these, we, saith he, and they "have filled the heavens:" and yet it is, with the highest reason, said, in the same author, that nothing can be more absurd, quàm homines morti deletos referre in deos, "than to make gods of dead men," De Nat. Deorum, lib. i. n. 29. Note also, that Greece, in its largest acceptation, comprehended all Macedonia, Thessaly, Epirus, Achaia (i. e. Greece properly so called), Peloponnesus, and the circumjacent islands; and so was bounded on the north with the Scardian mountains, on the west with the Ionian, on the south with the Cretian, and on the east with the Ægean seas: hence in Daniel, viii. 22, x. 20, xi. 2, it is used, in the largest acceptation, to denote Macedonia, as well as the more southern parts of Greece; whereas, in Acts xx. 2, it is used exclusively of Macedonia, when it is said that Paul, going through the parts of Macedonia, came to Greece.

Fair-haven, Acts xxvii. 8, styled by Stephanus, καλὴ ἀκτὴ, "the fair-shore," is a part of Crete, where, saith he, was a city, or great village: but whereas it is there styled a part, ᾧ ἐγγὺς ἡ πόλις Λασαῖα, "near to the city of Lasæa," that troubles the commentators, who can find no city in Crete of that name, besides one mentioned by Pliny, which he places in the continent. Jerome, and from him other geographers, speak of it as civitas littoralis, "a city by the shore:" moreover, Dr. Lightfoot shows that ἐγγὺς, and οὐ πόῤῥω, are sometimes used by geographers of places distant almost one hundred miles.

Hierapolis, mentioned Col. ii. 1, is a city of Phrygia, as appears from its nearness to Laodicea, celebrated by Strabo,* for its hot lapidific waters; and for a hollow place called Plutonium, not much exceeding a man's length, whose noisome exhalations suffocate every thing that enters into it, except a capon: it was so called, saith Stephanus, ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱερὰ πολλὰ ἔχειν, "from the many temples it had in it."

Iconium was a city of Lycaonia, the chief of the fourteen belonging to that tetrarchy, saith Pliny,† a well-built city in the richest part of Lycaonia, saith Strabo.‡ Here was a synagogue of Jews and proselytes, to whom Paul and Barnabas preaching, and confirming their doctrine by miracles, made many proselytes, Acts xiv. 1—3, and where the unbelieving Jews and gentiles made an assault upon them, to "use them despitefully, and to stone them," ver. 5.

Idumea, Mark iii. 8, is not the region of Syria, in which the Edomites, or the posterity of Esau, dwelt, but the Jewish Idumea, or the south part of Judea; and hence, in Diodorus Siculus, the seat of Sodom, which is the south of Judea, is said to be, κατὰ μέσην την σατραπείαν τῆς Ἰδυμαίας,§ "in the midst of the province of Idumea:" in the book of Maccabees are many places mentioned, as in Idumea, which were almost in the middle of Judea; v. g. Bethoron is κώμη Ἰδυμαίας, "a village of Idumea," 1 Macc. iv. 29; it is κώμη τῆς Ἰουδαίας, "a village of Judea," saith Josephus;‖ and ver. 61, Bethsura, near to Jerusalem, is fortified to be a defence against the Idumeans. Josephus adds, that Judas and his brethren left not off fighting with the Idumeans, but fell upon them every where,¶ taking the cities of Hebron, Merissa, and Azotus, which were all in the land of Judah. It therefore is conjectured, that in the time of the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, the Edomites had invaded their possessions, and fixed their tents there; though afterward, by the powerful arms of the Maccabees and Asmoneans, they were either rooted out, or constrained to embrace Judaism: thus Josephus informs us, that when Hyrcanus had taken Sechem and mount Gerizim, and the country of the Cutheans, or Samaritans, he proceeds to take the city of Idumea, Adore, and Marissa, both in Judea; and having subdued all the Idumeans, he declares he would expel them from their seats, if they would not be circumcised, and submit to the Jewish laws: and that hereupon, they, out of love to their country, καὶ τὴν περιτομὴν καὶ τὴν ἄλλην τοῦ βίου δίαιταν ὑπέμειναν την αὐτὴν Ἰουδαίοις ποιῆσασθαι, "received circumcision, and conformed to the same course or diet with the Jews," and styled themselves their domestics and compatriots. De Bel. Jud. lib. iv. cap. 16, 17.

Jericho was a wealthy city in Benjamin, which Joshua destroyed, with a curse upon him that should rebuild it, vi. 26. Nevertheless, Hiel the Bethelite rebuilt it, in the days of Ahab; and the curse pronounced upon him by Joshua for so doing was punctually fulfilled, 1 Kings xvi. 34. After its restoration, it was ennobled by the schools of the prophets; near to it was a large spring, but unwholesome, and making the land unfruitful, till Elisha cured it, 2 Kings v. 21, and from that time it produced fruitfulness in abundance. The country, saith Josephus,* was seated in a plain, narrow, but long; for it runs out northward to the country of Scythopolis, and southward to the land of Sodom, being one hundred and fifty miles in length, and fifteen in breadth: opposite to it lay a mountain beyond Jordan; and this great plain is, by Matthew, styled ἡ περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, "the region about Jordan," Matt. iii. 5. It was planted, say Strabo and Pliny, with a grove of palm-trees (whence the city of palm-trees, Deut. xxxiv. 3, Judg. i. 16, is, by the Targum, called Jericho), and well watered with springs, and fruitful with balsam, which, saith Josephus,† is the best commodity of the place. Under the second temple, it gave place to no city of Judea but Jerusalem; had a‡ royal palace in it, where Herod ended his days; a hippodromus, where the Jewish nobility, being imprisoned by him, were to be slain after his death; and an amphitheatre, where his will was publicly opened and read: it was distant from Jerusalem almost nineteen miles; but the way from Jerusalem to it being desert and rocky, it was infested with thieves (see the note on Luke x. 30. 32); and Jericho having twelve thousand priests and Levites which served at the temple, it is no wonder that a priest and Levite should pass by that way.

Jerusalem may be considered, either (first) as the capital city of Judea, in compass six miles and a quarter, standing in the two tribes of Benjamin and Judah, and built upon three mountains; mount Zion, on which the upper city, which was on the north of Jerusalem, was built; Acra, on which stood the lower city, properly called Jerusalem; and mount Moriah, "the mountain of the Lord's house," which was compassed about by the city, as a theatre, and walled round: it was a perfect square of five hundred cubits on each side, and two thousand in the whole: and as the city of Jerusalem is called "the holy place," Matt. xxiv. 15, and "the holy city," Matt. iv. 5, and was so esteemed by the Jews, 1 Macc. x. 31, so this mountain was called "holy ground," to which they who had issues, or were menstruous, or women in child-bed, during the time of their uncleanness, might not come. Or,

(Secondly) It may be considered as the place where our Lord was crucified, where the gospel was first preached, and where it found the greatest opposition: and in reference to this it hath been shown,

1st, That before Christ's passion, the scribes and pharisees were the great enemies to our Lord's person, and his doctrine: but when the apostles began to assert his resurrection, and the resurrection of believers, by his power, the sadducees also were vehement opposers of his doctrine: see the note on Acts iv. 2.

2ndly, That they not only persecuted the Christians in Judea, and throughout all the synagogues of the Jews, but instigated all heathen governors where they had any footing; they persecuting and killing them with their own hands, where they had power, and persuading others so to do, where they had an interest sufficient, Acts xiii. 50, xiv. 2. 5, xvii. 5. 13. See the note on Gal. iii. 4, and the preface to the Epistle of St. James.

3dly, That for their infidelity and opposition to the gospel, "the kingdom of God was taken from them," Matt. xxi. 43, they were blinded, and "given up to a spiritual slumber," Rom. ix. 7, 8, were "rejected and broken off," ver. 15. 17, "for their unbelief," ver. 20. Or,

(Thirdly) We may discourse of it as it was the city which, with the temple, and the inhabitants, was therefore to be "destroyed, laid waste, and trodden down by the gentiles:" and here observe,

1st, That both our Lord and his forerunner declared their ruin was at hand, if they would not repent, and believe the gospel: that "the axe was then laid to the root of the tree," Matt. iii. 10, that Jerusalem should be "left desolate," and "all the blood of the prophets, shed from Abel, should be required of that generation," Matt. xxiii. 35. 38, that all he had foretold concerning the destruction of the temple, the city, and the people of Jerusalem, should be fulfilled, before that generation passed away, Matt. xxiv. 34. See Matt. xvi. 28, xxvi. 64, Luke xix. 41—43, and the notes there.

2ndly, That this was the constant doctrine taught in most of the epistles, and the continual expectation of the believing Jews and Christians, that wrath was coming upon that nation for their infidelity, and persecution of the Christians; and that Christ would shortly come to destroy them for those sins. See Rom. xi. 22, 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16, v. 9, 2 Thess. ii. 8, Heb. x. 36, James v. 8, 1 Pet. iv. 17, 18, and the notes on those places, and Gal. iv. 20, vi. 12, Phil. iii. 18, 19.

3dly, That Josephus speaks frequently of the τέρατα καὶ σημεῖα, "the signs, wonders," and certain indications then given of their approaching ruin, De Bell. Jud. lib. i. cap. 1, lib. iv. cap. 17, lib. vii. cap. 30, 31, as also doth the heathen Tacitus.* Josephus adds, that God was now ἀπεστραμμένος καὶ τὰ ἅγια, "rejecting their holy things," and would have both their "temple and city purged by fire:" that he "in vain attempted to save, τοὺς ὑπὸ Θεοῦ κατακρίτους, them whom God had condemned," and that their ruin was foretold by their own prophets, and not to be avoided, τὸ γὰρ τὸ τέλος εἶναι τοῦ Θεοῦ. Eleazar,† from what was done, takes notice, that all might thence know, that once beloved nation, now ἀπωλεία κατέγνωστο, "was condemned to destruction;" and even Titus‡ says, their actions showed their destruction was wrought, Θεοῦ μένει, by the anger of God," and that they prospered in their attempts against them, Θεοῦ συνεργείαις, "by the divine assistance:" in a word, the history of these wars, composed by that Jewish priest, is the best comment on, and the greatest confirmation of, the truth of Christ's predictions of all the circumstances of their ruin, as is shown on Matt. xxiv.

Joppa, Acts ix. 13, was a famous port town betwixt Cæsarea and Azotus, so called, as some think, from Japheth the son of Noah, who built, or rather rebuilt it, after the flood; for Solinus§ and Mela‖ say, it was built before the flood: it was famous among the heathens for the fable of Andromeda and Perseus; among the Jews, for being a port town from whence they went up to Jerusalem, which they might see, saith Strabo,¶ from Joppa, though it were above a day's journey: and for the miserable shipwreck of the Jews, when Vespasian took it; and among the Christians, for Tabitha, there raised from the dead by Peter, Acts ix.

Jordan is a river arising in the region of Daphne, near to Libanus, not out of two fountains or rivers, Jor and Dan, as Jerome and Suidas say; but from one that is in the cave called Phanium, as Pliny saith,†† and Josephus often: though in his third book of the Jewish wars, he says, that it was found out by Philip the tetrarch to have its rise from the springs of Phialæ, which run under ground twenty-six furlongs, and appear only at the cave of Phanium, which therefore is assigned for its apparent rise. It is called Jordan the less, till it falls into the lake Samochonitis, whence coming forth augmented, it is called Jordan the greater, and falling into the lake of Gennesaret, it passes through it, and ends in the Dead sea: it is famous among the Jews, for being dried up at a time when it overflowed all its banks, to give a passage to the children of Israel into Canaan; and among Christians, for being the place of our Lord's baptism by John.

Iturea, mentioned as part of the tetrarchy of Philip, Luke iii. 1, was so called, from Jethur the son of Ishmael, Gen. xxv. 15, and lay edging upon Arabia, but was in or bordering upon Cœlosyria: it was part of the tribes of Dan and Gad, and made a tetrarchy by Tiberius, and was partly the same with Puronitis, in Josephus;* for whereas Luke saith, "Philip was tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis;" Josephus says, Batanea, Trachon, and Puronitis, were assigned to him by Cæsar. Moreover, Ishmael being a skilful archer, Gen. xxi. 20, the Itureans are celebrated, by poets and historians,† for their skill in fighting with bow and arrow.

Judea, as it signifies the whole land of promise, is by Tacitus said to be terminated with Arabia on the east, Egypt on the south,‡ Phœnicia on the west, and Syria on the north: as it is distinguished from Galilee and Samaria, and contains the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, Simeon, and Dan, the§ bounds towards the north are the village Annach, or Dorceus; on the south, it reaches to a village called Jarda in Arabia, and its breadth is from the river Jordan to Joppa, and Jerusalem is in the centre of it. It is divided into the mountains, the plain, and the south; the south lay towards Seir and Amalek, from the inlets into the land at the utmost part of the Dead sea, and reached to the rising of the mountains not far below Hebron: the mountains began near Hebron, and ran along northward to and beyond Jerusalem, having the plain of Jordan skirting on the east, till you come to the borders of Samaria: hence the blessed Virgin, going to visit her cousin at Hebron, a city of the priests, is said to go into the hill country, Luke i. 39. The plain joins to the mountainous country on the east, and though more level than that, yet hath its hills: to the plain eastwardly joins a valley lower than the plain, which is the coast of Sodom, and at length that of Jordan. The wilderness of Judea, where John first taugh, Matt. iii. 1, and Christ was tempted, lay betwixt Jericho and Jordan, and from Jericho towards Jerusalem both of them were comparatively desert (whence Strabo‖ saith, Jerusalem was a place not to be envied by any one, as having about it χώραν λυπρὸν καὶ ἄνυδρον, "a dry, barren country"), although both these deserts are also populous and had many towns.

Laodicea, mentioned Col. ii. 1, was that which Stephanus calls Laodicea ad Lycum, by the river Lycus, which Ptolemy¶ and Philostratus say, was a city of Caria; it was ruined by an earthquake in the tenth of Nero, and was rebuilt, saith Tacitus, by its own wealth.

Libya was so called from the Arabic word Lud, which signifies thirst, as being a dry, thirsty earth, and therefore, by some grammarians, said to have its name, ἀπὸ τοῦ λείπειν καὶ ὕειν, "from its want of rain;" among the Greeks, it is used as another name for Africa, as it imports a part of it; it was divided into Libya,†† interior and exterior: but the Libya mentioned by Luke, Acts ii. 10, is that which is by Ptolemy called Libya Cyrenaica; and by Pliny,‡‡ Pentapolitana Regio, from its five cities, viz. Berenice, Arsinoe, Polemais, Apollonia, and Cyrene, as appears from these words, "Egypt, and τὰ μέρη τῆς Λιβύης τῆς κατὰ Κυρήνην, the parts of Libya about Cyrene." It is noted, in the Old Testament, for its chariots and horses used in fight, 2 Chron. xvi. 8, whence it is styled, by Dionysius Periegetes,* Κυρήνη εὔιππος, and by Strabo,† ἱπποτρόφος, "the country that bred the best horses:" of which, see Bochart, Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 33, but it is mentioned by Luke, on account of the Jews, who, living in such vast numbers in Alexandria, that fifty thousand of them were slain at one time, may well be thought to have had some colonies and proselytes in this neighbouring country.

Lycaonia. The Lycaonia mentioned Acts xiv. 6, was not that which is called Arcadia, but a province in the lesser Asia, accounted the southern part of Cappadocia, having Isauria on the west, Armenia Minor on the east, and Cilicia on the south; its chief cities are all mentioned in this chapter, viz. Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe. "They spake (ver. 10) in the Lycaonian tongue," i. e. in some proper dialect of the Greek tongue.

Lydda, saith Josephus, was a village‡ not yielding to a city for greatness; it was a part of Judea, not far from Joppa, Acts ix. 38, eminent for its schools of Jews and learned men: see the note there. Josephus§ elsewhere styles it a city, and saith it was burnt by Cestius, whilst the men were gone from it to Jerusalem, to celebrate the feast of tabernacles; God, after they had crucified our Saviour, not taking that care of these times as formerly. It is now called Diospolis, saith Jerome.‖

Lystra was a city of Lycaonia, chiefly celebrated for the cure done there upon the lame man, which made the Lycaonians think "the gods were come down to them in the likeness of men," Acts xiv. 10, 11, and for the circumcision of Timothy, xvi. 1.

Macedonia was a vast province of Greece, formerly called Emathia; and from the kings of Macedon, Macedonia: it was bounded on the north by the mountains of Hæmus, on the south by Epirus and Achaia, on the east by the Ægean, on the west by the Ionian and Adriatic seas, celebrated in all histories for being the third kingdom, that under Alexander the Great obtained the empire of the world, and had under it¶ one hundred and fifty nations. To this country, whose metropolis was then Thessalonica, St. Paul was called by a vision, Acts xvi. 9, and the churches planted by him in it are celebrated for their great charity, and ready contribution to the distressed Jews in Judea, 2 Cor. viii. 9, when they themselves lay under the most extreme poverty; and both in Thessalonica and Macedonia, saith Philo, lived a great number of Jews.

Magdala was a city and territory beyond Jordan, on the bank of Gadara; it reached to the bridge above Jordan, which joined it to the other side of Galilee, and contained within its precincts Dalmanutha: whence Matthew saying, xv. 39, "Christ came into the coast of Magdala," Mark saith more particularly, viii. 10, "He came into the parts of Dalmanutha."

Media, mentioned Acts ii. 10, in these words, "Parthians, Medes, and Elamites," was a vast region, having on the north the Hyrcanian sea, on the west Armenia and Assyria, on the south Persia, on the east Hyrcania and Parthia: it had its name from Madai the son of Japheth, mentioned Gen. x. 2, and advanced into the second monarchy, styled the monarchy of the Medes and Persians, under Darius the Mede, son of Astyages: of the riches of this country, and of the vastness of its chief city, Ecbatan, see Bochartus.†† In the Babylonian captivity, the Jews were carried captive into Assyria, and placed in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6, xviii. 11. Hence we find many of them and their proselytes at Jerusalem, when the Holy Ghost fell on the apostles.

Melite, the island of Malta, where St. Paul was shipwrecked: of which, see the note on Acts xxviii. 1.

Mesopotamia is a country in Asia Major, between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris, as the Greek word imports; hence it is styled in the Hebrew, Aram Narajam, i. e. "Syria of the rivers," and the inhabitants,* οἱ ἐκ μέσης τῶν ποταμῶν, "they who dwell in the midst of the rivers;" but that in scripture and profane authors it is sometimes used in a larger sense, see the note on Acts vii. 2.

Midian, the land into which Moses fled from the Egyptians, Acts vii. 29. It was the place where Jethro lived, Exod. xii. 11, and the people came from† Madian, the son of Abraham by Keturah, Gen. xv. 2, whence we have reason to believe they still retained the worship of the true God. It was in Arabia Petræa, whence, Philo‡ saith, "Moses fled, εἰς τὴν ὅμορον Ἀραβίαν."

Miletus, a port town of Asia Minor, and a city of Ionia, where, saith Jerome, "Paul, majores Ephesi alloquitur, speaks to the elders of Ephesus," taking no notice of any other bishops there convened: it was the city where Thales,§ one of the seven wise men, Anaximander his disciple, Timotheus the musician, and Anaximenes the philosopher, were born. There was another Miletus in Crete, mentioned by Pliny,‖ and by Homer,¶ where St. Paul left Trophimus sick: see the note on 2 Tim. iv. 20, and the preface to Titus. There was also, saith Eustathius in Dionys. P. Κρητικὴ νῆσος, an island of that name in Crete.

Mitylene, corruptly Mytilene, saith Vossius, was a large and beautiful city of the island Lesbos, where Pittacus one of the seven wise men, Acæus the poet, Diophanes the orator, and Theophanes the historian, were born. The whole island was also called by†† that name; as also Pentapolis, from the five cities in it, viz. Issa or Antissa, Pyrrha, Eressos, Arisba, Mitylene. If it had that name in St. Luke's time, you may understand either the island, or the city, when he saith, Acts xx. 14, "We came to Mitylene."

Myra was one of the six great cities of Lycia, saith Strabo,‡‡ and it lay nigh the sea, saith Pliny;§§ whence Luke saith, Acts xxvii. 5, that "sailing over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, they came to Myra in Lycia." It had its name, say Stephanus de Urbibus and Porphyrogenetes, lib. i. them. 14, ἀπὸ τῶν μύρων, "from the ointments made there," and is by both of them called a city of Lycia. The Latin copies, instead of Myra, read Lystra in Lycaonia, far distant from these seas, against the Greek, and the authority of Jerome and Chrysostom.

Mysia, mentioned Acts xvi. 7, 8, was bounded on the north with Bithynia, on the east with Phrygia Minor, on the west with Troas, on the south by the river Hermus; there, perhaps, Paul attempted not to stay; because, as Cicero notes,‖‖ in his Oration for Flaccus, they were a people despicable and base to a proverb.

Nain, mentioned Luke vii. 11, 12, was a city in the extreme borders of Issachar, towards Samaria, two leagues from Nazareth, and not much more from Tabor, saith Bochart, at the gates of which our Lord restored the widow's son to life; it was so called from the pleasantness of the place. If Josephus¶¶ speaks of the same place, and not rather of Nain, a village in Samaria, he thrice calls it a village, and saith, it was walled about by Simon son of Gejorah the robber; but Luke assures us, it had gates in our Saviour's time.

Nazareth was a city of the lower Galilee, in the confines of Issachar and Zabulon, but within the latter: here the blessed Virgin was born, and lived: it was of ill fame in our Saviour's time, as appears from the question of Nathanael, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" John i. 47. Whence Christ was, by contempt, called a Nazarene, and Christians, Nazarenes. See the note on Matt. ii. 23.

Nineveh was the chief city of Assyria, by the Greeks called Ninus, from the builder of it, named in scripture, Nimrod, and by the Greeks Νίνος, which some think to be hinted in the name, as being Nin-nave, the habitation of Ninus, who came from Shinar to Assyria, and built it, Gen. x. 10 (see the Bishop of Ely there). It is called in the scriptures, πόλις μεγάλη τῷ Θεῷ, Jonah i. 2, iii. 3, i. e. "a very great city" (as Moses was ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, "very fair," Acts vii. 20, see the note there); as well it might, being, saith Diodorus Siculus,* in length one hundred and fifty stadia, i. e. almost nineteen miles; in breadth ninety stadia, i. e. twelve miles and a half; in circuit four hundred and eighty stadia, i. e. sixty miles; and so counting twenty miles for a day's journey, as the Greeks used to do, a city of three day's journey, not in length, but in circuit, say Jerome, Cyril, and Theodoret, upon the place, Jonah iii. 3. Strabo† says it was larger than Babylon, which contained in circuit three hundred and fifty stadia: Eustathius‡ on Dionysius Periegetes, adds, that in the building of it one hundred and forty thousand men laboured eight years. It was famous for being the city in which the first monarchy was erected, and which repented at the preaching of Jonas, and so, it seems, owned the God of Israel as the true God; as generally those eastern kingdoms did, though they had topical gods of their own (see the note on Luke i. 76). It was taken fifty-eight years after the time of Jonas, by Arbaces rebelling against Sardanapalus, and destroyed one hundred and eighty-two years after by Nabuchodonosor and Assuerus, Tobit xiv. 15; or, according to others, by Nabopolassar and Astyages, and was never built again: whence Strabo§ saith, ἡ μὲν οὖν Νίνος πόλις ἠφανίσθη παραχρῆμα μετὰ τὴν τῶν Σύρων κατάλυσιν, and Lucian‖ to Charon, ἡ Νίνος μὲν ἀπόλωλεν ἤδη, καὶ οὐδὲ ἴχνος ἔτι λοιπὸν αὐτῆς, "Ninus was so destroyed, that no footsteps of it now remain;" God having said, by his prophet Nahum, i. 8, that he would make "an utter end thereof." As for its situation, it is commonly said, that it was built on the west side of the river Tigris; but, as Bochartus shows,¶ historians and geographers differ so much as to the situation of it, that they seem thereby to confirm the words of the prophet Nahum, iii. 17, "It shall be as the locusts, who, when they flee away, their place is not known where they were."

Mount Olivet, mentioned Acts i. 12, had its name from the multitude of olive-trees that grew upon it; whence at the foot of it was Gethsemane, Matt. xxvi. 26, "the place of oil-presses," derived from gath, a press, and shemen, oil. It was distant from Jerusalem, saith Luke, "a sabbath-day's journey," that is, a mile. It lay over against the city, saith Josephus, that is, the east part of it, and was distant from it five furlongs; he speaking only of the foot of mount Olivet, which was no further distant from the city; whereas Luke speaks of the place whence Christ ascended, which was three furlongs farther; whence he informs us that Christ led his disciples out, ἕως εἰς Βηθανίαν, "even to the borders of Bethany;" but to that tract of the mountain where the name of Bethphage ceased, and that of Bethany began, Luke xxiv. 50, 51.

Pamphylia is a province of Asia Minor, having to the south the Pamphylian sea, mentioned Acts xxvii. 5, Cilicia to the east, Pisidia to the north (whence we find Paul passing through Pisidia to Pamphylia, Acts xiv. 24, and from Pamphylia to Pisidia, Acts xiii. 14) and Lycia to the west. The cities mentioned in the scripture as belonging to it are Perga and Attalia, Acts xiii. 13. Here also the Jews dwelt, saith Philo;†† whence they of Pamphylia are mentioned among those who appeared at Jerusalem at the day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 10.

Paphos was a city of Cyprus, Acts xiii. 4. 6, the metropolis of that island, and the place where the proconsul had his residence: and Venus, saith Tacitus, had the most ancient temple,* which he describes more largely in the beginning of his second book of histories; whence it became, saith Arator,† lascivus ager, sacrilegæque libidinis antrum, being the place where the virgins prostituted themselves before marriage, to get a dowry, as we learn from Justin‡ and Herodotus.§ Here Paul struck blind Elymas the sorcerer, and converted Sergius the proconsul. That the Jews dwelt here in abundance, we learn from Elymas a Jew, ver. 6. See Cyprus.

Of Parthia we have only mention indirectly, in these words, Acts ii. 9, "Parthians, Medes, and Elamites." It lasted an empire for four hundred years, and disputed for the empire of the east with the Romans: they were celebrated for the‖ veneration of their kings, and for their way of fighting by flight, and shooting their arrows backwards. They are not mentioned in scripture, say Ethicus and Orosius, save under the name of Medes. They dwelt between Media and Mesopotamia; in all which Transeuphratensian places, except some little parts of Babylon, and of some other little prefectures, the Jews, saith Philo,¶ abounded, and so were at Jerusalem when the Holy Ghost fell on the apostles.

Perge, or Perga, is a city of Pamphylia, Acts xiii. 13, memorable among the heathens for a temple of Diana built there; whence she was called, saith Mela, Diana Pergea, Περγαία Ἄρτεμις, saith Stephanus; among the Christians, for the departure thence of John Mark from Barnabas and Paul, to Jerusalem, which occasioned the rupture betwixt them "for a season," Acts xv. 37. 40.

Phœnicia was a province of Syria, divided into two parts; Phœnicia Maritima, which reached from Tripolis to Ptolemais, say some; to Pelusium in Egypt, say others; and Midland Phœnicia, of which Damascus was the metropolis. They had their names, saith Bochart, ἀπὸ τῶν φοινίκων, "from the palm-trees" growing in their land, not from the Red sea; nor a puniceo colore, "from their purple colour;" nor ἀπὸ τοῦ φόνου, "from the slaughters" they made where they came, but from their rise, they being beni ynak, "son of the Anakims" in Canaan; whence being beaten by Joshua, they fled to the side of the Mediterranean sea, where, saith Procopius,†† they erected pillars with this inscription, ἡμεῖς ἐσμεν οἱ φεύγοντες ἀπὸ προσώπου Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Ληστοῦ υἱοῦ Ναύη, "We are they who fly from the face of Joshua, the son of Nave, the robber." They were celebrated for their navigations, of which, saith Bochart, they have left indications in all places; and for the invention of letters, for from them, saith Herodotus, letters were brought by Cadmus into Greece, and were thence called Φοινίκια γράμματα, "Phœnician letters," Herodot. lib. v. cap. 58, Tatian. ed. Oxon. p. 3, Euseb. Præp. Evang. lib. x. cap. 5, and they had them, saith Eupolemus, from the Jews, Clem. Alex. Strom. i. p. 343.

Philippi was a city of Macedonia, so called from Philip king of Macedon, who repaired it, whence it lost its former name of Dathos; it is called by Luke, ἡ πρώτη τῆς μερίδος τῆς Μακεδονίας πόλις, not because it was the metropolis of it, for that was Thessalonica (see note on Phil. i. 1); but because it was "the first city" belonging to it, which they who came from Neapolis in Thrace, as Paul did, Acts xvi. 11, or from the gulf of Strymon, touched at (see the note on Acts xvi. 12). It was celebrated among the Romans for being a Roman colony, Acts xvi. 21, and for the campi Philippici, where Cæsar and Pompey first, and afterward Augustus and Marc Antony fought with Cassius and Brutus; and among Christians, for their conversion by St. Paul, and the liberal contribution they, and they only, sent him in his necessity, by Epaphroditus, Phil. iv. 15. 18, and for his epistle directed to them.

Pisidia, mentioned Acts xiv. 24, was a country in Asia

Minor, having Pamphylia on the south, Galatia on the north, Isauria on the east, and Phrygia on the west; its chief city was Antioch in Pisidia, Acts xiii. 14, so called to distinguish it from Antioch in Syria: its inhabitants are commended by Livy,* for their skill in war above other Asiatics, and were anciently, saith Pliny,† called Solymi, who were compared to lions, for their courage.

Pontus, a province in Asia Minor, bounded on the north with the Euxine Sea, on the south with Cappadocia, on the west with the river Halys, on the east with Chalcis; celebrated among the heathen poets for its poisonous herbs, and therefore called by Virgil,‡ virosa Pontus, and hence Medea is said to have had her poisons from thence; among the Jews, for the dispersions of that nation through Pontus, &c., 1 Pet. i. 1, Philo§ declaring, that they sent their colonies ἄχρι τῶν τοῦ Πόντου μυχῶν, "to the utmost bounds of Pontus;" among Christians, for the birth of Aquila, Acts xviii. 2, and for the name of an epistle ad Ponticos, given to the First Epistle of Peter, as being sent unto them (see Tertul. Scorp. cap. 12, Cyprian. Testim. lib. iii. cap. 36, 37).

Phrygia is a province of Asia Minor, divided into the greater, which had Bithynia on the north, Galatia on the east, Pamphylia and Lycia on the south, Lysia and Mysia on the west, and was called in the Notitiæ,‖ Pacatiana, where the chief cities, mentioned in scripture, Col. ii. 1, are Laodicea and Hierapolis; and of this Luke seems to speak, Acts ii. 10, because he joins it with Pamphylia below it; and Phrygia Minor, of which he speaketh, Acts xvi. 6. 18 and 22, when he saith, "They passed through Phrygia and Galatia." The inhabitants were a servile people, kept in their duty best by stripes,¶ and made wise only by sufferings, saith Cicero. In all these parts of Asia Minor, even to Bithynia and the Euxine Sea, the Jews abounded, saith Philo, in the place forecited.

Ptolemais was a city of Galilee by the sea side, dividing the upper from the lower Galilee, and the land of Israel from Phœnicia; it was seated in a plain compassed about with mountains, having on the east the mountainous part of Galilee, on the north the Scalæ Tyriorum, on the south Carmel. "Near to it," saith Josephus,†† "is the sepulchre of Memnon, and the vale of sand that turns into glass; the fragments of which glass being brought back to the place, will return again into sand." It was memorable among the Jews for the coming of Petronius thither to set up the statue of Caius Caligula, which, at the entreaty of the Jews, declaring that their law admitted no images either in their temple, or profane places, he deferred to execute, till he had writ to Cæsar, who‡‡ died before his answer came to the hands of Petronius; and also for the slaughter of two thousand Jews by the inhabitants of Ptolemais; and among the Christians, for Paul's journey in a ship of Phœnicia to Tyre, where the ship "unladed her burden," Acts xxi. 3, from Tyre to Ptolemais thirty-two miles on foot; from thence to Cæsarea, ver. 7, 8, and from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, ver. 15. See the note on Acts xxi. 7.

Puteoli, a famous mart town in Italy, having a commodious haven for ships, made, says Strabo,§§ by art and labour. It was built, say Jerome and the epitomator of Stephanus, by the Samians;‖‖ and called Puteoli, saith Varro,* from the pits of hot and cold water; by the Greeks it was called Dicæarchia: here Paul, by the favour of the centurion, staid seven days. See more, note on Acts xxviii. 13.

Rama, Matt. ii. 18, was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, distant from Jerusalem, saith Josephus,† forty furlongs; saith Jerome,‡ six miles: and being on a hill, as the word Rama signifies, might be within sight of Jerusalem, as may be probably collected from Judg. xix. 13. It was, saith Dr. Patrick, late bishop of Ely, northward of Jerusalem; and not far from it, as appears from the Levite going from Bethlehem-Judah to Jebus or Jerusalem, and being benighted when he came there, and not able to reach Shiloh, whither he was going, consulted with his servant, whether they should lodge at Rama or Gibeah, Judg. xix. 11. 13. 18, and truly, being the place to which he might divert when he was on the west of Jebus, in his way to Shiloh, after the sun went down, and being near to Gibeah, Judg. xix. 13, 1 Sam. xxii. 6, Hos. v. 8, it must lie somewhat north-west of Jerusalem, and yet not far from it, and so the coasts of Rama might be at a less distance. But others, to avoid this difficulty, how the coasts of Bethlehem could reach Rama in the tribe of Benjamin, and the children slain in those coasts could cause a weeping in Rama, give us Ramah near Gibeah, north of Jerusalem, and at a greater distance from it on that side, than Bethlehem was on the south, and place another Rama near Bethlehem, and south of it; but it is certain, from 1 Sam. x. 2, that Rachel's sepulchre was in the border of Benjamin, and only in the way from Bethel to Bethlehem, Gen. xxxv. 16. 20, and so the voice of Rachel weeping at Rama, must refer to Rama in Benjamin: either then their territories, or the villages belonging to them, must be near, or the words of Matthew must be construed thus, καὶ ἀποστειλας (sub. ἀπὸ τῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ), "And sending from Jerusalem, he slew all the children in Bethlehem, καὶ ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ὁρίοις αὐτῆς, and in all the coasts of Jerusalem;" it being ordinary for pronoun relatives to refer to a remoter antecedent, as is shown, note on Luke v. 17, and for nouns to be included in a verb relating to them.

Rhegium is a port town in Italy, opposite to Sicily, so called by the Greeks, as judging it was broken off from thence by the sea; of which, see Cluverius de Italiâ Antiquâ, lib. i. p. 276. Here Paul staid but one day, Acts xxviii. 13, and did nothing which Luke thought fit to mention; but in that day, say the fabulous writers of the church of Rome, he converted some of the inhabitants and strangers that were there, by burning a large stone pillar with a little candle; preached to the fishes of the sea; and commanded the grasshoppers, which with their noise disturbed his preaching, to be silent, from which time they left the land. See Lorinus on the place.

Rhodes was an island in the Carpathian Sea, so called, say the Greeks, ἀπὸ τῶν ῥόδων, "from the roses" growing there: it is accounted, for dignity, among the Asiatic islands, next to Cyprus and Lesbos: it was of so clear an air, that Solinus saith, there was not a day in the year in which the sun did not shine upon it; whence it is styled by Horace, clara Rhodus. Tiberius, saith Suetonius,§ sailed thither, amœnitate et salubritate insulæ captus, "being taken with the pleasantness and healthiness of the island;" which was therefore, by the Roman nobility, made a place for their recess;‖ on the north-west of it were Coos and Cnidus, on the east Patara, whence Paul sails from Coos to Rhodes, and thence to Patara, Acts xx. 1. It was famous for a college, in which the students were eminent for eloquence and mathematics; for a colossus of the sun, which passed for one of the wonders of the world, it being seventy cubits high, and falling by an earthquake; but chiefly for the expertness of the inhabitants of that city and island in the art of navigation, which made them sovereigns of the sea: their constitutions also, and judgments in affairs relating to the sea, being withal so just, as to become incorporated afterward into the Roman Pandects. See Strabo, lib. xiv. p. 448.

Rome. Of this city, because I can never say enough, I will say only that which some way tends to the interpretation or the illustration of something contained in the New Testament. And, 1st, I have observed already, that it was the seat of the fourth empire, and was therefore called orbis terrarum, mundi caput, regina, domina, dea; "the lord of the whole earth, the head and queen of it" (see Lloyd de Româ); and in scripture, πᾶσα οἰκουμένη, "the whole world," Luke iii. 1. See the note on Heb. ii. 5.

2ndly, That being so, all the Roman provinces, styled "the world," of necessity repaired to it, not for religious causes, but on civil accounts, ob potentiorum principalitatem; see the note on Acts xxviii. 15, it being an* old law, that all other cities should follow the custom of Rome, the head of the world.

3rdly, That the Epistle to the Romans, though it was written after the Epistles to the Thessalonians and Corinthians, was placed first in order, as some of the fathers conjecture, by reason of the dignity of that city (see the preface to that epistle): to which add that it was called urbs septicollis, and ἑπταλόφος, from the seven hills on which it was built, and was celebrated on this account, when John wrote his Revelation, not only by her famous poets, Virgil, Horace, Martial, Ovid, Propertius, but by her orator Cicero,† and many others; which makes it reasonable to conceive John points to this city, when he speaks of the woman sitting upon seven hills," Rev. xvii. 9; there being then no other city to which the character of that woman could agree; none drunk "with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Christ Jesus," as she was, or "having seven heads and ten horns," or "making kings of the earth drunk with the wine of her fornication."

4thly, That the beast sitting upon these hills would "suffer no man to buy or sell who had not his name or mark upon him," Rev. xiii. 17. Now this agrees exactly with the church of Rome, which hath, in three several councils,‡ decreed, that none of her members should sell any thing to, or buy any thing of, heretics, or have any commerce, or merchandise, or any dealings with them. Add to this,

5thly, That the name of the beast, who made all men, rich and poor, great and small, free and servants, to take his character upon them, Rev. xiii. 16, 17, was the number of a man whose name contained six hundred and sixty-six, as Irenæus says§ the name Λατεῖνος, given to the Latin church, did; but as for the name Evanthus and Teiton, which, saith he, contains the same number, and other names added by Feuardentius, who can apply any thing of the characters belonging to this beast, to them? whence I conclude, this beast must certainly be Rome; and that not Rome heathen, which made no such decrees, and had many more than ten kingdoms under her, but Rome Christian.

Salamis, mentioned Acts xiii. 5, was a city in the eastern part of Cyprus, where was a synagogue of the Jews, and where the Jews, in the time of Trajan, destroyed the city, and killed all the inhabitants (see Cyprus). The city was famous among the Greek writers, for the story of the dragon killed by Chycreas their king, and for the death of Anaxarchus,* whom Nicocreon the tyrant of Cyprus pounded to death with iron pestles, he crying out, Tundis Anaxarchi vasculum, Anaxarchum non tundis: the body being styled both by the scriptures and philosophers, σκεῦος, the "vessel," θύλακος, the "repository," of the soul: see 1 Thess. iv. 4. It is also the name of an island in the Saronic gulf, Strab. lib. ix. p. 271.

Salem, famous for being the seat of Melchisedec king of Salem, is, by Josephus,† called Solyma, and said to be the place which afterwards was called Jerusalem: that, by the psalmist, being called Salem, in these words, "At Salem is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Sion," Psal. lxxvi. 2. But St. Jerome saith,‡ it was a village of the Sichemites, and lay in the vale betwixt Sodom and Damascus, eight miles from Scythopolis, or Bethshan: so the Septuagint must understand the word, when they say, Gen. xxxiii. 18, "Jacob went down, εἰς Σαλήμ, to Salem, a city of Sichem;" and then it must be the place mentioned John iii. 23, when it is said, "John was baptizing in Enon near Salem," both these places being in the tribe of Manasseh.

Salmone is only mentioned by the bye, Acts xxvii. 7, and is, say Pliny, lib. iv. cap. 12, p. 231, Mela, lib. ii. cap. 7, and Dionysius, v. 110, an eastern promontory of Crete, where also was a city of that name.

Samaria, as it was the capital city of the ten tribes, belongs to the history of the Old Testament: as it is mentioned in the New, it comprehends the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh within Jordan, lying in the middle betwixt Galilee and Judea, John iv. 3, 4, see the note there. It began at Ginea, lying in the great plain, saith Josephus,§ and ended at the toparchy of the Acrobateni: it was destroyed by Hyrcanus, but was rebuilt and much augmented by Herod the Great, and by him called Sebaste, in honour of Augustus; but it still retained the name of Samaria, Acts viii. 5, and Sichem; and by the Jews, in derision, Sychar; see note on John iv. 5. The Samaritans, though in our Saviour's time and long before they owned the true God, were circumcised, and owned the five books of Moses (see the note in John iv. 22); yet were they much hated by the Jews, by reason of the controversy betwixt them, concerning the place where they were to worship, and to which they were to bring their sacrifices; they saying it was mount Gerizim, the Jews, mount Zion, where the temple stood (see the note there). Hence, saith the son of Sirach, "My soul abhorreth them who sit upon the mountain of Samaria, and the foolish people that dwell at Sichem," l. 25—27 (see the note on John iv. 9). But our blessed Lord did not hate them; for as they expected the Messiah, so he declared to them, that he was that Messiah who was to come, John iv. 25, 26, and at his ascension, commanded his disciples to go through Judea and Samaria, and then to the gentiles, Acts i. 8; which they did with good success, both in the city and the villages about it, Acts viii. 5. 25; though Justin Martyr doth inform us, that through the delusions of their two famous magicians, Simon Magus and Dositheus, they became the worst of Christians, Apol. ii. p. 88.

Samos was an island in the Icarian sea, of which the scripture only saith, that Paul passed by Chios to Samos, and thence to Miletus, Acts xx. 15. It had its name, saith Bochart,‖ from the high rocks there, named שמי, and was famous among the heathens for the worship of Juno, and for the earthen vessels there; for Pherecydes, the master of Pythagoras, who foretold an earthquake that happened there, by drinking of the waters; for the birth of Pythagoras, who was vir ortû Samius, saith Ovid,¶ and for one of the Sibyls, called Sibylla Samia, and for a place called by Plutarch Samiorum Flores, where they did καθ' ὑπερβολὴν τρυφᾶν,* commit all manner of lewdness" with women.

SAMOTHRACIA, an island in the Ægean Sea, near Thracia, where Hebrus falls into the sea, was so called, saith Eustathius,† πρὸς ἀντιστολὴν, "by way of distinction" from the Ionian Samos, and from another mentioned by Homer, and called Cephalonia. Here the Dii Cabiri,‡ or great gods, mentioned in the scholiast upon Apollonius, were worshipped, into whose sacred ceremonies they who were initiated were esteemed more holy and just, and even secure from shipwreck, as also of preservation in all dangers whatsoever. See Bochart's Canaan, lib. i. cap. 12, and Lloyd in voce.

SAREPTA, Luke iv. 26, was a city of Sidon, betwixt that city and Tyre; it had the name Zarephath, as being a conflatory for the boiling of metals; it was the place where Elijah dwelling, was preserved by the widow's cruse of oil and barrel of meal, that wasted not, 1 Kings xvii. 9. Josephus§ saith, the three years' drought which occasioned his going thither was mentioned by Menander.

SARON, mentioned Acts ix. 35, was a spacious, champaign, or fertile vale, betwixt Lydda and the sea, having several villages in it; it was so called from sharra, "to let loose," because there they turned out their cattle, and is famous among the rabbins for its wines.

SELEUCIA, a city, not of Mesopotamia, Cilicia, or Pisidia, but of Syria, was the first city to which Paul and Barnabas came, when they were sent on a peculiar temporary mission, by the direction of the Holy Ghost, Acts xiii. 3, 4.

SICHEM was, saith Josephus,‖ the metropolis of Samaria, built at the foot of mount Gerizim; on which mount, hanging over Samaria, they had a temple at which they offered all their sacrifices. This temple was¶ there built by Sanballat, for his son Manasseh, chased away by Nehemiah, because he would not put away the daughter of Sanballat. This temple was, after it had stood two hundred years, destroyed by Hyrcanus, and never was rebuilt in the same place; but that which they called the "holy mount" remaining, and being in their Pentateuch (here differing from the Hebrew text) the place where God commands the Jews to set up an altar (not on mount Gerizim, as the Samaritan copies have it, but on mount Ebal, Deut. xxvii. 4, 5): this they allege to justify their building a temple there; and here they had still their altar for sacrifice, which made the schism betwixt them and the Jews. This controversy seems to be decided by the psalmist, saying, "He chose not the tribe of Ephraim (where that mountain was), but he chose the tribe of Judah, and the mount Zion which he loved, and there he built his sanctuary," Ps. lxxviii. 67, 68; and is more certainly decided in favour of the Jews by Christ, John iv. 22. It was built in a valley betwixt mount Gerizim and Ebal, in the tribe of Ephraim; was eight miles distant from Samaria, had its name from Shechem the son of Gilead, Numb. xxvi. 31, and was after called Neapoli, Plin. lib. v. cap. 13.

SIDON is, by Josephus, thought to have had its name from Sidon the son of Canaan; but Trogus saith, it had its name à piscium ubertate, "from the abundance of fishes," the sea upon which it lay, say the Hebrews, abounding with them: accordingly the Hebrew said from which it is derived, signifies fishery, or fishing; and Bethsaida is a place of fishing, and it was afterward called Saida: "I came to Saida, the greatest of cities," saith Benjamin in Itinerario. The men of Sidon being great shipwrights, were famous above other nations for hewing and polishing timber, there being "none who were skilled how to hew timber like the Sidonians," 1 Kings v. 6. One of the gods of the Sidonians, mentioned in scripture, is Ashtaroth Judg. ii. 13, 1 Kings xi. 5, a goddess, by Philo Biblius, Theodoret, Nicetas, and Procopius Gazæus, called Venus;* as also say the Greeks and Cicero. Hence she had her whores to minister to them who committed whoredom in her service.

Of the tower and pool of SILOAM. The fountain of Siloam, saith† Josephus, was a sweet and large fountain on the west of Jerusalem, without the wall, and its waters bending towards the south, ran all along the south of Jerusalem without the wall, but at the east side came within the lower Jerusalem, and made the pool of Siloam or Bethesda, mentioned John v. 2. 9. 11, and near it, towards the west, stood the tower of Siloam, which fell upon the eighteen persons, Luke xiii. 4; so proper was the mention of men, slaughtered whilst they were offering sacrifice in the court of the temple, and in the lower city, by a tower falling on them, to the very same thing befalling the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem. See the note there.

SINAI was a mountain in Arabia Petræa, where the law was given; it had two tops, the one lower, called Horeb, or "the mount of God," Exod. iii. 1, where he appeared to Moses in a flame of fire in a bush; this Horeb is therefore, by St. Stephen, Acts vii. 30, and by Josephus,‡ called Sinai, who also saith, δόξαν ἔχειν ἐνδιατρίβειν αὐτῷ τὸ θεῖον, "it was believed the Divinity resided there,"§ and therefore other shepherds durst not feed upon it: the other top of Sinai, where the law was given, was a very high mountain, saith Josephus,¶ to the top of which one could scarce see, and was accounted religious, it being thought that the Divinity dwelt there also. That here, afterward, dwelt the Hagarenes, and had houses cut out of the rock, see Bochart, Phaleg, lib. iv. cap. 27, p. 312, and the note on Gal. iv. 25.

SODOM was the chief of the Pentapolitan cities, and therefore gave the name to the whole land; it was burnt, with three other cities, by fire from heaven, for their unnatural lusts; of the truth of which we have, from the heathens, the testimonies of Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, Tacitus, Solinus; from the Jews, the testimonies of Josephus, Philo, and the book of Wisdom; of which, see the note on Jude, ver. 7.

SYRACUSE was a city seated on the east side of the island of Sicily, built by Archias the Corinthian, saith the scholiast upon Pindar,¶ out of four cities which he overthrew, and turned into one: it is called by Pindar, μεγάλα πόλις Συράκουσαι, it being the most noble city, not only of Sicily, but of all Greece; six miles in compass, saith Strabo; it is called by Ausonius quadruplex Syracuse, as being divided into four parts, Acradina, Tyche, Neapolis, and the Island; to which Strabo adding Epipolus, calls it Pentapolis; the first of these contained in it the famous temple of Jupiter; the second was called Τύχη, because it had the temple of Fortune in it; and surely fortune favoured them, since when the Romans took the city, they found, say Livy†† and Plutarch,‡‡ more riches in it than they did in Carthage. In that part called Neapolis was a great amphitheatre, and a wonderful statue of Apollo, in the midst of a large square. In the isle of Ortygia was Hiero's palace, two temples of Diana and Minerva, and the famous fountain of Arethusa; and this, saith Strabo, was the only part which Augustus rebuilt, after it had been destroyed by Marcellus. Archimedes, who, by his mathematical engines, had much galled the Romans, was slain in the storming of it, while he was intent upon his figures, as Livy, and Plutarch say. Ibid.

Syria, among the ancients, viz. Justin, Herodotus, and Strabo, was as large as Assyria, they being after called Syri; but Syria,* properly so called, is either taken largely, so as to comprehend Phœnicia, and the Holy Land, and so it is bounded on the west with the Sicilian sea, on the east with the Euphrates and Arabia Deserta, on the north with Cilicia, and on the south with Arabia Petræa, and had, in ancient times, for its capital city, where the president resided, Damascus, and afterward Antioch of Syria. In the New Testament it always seems to signify Syria in the stricter sense, as it is distinguished from Judea, Matt. iv. 24, 25, and from Phœnicia, Acts xxi. 2, 3, in which sense it is also used by Ptolemy, who divides Palestine from it; by Strabo,† saying, ἐντεῦθεν Συρία καὶ Φοινίκη, "then comes Syria and Phœnice;" by Pliny,‡ who saith, Syriam circumfundi Phœnice, "Syria is surrounded by Phœnice;" and by Dionysius, P. v. 904, 905, who places Syria, properly so called, in the continent, and Phœnicia in the tract along the sea: hence the proverb in Suidas, Σύροι πρὸς Φοίνικας, i. e. "One deceitful nation against another."

Syro-Phœnicia is only mentioned in the history of the woman's daughter, called "a woman of Canaan," Matt. xv. 22, but "a Greek and a Syro-Phœnician," Mark vii. 26, a Greek because she was of their religion, and used the Greek tongue; the Greeks being mingled with the Syrians, saith Josephus;§ a woman of Canaan, because Phœnicia was also called Canaan (see the notes there); a Syro-Phœnician, as being of that part of Phœnicia, which lay betwixt Syria properly so called and Phœnicia by the sea-side; and which was called also, saith Bochartus,‖ Cœlosyria, and contained Heliopolis, Chalcis, and the tract of Marsya, Damascus, and Alala. Hence of Damascus, Justin Martyr¶ and Tertullian say, that it belonged to Syro-Phœnice.

Tres Tabernæ. Of these, and of Appii Forum, not before mentioned, see the note on Acts xxviii. 16. And that they are not ill translated taverns, or places of reception, I gather not only from Isidore Pelusiota,†† and Œcumenius,‡‡ who call them πανδοχεῖα ἢ καπηλεῖα, but also from Zosimus,§§ when he saith, Severus was strangled at the place called the Three Taverns, by men placed there by Maxentius for that purpose.

Tiberias was a city‖‖ built by Herod the tetrarch, in Galilee, near the lake of Gennesaret, and so called in honour of Tiberius Nero: Hegesippus says it was but two miles from Magdala,¶¶ and was the same with Cinnereth: the privileges he gave to the inhabitants of the place made it grow to be one of the prime cities of the lower Galilee, where were thirteen synagogues, and an academy; here was the last session of the sanhedrin, and here the Talmud was collected. Of the sea of Tiberius, see in Gennesaret.

Tarsus was a city of Cilicia, Acts xxi. 39, the metropolis, and most renowned city, which, saith Josephus, gave name to the whole country; the mother of cities, saith Solinus;* celebrated among the Romans, for being, saith Pliny, libera civitas, and having the freedom of a Roman colony, or the highest privileges, under Julius Cæsar and Octavian, and the very name of Juliopolis: see the note on Acts xxii. 28. Among the Jews, it was famous for being the place whither Jonas designed to fly, and the metropolis of that country, where many of them, saith Philo, dwelt; among the Christians, for being the place where St. Paul was born: in fine, it was a city very rich and populous, where was an academy furnished with men so eminent, that, as Strabo† saith, they excelled in all arts of polite learning and philosophy; even those of Alexandria and Athens, and Rome itself, were beholden to it for its best professors.

Thessalonica was the metropolis of Macedonia; see the note on Phil. i. 1; a noble mart and a city, which, saith Strabo,‡ is the most populous of all Macedonia: it is, saith Pliny,§ a free city, and had in it a synagogue of the Jews, they living, saith Philo,‖ in Macedonia and Thessaly. The inhabitants of Thessaly, saith Athenæus,¶ were given to luxury and dissoluteness, and by their luxury invited the Persians into Greece: their maidens and women also danced naked, as their custom was: which things might give occasion to those instructions of the apostle to them, to "avoid fornication," and to "possess their vessels in sanctification and honour, and not in the lusts of concupiscence, as did those nations which knew not God," 1 Thess. iv. 3—5. To this church Paul wrote his two first epistles.

Troas was a country and city in lesser Asia, where St. Paul came to preach Christ's gospel, and had "a door opened to him of the Lord," 2 Cor. ii. 12. Strabo and Ptolemy place the city in Phrygia Minor. It is, by Jerome, said to be the same with Troy celebrated in the works of Homer. It was, saith Pliny,†† a Roman colony.

Trachonitis was a region and tetrarchy, or rather part of a tetrarchy, in Syria, anciently called Argob, Deut. iii. 14. It lay north of Perea, and east of Batanea, and was so called, saith G. Tyrius, from dragons, or secret lurking places, in which this country abounded, the inhabitants living upon robbery,‡‡ till they were restrained by Herod.

Trogyllium, Acts xx. 15, is a promontory, saith Strabo,§§ as it were the foot of mount Mycale, opposite to, and five miles from, Samos; to which Paul coming, goes on to Trogyllium, to harbour there: there was also a town there of the same name, mentioned by Pliny, lib. v. cap. 29, p. 295.

Tyre and Sidon. These two places being so often mentioned in scripture together, and lying but two hundred stadia, saith Strabo,‖‖ that is, twenty-five miles, asunder, I shall speak of them both together. And,

1st, As to antiquity, though it be certain that, as Strabo saith,¶¶ both these cities were πάλαι ἔνδοξοι καὶ λαμπραὶ, "of old illustrious and renowned cities," insomuch, saith he, that they were incomparable for greatness, splendour, and antiquity; though Tyre be styled by Dionysius the Oggygian, and by the poets, the Cadmean Tyre; and by the prophet, the city "whose antiquity is of ancient days," Isa. xxiii. 7, yet was Sidon much the elder: for, (1.) though Homer mentions Sidon, and speaks of the Sidonians as πολυδαίδαλοι, "excellent artificers," he hath not one word, saith Strabo,††† of Tyre or the Tyrians. (2.) Trogus, in Justin,‡‡‡ saith, that after many years, the Sidonians being overcome by the king of Ascalon, and beaten to their ships, built Tyre the year before the Trojan war, i. e. saith Josephus,§§§ two hundred and forty years before

Solomon began to build the temple; hence most interpreters conceive that Tyre is called "the daughter of Sidon," Isa. xxiii. 12. (3.) We read of Sidon, the first-born of Canaan, Noah's grandson, who was the builder of Sidon, as Josephus* saith; see Gen. x. 15, and read of Sidon as "the border of Canaan," ver. 19, but we read nothing of Tyre, at least till it be mentioned by Joshua, xix. 29.

2ndly, Sidon, at least for a long time, excelled Tyre in greatness, whence it is styled Sidon Rabba, "the great," Josh. xi. 8, and xix. 28. Mela saith, that before it was taken by the Persians, it was maritimarum urbium maxima, "the greatest of maritime cities." Diodorus Siculus,† having made mention of the city of the Arvadians, the Sidonians, and Tyrians, i. e. Arvad, Sidon, and Tyre, as the Phœnician Tripolis, he adds of Sidon, that‡ πλούτῳ δὲ καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις χορηγείαις ἡ πόλις πολὺ προεῖχε τῶν κατὰ τὴν Φοινίκην πόλεων, "for riches, and other provisions, it far exceeded the other cities of the Phœnicians," that city having long quietly enjoyed that trade which brought in these riches; whence, to live quietly and securely, is to live "after the manner of the Sidonians," Judg. xviii. 7. Moreover, in skill in astronomy and arithmetic, and all the arts of merchandise, in philosophy and philosophers, Strabo§ makes them ἐναμιλλοι, "emulous," or equal in comparison, and saith the Greeks had their philosophy from them. Hence both of them, in scripture, are represented as "very wise," Zech. ix. 2, Ezek. xxvii. 8, 9. But then, 3dly, Tyre is to be preferred before Sidon for strength, as being built in the sea, four furlongs from the land, till Alexander joined it to the continent, whence it is called "the strong city," Josh. xix. 29, and after Sidon suffered by the Persians, it excelled in riches, it being styled "the crowning city," as sending crowns of gold to kings, and being the city "whose merchants were princes, and whose traffickers were the honourable of the earth," Isa. xxiii. 8. Hence Q. Curtius saith,* that in the time of Alexander, it was memorable above all other cities of Syria and Phœnicia, for splendour and greatness. They are mentioned in the New Testament, as places to whose coasts Christ resorted, Matt. xv. 21; sometimes as people who resorted to him from their coasts, Mark iii. 8; and sometimes to upbraid the cities of Chorazin and Bethsaida, lying eastward of them, as being more incredulous, Matt. xi. 21, 22.

To speak something of Tyre in particular, it is to be observed, that there was† Old and New Tyre; the Old Tyre, mentioned Josh. xix. 29, and called Palætyrus, was built upon the continent; whence they of New Tyre tell Alexander, that there was a place without the city called Palætyrus where he might sacrifice to Hercules; it was, saith Strabo,‡ distant thirty furlongs from the other Tyre, which was four furlongs within the sea; hence saith God to her, by the prophet, "Thy borders are within the sea," Ezek. xxvii. 4. She sent colonies, saith Curtius,§ penè orbe toto, "almost through the world," viz. to Carthage, Utica in Africa, to Thebes in Bœotia, and Gades in Spain, whence it was accounted the mart of the world. They also worshipped, besides Hercules, the goddess Astarte at Memphis; whence Herodotus saith,‖ the Tyrians had there the temple ξένης Ἀφροδίτης, "of Venus the stranger," to distinguish her from that Venus whom the Egyptians worshipped.
